Progress of the War

AT the beginning of the great War we were reminded by our leaders that although the final issue would never be in doubt, there would be periods of depression occasioned by reverses. We have already experienced several such periods, but probably none more impressive or significant than the one through which we are now passing. The pessimist finds plenty of food on which to feed his gloomy anticipations in the happenings of the past week and in the contemplation of existing conditions on all the battle fronts. But the pessimist is a shortsighted individual; he lacks imagination and vision. He is an impressionable creature whose sun is blotted out by every passing cloud. Distressing as conditions may be, the far vision can see the horizon and a way out. This rosier view is not dependent solely on faith. Faith in the justice of our cause or the energy of an unconquerable race. It can be demonstrated by a careful balancing of events, by a careful appraisement of resources, and by a careful summarizing of ascertained facts in relation to the internal affairs of the enemy. Because the Allies have met with a serious rebuff in Roumania the pessimist jumps to the conclusion that the game in the Balkans is lost; yet the sound view to take is that Roumania is simply paying the penalty of an ill-considered military movement and defective strategy. The attempt to conquer Transylvania by a spectacular display of arms and at the same time to defend her borders against Bulgaria was an impossible task. Her only chance of succeeding against the combined forces was to secure the active co-operation of Russia, especially in any offensive movement. She failed to do this, over-estimating her own strength, and after the first promise of success, has found herself committed to a series of disastrous retreats in which she is not only driven out of Transylvania, but has lost Wallachia, and now experiences the mortification of seeing her capital fall into the hands of the enemy. The pessimist has already begun to say that the Teutonic forces will over-run the Kingdom of Roumania, and make it a second Belgium or Servia. But the pessimist has no ground for such gloomy anticipations, except his own morbidity. In arriving at such a conclusion, he ignores three outstanding facts. The first, that Roumania will now be able to concentrate her armies on a battle line about one-fourth the length of that which she has previously endeavoured to maintain. The second is that in doing this she will have the co-operation in ever increasing numbers of the Russian forces, and the third is that once the Grecian problem is settled,the Entente forces in the South will make themselves felt as an active Ally to Roumania in a manner which has been impossible while their action has been partially paralyzed by the treachery of King Constantine. In the view of the best military authorities, while Germany is entitled to all the prestige which she will undoubtedly derive from her victory over Roumania, the ultimate effect will only be to prolong the War, and this is rendered doubly certain by the very emphatic declaration of M. Trepoff as to the intentions of Russia. All the same, the rebuff is serious, and means greater sacrifices and losses on the part of the Allies to regain what has been lost. The Grecian problem is one which demands solution. The hands of the Allies have been tied, and this is especially true of England, which went into the War to defend the rights and liberties of small nationalities. This fact has rendered it difficult for her to initiate or acquiesce in that hostile action against Greec for which popular opinion has been clamouring. But recent developments have made it perfectly clear that King Constantine contemplated and would have executed an act of treachery against the Allied Forces unparalleled in history, and with a full knowledge of this fact, public opinion now demands that such an act shall be placed beyond the bounds of possibility. Just what course may be adopted is uncertain, but the order for a blockade of Grecian ports is the first outcome of a quickened public opinion in all the Allied countries. And when the British Cabinet is reconstituted and the conference of the Allied Leaders is held, it may be confidently predicted that the Government of Greece will be temporarily taken out of the hands of King Constantine and his advisers, and administered by the Allies until the close of the War. This protection is the least that they owe to the men in the field, as well as to the nationalities which are making such stupendous sacrifices at home for the winning of the War. The most favourable outlook possible in respect to the Balkan situation is that the tide of Teutonic invasion may be stemmed for the winter months and that the spring may see a huge offensive assumed by the Allied Forces after they have been strengthened by large accessions from the Russian armies and probably from Italy. The one danger is the possibility of the Teutonic advance to the Black Sea. This must and will be contested in every possible way, regardless of cost. On the Western Front the situation has been greatly misunderstood. The claim of several papers that the result of the Somme battle had been to demonstrate that the British and French armies could break through the German lines whenever they liked is now known to have been a wild surmise. After the initial successes scored by the Allies in that great battle, the enemy rallied, adapted his defences to our offences, and made it so costly for the Allies to persist in a frontal attack that for the present the idea has been abandoned. The main effect of the Battle of the Somme was to demonstrate the superiority of our artillery and the passing of the initiative to the Allies. But with a Casualty List of 72,000 last month, more than 50,000 of which took place on the Western Front, the War Council may well pause and consider what its next strategical move should be. The strongest confirmation of this view is that although Bapaume and Peronne have been threatened and closely invested for six weeks, no attempt has been made to take them. All dogmatic statements as to the exhaustion of the men or supplies of Germany and the weakening of her morale are without the slightest justification. We are still fighting a vigorous, resourceful, unweakened enemy, and the Cabinet crisis in England has been precipitated mainly because public opinion generally believed that new methods as well as increased vigour are necessary, especially on the Western Front. The moral of all this is that existing conditions, if properly contemplated, present an irresistible appeal to every man and woman in the Empire to mobilize their private resources and their personal strength and capability for the winning of a war in which, according to the highest authorities, not twenty per cent of those resources have yet been brought into effective employment.

