Local and Personal

Those having friends visiting them will confer a favor by acquainting the PRESS with the fact. All other local news thankfully received.

The peach trees are beginning to come into blossom.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Anderson left on Tuesday for Alberta.

The Municipal Council have completed the grading of Ellis St.

It is expected that the daily boat will begin about the first of May.

Bryson Whyte, of Peachland, was in town on Thursday morning.

E. W. Mutch left on Tuesday for a short business trip to the coast.

Const. J. Tooth, of Kelowna, spent a day or two in town this week.

G. H. E. Hudson, of Kelowna, spent Wednesday and Thursday in town.

D. W. Crowley and Alf. McClellan spent Thursday in Penticton.

Mr. and Mrs. Payne LeSieur arrived on Friday, the 16th inst. to spend the summer here.

H. A. Turner, Deputy Assessor and Collector, of Fairview, spent Thursday in Penticton.

W. W. B. McInnes was sworn in on Sat. 17th inst. as senior county court judge of Vancouver.

W. H. Conn, of Vancouver, arrived on Friday of last week, and will spend a month on his bench fruit lot.

Joseph Martin has accepted the Liberal nomination in the by-election for Stratford-on-Avon, England.

S. C. Smith and daughter-in-law, Mrs. Chas. Smith, of Vernon, were in Penticton from Saturday to Monday.

Views of Penticton and vicinity, in book form, published by J. A. Nesbitt, now on sale at NESBITT'S, Ellis St.

Don't forget the Board of Trade meeting Wednesday evening. Become a member and help boost the town.

The Saturday Sunset is advocating the building of airships rather than warships by the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. and Mrs. Green of Saskatoon, Sas., spent the past week in Penticton. Mr. Green is looking for a business location.

There will be an executive meeting of the Aquatic Association over the S. O. Land Co's office next Thursday evening.

Mrs. G. B. Harris and daughter returned to Vancouver on Tuesday after spending a few weeks with Gordon Harris.

Miss Minnus, of Kingston, Ont. and Miss Irvine, sister of Dr. Irvine, of Oyama, B. C. visited Mrs. Jos. McDonald last week

"The Pirates of Penzance" was played to a full house in Steward's Hall on Thursday eveing by the Kelowna Musical and Dramatic Society.

Every person who plants an orchard should plant a wind break. The clearing of the land is already resulting. to a marked degree, in higher winds.

Mr. Lake, of Staveley, Alta, spent Monday in Penticton. He has taken an option on some Penticton property and intends returning in about two weeks.

The annual vestry meeting of the parishioners of St. Saviour's church will be held in the room over Wade's store at 8 o,clock on Tuesday evening, 27th inst. Election of officers and other business.

Messrs. Stirling and Pitcairn, fruit packers and shippers of Kelowna, spent Saturday looking over the district around Penticton. They reported favorably as to the peach crop prospects at this point.

The prize lists of the third annual prize meeting of the Okanagan Rifle Association are out. The meeting will be held on June 23 and 24 at Vernon, and there will be eight competitions ni addition to that for the Kelowna cup.

The Penticton Board of Trade will hold its regular quarterly meeting next Wednesday evening in Steward's Hall. All members, or those wishing to become members, are requested to attend. The annual membership fee of the Board is $2.50.

The cemetery question has at last been settled. The council have procured lot 138 on the lakeshore bench from A. J. Alcock. This lot adjoins on the north side, the lot selected for a cemetery about three years ago, and comprises about seven acres.

Kendall & Mason have finished the irrigation system and the planting out of thirty acres of orchard on Miss Gillies' place at Dog Lake. Galarneau & McKenzie have nearly completed the new house on the property. This will be one of the beauty spots of the Okanagan.

We were this week shown a branch from an apricot tree grown in John Mahoney's orchard. It was studded with blossoms, and although the tree, as stated by Mr. Mahoney, has been in blossom since a week before Easter, there is no sign of frost having done any injury.

