Whitlaw Reid Tendered Complimentary Banquet in New York.

New York, May 14.—Hon. Whitlaw Reid was the guest of honor at a farewell banquet at the Union league club tonight, in anticipation of his approaching departure for London, as special ambassador of the United States at the coronation of King Edward VII.

The banquet was attended by about 100 gentlemen including many prominent figures in politics, finance and journalism, from all sections of the country. Among the guests invited to meet Mr. Reid were Sir Percy Anderson, the British consul-general, and the Hon. Corneleus N. Bliss, who sat respectively at the right and left of Mr. Reid; Senator Chauncey M. Depew, Hon. Henry C. Payne, Hon. John W. Griggs, Hon. H. N. Stranahan, President Nicholas Murray Butler, of Columbia; John A. MacCall, Hon. Charles Emery Smith, Clark Howell, of the Atlanta Consittution, Melville E. Stone, Frank B. Noyes, of the Chicago Record-Herald, J. Edward Simmons, Austen B. Fletcher, George W. Perkins, Thomas G. Rapier, of the New Orleans Picayune, Albert J Barr of the Pittsburg Post, Harvey W. Scott, of the Portland Oregonian.

Corneliens N. Bliss, chairman, read a letter from the secretary of the late Archbishop Corrigan, expressing the archbishop's appreciation of Ambassador Reid's public services and regretting that his present indisposition would prevent his attendance at the dinner. Mr. Bliss said this probably one of the last letters the archbishop had dictated.

Mr. Bliss then offered the toast "The President of the United States," which was drunk standing and with applause. He then said: "This is a sort of international and ambassadoral affair. I invite you all to rise and drink the health of King Edward." This was greeted with prolonged applause Mr. Bliss then delivered an address in the course of which he said: "Mr. Reid carried the greeting of the late President McKinley to Queen Victoria, at her Jubilee celebration, which was most heartily joined in by the American people who honored the queen for her many virtues, and for her steadfast friendship for America. The American people will not forget the kindly heartfelt words of sympathy to our government and people and the personal messages to the striken widows of two martyred presidents. Another president has been martyred and again have we received the abounding ympathy of English people expressed by the successor of the great queen.

"Aside from some personal expressions a common blood, and common language, the close social and financial interest of nearly a century of peaceful relations have gradually brought about a community of material interests between Great Britain and the United States. Friendship, no alliance between the two great Anglo-Saxon peoples, is the guarantee of the peace of the world. Long may such relations be maintained."

At the close of the address of Mr. Bliss, he offered a toast to Mr. Reid and there was great applause.

CAN CHECK THE TRUST

Italian Government Will Not Be at the Mercy of Morgan's Combine.

Rome, May 14.—Replying to a question in the chamber of deputies, today, on the subject of the Morgan shipping combine and its effect on Italian emigration to the United States, the under secretary of state, Signor Bartelli, said that increased dividends and advantaged to American trade would naturally result from the combination. But, it was needless to borrow alarm regarding an arbitrary increase of rates. As to emigrants, if the combine desired to carry them, it would have to secure the necessary license and agree to emigrant rates, which the Italian government has the power to limit. The secretary also said he thought emigrants would continue to use the present steamship lines. He did not believe the United States was likely to restrict the travelling imigrants to American ships. The government of Italy, however, was closely watching the combine, and, if necessary, it would not fail to use all the means at its disposal to protect its own interests.

HOPETOUN HAS RESIGNED

FIRST GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF THE AUSTRALIAN COMMONWEALTH STEPS DOWN.

Melbourne, Australia, May 14—It was announced in the senate tonight that the Earl of Hopetoun had decided to resign the governor-generalship of the Australian commonwealth.

The federal parliament recently refused to grant the Earl of Hopetoun an additonal annual allowance of £8,000. The governor-general then sent a cablegram to Joseph Chamberlain, the colonial secretary, in which he asked to be relieved of his duties after the coronation of the king, saying the position was a heavy drain upon his private resources, and that the salary attached to the governor-generalship was wholly insufficient to maintain the dignity of the office. Mr. Chamberlain replied to the Earl of Hopetoun accepting his resignation, although it meant, he said, a serious loss to Australia and the empire. It is understood the governor of Australia, Lord Tennyson, will administer the governor-generalship of the commonwealth in the interim. The Earl of Hopetoun's salary was £10,000 a year.

ENGLAND IS SLOW

Requires to Be Roused to Take Care of Its Own Sufferers.

London, May 14.—At a dinner of the West Indian club, held in London tonight, Hon. Arthur Ponsonby declared that in view of the generosity shown by President Roosevelt and the American people towards the Martinique sufferers, the people of Great Britain should not be behind hand in emulating President Roosevelt's example, and help their own countrymen on the island of St. Vincent. Sir Arthur said he feared, however, that the fashion of donating funds for the succor of the victims of the disaster of the French island, set by King Edward might lead Englishmen to overlook their suffering kinsmen at St. Vincent.

