PROVINCIAL ELECTIONS.

Will Appeal on Railway Policy.

There will be a provincial election this fall. Mr. Price Ellison returned from victoria on Wednesday and brought with him this news. He had seen Premier McBride, who had just left the Lieutenant-Governor, and to Mr. Ellison the announcement was made that the House would be dissolved at once, and that the date for the election had been set for November 25.

The Government will appeal to the country on a railway policy which has been based on an arrangement entered into with McKenzie and Mann. These magnates of the Canadian Northern agree to build a line from Yellowhead Pass to Kamloops, whence they will follow the river down on the opposite side to the C. P. R., building into Chilliwack and on from there to vancouver. The Government is to guarantee the bonds.

Another railway project which is of more immediate interest to the Okanagan is the arrangement made by the Government with the Kettle valley Railway Co. which already has a line from Republic, Washington, to Grand Forks. This road will be continued from Midway to Carmi, thence to Hydraulic Creek on the West Fork of Kettle River, when it will strike south to Penticton. It will then proceed up to Summerland, follow up Trout Creek, and strike a point about five miles from Princeton. Thence it will connect at Merritt with the C. P. R. line to Spence's Bridge.

Both parties will enter the fray at once, and lively times in political circles may be looked for from now until the date of election.

In confirmation of the above, the following despatch has since been rceived by Mr. Ellison:

victoria, B. C., Oct. 20.
Price Ellison,
vernon, B. C.
Nomination November 11th.
Election November 25th.
H. E. YOUNG,
Provincial Secretary.

Died at New Westminster.

(From Vancouver Province.)

New Westminster, Oct. 14.—The death occurred in this city last evening of one of its best known women in the person of Mrs. Emma A. Rand, wife of A. E. Rand, a well known broker. Mrs. Rand had been ill for several years past, and had made trips to California and Kamloops in the hope of benefiting her health. She seemed to have improved until a few months ago, when she began to lose ground. She had been very weak for the past few weeks and her demise was not unexpected.

The late Mrs. Rand was thirty-eight years of age, and a native daughter of this city. She was the daughter of Howard L. DeBeck, one of the pioneer residents of New Westminster, and at present living at Penticton. She leaves besides a husband five children, two sons and three daughters, between the ages of eight and eighteen. Mrs. Rand leaves a large number of other relatives in this city, including a grandmother, Mrs. George DeBeck, now over ninety years of age, and two sisters, Mrs. J. Alex. Cunningham and Mrs. David Douglas. She was a niece of Mr. Ward DeBeck of vancouver and Capt. C. DeBeck of this city.

Otto Gaube has opened a restaurant in connection with the confectionery business.

Aquatic Association Meet.

The Aquatic Association held a meeting Tuesday evening for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year, and of formulating plans for future operations. The attendance was so meagre that it was decided to postpone the election of officers to a future meeting, and such discussion as took place was informal. However, an air of enthusiasm was manifest to a degree hitherto unobserved at such gatherings. It was generally agreed that, if Penticton is to hold her place among Okanagan towns, she must not be behind in aquatics.

With this end in view, a resolution was passed constituting those present a committee to interview all the business men of the place with a view to having a full house at a meeting to be held next Tuesday evening in the room over the Land Co's office.

The proposition that is to be laid before the meeting is that the Association erect a grand stand equipped with boat houses, booths and bath house, at the esplanade east of the wharf, and that a series of regattas be held next summer. The question of financing the proposition will be matured later, probably at the meeting.

The question of aquatics is beginning to be looked upon as a business proposition, a means of advertising the town and district, as is being done at other lake points. A regatta implies an excursion, and people will come for the trip on the lake if for nothing else. When they get here they must see Penticton, and that is bound to help.

It is desired to enlist the co-operation of all the business and moneyed men of Penticton in the enterprise. We cannot, as a people, afford to stand idly by any longer and see things move as they choose. We must get out and move them. Penticton is the coming town, provided we get together and make it come. If we hesitate, other places, less advantageously situated, will certainly outstrip us in the race. So be sure to honor the meeting with your presence on Tuesday evening.

Municipal Council.

At the Council meeting on Friday, October 15, C. S. Stevens, representing the Lakeshore Telephone Co., was present in connection with that company's application for a franchise. There were several minor items of disagreement between the company and the municipality, among them being the duration of the franchise. Mr. Stevens asked that it be granted for ten years. The Council was willing to grant it for only five years and Mr. Stevens finally consented to this. The Council asked for a yearly bonus of $50 for the franchise, but upon Mr. Stevens clearly placing his case before them as to revenue and expenditure, the demand was withdrawn. If the system is not operated to the satisfaction of the Council, provision is made whereby the municipality may take it over, at arbitrators' value and operate it. The rates to be charged are limited to $2.50 for private houses and $3.00 for business places.