The Cabinet Crisis

WHATEVER the result of the Cabinet crisis in England may be, one thing is certain, that the main force behind the readjustment is the determination to prosecute the War with greater vigour. This is reflected not only in all the organs of popular opinion published in Great Britain, but in the Paris papers, and inferentially in the firm stand taken by Russia and the emphatic declaration of M. Trepoff. The "ginger group" at home is not popular, in fact its leaders, and especially Lord Northcliffe, have been in the bad books of the country for some time, yet today they find themselves closer in touch with public sentiment than the more conservative element of the Government and the House which has so bitterly resented their criticism. There is no doubt that their propaganda has been materially helped by the occurrences of the last few weeks, and especially by the marked success of the Teutonic forces in Roumania. Without knowing why, the "man in the street" has been gradually getting uneasy. He has not been in a hurry to criticize or to jump to conclusions; but event has succeeded event, and each recent happening has deepened the conviction that all is not well. The growing seriousness of the submarine menace and the restrictions which it has imposed upon our people has been possibly the most potent factor in feeding the dissatisfaction, which has at length found vent in a demand for a reconstitution of the Government. This dissatisfaction has spread to Members of the Cabinet, until two distinct groups have developed, the one clamorous for greater activity and new methods, the other clinging to and defending the system in vogue. It is impossible for an outsider to determine which group is nearer to the truth, but one thing is certain—that without discrediting the wisdom, the policy, or the strategy which have directed the affairs of the War in the past, there is a very well defined feeling abroad that more force is needed. This is neither unprecedented, nor an infrequent happening in times of war. The fortunes of the battlefield have often been reflected in the fortunes of the Ministry, and public opinion has time and again demanded changes which seem to be inevitable under the varying conditions of the movement. The difficulty in the present crisis is to select a leader who can command the all round support of the House. Mr. Asquith has lost the confidence of what may be called the Progressives, largely owing to the unfortunate affiliations of the women of his family with Germans. Mr. Lloyd George has to a certain extent lost the confidence of the Labour Party by the drastic measures which he considered it necessary to adopt in connection with labour troubles and the manufacture of munitions. It is doubtful if Mr. Bonar Law possesses either the imagination or the force of character which would enable him to rise to the requirements of the situation. One thing, however, is certain—that in this trying time there is no self-seeking on the part of any of our public men, and that a solution will be found based not upon any consideration of personal or party gain, but upon that of the better prosecution of the War. The British people are able to see to that, and they will see to it, for after all is said and done, John Bull is an entity, composite of the opinions, the convictions and the resolution of a stubborn ruling race, which has always hitherto been able, even in the moment of most serious crisis, to command the services of men both able and willing to give practical effect to a policy which represented the concrete wish of the people.