NIXON HAS RESIGNED

Says He Could Not Retain Self Respect and Tammany Leadership.

New York, May 14.—Lewis Nixon, leader of Tammany Hall for nearly six months, resigned his position as leader today, at a meeting of the district leaders. While the resignation was not entirely unexpected, it was thought that Mr. Nixon would not take such a positive action until a later date, first waiting the action of the leaders to see if they would give him a vote of confidence. Instead of this, he refused to allow any vote of confidence, and went so far as to say that he could no longer retain his self respect if he remained as leader.

Grand Forks, May 14.—[Special to The Daily News.]—The V. V. and E. track-laying gang, after reaching a point three miles below this city, went out on strike today. The men allege that Porter Brothers, the railway contractors, refused to pay them for working overtime. Sixty of the strikers came to town and related their grievances. FRANK BRAZIL CAUGHT

CHARGED WITH THE MURDER OF CHARLES HALL, A PIONEER OF NELSON DISTRICT.

Midway, May 12.—[Special to The Daily News.]—Last evening Provincial Constable Cunningham arrested a Siwash named Frank Brazil on a charge of the murder on May 1st at Marcus, Washington, of Charles Hall, who is said to have been one of the locators of the Silver King group of mines in the Nelson district. It is stated that Hall and the Siwash had been quarrelling for some time previous to the murder, and that Hall had given the latter a thrashing, which is supposed to have been the immediate motive for the murder. It is charged that Brazil and another Siwash rode up behind Hall and the former shot him in the back causing his death. Brazil's companion gave himself up to the sheriff next day at Republic, but the whereabouts of Brazil could not be ascertained, until his arrest here, where he was working in the livery stable of John J. Flood. It appears that on Wednesday evening, 7th inst., he called at the stables and asked if he might stay the night, as he was tired, having, as he said, just walked from Phoenix, a distance of about 13 miles. This story is not now believed, but it is thought that after hiding for several days on the Colville Indian reservation he rode up to the international boundary line, and, leaving his horse with some Indians, walked across the line to Midway. When charged by Constable Cunninham with being Brazil, he denied it and gave the name of Frank Roberts, but when he found that he was under arrest he admitted that he was Brazil. The same night he was handed over to deputy Sheriff Clark, of Curlew, who took him back across the line for trial.

RETURN OF CONFIDENCE

T. P. COFFEE SAYS THE MINING CENTERS OF B. C. WILL SECURE CAPITAL.

Grand Forks, May 14.—[Special to The Daily News.]—T. P. Coffee, vice-president of the Dominion Permanent Loan company, Toronto, and one of the leading capitalists of eastern Canada is here on his annual tour of inspection. His company has extensive investments in this province, especially in the Boundary district. Making Grand Forks his headquarters, Mr. Coffee, since his arrival in the west, has made visits to Republic and to Phoenix for the purpose of personally familiarizing himself with mining conditions.

Speaking to your correspondent today he said: "I am connected with financial institutions which have been making investments in British Columbia for the past twelve years. Beginning in a small way and at a period when the latent possibilities of the province were not realized in the east, we have watched your amazing development with no little interest and have year by year increased our holdings. If affords me pleasure to state that our investments have all been eminently satisfactory. My associates have adopted the policy of visiting the province annually in order better to be able to watch the trend of development. This policy has been steadily kept in view and will be maintained in the future. I have reached the conclusion, all things considered, that no better investments in Canada can be made than those offered at this moment by British Columbia, whose growth, and progress, during the past five years has been simply phenomenal, and is un-surpassed by any of the older provinces. There is unlimited capital available in the east but considerable missionary work has yet to be accomplished before absolute confidnce in the character of your investment is secured. The effects of indiscriminate wild-catting of mining properties incidental to new mining regions were decidedly felt in eastern cities for several years and produced a reaction which is only now beginning to disappear. It will take some time before confidence is reestablished, but I look forward to a new and brighter era as soon as the merits of your legitimate mining propositions become widely known. An intelligent appreciation of the mining industry, especially of southern Britsh Columbia, already exists in a limited circle and this knowledge is bound to become more generally diffused.

WILL FIGHT THE BIG TRUST

Proposition for a Fast Atlantic Service Made by the C. P. R.

Dominion Government Consider Subsidy Request of $1,000,000

Ottawa, May 14.—[Special to The Daily News.—To offset in some way the Morgan steamship combine, it is said that some members of the government are considering a proposition from the C.P.R. for the establishment of a fast Atlantic steamship line, with a fast freight service attached, for a subsidy of one million dollars. This line would, of course, be operated in connection with Canadian Pacific railway system, but the government would be allowed control of the steamship service so that other railway companies would get equal advantages. It is said by supporters of the proposition that the only way to compete with the Morgan trust is to have the Canadian railways operating in conjunction with the steamship line.