If a fire should break out during the prevailing windy weather, it might do a tremendous amount of damage. We do not wish to unneccessarily hurry the council, which, undoubtedly, has its hands full, but we believe the safty of the place demands that it at once take charge of the fire department.

W. F. H. Swinton and family left for Yorkton Sas., on Tuesday after a residence in Penticton for about four years. Mr. Swinton was one of Penticton's most useful and energetic citizens, and the place he has occupied in the community will be hard to fill. Mrs. Swinton has also proved a very enthusiastic church worker. The PRESS joins with their numerous friends in Penticton in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Swinton the greatest prosperity in their new home.

The Girls' Guild of St. Saviour's church held a sale of work and homemade candy at the home of Mrs. B. T. Gahan on Wednesday afternoon. The room was nicely decorated with wild flowers; and the ladies spent a very pleasent afternoon. A programme was given in which Mrs. Mitchell. Mrs. Were, Mrs. Stevens, Miss Mutch and Miss Size sang solos, Mrs. Were and Miss Jackson gave instrumentals, and Mrs. Stevens and Rev. J. A. Cleland recited. The proceeds amounted to $18.75.

Smith Curtis leaves on Thursday morning for Short creek, on the west side of Okanagan lake, where he goes to start development work on a coal property he holds there. On this coal property a vein of coal having good eight feet in width, outcrops at various points. The coal is bituminous, very similar to that of the Nicola valley and probably belongs to the same formation. If the coal under development continues to show up as satisfactorily as on the surface, it is probable that a coal company will be formed to take hold of the property. Mr, Curtis expects to return on May 1st.—Rossland Miner.

A Penticton audience once more had the pleasure of listening to the Williams' Jubilee Singers on Monday evening. There was a very good attendance, but probably not so large as there would have been but for the fact that two entertainments were billed for the week. Owing to the late arrival of the Str. Okanagan, on which the company were passengers, the entertainment did not begin until after nine o,clock. The programme, with the exception of one or two selections, was entirely different to the one given here a year ago, and was heartily enjoyed by every person present. The company is particularly strong in quartette and chorus work.

Football, Penticton vs. Kelowna.

The Kelowna junior and senior football teams played the local teams on the Penticton grounds Thursday afternoon.

The junior match came off first, the game beginning at 4:40 and the first goal being scored for Penticton fifteen minutes later by V. DeBeck. No further goals were scored during the first half, but the ball was kept almost constantly around the Kelowna goal. During the second half E. Adamson scored one and C. Lancaster two goals, making four for the home team, the last being from a penalty kick.

The senior match began at 5:45, and in less then five minutes Kelowna had scored, and it looked as though it would be a walkover for the visitors as the visitors as the ball was kept dangerously near the Penticton end continuously. Later, however, the home team woke up and put up such a vigorous fight that, although no scores were made by Penticton, Kelowna did not make another goal during the game.

This will be the last game played by the Penticton senior team this season, players being so scarce that on this occasion it was found necessary to play two men from Peachland, one from Fairview and one from Kelowna on the home team.

Farmers' Institute.

A meeting was held in the S. O. Land Co. building on Wednesday evening at which the first steps were taken towards the organization of a Penticton Farmers' Institute.

In the past the Osoyoos Farmers' Institute has embraced all the Okanagan from north of Kelowna to the Boundary. This has been found very unsatisfactory, and it was with the idea that a local organization with its officers resident at this point could do more effective work and prove of actual service to the fruit growers, that the movement was set on foot to organize at Penticton.

On the meeting being opened, W. J. Clement, who was appointed chairman, briefly outlined the purpose for which the meeting was called and the objects of a Farmers' Institute. Mr. J. Power, who has taken an active interest in local organization, also gave a number of suggestions.

Fortunately, Mr. R. M. Winslow, assistant provincial fruit inspector, was present, and, being called upon, gave a short address containing a number of valuable hints to the new organization.