An Iron and Steel Industry

THE WEEK would be very sorry to think that the Editorial which appeared in the Victoria Times on Wednesday last reflects in any degree the attitude of the Provincial Government towards the establishment of an Iron and Steel industry. In fact it is so utterly at variance with the statements of the Premier and the Minister of Mines to the influential delegation which interviewed them early in the week that it is impossible to regard the article as representing anything but an individual opinion. The delegation met with nothing but encouragement, and subject to confirmation by the Executive, a policy was outlined covering at least two important points raised. The one the determination of the Government to investigate, and if necessary take action in connection with alien holdings in mining property; the other to establish one or more Government experimental plants for the testing of ores, especially iron ore. In addition to these definite commitments, both the Premier and the Minister of Mines indicated their willingness to consider the proposition that the Government should assist in the matter of drilling on unproved prospects which might be reported on by their experts as of a promising character. It is not too much to expect that so far the policy tentatively suggested by the Ministers will be endorsed by the Executive. The only matter on which no indication of their views was given is with respect to direct financial aid. This is a difficult and complicated question. The Times contents itself with emphasizing the difficulty and states positively that "the Government cannot go into the business itself, nor can it commit the Province to heavy expenditures or liabilities, for the simple reason that it is confronted with a critical financial situation, which can be evolved into solvency only through the most rigid economy." The Times has evidently not given the subject more than superficial consideration; it ignores the fact that the best, and indeed the only, way to increase the revenues of the Province and to bring about an era of permanent prosperity is to develop our industries, and especially our manufacturing industries. The basis of all the more important of these is iron, and assuming for a moment that Nature has endowed the Province with large supplies of raw material suitable for the purpose, nothing would so directly and so quickly affect its prosperity as the establishment of an Iron and Steel industry. The Times says "the Government cannot go into the business." It apparently forgets that in a very practical sense the Laurier Government "went into the business" in 1900, when it passed Legislation establishing Bounties on manufactured steel, under the operation of which the Iron and Steel industry of Eastern Canada received about $10,000,000 in ten years. It also forgets the fact that during the same period the Provincial Government of Nova Scotia, under the Liberal Premier, Hon. G. H. Murray, rendered very considerable financial assistance to the infant industry. Under this fostering care it has grown to be a giant, and today the Dominion Iron and Steel Company is a profitable institution supporting thousands of families. For the Times to say that the Provincial Government "cannot go into the business" requires at least some fuller explanation of its meaning. No one has suggested a Government owned and operated steel works, but there are many reasons why it would be a sound business-like policy for the Government to ensure the establishment of this industry, even if it involved their incurring some financial obligations. There is one argument at least which is unanswerable, and it constitutes a difficulty which cannot well be overcome in any other way; the uncertainty of the rate of taxation which may prevail in the Province in the future is a very active deterrent to investment in a new industry requiring heavy expenditures. The participatiion of the Government in financing such an enterprise would be a guarantee for its fair treatment and protection, and without this it is doubtful if capital can be induced to enter the field under existing conditions. There is one other point raised in The Times Editorial, which calls for comment. It is the reference to a survey of the iron resources of Vancouver Island which was conducted by Mr. Lindemann of the Dominion Mines Department eight years ago. Mr. Lindemann's report is the report of a geologist; it was based almost entirely on what may be called surface indications, the only exception being in the case of the development work on Texada Island. The report is thoroughly reliable as far as it goes, but it goes a very little way towards certifying the quantity of iron ore available. This can only be done after systematic exploratory work, consisting chiefly of drilling. In Ontaria and Nova Scotia the Government has operated drills for the purpose of testing mining property for many years, under financial arrangements perfectly satisfactory to the Government and the owners of the property. There is no reason why our own Government should not do the same. The Week believes that the Hon. William Sloan, the new Minister of Mines, takes a much broader and statesman-like view of this question than that outlined in The Times editorial, and looks with confidence to see him initiate a practical policy, confirmed by Legislation at the next Session of Parliament.

