NARAMATA CONCERT

Opening of New Opera House A Great Success.

The program presented by "The Entertainers," of Naramata, at the opening of their new Opera House on Wednesday evening will produce pleasant recollections for many a day in the minds of those who were fortunate enough to be present.

The opera house is a handsome structure, the auditorium of which is capable of seating between two hundred and two hundred and fifty spectators. The stage is one of the most attractive features of the building. It is beautifully decorated with scenery, and the drop curtains are certainly up to date in the mechanism of their operation.

Naramata is the second youngest town in the Okanagan and the population is not large, but the fact that an opera house was deemed one of the first requirements of the new settlement goes to show that the people who intend making their homes there purpose getting the most out of life. The Str. Maud Moore left Penticton at 6:30 in the evening with twenty-five passengers from the most pleasure loving town in the province, and later conveyed a goodly number from Summerland at the opposite side of the lake from Naramata. The opera house was, in consequence, nicely filled with spectators. As "The Entertainers," without exception, performed so well, it is not necessary to make special mention of any, but publish the program in full:

If the merchants and other business men of Penticton were really alive to the best interests of the town, they would pay more attention to advertising. What must an outsider think of Penticton anyway when he sees a string of advertisements not much larger than business cards? Besides he cannot see that nearly half of the business firms carry no advertisements at all.

Local and Personal

See S. T. Elliott's ad. re Shire stallion for sale.

Wm. Weaver and bride arrived from Montreal on Wednesday.

Mrs. J. Hood and Miss Florence Hood returned Wednesday after several months' absence in Hamilton, Ont.

The Quadrille Club will hold its closing dance on Wednesday, 29th April, and every effort is being put forth to make it the most brilliant success of the season. The Kelowna orchestra will be down that evening.

To encourage the cultivation of the "Stone" variety of tomato for the present canning season, the Okanagan Canning Co., Ltd., offers to pay $1.00 per ton extra for this variety, it being superior for canning purposes according to experts.

The sidewalk has been completed between the bridge on Smith St. and the wharf. This walk has been built by public contribution, and is a decided improvement to a section of street that has been difficult to pass over on foot during wet weather.

There will be a regular meeting of the Penticton Board of Trade in Steward's Hall next Wenesday evening. All members are requested to be present as questions of importance to the community are to be discussed, among them being that of the incorporation of Penticton as a city or municipality.

The company's steam tug, which has been undergoing repairs for some months is again in commission.

The Okanagan Canning Co., Ltd., reports very favorably re organization. The committee appointed to interview the growers met with gratifying results showing the manifest interest of the citizens in general. The corporation should be complete in ten days when more definite arrangements will be made as to location, etc.

The marriage of Miss Gertrude Wildblood to Mr. Wm. Weaver took place on March 23. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. W. R. The bride travelled in a costume of light brown cloth and a brown hat to match, trimmed with flowers.—Montreal Star.

COMMUNICATIONS

(We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions of correspondents.)

To the Editor of THE PENTICTON PRESS:

SIR : — In your last issue appears a letter from a Summerland correspondent re the death of Frank De Beers at that place on the 20th ult., in which occurs some vague moralizings on the temperance question and some very unjust criticisms of a more definite character. After informing us that as a result of the fatality above mentioned, he has become an ardent advocate of the license system, he goes on to find fault with the low moral standards of the Summerland people generally and the laxity of the moral and social reformers of the place particularly, although he fails to state exactly what he wants, unless it is that the ministers should follow his lead and ardently advocate the granting of licenses to sell liquor.

He next proceeds to condemn the coroner's jury for failing to censure "careless dispensers and sellers of alcoholic poisons." Had he looked the matter up he would have found that alcohol is not included among the poisons of which every druggist keeps a list.

But granting that although not mentioned in the "poison list" alcohol is known by every chemist as being poisonous under certain conditions and therefore to be dispensed with due precaution, the case made out by "One Present" is still a weak one as it pre-supposes a knowledge by the dispenser of the exact use every purchaser is going to make of his purchase. For instance, only a short time ago I bought a bottle of iodine from our local druggist to use externally in combatting an incipient attack of pleurisy. Supposing I had used it internally instead of externally and had died as a result, would any sensible person have thought of holding Mr. Main responsible?