Mr. J. Power was appointed secretary-treasurer pro tem, and a list being opened, those present signed their names as members. This list will be further circulated in order to secure forty or fifty members at least. The Department will then grant authority to organize, and a meeting of the members will be called, at which the officers for the ensuing year will be elected.

B. O. H. and P. B. C.

The concert given on the evening of Friday, 16th inst. by the Band of Hope and Penticton Boys' Club reflects great credit upon the youth of the community as well as upon Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. McNeil and others who had their training in hand. The programme was a long one, and every item was enjoyed by the full house that assembled to hear it. Roy Rogers made a very efficient chairman; and the first part of the programme comprised speeches, vocal and instrumental music recitations and drills; while the latter part consisted of an amusing minstrel show. The programme was as follows:

Chorus ..The Temperance Pioneers.... B.O.H.
Chairman's Remarks.
Song of Welcome..... B.O.H.

Forward Penticton.

Penticton has one of the best sites for a city in British Columbia. It takes people, however, to make a city, aud if Penticton is to become one, it must secure a great number of settlers. How can people be induced to settle here? Penticton has a fine climate, beautiful scenery, two magnificent lakes and many more attractions, and yet people are not falling over one another to see who can get here first.

If we were asked what would be the greatest drawing card to this favored-by-nature section, we would say, "a domestic supply of water, and electric light." Up-to-date poople are wanted here, and up-to-date people always want up-to-date conveniences, and will go only where they can get them. Furnish the conveniences and the right people will come.

In order to get those conveniences, each section of the community must look to the welfare of all others. A domestic water supply is needed most on the bench, and an electric lighting system is needed most in town. The town wants to see the bench settled up, and a domestic water supply is the thing that will do it. On the other hand, the bench wants to see Penticton a prosperous town and the dark, dismal streets supplied with light. No doubt, when water and light systems are installed, they will be extended to both the town and the bench, and will be appreciated by both sections, but we are speaking from the standpoint of where they are most required

The municipality must not fear debt. Suppose water and light systems were to cost the municipality one hundred thousand dollars, the sum is a mere bagatelle. Property would double in value, besides each man, woman and child that settles here is worth at least one thousand dollars to the community. At that rate one hundred new setters would justify the expenditure; but instead of one hundred there would be many hundreds and perhaps thousands who would make this charming locality their home.

We must get the western spirit, get big ideas, believe in big things and work for big things. Some of us did not come here to die, nor sleep. The future of Penticton is in our hands; then let us rouse up and make the place hum.

Communication.

To the Editor of THE PENTICTON PRESS:

As this week is being more or less observed throughout the country by the Lord's Day Alliance in special efforts to impress upon the people the benefits they derive as individuals, and as communities by a proper observance of the Lord's Day, as well as to warn them of the dangers which threaten their national rest day, I would like, as Secretary of the Alliance, to say a few words regarding the need, method, and results of the work that is being done by the organization.

Many people are laboring under the delusion that the Lord's Day Alliance is an organization of ministers to restore the old Puritan Sunday of the early New England settlers and force it upon the people of this country. Nothing is further from the truth.

The Alliance is really a semi-political, non-denominational organization, formed to resist all encroachments upon the sanctity of the Lord's Day, to obtain for every citizen his undeniable right to one complete day's rest in seven from his ordinary toil, and to secure the enforcement of the Lord's Day Act, which has now been in operation in all parts of Canada, except the Province of British Columbia, for 2 years. The politico-religious nature of the Alliance may be judged by a glance at the names of its officers: Late Hon. Pres., Most Rev. A. Sweatman, Primate of Canada; Pres., Prof. T. B. Kilpatrick; Vice-Presidents, Rev. Principal Gordon, Sir James Whitney, Senator George Ross, Hon. A. C. Rutherford (Premier Alberta), Jno. Charlton (ex-M. P.), Ralph Smith (M. P.), Chester D. Massey, President Falconer and Rev. J. G. Shearer; Gen. Sec'y, Rev. T. A. Moore; Western Sec'y, Wm. Rochester; Eastern Secretary, Rev. W. G. Hanna; Treasurer, Charles J. Copp, M. D., Toronto. Besides these very many of the leading professional and business men, mechanics, farmers, and men in all walks of life in every province in Canada are identified with it.