The meeting adjourned and met on the following Monday.

Engineer Kilmer was present to discuss with the Council the matters of a domestic water supply for Penticton. Mr. Kilmer expressed his willingness to undertake the work of making a preliminary investigation and estimate for the municipality in about ten days' time. This would cost the municipality from $150 to $200 provided the Council did not go ahead with the work. If his firm were given the contract, the preliminary work would cost nothing, but they would put the system in on a commission of 4 per cent. of the total cost.

The Municipal Clerk was given a raise in salary of $25 per month for November and December, owing to the extra amount of work he would have on hand.

Osborn—Neil.

On Monday evening Mr. Charles Dean Osborn, of vernon, and Miss Alma Wright Neil, of Penticton, were united in marriage by the Rev. G. O. Fallis. The ceremony took place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Neil. The bride was unattended, and only the immediate friends of the contracting parties were present. The happy couple left by the Str. Okanagan on the following morning, and will reside in vernon.

Steam and Steel.

(From Merrit Herald.)

The Nicola branch of the C. P. R. will shortly be extended and carried over to a point where it will be joined with the Columbia and Western line at Midway and thus give through communication from the boundary to the coast.

The line will be carried through the Similkameen and Okanagan districts. At vancouver, Sir Thomas Shaughnessy made an important announcement affecting this work. "It will soon become a live question," said the C. P. R. head. "It is true that we have made numerous surveys, but it is also possible that we may yet have to make additional surveys. In a work of that magnitude involving so vast an expenditure it is best to proceed slowly."

Superintendent O. W. Millar, Chief Engineer S. E. Cartwright, Trainmaster J. Cameron, Bridge Superintendent J. Z. Choate, Resident Engineer J. Wilson, Locomotive Superintendent W.E. Evans and Road Master Go. Munroe were in on a special train on a tour of general inspection Friday. While Superintendent Millar was rather reticent with regard to construction, he inferred, in an interview, that there was scarcely any doubt that President Shaughnessy's remarks as above quoted, meant that the Coldwater route would be the route selected. This has an important significance for Merritt and the Nicola generally.

The fact that the G. T. P. surveyors are at work in the Nicola also has an important significance.

DISTRICT MUNICIPALITY of PENTICTON

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the annual sitting of the Court of Revision for the District Municipality of Penticton will be held on Monday, the 29th day of November next, 1909.

Local and Personal

Those having friends visiting them will confer a favor by acquainting the PRESS with the fact. All other local news thankfully received.

Are we going to have a literary society this fall ?

Joseph Brent will hold a turkey shoot on Monday.

Found, a small sum of money. Loser apply to H. Murk.

Did you hear of the dance in Steward's Hall, Monday night ?

L. W. Shatford. M. P. P., and wife returned on Thursday from Rochester, N. Y.

Born, to Mr. and Mrs. A. Richardson, on Saturday, the 16th inst., a son.

We hope the Council will at once see that the scrub is cut from the vacant town lots.

W. R. King returned on Wednesday after spending a week or two at Calgary and other points in Alberta.

Mr. and Mrs. John Orr returned on Wednesday after an absence of a couple of weeks at Chilliwack.

Mrs. Bagnall and Miss M. A. Power left on Tuesday for the coast. Mrs. Bagnall will remain about a month.

Master Roland Bull arrived from Winnipeg on Friday of last week and will spend the coming year with Rev. G. O. Fallis.

The local option convention meets in vernon on Tuesday, commencing at 2 p. m. A strong programme has been prepared.

Rathvon & Carless have bought the lumber which Campbell & Kay now have on hand. They will use it in buildings which they expect to construct this fall.

F. H. Latimer this year grew some very fine Niagara grapes on the property at his residence. We wonder that our fruit growers do not go extensively into the cultivation of this fruit.

Rathvon & Carless have the contract for an addition to Mr. Glass' house, also for a new house for H. W. D. Smith, one for W. J. Gibbons, and another for a resident at the new town of Kaleden.

A. Beard and family, who were among the first residents in Penticton, left last Saturday for Hirsch, Sask., where Mr. Board will engage in farming. They take with them the best wishes of the community.

R. S. Conklin and wife arrived from Winnipeg, Man., on Monday and have taken up their residence for the winter in the house recently occupied by W. D. Lancaster. They have bought property in town.

Mrs. C. L. Rogers and family left for victoria on Friday, Mr. Rogers having preceded them about a week previously. They have resided at Penticton for three years and will be much missed from the community.