"One Present," however, is less reasonable than such a one would be, for the article purchased is a common article of commerce and was bought for a common purpose. It is not necessary to go to a druggist for wood alcohol. Any hardware store in the country will supply it. Every grocer in town carries alcohol on his shelves in the form of fruit essences, and persons have been known to become intoxicated by drinking them.

While everyone will agree in deploring the sad end of this victim of alcoholism, it should not be made an occasion for doing an injustice to those who are guiltless of wrong doing in the matter.

In conclusion I would point out to "One Present" that after lecturing on the duty incumbent upon us of stepping boldly to the front "without fear, favor or affection," it ill becomes him to hide his identity. When we hear from him "anon" let it not be anonymous.

Yours truly,
GEORGE E. WINKLER.

ADVERTISING RATES ON APPLICATION.

Keremeos Trumpet.

The first number of the Keremeos Trumpet, published at Keremeos by J. A. Brown, has been received at the PRESS office. It is a four column eight page paper, and is nicely printed on good book paper. It contains a general historical and descriptive write-up of Keremeos and surrounding country, dealing especially with the district from a fruit growing standpoint. The merchants and other business men of Keremeos, appreciating the advantages of a paper in their town, are tendering their hearty support in advertising, one advertiser taking a full page, and many others large spaces. The advertising rates printed above the editorial column, if realized in Penticton, would make the editor of the PRESS imagine himself in Rockfeller's boots.

Dog Poisoning.

The presence of a pack of mongrel dogs as seen about nearly every small town is anything but pleasing, but any objection that might be raised to their presence is not sufficient grounds for opening a campaign of slaughter, and indiscriminate slaughter at that, against all animals of the canine tribe. During the past few months not only a number of worthless curs have been got rid of but a number of very valuable dogs as well. Circumstances go to show that a malignant spirit is at work, and that some of the dogs have been poisoned out of pure spite. Such acts must afford poor satisfaction to any but a most contemptible disposition. Every one is at perfect liberty under the law to keep a dog if he wants to, and nobody has any authority to interfere with that right. If there are too many dogs the proper thing to do is to incorporate the town. A dog tax would then prove the most effectual means of weeding out the worthless and objectionable animals.

Immigration.

As the season advances it becomes more evident that the immigration to Canada and particularly to the west will this year be the greatest on record. Reports from the Old Country go to show that the immigration will be large, and of the well-to-do class, as well as those of less means being brought out by assisting agencies.

It was thought at first that the shortage of crops last year would discourage new settlers, and that this would be a very poor year as far as new comers were concerned. Recent reports, however, go to show that outsiders still have confidence in our great country. In the Eastern States there are said to be a large number of people who contemplate coming to the Canadian West this spring. The trains from St. Paul and other points throughout the republic are already crowded with land-seekers and settlers, who, accompanied by their families, are bound for various points from Winnigeg to the Pacific coast. Saskatchewan and both Northern and Southern Alberta are attracting a great many. The Canadian government agents throughout the United States report that there will be a much larger number come this spring than in any previous spring in the history of the immigration movement northward. From Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa, Indiana Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and the Dakotas excursions are run weekly. Most of the settlers take with them their effects and a considerable amount of money, with the intention of becoming settlers as soon as they can locate.

Penticton a City.

The question of the incorporation of Penticton is certain to become a very live one in the near future. The desirability of better organization for government and administrative purposes is becoming more apparent to everybody each day. There are so many things with which a council alone can deal that the progress of the place must, necessarily, be slow until incorporation has been brought about.

To our mind Penticton has everything to gain and nothing to lose by incorporation. The step has been objected to by some on the ground that taxation would be increased. We believe this a mistaken idea, for in case any public works, electric lighting or water systems, for instance, were installed they could be made to pay for themselves by the revenue derived therefrom, without any extra cost to the taxpayer.

One phase of the question, however, upon which there might be considerable difference of opinion is as to which would best meet the requirements of the place, incorporation as a city or as a municipality. We think the careful observer will decide in favor of incorporation as a city, not merely from the increased prestige it would give the place, but from that of revenue and expenditure. A city corporation, embracing merely the business and residential sections, would confine the expenditure of the revenue that would be derived from trades licenses, liquor licenses, fines, dog taxes, and pound fees to the streets of the city rather than distribute it over the whole municipality.