BOUNDARY'S HAPPENINGS

NEW ORE BODY IS DISCOVERED AT MOTHER LODE MINE IN DEADWOOD CAMP.

Greenwood, May 14.—[Special to The Daily News.]—Information reached town last evening to the effect that the croppings of another ore body, entirely separate from the big ore deposits now being worked at that mine were yesterday discovered on the Mother Lode property, Deadwood camp. The croppings have been exposed for a width of about 50 feet and the new find promises to be an important one. Not enough work has yet been done to determine the value of the ore, but it is well mineralised and has a very promising appearance. It will be thoroughly prospected with the object of opening it up and shipping it.

John W. O'Brien, formerly of Rossland and now owner of the Arlington hotel, Greenwood, was this morning granted a license for the Hotel Vendome which he lately built at Anaconda, adjoining Greenwood.

John A. Macdonald, for a year or more foreman mason at the Mother Lode mine, at which a great deal of construction work has been done during that period, went out on yesterday's train on a business visit to Indiana, whence he purposes returning to the Boundary district via Salt Lake city and Chicago. Mr. Macdonald is usually a prominent figure at Masonic and Free Masons' gatherings in this neighborhood at which he is a frequent and popular speaker. At the mine he has some little repute as a verse maker and orator. He is understood to be in very comfortable circumstances, owning a valuable tract of land in close proximity to the city of Toronto.

Edward H. Mortimer, for nearly five years accountant for the Healey Investment and Trust company, limited, left yesterday for Spokane, where he will make his home.

John P. Keane, superintendent of the Cariboo-McKinney M. and M. company's Cariboo mine at Camp McKinney, left Greenwood for the mine on this morning's stage, having yesterday returned from one of his periodical visits to Wallace, Idaho.

E. Harris, from the Hall M. and S. companys' smelter at Nelson, is today visiting the B. C. Copper company's Mother Lode mine in company with the latter company's general manager. Frederic Keffer.

It is stated that Mr. Justice Drake will preside at the Supreme court sittings both criminal and civil to be held in Greenwood next week. The assizes will commence on Monday morning, 19th inst. There are five criminal cases on the docket.

Loubet paid a warm tribute to the administration whose services had spread the prestige of France abroad. Referring to the recent elections, he said:: "France is now unanimously republican. Not a single candidate solicited the suffrages of the electors as a royalist or imperialist. I hope they (the deputies) are sincerely replubican and that they will not allow their electoral promises to go to protest."

Angus, Lord Strathcona, Pearson (New York), one thousand each; C. R. Hosmer, four hundred; and the balance going to New York and Boston capitalists. RICH STRIKE NEAR YMIR

Pat Daly Discovers a Vein of High Grade Gold Ore on Nome Fraction.

Ore Body Is Eight Feet Wide and Is Close to Dundee Wagon Road.

Ymir, May 14.—[Special to The Daily News.]—No little excitement has been caused here today by the discovery of a vein of rich ore on the Nome fraction, near the Dundee mine. The ground in this vicinity has not hitherto been actively prospected, in consequence of some trouble with regard to the boundaries of some new claims which were added to the Dundee group last year. The lines have now been run, however, and the Nome fraction has been added to the Atlin group owned by Pat Daly, Wm. Coffey, Al Hughes and J. Ryan, all of this town.

On commencing to prospect this week a fine vein of extremely rich ore was uncovered by Pat Daly. The vein itself is eight feet wide, and has been traced several hundred feet on the surface. Large samples taken across four feet of this ore were brought down and assayed by E. W. Widdowson, the local assayer the result being 2.72 ounces gold and 10 ounces silver, representing a total value of $56.40 per ton.

This is one of the most important strikes that has been made in the vicinity for a long time, as the ore can be taken out in large quantities right from the surface, and shipped direct to the smelter at a comparatively small cost, the wagon road to the Dundee mine reaching to within 1,000 feet of the discovery. It is probable that a local syndicate will be formed to work the property.

The Atlin claim which adjoins the Nome fraction, and probably contains the extension of the newly discovered vein, is owned by the same parties and has already been developed to a considerable extent, the work being done on another vein, however. A shaft has been sunk 60 feet in a wide vein of sulphide ore, which assays $8 to $10 across five feet. This ore, is however, of a quite different character from that of the new vein, which consists of an oxidized quartz carrying considerable arsenic, a very similar ore to that of the Yankee Girl and Canadian Girl vein, which it adjoins on the further side.

THE MASTERY OF THE PACIFIC

In "The Mastery of the Pacific," a work in which many nice things are said about this province, the author adverts to the undoubted possibility of British Columbia becoming a great shipbuilding and manufacturing country and sees in its development one step in the direction of supremacy in the western ocean.

"Those who want to be in touch with the really great movements of the day," says the Toronto Globe, "should keep their eyes on the Canadian west." To this may be added another saying that the great struggle of the century will be on the Pacific.