All business men, and all others interested in the advancement of the town and district, are requested to attend a meeting of the Aquatic Association in the room over the S. O. Land Co's office next Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock.

In order to submit a money by-law to the ratepayers it is essential that a petition, comprising the signatures of the owners of at least fifty per cent. of the property interests of the municipality, be presented to the Council. As regards the proposed money by-law, there is some difficulty being experienced. Signatures representing $130,000 in real estate are yet required.

Water Works in Sight.

There need be absolutely no fear of the future of Penticton provided its citizens display a sufficient amount of energy backed up by a fair amount of horse sense. It is now universally recognized that the one requirement of the place that eclipses all others is a domestic supply of water. The people are becoming clamorous for water, and we are glad they are, for when the whole people want anything, ways and means are of secondary importance.

We are glad to note that the Council are now taking steps to have the sources of water supply investigated by a competent engineer. It is regrettable that tests of water were not made previously, but the Board of Trade have now taken up the question of analysis, and hope, within a few weeks, to present the required information as to water purity.

Taking everything together, there is little reason to doubt that Penticton will have a water supply early next summer. We have no doubt about it if sufficient energy is displayed. There is no further necessity of dilating upon the advantages of domestic water to the town and benches; all now realize that it will be the making of the place. There is no fear of sinking Penticton through improvements of this kind. For every dollar of debt contracted, ten, perhaps one hundred, will be returned as a direct result of the improvements.

B. C. and Railways.

The question as to whether the provincial Legislature is to be dissolved this fall is occasioning considerable discussion at present. No definite announcement has been made by the Government, but in opposition circles, at least, it is felt that an election is not far distant. It has been rumored that the Government will probably hold a short session this fall and then go to the people on a railway policy. Just what form that policy will take few, if any, outside the government know, but it is felt that it will have a bearing upon the construction of the Canadian Northern Railway though the province to the Coast. An announcement of the speedy construction of that railway would be hailed with delight by many sections, but a railway policy to meet the requirements and approval of the province in general will be required to embrace much more than the building of a single line. There are dozens of places in British Columbia that are crying out for railway communication, and a policy to be adequate must be general in its scope as well as specific in its application.

British Columbia has been a long time waiting for a progressive railway policy on the part of the government, and all are now breathlessly awaiting the announcement. Meanwhile, John Oliver, the Liberal leader, has come out with a railway policy which certainly commends itself to a large section of the province. It is now up to Richard McBride to get out a better one.

Since the above was set in type, we have received word that the government has announced its railway policy and will appeal to the country on November 25.

The Brown Brothers Company
Nurserymen, - of Ontario
Are extensive growers of all kinds of Fruit Trees, Shrubs, Roses, and Ornamental Trees, and the members of the firm are all practical nurserymen of 25 years experience, and have built up the most successful and extensive business of the kind in Canada.
The growing of the stock, as well as every other detail in connection with the work, is personally superintended by the individual members of the firm, and they work on the plan that the best is none too good for their customers.
We have made large shipments of trees into the Okanagan Valley and can give the names of the largest planters in that district, who have planted our stock successfully, if desired.
Our trees are grown in the famous Niagara district, in Ontario, in a climate very similar to that of the Okanagan Valley, and our trees are consequently better suited to the needs of planters there, than are the Coast stock, being more hardy in the wood, with a more abundant supply of fibrous roots, which count for much in making an investment in an orchard a safe and permanent one.
We shall be pleased to hear from prospective planters, with a view to supplying them with the best grade of trees, true to name.
We wish to secure the services of a good reliable man to represent us at Penticton and vicinity, and will make liberal terms to the right party, for all, or a part of his time.

The Tie That Binds

(From Similkameen Star.)

While the rail head has not reached Princeton station it is near enough to say that the town is now linked by two inseperable bands of steel with the rest of the world. The tracklayers were delayed with shortage of material but they forged ahead with such good effect that steel is now within two or three minutes' walk of the centre of town.

The spur to the v. F. M. Co's coal mine will not be finished for about two weeks although the work is being pushed with all speed.

Ballasting and surfacing is being carried on with all the help available and it looks encouraging for regular train service about the first of December. In any case the order of communication and train regulations, mail and telegraph service should be in operation before the new year.

There are rumors that construction will be continued westward to the coast as soon as the line is finished to this point. There is nothing to verify or corroborate any of these reports. Chief Engineer Hogeland was here recently, but he made no statement, only a suggestion that the workmen would be re-engaged on new contracts.

The CONQUEST OF CANAAN

By BOOTH TARKINGTON,
Author of "Cherry," "Monsieur Beaucaire," Etc.

