North Vancouver To Be Terminus.

That North Vancouver will be the terminus of the Pacific Great Eastern railway, and not Newport as rumored, was the declaration made by both Sir Richard McBride and D'Arcy Tate at a meeting held at Victoria between the Cabinet and a delegation from North Vancouver.

Introducing the deputation, F. L. Carter-Cotton, M. P. P., said that although the charter called for a commencement on the work on July 1, 1912, within ten miles of the city of Vancouver, which really meant North Vancouver, construction had been begun at Newport. This had given rise to the rumor, and the real estate dealers had carried on a campaign in which Newport was advertised as the terminus. This had done harm to North Vancouver.

Premier McBride declared that the government could not undertake to censor real estate advertisements or to be responsible for them. He added: "The terminus of the Pacific Great Eastern railway is the city of Vancouver, and it will go there, there is no doubt about that."

D'Arcy Tate also declared that Vancouver would be the terminus. "That is our contract," he said, "and we are going to have the road constructed in contract time from Vancouver to Fort George."

Typists Have A Kick.

"Should employers be prejudiced against a girl applying for a position as stenographer and typewriter because of the color of her hair, turn of her nose or shape of her mouth?" "Does competency count for nothing against good looks?" "Should we not be judged only by the character of our work, and not by our looks?"

Mayor Gaynor of New York was recently asked these questions by a delegation of typewriters and stenographers who have a grievance. They complained that employers are not inclined to give work to girls who do not fill their eye as to figure, face, color of hair or complexion. Mayor Gaynor designated Mrs. Marion, his confidential stenographer, to hear the grievances of the young women.

Wedding At The Indian Village.

A large number of white people were guests at the wedding of Mr. Solomon Wilson and Miss Emma Cross, two of the most popular young Indians of Skidegate village, on Monday last. The guests were gathered up by the gasoline boat Haida at noon, and returned in the same way at four o'clock the next morning.

The ceremony was performed in English, the Rev. Dr. Spencer officiating. The bride, who wore a beautiful dress of spangled net over white satin, was supported by Mrs. Albert Jones (nee Miss Lizzie Russ). Mr. Albert Jones was the best man.

After the ceremony, over a hundred people sat down to a feast in the town hall. Dr. Spencer, Mr. Currie, Mr. Conroy and Mr. Cochrane made speeches of congratulation, and a number of the older Indians made speeches in Haida, of which no translation is at present available.

One part of the proceedings that seemed a great improvement on the white man's customs, was that the wedding presents were made in cash, $417 being subscribed to help the young couple get started, besides $100 from the bride's father, who also announced his intention of building them a house.

A dance was held in the evening, music being supplied by the Skidegate Indian band, which is the best north of Vancouver.

During the evening some of the Indians gave an exhibition of the dances they used to entertain themselves with in the old days. Painted souvenir paddles, formerly presented to visiting chiefs, were given to Mrs. Cochrane and Mrs. Smith.

All who were present are enthusiastic in their praises of Indian hospitality, and wish the young couple many happy years.

Mr. Hagen Leaves For ancouver.

Mr. Hagen, who has been acting as Presbyterian Missonary for Queen Charlotte and district for the past few months, leaves on Monday for Vancouver, where he will take up city mission work.

Government Aid For Settlers.

The Vancouver Board of Trade unanimously adopted a resolution for a comprehensive land settlement; urges assistance for farmers till his land becomes productive; and ask for better roads and transportation facilities in outlying districts. The foregoing, along with a number of other recommendations, will be submitted to the Provincial Government. Mr H. A. Stone, chairman of the committee appointed to go into this matter, gives a lengthy and interesting report, covering every detail of farm lands under cultivation, and lands already taken up but not energetically farmed and the reasons therefor. The supply and demand shows that the total production of farm produce in B. C. was twenty and three-quarter million dollars, and the imports fourteen and three-quarter millions. The following five staple farm products, fruit, cheese, poultry, eggs and meats, shows a larger discrepancy, our production being only two and five-eighth millions of a consumption of over seven millions. In other words we are still importing nearly as much as we are producing, and this after twenty years farming in B. C.

The Committee's report says that to get over part of this difficulty a lower cost of clearing land must be brought about. It would seem reasonable, however, that the government should be able to clear or otherwise prepare land for settlement at a lower cost than any private company. Land so improved would not increase in value except by the actual cost of such improvements, and it is surely our right and in the interest of the Province that settlers shall secure improved lands at cost and nothing more.

Feasts At Indian Village.

This is the season for feasts and jollifications of all sorts among the Indians. A very successful basket social was held last Wednesday evening in aid of the new Methodist Church, and the next evening a grand spread was given to celebrate the narrow escape from drowning of the Young boys, who were almost lost in attending to their boat in Tuesday night's storm.

New Steamers For Coast Trade.

Great developments will be witnessed in the coastwise trade during the next year or two, says the Victoria Times. The boats at present operating on their different runs, it is predicted, will be found inadequate and larger vessels will be required to take care of the business. The rapid development of all the coast towns and the ever-increasing tourist business to northern ports will make it necessary for the various companies to build more commodious ships. The past year has been a record one for all the companies operating vessels in the coasting trade, but nearly all the heads of these shipping concerns are agreed that the business will have almost doubled itself before two more years have elapsed.

There is a rumor current that the C. P. R. will construct two new vessels in order to be able to cope with the expected increase of business. It is not known what run the new boats will be designed for or what their dimensions will be, but they will no doubt be handsome additions to the coastwise fleet.