Coal and iron are two of the most potent factors in the building up of a country. Not so much because of the intrinsic value alone of these products, great as that undoubtedly is, but more because of the better facilities their presence in abundance provide for the successful carrying out of numerous other enterprises and industries requiring large supplies of these commodities. Few indeed are the spots where iron and coal are present in such generous profusion, as in this province. This fact alone would justify the most optimistic prediction for British Columbia's future. But there are so many additional factors all trending in the same direction, the mining of gold, silver, copper, lead and other metals: an industry as yet only in its infancy; the lumber industry and the fisheries; equally at the initial stage of their career, that Canada has practically only the most elementary knowledge of the stupendous possibilities of the western province.

Armed with natural advantages and resources of such incalculable value, British Columbia starts out on her mission of securing the ultimate mastery of the Pacific with everything in her favor to ensure success But these natural advantages and varied resources must first be made productive, and to this end capital must be induced and encouraged to come into the country. It is a trite saying that success begets success. When one industry flourishes the promoters of other enterprises are stimulated to greater effort in the hope that they may share in the prosperity. It becomes therefore of chief importance that these industries already started should be given every assistance to place them on a sound and firmly established basis. The benefits accruing from the success of an industry are not confined to the immediate locality in which it is situated. The community of interests is such that the good effects cover a wide field, and the greater the measure of success the wider the range of influence becomes. With the lead and copper producing industries firmly established, there will follow the reaching out for markets far afield, and the opening up of new enterprises will result from the increased volume of trade. Of these the development of the valuable deposits of hematite and magnetic iron ore offers inducements of the most promising kind. The exploitation of these deposits in which the province is so richly endowed will have the effect of placing British Columbia in the front rank of industrial centres with all the advantages accompanying it. It is a common duty to see that the extent of these iron deposits is kept well to the fore.

THE ELECTIONS IN FRANCE

Sunday last witnessed the completion of the elections in France and in those constituencies where a second ballot was required all doubt as to the verdict was set at rest. The fight being over, the outcome of the campaign is no longer an uncertainty, and in the return of the ministerial party by a large majority France is to be congratulated, and not France alone but all Europe.

The Waldeck-Rousseau administration has remained longer in power than any other ministry since the dawn of the third republic. It has been confronted with many difficult problems, its path has not been a smooth one, but that the good results that have been achieved in the face of obstacles and trials are understood and appreciated by the French people has been conclusively demonstrated in the most pronounced manner. The voting was unusually heavy and great interest was taken in the contests throughout the country. A special effort was made to secure the defeat of M. Millerand, minister of commerce, without avail. M. Millerand took at an early period of the Waldeck-Rousseau ministry's exsitence, a decided stand against the monarchists, declaring that behind the anti-republican actions there stood Clericalism. As a result of the campaign against the clerics which followed this declaration some of the religious orders migrated to England. There was no war against religion or Catholicism; it was waged against the misuse to which it was put to further political ends. At the first stage of the elections Paris did not return a single ministerialist but the position of affairs has been changed by the second ballot, nineteen ministerialists being elected, and the total majority of government supporters in the chamber of deputies has been materially strengthened.

The radicals and socialists made some gains but they are far from strong enough to effect any change in the government's policy and when it is considered that in the face of the many disturbances that have created such grave concern in other countries it was not desirable these should be added to by a political upheaval in France, the good sense of the French electorate in sustaining the ministry that has done so much towards placing the republic on so firm a basis will be universally commended.

PETER SIMPLE SAYS

That the by-law passed by the city fathers, regulating the how, when and where of a man's spitting, is a move in the right direction;

That another by-law should be enacted and enforced, making it a misdemeanor to throw orange, lemon or banana peelings on the streets or sidewalks;

That if the tourist association recently organized succeeds in turning any of the tourist travel Nelson's direction, it is time house cleaning and renovating was begun by the city;

That in this direction tree planting on the streets if properly and systematically done, would improve the appearance of the streets wonderfully;

That to secure uniformity in this matter the planting should be undertaken by the city;

That the expense connected therewith be made a charge against the properties benefited, to be collected in the same manner and at the same time as municipal taxes;

That effective measures be taken to punish any who wantonly deface or destroy trees so planted, or those already planted;

That this is a matter the tourist association should deliberate upon and bring to the attention of the city council;

That another matter this association should consider and bring to the notice of the council is the unsightly appearance of the telegraph, telephone, electric light and other poles on the streets;

That these poles should be painted a uniform color;

That the council should enact a by-law making it compulsory to have this done within the city limits;

That the city should set a good example by having all electric light poles painted at once;

That it should be made a misdemeanor to deface any telegraph, telehone, electric light or electric tramway pole within the city limits, by pasting or posting any advertising matter thereon;

That you may hear from him again.

The Wife of Potiphar.