Sunday School Convention.

The preparations for the coming Sunday School Convention to be held in Kelowna on the 8th, 9th and 10th of this month are about completed. The program includes a goodly number of papers and addresses on the various phases of Sunday School work. Among those whom the executive expects are Mr. Stuart Muirhead the General Secretary, Principal Sawyer and the majority of the local clergymen, superintendents and teachers. There is to be an excellent exhibition of Sunday School material including books, maps, charts, papers and all sorts of apparatus used in Sunday School work. It will be well worth while for any teacher to come to the Convention merely to see this exhibition. The Convention will open with a public meeting on Wednesday evening. There will be three sessions on Thursday and one on Friday morning. The people of Kelowna are arranging to billet all delegates.

Lord Avebury's Maxims.

In the course of his Rectorial address at St. Andrews Lord Avebury gave utterance to a number of maxims, including the following :—

The darkest shadows in life are those which a man makes when he stands in his own light.

I have often thought how closely the maxims of golf apply to real life—

1 Keep your eye on the ball.
2 Keep straight.
3 Keep the course.
4 Take time.
5 Do not press.
6 Not up, not in.
7 Do not lose heart.
8 Be temperate in all things.
9 Keep your temper or you will lose your game.

A light stomach makes a light heart.

Time is said to be money, but it is more—much more—it is life.

The man who has no sympathy will not get it.

Heredity Triumphant

By Alice Lovett Carson

Copyright, 1906, by E. C. Parcells

A shrill whistle echoed along the sunny avenue. Mary Dexter jumped from her seat on the porch, scattering embroidery silks in all directions. She waved her handkerchief in response. Then she ran into the house calling: "Aunt Linda! Where are you? Here's Dave Green to see you!"

Without waiting for a reply she returned to the porch just in time to greet the young man who came up the steps. "Glad to see me, Mary?" he asked as with a hasty glance around she put up her face for a kiss. Then the two sat down on the top step in earnest, subdued conversation. Mary Dexter was a maid of nineteen with a fresh peachblow complexion. Today wearing a simple white frock, she looked her best—and knew it.

In a few minutes an elderly woman came out the front door. Her hair worn as a coronet, was silvery white though she was only forty. Age had touched her face lightly, pressing in the wrinkles with loving fingers that left only sweetness in the expression. Rumor told a romantic tale of Linda Pennington's life, and for once rumor was right. A girlish engagement with a young army officer who fell in his first battle, a few years as a nurse in the war, interrupted by a marriage with Lyall Pennington, early widowhood and a subsequent life devoted to good work—these were among the incidents in her story. For many years all her plans had been for Mary, whom she had adopted long ago.

Mrs. Pennington had taken a great interest in Mary because she came from her own town, and the case of the child was particularly pitiful, for there were no near relatives to whom she could be sent.

Fresh from the sadness caused by the death of her husband, Linda found the child's companionship a great comfort. Mary had passed serenely through the stages of childhood and youth and now, at nineteen, under the training of private tutors, was prepared to enter

"ISN'T IT A BEAUTY, AUNT LINDA?"

Merton college in the fall. After graduation endless possibilities opened before her. This was the situation that July morning when Mrs. Pennington came out on the porch and greeted young David Green, one of Mary's admirers.

He was a manly fellow of twenty-one, son of a prosperous farmer of the rural district. He had lately been given a good sized tract of land by his father, with the instruction to "see what he could do with it," and he was doing well.

"You've just come back from New York, haven't you, David?" asked Mrs. Pennington.

"Yes," said Mary. "He's been away two whole days."

The sigh with which this was said brought a laugh from the other two. Mrs. Pennington seated herself in the rocker.

"Why, Mary," she said, "is this your embroidery on the floor? Pick it up before it gets dirty."

The girl leaned back comfortably against the railing. "You pick it up, Dave," she said indifferently. And the young man did so. But Linda bit her lip in vexation. It was a little thing, but characteristic of the way Mary made all her friends wait on her.

"Did you go away on business, David?" she asked hastily.

"No—yes—well, I don't know as you'd call it exactly business."