The Vancouver Bye-Election

IT is not easy to see what advantage is to be gained by the appointment of a Royal Commission to investigate the alleged illegal practices in the last Vancouver Bye-Election, and at the first blush it is difficult to see how the Government can justify the heavy expenditure which would be incurred, or harmonize it with their avowed policy of retrenchment. There is little more to learn about that election than is already known, in fact the evidence of Scott, if available, will probably be the only substantial addition to that secured by the Committee of the House, and with respect to Scott's evidence, even that is known to those persons who are acquainted with the contents of his written confession, and that confession throws no new light on the matter. The only purpose which can possibly be served is a political one, and few people of either party will consider that at the present time it is justifiable to spend some thousands of dollars for such a purpose. The proposal is anomalous viewed in another light. The Royal Commissioner is to be a judge of the Supreme Court. The subject matter of the investigation is still sub judice after two futile attempts to secure a verdict in the Gosden case. It is true the late Attorney General, through his legal representative, announced the abandonment of further action against Gosden so far as the Crown was concerned; but that does not necessarily close the matter or prevent any aggrieved person from bringing an action on his own account, and the proposal to appoint a Royal Commission savours too much of an attempt to secure a favourable verdict "out of Court." It was objected to by the then Opposition that the Parliamentary Committee which investigated the matter was partisan, and its findings therefore not entitled to acceptance. It is not necessary to suggest partisanship on the part of any Judge who may be appointed as a Commissioner, but since the whole conduct of the case will be in the hands of the aggrieved parties, it would look as if the argument worked both ways. The Week would not, if it could deprive the new Attorney General of any satisfaction or advantage which he may derive from such an investigation, but it does question the wisdom of an expenditure of thousands of dollars for a purpose which from the public viewpoint must necessarily be inconclusive, if not futile.

Ormond Copper Mines, Ltd.

(NON-PERSONAL LIABILITY)

CAPITAL, $500,000, DIVIDED INTO 1,000,000 SHARES OF 50 CENTS EACH

The Ormond Copper Mines, Limited (Non-Personal Liability), is a Development Company formed for the purpose of working the well-known Ormond Group of nine Mineral Claims on Flores Island, Clayoquot Sound. It is the intention of the Company to start the development work immediately and continue it vigorously under experienced, practical and economical management. As a result of this work, it is expected that an ore body will be blocked out that will make the Company's stock worth several times its par value.

ASSAYER'S REPORT

Nine samples taken of the ore are as follows:

	Silver Per Cent	Copper Per Cent
Tunnel	3.20	4.6
Tunnel	3.60	6.5
Tunnel	1.20	6.0
Tunnel	2.00	6.1
2nd cross-cut	4.16	7.3
2nd cross-cut	3.60	3.4
2nd cross-cut	3.00	6.1
2nd cross-cut	4.00	7.0
Dump	4.20	5.7

or a general average of 5.65 per cent copper and 3.21 oz. silver.

THE FUTURE OUTLOOK

The present high price of metals will, in the opinion of many experts, maintain for a considerable time after the war is over; in any event there seems to be no question that at least 20-cent copper will be the prevailing price for many years.

This is a Home Company

—one that will materially assist in developing the mining interests of Vancouver Island, and the mercantile future of the City of Victoria.

SPOKANE GOT RICH FROM ROSSLAND ORE

SEATTLE WAS BUILT UP BY THE KLONDIKE TRADE

The production from metalliferous mining in British Columbia for the year 1915 was $20,762,149. The production for 1916 has been estimated to exceed $40,000,000.

EXTRACT FROM THE REPORT OF THE MINISTER OF MINES, 1915

"Copper mining is now the most important form of mining in the Province, and this year it practically equalled in value the entire total value of other lode minerals produced, and exceeded considerably, the value of the coal and coke production. It forms 47 per cent of the total mineral production. In the working of the large low-grade copper-deposits and the subsequent smelting of the ores produced, a great number of men are employed and a large proportion of the money value is retained in the country and in the payment of wages and purchase of supplies."

PROGRESS OF DEVELOPMENT

The surface work that has been done on the property exposes a body of ore bearing material in a sheared zone having an approximate width of 15 feet over a length of 500 feet; of this material 5 feet to 8 feet may be considered ore that will average 5 per cent copper and 3 oz. in silver, equal, at the present price of metals, to $27.83 per ton gross, or with mining, shipping and smelting charges deducted, $21.08 net.