The need of such an organization is apparent to all thinking persons. In every province, and in every community, we find persons who, governed by greed of gain or love of pleasure, would rob their fellow citizens of their weekly rest day. In this respect many individuals are not less guilty than great corporations. The Alliance seeks to educate people to a higher plane of citizenship than this, to create and strengthen public sentiment on the question, and, when necessary, to secure the enforcement of the Lord's Day Act. These objects, as well as the methods by which they are attained, should commend themselves to every good citizen of our country. Argument and persuasion are the means adopted both to strengthen public opinion and to enforce the Act, recourse to the courts being taken when all other conciliatory methods have failed. As a result, the Alliance has been able to settle 95 per cent. of the cases of attempted violations of the Act without an appeal to the courts.

When the Act came into force on March 1, 1907, there were in Canada 150,000 seven-day workers. By the passing of this Act, and the efforts of the Alliance, over 80,000 of these now enjoy one complete day's rest out of the seven.

As far as Penticton is concerned, we have no industries that require seven days' continuous work, and the majority of the people who have settled here are a class who give a fairly strong and hearty support to the preservation of the Lord's Day. Hence all violations of the Lord's Day Act have been of a minor kind; and the work of the local brance has been entirely confined to the raising of the annual contribution of $20. to aid the work in other parts. Did space permit, many instances could be given of the beneficial results of the work of the secretaries on whose shoulders the greatest share of the burden falls.

Arrangements have been made by which the ministers of the local churches will more or less fully present this subject to their congregations on Sunday; and envelopes will be distributed, so that those wishing to aid the work of the Alliance may do so.

he had gone back came the distrust, the terror of the brute she felt was there behind it all. The one appealed to her while present; the other pleaded strongest while away. Now she was attempting to analyze her feelings and face the future squarely, for she realized that her affairs neared a crisis, and this, too, not a month after meeting the men. She wondered if she would come to love her uncle's friend. She did not know. Of the other she was sure—she never could.

Busied with these reflections, she noticed the familiar figure of Dextry wandering aimlessly. He was not unkempt, and yet his air gave her the impression of prolonged sleeplessness. Spying her, he approached and seated himself in the sand against the boat, while at her greeting he broke into talk as if he was needful only of her friendly presence to stir his confidential chords into active vibration.

"We're in turrible shape, miss," he said. "Our claim's jumped. Somebody run in and talked the boy out of it while I was gone, and now we can't get 'em off. He's been tryin' this here new law game that you all brought in this summer. I've been drunk. That's what makes me look so ornery."

He said the last not in the spirit of apology, for rarely does your frontiersman consider that his self indulgences require palliation, but rather after the manner of one purveying news of mild interest, as he would inform you that his surcingle had broken or that he had witnessed a lynching.

"What made them jump your claim?"

"I don't know. I don't know nothin' about it, because, as I remarked previous, I ain't follered the totterin' footsteps of the law none too close. Nor do I intend to. I simply draws out of the game fer a spell and lets the youngster have his fling. Then if he can't make good I'll take the cards and finish it for him.

"It's like the time I was ranchin' with an Englishman up in Montana. This here party claimed the misfortune of bein' a younger son, whatever that is, and is grubstaked to a ranch by his people back home. Havin' acquired an intimate knowledge of the west by readin' Bret Harte and havin' assim'lated the secrets of ranchin' by correspondence school, he is fitted ample to teach us natives a thing or two, and he does it. I am workin' his outfit as foreman, and it don't take long to show me that he's a good hearted feller in spite of his ridin' bloomers an' penuchle eyeglass. He ain't never had no actual experience, but he's got a Henry Thompson Seton book that tells him all about everything from field mice to gorrillys.