Copyright, 1905, by Harper & Brothers

But he had not far to follow. The chase led him to a half hollow log which lay on a low grass grown levee above the stream where the dog's interest in the pursuit became vivid; temporarily, however, for after a few minutes of agitated investigation he was seized with indifference to the whole world, panted briefly, slept. Joe sat upon the log, which was in the shade, and smoked.

For the first time it struck Joe that it was a beautiful day, and it came to him that a beautiful day was a thing which nothing except death, sickness or imprisonment could take from him, not even the ban of Canaan. Unforewarned music sounded in his ears again, but he did not shrink from it now. This was not the circus band he had heard as he left the square, but a melody like a faraway serenade at night, as of "the horns of elf land faintly blowing," and he closed his eyes with the sweetness of it.

"Go ahead," he whispered. "Do that all you want to. If you'll keep it up like this awhile, I'll follow with 'Little Brown Jug, How I Love Thee!' It seems to pay after all!"

The welcome strains, however, were but the prelude to a harsher sound which interrupted and annihilated them—the courthouse bell clanging out 12. "All right," said Joe. "It's noon, and I'm 'across Main street bridge.'"

He opened his eyes and looked about him whimsically. Then he shook his head again.

A lady had just emerged from the bridge and was coming toward him.

It would be hard to get at Joe's first impressions of her. We can find conveyance for only the broadest and heaviest. Ancient and modern instances multiply the case of the sleeper who dreams out a long story in accurate color and fine detail, a tale of years, in the opening and shutting of a door. So with Joseph in the brief space of the lady's approach. And with him, as with the sleeper, it must have been—in fact it was—in his recollections later a blur of emotion.

He had little knowledge of the millinery arts, and he needed none to see the harmony—harmony like that of the day he had discovered a little while ago. Her dress and hat and gloves and parasol showed a pale lavender overtint like that which he had seen overspreading the western slope. (Afterward he discovered that the gloves she wore that day were gray and that her hat was for the most part white.) The charm of fabric and tint belonging to what she wore was no shame to her, not being of primal importance beyond herself. It was but the expression of her daintiness and the adjunct of it. She was tall, but if Joe could have spoken or thought of her as "slender" he would have been capable of calling her lips "red," in which case he would not have been Joe and would have been as far from the truth as her lips were from red or as her supreme delicateness was from mere slenderness.

She was to pass him—so he thought—and as she drew nearer his breath came faster.

"Remember! Across Main street bridge at noon!"

Was this the fay of whom the voice had warned him? With that, there befell him the mystery of last night. He did not remember, but it was as if he lived again dimly the highest hour of happiness in a life a thousand years ago: perfume and music, roses, nightingales and plucked harpstrings. Yes, something wonderful was happening to him.

She had stopped directly in front of him—stopped and stood looking at him with her clear eyes. He did not lift his own to hers. He had long experience of the averted gaze of women, but it was not only that. A great shyness beset him. He had risen and removed his hat, trying (ineffectually) not to clear his throat, his every day sense urging upon him that she was a stranger in Canaan who had lost her way—the preposterousness of any one's losing the way in Canaan not just now appealing to his every day sense.

"Can I—can I"— he stammered, blushing miserably, meaning to finish with "direct you," or "show you the way."

Then he looked at her again and saw what seemed to him the strangest sight of his life. The lady's eyes had filled with tears—filled and overfilled.

"I'll sit here on the log with you," she said. And her voice was the voice which he had heard saying: "Remember! Across Main street bridge at noon!"

"What!" he gasped.

"You don't need to dust it!" she went on tremulously. And even then he did not know who she was.

CHAPTER XI.

THERE was a silence, for if the dazzled young man could have spoken at all he could have found nothing to say; and, perhaps, the lady would not trust her own voice just then. His eyes had fallen again. He was too dazed and, in truth, too panic stricken now to look at her, though if he had been quite sure that she was part of a wonderful dream he might have dared. She was seated beside him, and had handed him her parasol in a little way which seemed to imply that of course he had reached for it, so that it was to be seen how used she was to have all tiny things done for her, though this was not then of his tremulous observing. He did perceive, however, that he was to furl the dainty thing. He pressed the catch and let down the top timidly, as if fearing to break or tear it, and as it closed, held near his face, he caught a very faint, sweet, spicy emanation from it like wild roses and cinnamon.

He did not know her, but his timidity and a strange little choke in his throat, the sudden fright which had seized him, were not caused by embarrassment. He had no thought that she was one he had known, but could not for the moment recall. There was nothing of the awkwardness of that. No; he was overpowered by the miracle of this meeting. And yet, white with marveling, he felt it to be so much more touchingly a greater happiness than he had ever known that at first it was inexpressibly sad.