The country of the Nile was beautiful with verdure. The sky was a dream of light and changing glory; the long caravans of the merchants diverged towards the city of the Pharaohs, bearing purple cloth from Tyre, and rare gems and metal work from Damascus, and carved woods and perfumes from the Isles of the Sea.

A train of dusky men and dusty camels loomed up in silhouette over a ridge, and for a few moments formed a huge picture against a fathomless horizon. On one of the camels was a quaint canopied erection with curtains of silk, and within the curtains sat uneasily a girl of some sixteen years. She had all the beauty of the young Semite, large soft dark eyes, an oval face, somewhat over-full lips of deep red, and nostrils sensitive and distended.

From time to time she plucked aside the curtains with a long slim hand and looked anxiously out. "God of Abraham, thy handmaid crieth unto thee!" she said softly in a voice broken with distress and strenuously pitched. "If help come not soon from above, may death release me!"

Two of the Egyptian traders looked up as some murmur of her vibrant tones reached them where they walked.

"The Hebrew maid speaks," said the younger. The elder waved his hand. "I do not listen," he said, briefly.

"But she may be ill," suggested the younger, glancing at the parting of the curtains and the four small brown fingers. "Bring up the other captive who speaks her tongue and let him enquire," said the elder merchant.

The younger man stood still, and one by one the others passed him, camels laden and men walking. Near the end of the line marched a beautiful boy just emerging into manhood. The young trader called to him kindly, and the youth came to his side.

"I fear for the health of the maiden," he said, briefly. "Come thou and question her."

The eyes of the youth flashed a proud glance at the trader, and then he drew away from him, and a certain faraway look, as of one who sees something enthralling in the distance, crept into his lately flashing eyes.

"The Jewish maiden travels to high honor. Wherefore should she sicken before it meets her? It is her mind that travails in fear of the birth of some new horror," he said, briefly. "The lamb cries for its dam, the young nestling for its mother and its nest. What need for questions? When the maid sits among the mighty ones in a strange land she will learn to forget her sorrow."

"You say wisely, boy," said the trader. "We hope to sell her for much gold to a noble captain of Pharaoh's guard. He has lost his wife, and there is no war in progress. In times of peace warriors are prone to look upon such fair women."

The two had hastened and were now abreast of the silk-curtained canopy, which swayed to the rolling gait of the camel.

"Speak to the maid," commanded the trader.

"Daughter of my people, is all well with thee?" called the youth, his young cheek reddening as he obeyed. The curtains parted.

"Art thou, too, a Hebrew?" cried the girl, with amazement and delight in every tone.

"I am, and, like thee, a captive, foully sold into bondage by my brethren," said the youth, with deep, hoarse anger.

"Alas! then can you tell what is to be our fate?" asked the girl with great tears in her eyes.

"Slavery for me, for thee high honor, riches, luxury, and the captain of Pharaoh's Guard to be thy husband," said the youth, slowly and dreamily.

The Hebrew maiden looked at him in staring dismay.

"What have you said to her?" asked the trader, jogging the arm of the youth. Again the proud eyes flashed, and again grew quickly calm and gentle.

"I have told her that she is to be the wife of the captain of Pharaoh's Guard, and she liketh not my saying," he said, meekly.

The trader laughed. "She liketh not!" he said scornfully, quoting the youth. "When she seeth Potiphar she will fall at his feet. That is our finest and wisest warrior. Tell her what I say." The youth obeyed.

"But I am a Hebrew, and may not mate with a heathen and idolatrous man!" gasped the girl wildly.

The youth sighed. "The hand of our God be upon thee," he said, and fell back to his place in the rear.

* * * * * *

The captain of the Guard sat in his chamber and sorted upon a beautiful carved stand a heap of exquisite gems. There were ear-rings, nose-rings, armlets and anklets, long pear-shaped pearls, strings of round pearls, rings set with great royal rubies, and emeralds deeply and gloriously green. He suddenly sat up and smote his palms together, and a Nubian parted a curtain and came in.

"Take these gifts to the Hebrew maiden, and bid her women prepare her for my coming," said the warrior, pushing aside a heap of jingling, flashing ornaments. The Nubian gathered an end of his scarlet sash and carefully placed the selected jewels within the improvised bag. Then, speechless, he backed out between the curtains. The warrior leaned back with a smile.

"Rachel will wear those gauds well," he said, softly stroking his short beard and crossing his legs "I have given her only the new ornaments and the jewels of my mother. The gems my wife wore would bring her misfortune. I am full of the fancies of women to talk thus! This comes of loitering at home, when one should be abroad conquering provinces and fighting one's way about."

A great yawn heaved the warrior's deep chest. He swept the remaining jewels into a coffer, of which he drew a small golden key from his bosom. Then he clapped his hands twice, and again the curtains parted and forth between them stepped the Hebrew youth. He was dressed in rich and costly garb, and his bearing was distinctly distinguished. He bowed ceremoniously and stood before the warrior. Potiphar laughed easily and good-naturedly.