"We're troubled a heap with coyotes them days, and finally this party sends home for some Rooshian wolfhounds. I'm fer pizenin' a sheep carcass, but he says:

"'No, no, me deah man; that's not sportsmanlike. We'll hunt 'em—aye, hunt 'em. Only fawncy the sport we'll have ridin' to hounds!'

"'We will not,' says I. 'I ain't goin' to do no Simon Legree stunts. It ain't man's size. Bein' Eng'lish, you don't count, but I'm growed up.'

"Nothin' would do him but those 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' dogs, however, and he had 'em imported clean from Berkshire or Sibeery or thereabouts, four of 'em, great big blue ones. They was as handsome and imposin' as a set of solid gold teeth, but somehow they didn't seem to savvy our play none. One day the cook rolled a rain bar'l downhill from the kitchen, and when them blooded critters saw it comin' they throwed down their tails and tore out like rabbits. After that I couldn't see no good in 'em with a spyglass.

"'They ain't got no grit. What makes you think they can fight?' I asked one day.

"'Fight?' says H'Anglish. 'My deah man, they're full blooded. Cost seventy pun each. They're dreadful creatures when they're roused. They'll tear a wolf to pieces like a rag, kill bears, anything. Oh, rully, perfectly dreadful!'

"Well, it wasn't a week later that he went over to the east line with me to mend a barb wire. I had my pliers and a hatchet and some staples. About a mile from the house we jumped up a little brown bear that scampered off when he seen us, but, bein' agin a bluff where he couldn't get away, he climbed a cottonwood. H'Anglish was simply frothin' with excitement.

"'What a misfortune! Neyther gun nor hounds.'

"'I'll scratch his back and talk pretty to him,' says I, 'while you run back and get a Winchester and them ferocious bulldogs.'

"'Wolf hounds,' says he, with dignity, 'full blooded, seventy pun each. They'll rend the poor beast limb from limb. I hate to do it, but it'll be good practice for them.'

"'They may be good renders,' says I, 'but don't forgit the gun.'

"Well, I throwed sticks at the critter when he tried to unclimb the tree till finally the boss got back with his dogs. They set up an awful holler when they see the bear—first one they'd ever smelled, I reckon—and the little feller crawled up in some forks and watched things, cautious, while they leaped about, bayin' most fierce and blood curdlin'.

"'How you goin' to get him down?' says I.

"'I'll shoot him in the lower jaw,' says the Britisher, 'so he cawn't bite the dogs. It'll give 'em cawnfidence.'

"He takes aim at Mr. Bear's chin and misses it three times runnin', he's that excited.

"'Settle down, H'Anglish,' says I. 'He ain't got no double chins. How many shells left in your gun?'

"When he looks he finds there's only one more, for he hadn't stopped to fill the magazine, so I cautions him.

"'You're shootin' too low. Raise her.'

"He raised her all right and caught Mr. Bruin in the snout. What followed thereafter was most too quick to notice, for the poor bear let out a bawl, dropped off his limb into the midst of them ragin', tur'ble seventy pun hounds an' hugged 'em to death, one after another, like he was doin' a system of health exercises. He took 'em to his bosom as if he'd just got back off a long trip, then, droppin' the last one, he made at that younger son an' put a gold filling in his leg. Yes, sir; most chewed it off. H'Anglish let out a Siberian wolf holler hisself, an' I had to step in with the hatchet and kill the brute, though I was most dead from laughin'.

"That's how it is with me an' Glenister," the old man concluded. "When he gets tired experimentin' with this new law game of hisn, I'll step in an' do business on a common sense basis."

"You talk as if you wouldn't get fair play," said Helen.

"We won't," said he, with conviction. "I look on all lawyers with suspicion, even to old ballface—your uncle—askin' your pardon an' gettin' it, bein' as I'm a friend an' he ain't no real relation of yours, anyhow. No, sir. They're all crooked."

Dextry held the western distrust of the legal profession—comprehensive, unreasoning, deep.

"Is the old man all the kin you've got?" he questioned, when she refused to discuss the matter.