599,995 fully paid up and non-assessable shares have been placed with H.E.A. Courtney as Trustee for the use of the company, and 200,000 of these are now offered at 25 cents per share, fully paid and non-assessable. Full information, prospectus and subscription blanks can be obtained at the company's office, 232 Pemberton Building, or from the following brokers:

A Local Enterprise

THE WEEK has pleasure in calling attention to an important local enterprise directed and controlled by well-known local gentlemen, and offering at least a reasonable probability of profitable investment. The reference is to the Ormond Copper Mines, Limited. This Company has been formed to acquire and work a promising copper property situate on Flores Island at the entrance to Clayoquot Sound. Considerable surface work has been done on the property and a definite ore body has been located over a considerable range, with copper values running to more than $20 net. Mr. Charles H. Clapp, the eminent geologist, who spent two seasons on the West Coast of Vancouver Island, spoke favourably of the class of deposit represented by the Ormond Mine, and there is no higher authority. At the present time nothing offers so attractive an investment as copper, which has soared from about 10 cents a pound to more than 30 cents, and is expected to go higher. The favourable location of this property, both for operation, shipment and treatment, constitute it an attractive proposition. It is in good hands and no promotion money is being paid to anyone. The Week has no hesitation in endorsing the proposition as one well worthy of attention.

By THE LOUNGER

No one can deny that by degrees we are all finding our "metier." Men, women and children are by the force of circumstances gravitating to their right position with respect to the War, and that is the only thing that matters and the only thing worth thinking about. Personally I think it is of more importance than the correspondence running to pages in the Colonist on "Saging One's Soul." Indeed I take the view that the work of winning this War, if prosecuted in the right spirit, will save more souls than all the preaching of all the Churches. Nothing is more conspicuous and pronounced in connection with War work than the contribution of women. It would be a trite story to recount how they have entered new fields of labour, shouldered "the white man's burden," and fitted themselves for the performance of unaccustomed tasks while continuing to discharge the thousand and one sympathetic activities which they have always made their own. I have sometimes thought that the women of Victoria have done all that could be done in this direction, but like Alexander they are looking for fresh worlds to conquer and their latest proposal is one of the "best yet." I notice in the Daily Press that on Wednesday evening an enthusiastic meeting was held at the I.O.D.E. headquarters consisting of the wives, mothers and women relatives of soldiers on active service, who had gathered in response to the invitation of Mrs. R. S. Day, president of the Patriotic Service Committee, to consider the formation of a corps of women for voluntary service. I understand that the main object in view is to provide a social rendezvous and a place of recreation for the hundreds of women in Victoria who are bearing the burden of loneliness in the absence of their men folk. There can be no worthier object, especially as the idea is simply one of organization and arrangement. I am sure the work can be carried out, and along lines which will have a very practical and far-reaching effect, and I wish the movement every success.

I have been asked to say another word about the "Gift Shop" which proposes to open on Monday next for the sale of dolls and other Christmas presents in competition with the small stores of Victoria. I find that my protest of last week meets with almost universal favour, and had hoped that it would have been effective in influencing the promoters to abandon their project. There is one feature of the case which possibly has been overlooked even by those who no doubt thought they were doing a good thing by opening this shop. I understand that the consignment of dolls which is to be offered for sale came from New York. If so, it is almost certain that they are German or Austrian made dollars. A full knowledge of this fact would probably decide the fate of the enterprise. By the way, my attention is called to the fact that the special title of this shop, the "Gift Shop," has been the trade designation of a similar store managed by a well known Victoria woman for several years past; It is therefore a little hard on her that the title should have been plagiarized. I still hope that the promoters of the "Gift Shop" will reconsider their position, especially after the very public-spirited action of "Superfluities" in withdrawing from competition with business stores during the Christmas Holidays.