"Hast no word, Joseph?" he enquired.

"All words are good, noble captain. Thy house is well ordered, thy goods are well cared. The land hath peace."

"That last word is not good for fighting men, Hebrew. I would a war came with the setting sun," said Potiphar, yawning again.

"'Tis thy wedding eve, noble captain," said the Hebrew quickly.

"True, and I must make ready," assented Potiphar. "Send a slave for that casket and put it in thine own store-place. It contains precious jewels."

The Hebrew bowed and turned away. Just as he lifted the curtain to leave the chamber a hurried step was heard. A messenger met him on the threshold and handed him a rolled papyrus. "Pharaoh desires the captain of the Guard," whispered the messenger, as he deferentially presented the roll, and the overseer turned back to his master and repeated the message.

"My chariot!" cried the captain, leaping from his seat. "Hebrew, I have my wish. It is war, and in the south where there be tough fighters. Pharaoh's the king, desires me take men this day and meet them half-way. This stirs my sleeping blood! This suits me better than brides and bridals! But, stay! the Hebrew maiden. Go to her; tell her privately of this, for the king must be the first to tell the people. I do not think many tears will fall because the nuptial rites be delayed. Tell the maiden, who is also thy country-woman, that for this postponement I will, when I return, give her thy freedom. And guard her, Hebrew, till that day, be it far or near!"

The overseer bowed and went upon his errand. On his proud face was a look of awe and triumph.

"Lo! the God of Abraham hath encompassed the maiden!" he said slowly. And the slaves and soldiers eyed him as he strode away, and whispered: "The Hebrew has seen a vision! The light of the unknown is upon his face."

* * * * * *

The war dragged slowly, news came fitfully, and week by week the bride of Potiphar and the overseer of his house were drawn by the triple cord of nationality, religion and youthful ardor nearer and nearer. The Hebrew maiden lived secluded from the city and from the court. She passed many hours in converse day by day with the overseer, and together they kept alive the religion of their fathers in their hearts. The maiden lifted her beautiful head in hope as she listened to the voice of Joseph, encouraging and buoying her frightened soul. The inevitable happened at last, and an unguarded word, a look too much confessed the love that was as natural as it was pure, and the two faced the problem in mingled terror and rapture. Escape from Egypt was impossible; a happy consummation of their love was equally out of the question. The city was even then being decked for the triumphant return of the captain of the Guard.

The day of his entry dawned, and the heart of the overseer was of lead, while the anguished bride-elect of the victorious warrior had now added to the horror of union with an idolatrous man the torture of love for another.

While the house of the captain of the Guard was being wreathed with flowers, and the singing maidens stood waiting at the gates with lotus crowns and stringed instruments garlanded with wreaths of green, the overseer, in his sumptuous festival garments, sought the Hebrew girl. She sat amid her maidens in silent despair. The overseer bowed low before her.

"Dismiss the maidens," he said, in their own speech, and, made cunning by her extremity, she rose hurriedly. "Is it indeed true that the lord of the house is near?" she said in Egyptian, misleading them. "Then to the first of my maidens who sees the shining of his armor will I give this ring of rubies. Run, now, to the upper windows and watch."

The Egyptian girls dropped their work and hurried up the short stair to the flat roof, round which was a high wall, pierced by small openings. The overseer stood moodily looking upon the ground. The Hebrew girl drew near timidly and clasping her hands upon her fluttering bosom, where jewels flashed with her panting breath, looked up into his young and clouded face.

"Is there no escape for me?" she asked in trembling tones. "Must it be either the knife or the marriage-bed of the idolator?" The overseer started violently.

"I have said it, and I am not afraid," said the girl, her great eyes darkening and her nostrils rounding tensely.

The overseer paused a moment. "There is no escape," he said slowly. The girl gave a small, stifled groan. "It will not be so very bad," she said, quivering. "Just a little pain, and safety, and thou, some day, wilt tell my people of me? That I was true." And then, before the overseer could anticipate her movement or guard her from herself, she threw herself into his arms, clinging about him and sobbing "Farewell!"

There was a burst of song from the gates, a cry from the maidens, the overseer wrenched the thin, clinging fingers from his neck and tried to tear them from his rich garment. They had a vice-like, frantic grip.

There was a rush of the maidens, a tramp of a heavy foot beyond the curtain; in vain the overseer whispered, "The captain of the Guard is here."

With one frenzied wrench he slipped from the gorgeous robe and dashed through the inner entrance, just as the maidens scurried laughing down the stone steps to claim their reward, and the parted curtains gave admission to the captain of the Guard.

The girl stood in the center of the chamber, her face white and drawn, in her hands the brilliant robe of the overseer, in her eyes a horror unspeakable. The captain of the Guard advanced with a quick glance about him.