"He is—in a way. I have a brother, or I hope I have, somewhere. He ran away when we were both little kids and I haven't seen him since. I heard about him, indirectly, at Skagway three years ago—during the big rush to the Klondike, but he has never been home. When father died, I went to live with Uncle Arthur—some day, perhaps, I'll find my brother. He's cruel to side from me this way, for there are only we two left, and I've loved him always."

She spoke sadly and her mood blended well with the gloom of her companion, so they stared silently out over the heaving green waters.

"It's a good thing me an' the kid had a little piece of money ahead," Dextry resumed later, reverting to the thought that lay uppermost in his mind, "'cause we'd be up against it right if we hadn't. The boy couldn't have amused himself none with these court proceedings, because they come high. I call 'em luxuries, like brandied peaches an' silk undershirts.

"I don't trust these Jim Crow banks no more than I do lawyers, neither. No, sirree! I bought a iron safe an' hauled it out to the mine. She weighs 1,800, and we keep our money locked up there. We've got a feller named Johnson watchin' it now. Steal it? Well, hardly. They can't bust her open without a stick of 'giant' which would rouse everybody in five miles, an' they can't lug her off bodily—she's too heavy. No. It's safer there than any place I know of. There ain't no abscondin' cashiers an' all that. Tomorrer I'm goin' back to live on the claim an' watch this receiver man till the thing's settled."

When the girl arose to go, he accompanied her up through the deep sand of the lanelike street to the main muddy thoroughfare of the camp. As yet the planked and graveled pavements which later threaded the town were unknown, and the incessant traffic had worn the road into a quagmire of chocolate colored slush, almost axle deep, with which the store fronts, show windows and awnings were plentifully shot and spattered from passing teams. Whenever a wagon approached pedestrians fled to the shelter of neighboring doorways, watching a chance to dodge out again. When vehicles passed from the comparative solidity of the main street out into the morasses that constituted the rest of the town, they adventured perilously, their horses plunging, snorting, terrified, amid an atmosphere of profanity. Discouraged animals were down constantly, and no foot passenger, even with rubber boots, ventured off the planks that led from house to house.

To avoid a splashing team Dextry pulled his companion close in against the entrance to the Northern saloon, standing before her protectingly.

Although it was late in the afternoon, the Bronco Kid had just arisen and was now loafing preparatory to the active duties of his profession. He was speaking with the proprietor when Dextry and the girl sought shelter just without the open door, so he caught a fair though fleeting glimpse of her as she flashed a curious look inside. She had never been so close to a gambling hall before and would have liked to peer in more carefully had she dared, but her companion moved forward. At the first look the Bronco Kid had broken off in his speech and stared at her as though at an apparition. When she had vanished, he spoke to Reilly:

"Who's that?"

Reilly shrugged his shoulders; then, without further question, the Kid turned back toward the empty theater and out of the back door.

He moved nonchalantly till he was outside, then with the speed of a colt ran down the narrow planking between the buildings, turned parallel to the front street, leaped from board to board, splashed through puddles of water, till he reached the next alley. Stamping the mud from his shoes and pulling down his sombrero, he sauntered out into the main thoroughfare.

Dextry and his companion had crossed to the other side and were approaching, so the gambler gained a fair view of them. He searched every inch of the girl's face and figure, then, as she made to turn her eyes in his direction, he slouched away. He followed, however, at a distance, till he saw the man leave her, then on up to the big hotel he shadowed her. A half hour later he was drinking in the Golden Gate barroom with an acquaintance who ministered to the mechanical details behind the hotel counter.

"Who's the girl I saw come in just now?" he inquired.

"I guess you mean the judge's niece."

Both men spoke in the dead, restrained tones that go with their callings.

"What's her name?"

"Chester, I think. Why? Look good to you, Kid?"

Although the other neither spoke nor made sign, the bartender construed his silence as acquiescence and continued, with a conscious glance at his own reflection while he adjusted his diamond scarfpin: "Well, she can have me! I've got it fixed to meet her."