"I should," said Mary decidedly—"the most important business for you just now, Dave." The lad laughed, embarrassed.

"Dear me, this sounds very mysterious," said Mrs. Pennington, smiling. "What is it all about?"

"I went to get something for Mary," said David.

"And here it is," said the girl, holding out her left hand. "Isn't it a beauty, Aunt Linda?" A handsome solitaire flashed into view.

The significance of the stone did not enter Linda Pennington's mind, for it was many years since she had thought of such things. "Mary, you know you may not receive presents of jewelry from young men," she was beginning but the words died on her lips. Mary had looked looking for some approval, read in her face grief, disappointment and refusal.

"Aren't you pleased?" went on the girl. "We've been engaged since Christmas. Before I visited Florrie Tucker, Dave asked me and I said, 'I'd see.' Then while I was away he kept writing to me—and I always did like him best of any of the boys—so I just had to say 'yes.' He's so obstinate, Dave is, he wouldn't take 'no.'"

"Of course I am very much surprised," Linda said when she could trust herself to speak. "I think you are both too young to talk of such things. Besides, you are going to college soon, Mary, and I do not approve of indefinite engagements."

"But there's nothing indefinite about our engagement," replied the girl airily, twisting the ring on her finger. "We are to be married in September."

"What?"

"Oh, yes, it's all settled," nodding her head. "I wrote this morning to Merton canceling my application. I'm tired of study—what is the use of it? I know more now than any other girl—or boy almost—in Dorsettown. Just think, after September I'll never have to study any more!"

Mrs. Pennington rose in wrath from her chair. "Mary," she cried sharply, "you don't know what you're saying! You are giving up carelessly what I would give years of my life to have had when I was a girl—what you will always regret giving up. I don't often exercise my authority as your guardian, but when you act like a silly child I must. I ask you—no, I order you—to break this engagement!"

Mary sprang up and stamped her foot angrily. "Well, I won't!" she cried. "And you can't make me; I'm nineteen years old."

Linda sank back in the chair with trembling lips. The mother who had eloped was speaking through her daughter. "Mary, if you love me," she pleaded, but she knew it would be no use. The girl's heredity was showing, and she must bow to the inevitable.

Mary never would understand what a blow this was to her guardian's ambitions for her. College, then advanced work, or, if the girl preferred, art study in Paris or music in Germany—these the plans she had made. And this mad whim must overturn them all!

The girl's storm of fury spent itself in floods of tears. "Aunt Linda, I can't. Don't ask me to," she sobbed.

David drew his sweetheart toward him. He had been a silent, troubled witness of the scene. Now he spoke quietly.

"It's like this, Mrs. Pennington, we love each other, and we don't see the use of waiting. If we wait four years by then we'll have grown apart perhaps, and it will be harder to give in to each other. We want to be married at once. I am making a good living; my people are pleased, and we only want your consent."

But she shook her head impatiently. "I have nothing against you, David, but—it is impossible."

"Oh, no, Mrs. Pennington!" he cried. "Think—think—when you were young and in love. Don't you remember how it was then?"

How old memories can rise again! A vision of a boyish soldier, with pleading eyes and tender smile. And that parting—could she ever forget the sound of his voice, low and thrilling?

She gave a shuddering sigh and opened tear dimmed eyes. "I was only seventeen and he was twenty—and I never saw him again. His body could not be found. Ah!" Steadying her voice, she went on. "You are right, David. It was foolish and wrong to try to control Mary's life. She must work it out for herself. My plans were far different from this, but I can give them up, as I have given up others."

"Dear Mrs. Pennington," said David, grasping her hand.

Then, when Mary ran off to set the supper table and David followed, with awkward attempts to help, Linda Pennington drew forth an old locket and gazed long at the portrait within. "Once I thought that the shattering of my dreams would kill me," she murmured. "But I lived to thank God for other dreams and duties that came. So it will be now, I think."

"Supper is ready, Aunt Linda!" called Mary, and Mrs. Pennington turned from the sunset glow.

Fun For Him.

Askum—Who was that man who stopped to talk to you? Dubley—That's my old barber. Askum—Does he usually stop you on the street. Dubley—No, but he knows I'm shaving myself now and he just wanted to look at my face and gloat over me.—Atlanta Constitution.