"He was here?" he said. "This is his robe?"

The girl suddenly dropped it with a faint cry. She began to see horror and danger ahead.

"You are not hurt?" said the captain of the Guard, gently, touching her shoulder. She shook her head. Then he turned to the maidens.

"Go to the dance!" he said, sternly, "and send me here four of my soldiers who wait without."

The moment the curtain fell the Hebrew girl awoke from her trance of terror. In few and stumbling Egyptian phrases she tried to tell the truth, asking for swift death, and handing her pitiful little dagger to the captain of the Guard. He pushed it aside.

"Peace, girl!" he cried shortly. "'Tis a pleasant and joyous home-coming!" Then, as the soldiers noisely entered, he said grimly: "Take this robe to him who was overseer. 'Tis well he fled before I entered to slay him; 'tis better that the maiden is brave and strong; but 'tis best of all that the Hebrew be safely put away, so that he affright not lesser woman as he hath stricken with terror the bride of your captain. Therefore, lay him safe in the prison, and your lives be forfeit if aught befall him without my word! Do all quickly and quietly, so that the rejoicings be not interrupted."

The soldiers gathered up the rich robe and retired, and the captain of the Guard turned to the Hebrew maiden. "Come, let us go to the feast," he said simply. But she made no response.

She looked blankly at him one instant with a curious furrow across her brow and an audible sucking in of her breath. Then she swayed and fell. When he lifted her up very gently but without concern, only the little golden hilt of the dagger showed outside the pinched-in drapery just below her left breast. The blade was piercing the point of her startled heart!

* * * * * *

The wailing and chanting of passing mourners pierced the dungeon window-place, where the overseer sat with his head in his hands. "What is the wailing?" he asked his jailer. "They mourn the dead, that was to have been the bride of Potiphar, the warrior whom thou hast angered," said the jailer.

"When did death deliver the maiden?" cried the prisoner.

"At the very hour of thy coming here," replied the jailer. Then he stared with amaze, for the prisoner leapt to his feet, his despair vanishing like a cloud.

"Praise and glory and honor and power to Jehovah, the God of my fathers!" he said, reverently, in Hebrew, and with fixed eyes he stood as if he saw a bright vision. The jailer shook his head and went softly to his place. "The Hebrew hath eyes that see the unseen," he muttered. "His God is near him. I who worship Isis, Osiris and the gods of the Egyptians cannot comprehend him."

The years were many and the captain of the Guard and the jailer had gone to their long home before the Hebrew captive was free, but never once did a darkness becloud his face again such as was upon it during the first hours of his captivity, before he knew that the wife of Potiphar had sealed her faith with her heart's blood.

An old settler.—From N. Y. "Life."

Testing It For Herself.

He watched her arranging the violets in the big Kakiri bowl.

She looked so very pretty, and yet she must be told.

Lighting a cigarette, he braced himself for the telling. As he tossed the match in the direction of the blazing fire, she came toward him, holding in her hand a few of the purple flowers.

"For you," she said, simply, and pressed close to his side as she put them in his buttonhole.

After that she bent and kissed him, slowly and deliberately. He sat transfixed. In all their platonics her lips had never before touched his.

Ere he could recover himself she kissed him again.

Not a word nor a caress accompanied either kiss. They stood out against a background of utter incomprehensibility.

Then she walked over by the fire. He looked anxiously after her.

She faced about, and he saw that her lips were moving slightly, while her eyes had a far-off gaze.

At last she spoke.

"You can marry her!"

There was a pause—she seemed to be indulging in further meditation—and then—

"Yes, you can marry her. I don't care at all. You see, I kissed you on purpose. I did it twice to make sure, and I didn't feel even the faintest quiver either time. I was very careful, and tasted each kiss thoroughly, and I know now that—that you can marry her."

He rose, his form and his rage towering together. What man could be calm on learning that his lips possess no power to thrill?

"Good-bye," he said, putting out his hand.

"Good-bye," she answered, smiling.

He went out, and the door closed behind him.

She stood where he left her, banding her clasped fingers across her eyes. The sunlight streamed in between the window arches and shot a ray of glory over the violets, the woman and the woman's yellow hair. It caused the diamonds on her hand to sparkle brilliantly, and something on her cheek shone too.

"Dear heaven!" she murmured, softly, "what must it be to have him do the kissing!"

Literary Success.

"The main element of literary success is the popular mood," remarks "Life." "Litterateurs and litterateuses have nothing to do with making the popular mood. This is made by the high price of potatoes, or the bad times abroad, or the constructive statesmanship of the Republican party, et cetera. The public take to their bosoms today what they would have coldly neglected yesterday, and vice versa. Even the works of an Irving Bacheller might have fallen still-born from the press in another generation. In a word, literary success is quite like success in the real estate or saloon business; it is lucrative, and that is all. The man or woman who should write to please himself or herself— But that is getting away from our subject."