"Bah! I guess not," said the Kid suddenly, with an inflection that startled the other from his preening. Then, as he went out, the man mused:

"Gee! Bronco's got the worst eye in the camp! Makes me creep when he throws it on me with that muddy look. He acted like he was jealous."

At noon the next day, as he prepared to go to the claim, Dextry's partner burst in upon him. Glenister was disheveled, and his eyes shone with intense excitement.

"What d' you think they've done now?" he cried as greeting.

"I dunno. What is it?"

"They've broken open the safe and taken our money."

"What!"

The old man in turn was on his feet, the grudge which he had felt against Glenister in the past few days forgotten in this common misfortune.

"Yes, by heaven, they've swiped our money, our tents, tools, teams, books, hose and all of our personal property—everything! They threw Johnson off and took the whole works. I never heard of such a thing. I went out to the claim, and they wouldn't let me go near the workings. They've got every mine on Anvil creek guarded the same way, and they aren't going to let us come around even when they clean up. They told me so this morning."

"But, look here," demanded Dextry sharply, "the money in that safe belongs to us. That's money we brought in from the States. The court ain't got no right to it. What kind of a damn law is that?"

"Oh, as to law, they don't pay any attention to it any more," said Glenister bitterly. "I made a mistake in not killing the first man that set foot on the claim. I was a sucker, and now we're up against a stiff game. The Swedes are in the same fix, too. This last order has left them groggy."

"I don't understand it yet," said Dextry.

"Why, it's this way: The judge has issued what he calls an order enlarging the powers of the receiver, and it authorizes McNamara to take possession of everything on the claims—tents, tools, stores and personal property of all kinds. It was issued last night without notice to our side, so Wheaton says, and they served it this morning early. I went out to see McNamara, and when I got there I found him in our private tent with the safe broken open."

"'What does this mean?' I said. And then he showed me the new order.

"'I'm responsible to the court for every penny of this money,' said he, 'and for every tool on the claim. In view of that I can't allow you to go near the workings.'

"'Not go near the workings?' said I. 'Do you mean you won't let us see the cleanups from our own mine? How do we know we're getting a square deal if we don't see the gold finished?'

"'I'm an officer of the court and under bond,' said he, and the smiling triumph in his eyes made me crazy.

"'You're a lying thief,' I said, looking at him square. 'And you're going too far. You played me for a fool once and made it stick, but it won't work twice.'

"He looked injured and aggrieved and called in Voorhees, the marshal. I can't grasp the thing at all. Everybody seems to be against us—the judge, the marshal, the prosecuting attorney, everybody. Yet they've done it all according to law, they claim, and have the soldiers to back them up."

"It's just as Mexico Mullins said," Dextry stormed. "There's a deal on of some kind. I'm goin' up to the hotel an' call on the judge myself. I ain't never seen him nor this McNamara either. I allus want to look a man straight in the eyes once, then I know what course to foller in my dealin's."

The Brown Brothers Company

Nurserymen, - of Ontario

Are extensive growers of all kinds of Fruit Trees, Shrubs, Roses, and Ornamental Trees, and the members of the firm are all practical nurserymen of 25 years experience, and have built up the most successful and extensive business of the kind in Canada.

The growing of the stock, as well as every other detail in connection with the work, is personally superintended by the individual members of the firm, and they work on the plan that the best is none too good for their customers.

We have made large shipments of trees into the Okanagan Valley and can give the names of the largest planters in that district, who have planted our stock successfully, if desired.

Our trees are grown in the famous Niagara district, in Ontario, in a climate very similar to that of the Okanagan Valley, and our trees are consequently better suited to the needs of planters there, than are the Coast stock, being more hardy in the wood, with a more abundant supply of fibrous roots, which count for much in making an investment in an orchard a safe and permanent one.

We shall be pleased to hear from prospective planters, with a view to supplying them with the best grade of trees, true to name.

We wish to secure the services of a good reliable man to represent us at Penticton and vicinity, and will make liberal terms to the right party, for all, or a part of his time.