Huxley and Hunt In Canada.

One is sometimes disposed to consider "what might have been" in connection with Canada and Canadian institutions. For instance, Holman Hunt, the painter of that famous picture, "The Light of the World," once thought of coming to Canada to take up farming. Would Hunt have made Canada more artistic and have wrought out his great works here, or would he have become a poor farmer instead of a great painter; and done no good either for himself or for Canada. But an even more interesting speculation is that concerning Huxley, who once came near being a professor of Toronto University. Would the great scientist have been as successful as he was in England, or would the environment have cramped his energies? Would Huxley have been promoted and appreciated, or would he have been misunderstood and kept down, dwarfed for want of material and inspiration? In any event, it is in such men a nation lives and the more Canada can attract or develop the more rapid will be progress, the deeper and fuller her current of life.

Luxury For Paupers.

One of the members of the Epsom Board of Guardians, on the occasion of a recent visit to the workhouse, recorded his impressions in the visitors' book as follows: 'I have inspected the house, and it seems to me the most comfortable dwelling-house in the town.'

A Welsh Rip.

Every nation has a Rip Van Winkle of its own, but the Welsh story of Rip is unique. He is known as Taffy ap Sion. One morning Taffy heard a bird singing on a tree close by his path. Allured by the melody, he sat down until the music ceased. When he arose, what was his surprise at observing that the tree under which he had taken a seat had now become dead and withered! In the doorway of his home, which, to his amazement, had also suddenly grown older, he asked of a strange old man for his parents, whom he had left there, as he said, a few minutes before. Upon learning his name the old man said: "Alas, Taffy, I have often heard my grandfather, your father, speak of you, and it was said you were under the power of the fairies and would not be released until the last sap of that sycamore had dried up. Embrace me, my dear uncle—for you are my uncle—embrace your nephew." Welshmen do not always perceive the humor of this somewhat novel situation of a youth—for Taffy was still merely a boy—being hailed as uncle by a gentleman perhaps forty years his senior.

Indians Are Pagans Still.

Rev. J. Samans, Indian agent, has just completed his annual trip among the Indians on the Lake of the Woods and the Lake Winnipeg districts, and he states, in an interview at Winnipeg that the Indians both in Western Ontario and Manitoba as far as he has visited them were in the best condition, having plenty of money, an abundance of food and being in an excellent state of health. The Indians in the Lake of the Woods, he says, are still pagan, and the attitude of these natives to religion is quite decided. They refuse absolutely to allow their children to attend any school where religion is taught in any form to any extent. They have no objection to their children learning to write read and cipher but they are most determinedly opposed to the teaching of religion. The best means of dealing with the children of the Indians are in the boarding schools. There are schools at Norway House, Kenora, Shoal Lake, Fort Frances and at Port Alexander. In the Lake of the Woods district there is much more evidence of the influence of liquor, and its harmful effects of the natives of the country.

LITERARY COLUMN.

"Tips" on the Rhine.

The pleasure of seeing the museums, churches, town halls, or other curious and beautiful objects is moderated, I must say, by the grave importunity of the man asking for a "tip."

On the banks of the Rhine, as in all other much frequented regions, the "tip" is a very tiresome mosquito which returns at every turn to sting, not your skin, but your pocket-book. By merely stating facts and exaggerating nothing I shall show you to what an extent the natives of this district have carried the question of tips.

You enter any place whatsoever; at the entrance gate of the town a messenger asks you at what hotel you intend to put up, takes your passport and keeps it. The coach stops in the coach-office yard and the driver, who has not cast a glance at you during the short journey, presents himself, opens the coach door, and holds out his hand with a vacant stare. A tip.

A moment after, the postillion comes up in his turn and addresses to you a senseless jabber which means "A tip, if you please."

A stout porter takes from the coach your trunk and valise. A tip.

Another rascal puts your baggage on a wheelbarrow, asks you to what hotel you are going, and begins to run on before you with the barrow. Having arrived at the hotel, the landlord appears and begins this little dialogue which ought to be written in every language at the door of every hotel:

"Good day sir."

"I should like a room, landlord."

"Alright sir. Take the gentleman to No. 4."