Lost Opportunity.

EVERY time a package goes out of your store which does not contain some advertising matter, you are losing an opportunity to make your store the store of the town.

Each package you send out is proof that a sale has been made. Every sale is supposedly of goods that are going to give the customer full value, and are going to give satisfaction. This will create a favorable impression. Every sale proves that some person has shown a disposition to trade with you.

Now this disposition is either great or small. In either case it can be made greater. And one of the most effective methods to bring about this desired effect is to place the advertising matter in the packages you send out.

THE CITY

The steamer Nelson from today will take the run between Nelson and Kootenay Landing for the next month, replacing the Moyie, which is to go into the shipyards for a thorough overhauling.

The lake rose six inches in the twenty-four hours ending at 3 p.m. yesterday. The rise for today will be considerably heavier, as reports from Bonner's Ferry and Kootenay landing state that the water is now rising rapidly.

Yesterday was the first warm day of the season, the thermometer for a time remaining between 77 and 78 in the shade. Coming after a long cool spell the heat was much commented on, and a lively business was done by the purveyors of cooling drinks.

Henry Cook, one of the men who was held under quarantine and later made his escape, to be recaptured at Ymir, was yesteday brought for trial before Mayor Fletcher. The prisoner pleaded guilty and after being given a severe talking to was released with a fine of $5 and costs, the mayor taking into account that he had been held under detention for a month.

The floating freight shed of the Great Northern was yesterday moved from its low water station up to the widening of the city wharf where the derrick is situated. From present appearances the derrick will soon be cut off by high water from the upper part of the wharf, in which case considerable difficulty will be experienced in getting more marble from Kaslo for the postoffice building.

The heavy thunderstorm yesterday caused Cottonwood creek to rise rapidly and a force of men was put to work by the C.P.R. digging out the boulders which came rolling down the flume with a lot of driftwood. The flume at a late hour last night was carrying all the water, but if many stumps come down there is likely to be trouble at the lower bridge.

The Grand Forks team, which is to try conclusions with the Nelson boys at lacrosse this afternoon is made of the following: George Fraser, goal; F. W. Grant, point; T. McIntyre, cover; A. E. Savage, J. Sweezey and J. Richards, defence field; W. Betts, center; W. B. Bower, T. L. Crossin, and A. Cochrane, home field; K. C. McDonald, outside home; and A. McQueen, inside home.

The skin of a handsome silver-tip bear was brought down from the Molly Gibson mine yesterday by Bruce White. The animal was shot the day previous by George Young, who looks after the tramway at the Molly Gibson. It weighed about 350 pounds and Mr. White is sending the skin to Spokane to have it mounted. Bears have been quite plentiful in the neighborhood of the mine lately, the tracks of a she bear and two young ones being found near where the silver tip was shot.

Those who forwarded the petition to Victoria asking for the opening up of the road from Nelson to Cottonwood lake, yesterday received word that there was no chance of the $400 grant being increased. This they say will be utterly useless for the purpose. The principal property affected is the Robin Hood group, which was bonded recently, and on which work was to have been started shortly. The amount asked for was $4,000, which would repair the road as far as the lake, when the owners of claims could connect it by trails and branch roads.

THROUGH THE OLD CANAL

STEAMER NORTH STAR ENGAGED TO MOVE OUTPUT OF THE PARADISE MINE.

Golden, May 13.—[Special to The Daily News.]—After several years of abandonment, the old canal which connects the headwaters of the Kootenay and Columbia rivers, and which was originally constructed with the view of lowering the level of Kootenay lake, so that the flats held by the Kootenay Reclamation syndicate could be drained, will be put to use. With the approach of high water Captain Armstrong, the owner of the North Star, intends to take his boat through the canal from the Kootenay to Columbia river. There is now considerable ore tonnage offering on the Columbia, while the railways built or in course of construction in southeast Kootenay have swallowed up the bulk of the business which formerly went to the steamer on the upper reaches of the Kootenay. To get the steamer through the canal will require considerable work in the way of dredging, but even this will be much cheaper than the building of a new boat. The principal tonnage for the coming season will be from the Paradise mine, the ore from which will have to be moved to Golden, but there are a number of other properties in the district which will also ship once better facilities for the moving of their output is assured.

The concentrator machinery at the Thunder mountain property on Upper Columbia lake is to be moved to the Estella mine on Wasa creek. The Estella is said to be in very good shape. It is a silver-lead property, but being at present somewhat inaccessible it becomes necessary to concentrate the output. The taking of the machinery from the Thunder Hill property recalls one of the most disastrous mining ventures in which the people of Victoria, who were uniformly unfortunate in their Kootenay investments, ever engaged in.

Whereas in the opinion of the Council it is desirable that a manufacturing industry for the purpose of manufacturing lead and paint should be established within the Municipal limits of the City of Nelson.