At last he heard her voice again, shaking a little, as she said:

"I am glad you remembered."

"Remembered what?" he faltered.

"Then you don't?" she cried. "And yet you came."

"Came here, do you mean?"

"Yes—now, at noon."

"Ah!" he half whispered, unable to speak aloud. "Was it you who said—who said: 'Remember! Across—across'"—

"'Across Main street bridge at noon!'" she finished for him gently. "Yes."

He took a deep breath in the wonder of it. "Where was it you said that?" he asked slowly. "Was it last night?"

"Don't you even know that you came to meet me?"

"You told me where you lived," she answered.

"I—came to—to meet—you!"

She gave a little pitying cry, very near a sob, seeing his utter bewilderment.

"It was like the strangest dream in the world," she said. "You were at the station when I came last night. You don't remember at all?"

His eyes downcast, his face burning hotly, he could only shake his head.

"Yes," she continued. "I thought no one would be there, for I had not written to say what train I should take, but when I stepped down from the platform you were standing there, though you didn't see me at first—not until I had called your name and ran to you. You said, 'I've come to meet you,' but you said it queerly, I thought. And then you called a carriage for me. But you seemed so strange. You couldn't tell how you knew that I was coming, and—and then I—I understood you weren't yourself. You were very quiet, but I knew—I knew! So I made you get into the carriage—and—and"—

She faltered to a stop, and with that shame itself brought him courage. He turned and faced her. She had lifted her handkerchief to her eyes, but at his movement she dropped it, and it was not so much the delicate loveliness of her face that he saw then as the tears upon her cheeks.

"Ah, poor boy!" she cried. "I knew! I knew!"

"You—you took me home?"

"You told me where you lived," she answered. "Yes, I took you home."

"I don't understand," he stammered huskily. "I don't understand."

She leaned toward him slightly, looking at him with great intentness.

"You didn't know me last night," she said. "Do you know me now?"

For answer he could only stare at her, dumfounded. He lifted an unsteady hand toward her appealingly, but the manner of the lady as she saw the truth underwent an April change. She drew back lightly. He was favored with the most delicious low laugh he had ever heard, and by some magic whisk which she accomplished there was no sign of tears about her.

"Ah, I'm glad you're the same, Joe!" she said. "You never would or could pretend very well. I'm glad you're the same, and I'm glad I've changed, though that isn't why you have forgotten me. You've forgotten me because you never thought of me. Perhaps I should not have known you if you had changed a great deal, as I have."

He started, leaning back from her.

"Ah," she laughed, "that's it! That funny little twist of the head you always had, like a—like a—well, you know I must have told you a thousand times that it was like a nice friendly puppy. So why shouldn't I say so now? And your eyebrows! When you look like that nobody could ever forget you, Joe."

He rose from the log, and the mongrel leaped upon him uproariously, thinking they were to go home, belike to food.

The lady laughed again. "Don't let him spoil my parasol. And I must warn you now: Never, never tread on my skirt! I'm very irritable about such things!"

He had taken three or four uncertain backward steps from her. She sat before him, radiant with laughter, the loveliest creature he had ever seen, but between him and this charming vision there swept, through the warm, scented June air, a veil of snow like a driven fog, and half obscured in the heart of it a young girl stood knee deep in a drift piled against an old picket gate, her black waterproof and shabby skirt flapping in the blizzard like torn sails, one of her hands outstretched toward him, her startled eyes fixed on his.

"And, oh, how like you," said the lady; "how like you and nobody else in the world, Joe, to have a yellow dog!"

"Ariel Tabor!"

His lips formed the words without sound.

"Isn't it about time?" she said. "Are strange ladies in the habit of descending from trains to take you home?"

Once, upon a white morning long ago, the sensational progress of a certain youth up Main street had stirred Canaan. But that day was as nothing to this. Mr. Bantry had left temporary paralysis in his wake, but in the case of the two young people who passed slowly along the street today it was petrifaction, which seemingly threatened in several instances (most notably that of Mr. Arp) to become permanent.

The lower portion of the street, lined with three and four story buildings of brick and stone, rather grim and hot facades under the midday sun, afforded little shade to the church comers, who were working homeward in processional little groups and clumps, none walking fast, though none with the appearance of great leisure, since neither rate of progress would have been esteemed befitting the day. The growth of Canaan, steady, though never startling, had left almost all of the churches downtown, and Main street the principal avenue of communication between them and the "residence section." So today the intermittent procession stretched along the new cement sidewalks from a little below the