You go up to No. 4 where your baggage has already arrived. A man appears: it is he who has wheeled it to the hotel. A tip.

A second man arrives: what does he want? It is he who has brought your small parcels up to the room. You say to him: "Alright my man, I will give you something when I go away." "I do not belong to the hotel sir." A tip.

You go outside where a beautiful church presents itself. You try to get inside but the doors are closed. The priests ought to keep the doors open, but the beadles close them in order to earn a few cents. However, an old woman has noticed your difficulty and comes up and directs you to a bell near a small wicket. This opens when you ring and the beadle appears. You ask to see the church, so he gets a bunch of keys and directs himself to the main entrance. Just as you are about to enter you feel someone pulling at your coat sleeve; it is the polite old lady whom you have forgotten. A tip.

Once inside the church you begin to admire the various objects.

"Why is that green curtain drawn across that picture?"

"Because it is the finest one in the church," says the beadle.

"By whom is this picture?"

"By Rubens."

"I should like to see it."

The beadle leaves you and soon returns with an individual with a very sorrowful-looking face. It is the custodian of the picture. He presses a spring, the curtain opens and you see the painting. Having viewed the picture, the curtain closes again and the man makes you a significant salute. A tip. As you walk around the church in tow of the beadle, you come to the gate of the chancel which is securely bolted and before which stands a gaily-dressed personage; it is the beadle who has been apprised of your visit and is waiting for you. You enter, look around and just as you are going out your cicerone salutes you with a majestic air. A tip.

This man again hands you over to the other beadle. You next come to the vestry door which, strange to say, is open. You enter and find inside a sexton. The beadle departs with dignity, for it is fitting that he should leave his prey to the sexton for a time. This sexton takes possession of you and shows you things you could very well see and understand without him. For instance, there are the mitres of the bishop, and, under a glass case, in a box trimmed with tarnished white satin, the skeleton of some saint or other dressed up as a troubadour. On emerging you pay another tip.

The beadle again pounces on you. Now you reach the staircase leading to the tower. The view from the top of the steeple must be fine so you wish to ascend. The beadle silently pushes open a door and you go up thirty steps or so when your further passage is barred by a closed door. You turn round and the beadle is no longer there—you are alone. You knock at the door and a face appears at a peep-hole. This is the bell-ringer who opens the door and says: "Come up, sir." A tip.

You go up but the ringer does not follow you; so much the better you think, for you breathe freely and enjoy being alone. At length you reach the platform of the tower. There you look around and enjoy tne beautiful blue sky and the magnificent landscape. Suddenly you perceive that an importunate being is following you and keeps on humming into your ears inaudible words. This is the sworn and privileged guide, whose duty it is to make comments to strangers on the splendors of the belfry, the church and the landscape. This man is usually a stammerer. Sometimes he stutters and is deaf as well. You do not listen to him, but let him gabble away to his heart's content and completely forget him whilst admiring what is to be seen below and around you. After a time you think of going down and for that purpose direct your steps towards the turret of the staircase when your deaf friend stands before you. A tip. "That is alright sir," pocketing it; "and now will you please give me something for myself?" "What is that I have just given you?" "That is for the building to which I owe two francs a person; but now, sir, you must understand that I want a trifle for myself." Another tip.

You go down again. Suddenly a trap-door opens near you. It is the place where the bells are. A young man shows you them and asks for a tip. At the foot of the tower you again meet with the beadle who has been patiently awaiting your return and who respectfully conducts you to the church door.

You return to your hotel taking care not to ask your way lest you should be again set upon for a tip. You have scarcely got inside the public-house when you see approaching you, with a friendly smile, a person who is a complete stranger to you. It turns out to be the fellow who took your passport. A tip please. You dine and the time arrives when you must leave. The servant brings your bill and expects a tip. A stable boy carries your baggage to the diligence. A tip. Another porter hoists it on the outside of the coach. Another tip.

Now calculate all thess tips at a minimum of half a franc each and a maximum of two francs, which is sometimes compulsory, and it mounts up to a very fine sum. Do not forget that a tip must always be a silver coin.

For these ingenious people the traveller is but a bag of crowns which must be made smaller as quickly as possible. Even the government sometimes enters into the business.--(Translated from Victor Hugo's writings.)