MASQUERADE BALL

The committee in charge of the arrangements for the grand masquerade ball to be given under the auspices of the Britannia Lodge of the Ladies' Orange Benevolent Association, on Tuesday, December 12th, is sparing no efforts to make this event a great success. The proceeds will be devoted entirely to providing cots for wounded Canadian soldiers in a local convalescent hospital. Additional interest is lent to the ball by the splendid prizes being offered by leading merchants for the most clever character costumes seen on the floor of the Alexandra Club ball room, where the ball will be staged. Prizes for the best patriotic, the best advertising and the best comic characters represented and three grand tombola prizes will also be given. The judging committee will be composed of Mrs. R. H. Pooley, Mrs. David Miller, Mayor Stewart and Alderman Dilworth. The prizes offered are on view in the window of Mr. Rose's jewelry store, corner of Douglas and Johnson streets, where tickets may also be secured, or from Ivels Drug store, the corner of Douglas and View Streets, or from any of the following committee of ladies: Mrs. Gilson, Mrs. Mrs. S. Elliott, Mrs. Clifford, and Mrs. Warren, the Worthy Mistress of the Lodge. The tickets are much in demand and are selling at $1.00 for gentlemen and 50c for ladies. Dancing will be in progress from 9 o'clock until 1 a. m. to the excellent accompaniment of Miss Thain's orchestra. Mrs. Hastings has kindly consented to play selections on the harp. A buffet supper will be served in the cafe downstairs during the evening.

CHRISTMAS TREE AND HOLL SHOW AT GOVERNMENT HOUSE

Through the courtesy of His Honour Lieutenant Governour and Mrs. Barnard the members of the I.O.D.E. had the honour of holding their Christmas Fair and Doll Show at Government House yesterday afternoon and evening, at 3 and 8 p. m. Mrs. Henry Croft, president of the Provincial Chapter, declared the fair open and almost at once the beautiful ball room was thronged with interested purchasers for the dolls and the hundreds of dainty and artistic articles displayed by the different chapters of the I.O.D.E. During the afternoon Mrs. Barnard very kindly presented the prizes to the two successful artists in the recent poster competition. The magnificent Christmas tree, in charge of Mrs. Robin Dunsmuir and Mrs. Humphreys, laden with wonderful gifts was most artistically lighted in the national colours. Mrs. Douglas Wright had charge of the booths in the gallery where a number of talented and popular fortune tellers were kept in constant demand. A large number of tables were arranged for "Bridge" in the drawing rooms, in charge of Mrs. Ambery. Tea was served in the large dining room, and proved a great attraction, and here Mrs. Charles Gardiner and Mrs. Marley, with many willing helpers, were kept busy dispensing their dainties to the numerous guests. The field comforts apparently found no difficulty in disposing of their practical wares which were displayed in the entrance hall, in charge of Mrs. Cookson.

Perhaps the greatest attraction of the afternoon was the "Returned Soldiers" table, with many novelties in wood carving, orders for which were taken by the soldiers in charge. Further details of this function will be published in our next issue, and full particulars of the results. The proceeds will enable the I.O.D.E. to continue their efforts in the good patriotic work they are doing for our brave men in the fighting line.

PANTAGES THEATRE

Hardeen, the famous hand-cuff king and expert jail breaker, is returning to the Pantages next week. Many persons have marvelled at Hardeen's seemingly superhuman feats of skill. On former visits here he has been subjected to most rigid tests by prison and police authorities. He has released himself from all manacles produced. He has broken out of jails and strong rooms. Hardeen will be the big special feature of next week's bill at the Pantages. Two other noteworthy names on the program are those of Howard and Ross, and John T. Doyle. the former is an oddly named "Operatic Revue" and the latter appearing with his company in the sketch, "The Danger Line."

The attention of the readers of "The Week" is directed to the advertisement of the Brentwood Beach Hotel in the current issue. The summer rates have been discontinued, and the management is now prepared to make special rates for the winter season. The service is maintained at the highest standard, and persons selecting this delightful district for a week-end holiday or a rest during the winter months, will find all the comforts and attention of a home.

Mrs. Gibbing, of Cowichan, returned home on Friday from a visit to own.