A short time before the G.T.P. transcontinental is completed there will be a great rush of people to Prince Rupert. The opening up of so much arable land in the north will cause a great influx of settlers as well as speculators. The present boats will be too small to cope with the business in a satisfactory manner and some of the larger ferry steamers operating on runs out of Victoria to adjacent mainland points may be switched to this trade and new vessels fill their places.

Pat Knew The Answer.

An Irishman was newly employed at a lumber office. The proprietors of the company were young men, and decided to have some fun with the new Irish hand. Patrick was duly left in charge of the office, with instructions to take all orders which might come in during their absence.

Going to a nearby drug store, they proceeded to call up the lumber company's office, and the following conversation ensued:

"Hello! Is this the East Side Lumber Co.?"

"Yes, sir. And what would ye be havin'?"

"Take an order, will you."

"Sure, that's what I'm here for."

"Please send us up a thousand knotholes."

"Well, now, an' ain't that a bloomin' shame? I'm sorry, but we are just out."

"How's that?"

"Just sold them all to the new brewery."

"To the new brewery. What do they want with them?"

"By golly, an' they use them for bungholes in barrels."

Haidas and Their Legends.

By Mr. Charles Harrison.

Article XXVIII---Customs That Existed Formerly Amongst The Haidas.

Sha-nung-it-lag-e-das was supposed to have commanded the inferior gods to protect the Haida Nation and to supply them with all the necessaries of life. Their supplications were addressed to this supreme god or chief through the god of the sun and the god of the sea. Their offerings were always made to the minor deities in order to secure their goodwill and assistance as mediators with the Great Chief whenever they were seriously ill and on the point of death. Ordinarily most of their religious rites and ceremonies had reference to the sun god and the sea god. Whenever a good Haida was about to die he saw a canoe or imagined he saw a canoe manned by some of his bygone friends who came with the tide to bid him welcome to their domain. They were supposed to be sent by the god of death. The dying man saw them and was rejoiced to know that after a period passed within the city of death, he would with his friends, be welcomed to the city of Sha-nung-it-lag-e-das. His friends would then call him and bid him come. They were supposed to say: Come with us; come into the land of light; come into the land of great things; wonderful things; come into the land of plenty, where hunger is unknown; come with us and rest for evermore. The birds of our country will bring you delicious berries; the dogs of our city will furnish you with innumerable bear-skins, and your home will be made of beautiful cedar all inset with most lovely abalone shells. Come with us into our land of sunshine and be a great chief attended with numerous slaves. Come with us and the hairseal will provide you with salmon, halibut, and all kinds of shellfish. Come with us the spirits would say, for the tide is about to ebb and we must depart. At last the soul of the deceased man left his body and joined the company of his former friends, and his body was buried with great pomp and splendour. In regard to the wicked Indians, great clouds appeared in which were the sattelites of the cloud monarch who were ready to pounce upon their souls as soon as they came out of their bodies, which was generally about forty-eight hours before the body really died. No beautiful houses were prepared for them to dwell in, and no good food could be had in the locality, where for a time they were destined to remain. Everything ahead of them was nothing but sorrow and misery, and the chief to whom they owed allegiance treated them shamefully and they were not allowed to refuse to obey all his commands. They were compelled to live in the country dominated by this dreadful chief twelve months. After their bodies were buried their souls were at times commanded to descend to the earth and bring their bodies to supply this horrible chief with food. Should they perchance refuse to accede to his request, he then would begin to feast on their spirits and the consequence would then be that their souls would immediately die. Thus the future for the bad and wicked Haida was always fraught with great danger both to their bodies as well as their souls. When the spirits of the wicked Haidas had remained twelve months and had survived during this period in this wicked and cruel chief's domain, he would then order that their souls if they had been obedient to their wishes be conveyed down through the sea and the land beneath the sea, into the kingdom of Heigwau-lan-a, which was and is called Het-gwau-ge. The good land was called Sha-tli-ge, the land above. The good chief was the reigning monarch in the land above, and the souls of the good Indians were taken there by his servants or his emissaries and presented with everything that they could desire, after they had successfully passed their probation in the domain of Chief Death. In Sha-tli-ge or Heaven, everybody was supposed to be happy. There in the land of the great Chief of Light was perpetual light, with no clouds, no storms, and no fierce winds to mar the peace of his friends; for this great chief treated all that entered or were privileged to enter his kingdom as his friends. There they were all clothed with beautiful garments made of the finest quality of cedar and spruce roots and were enabled to enjoy themselves fishing and hunting the livelong day. There they were accustomed to dance their best and favourite dances and sing their favorite songs in the presence of their chiefs continually. This indeed was the Haidas great chief and all were anxious to get into his kingdom and did their utmost through the services of the medicine man to merit this great reward. As I have previously stated, Het-gwau-ge was the name of the lower regions, over which Het-gwau-lan-a was the ruling deita. To this chief's domain Chief Cloud conducted the souls of the wicked Indians, and there they were prevented from hunting and fishing and otherwise enjoying themselves. It was a most dismal region to live in, as it was always dark, and all enjoyment for the poor souls that were condemned to live in his kingdom was at an end. The storms were supposed to prevent them from catching fish, and the snow prevented them from hunting, and thus they were in a perpetual state of misery and trouble. The question now to our minds naturally arises what in the olden days made a good Indian, and what constituted a bad one? From what I have been able to ascertain, the good Indians were those who worshipped the Great Chief through the minor deities, and were observant of all the required ritual as taught by the medicine men. They were always punctual in offering the accustomed sacrifices to the inferior gods in order to get their advice and assistance, and consequently were obedient to the commands and slightest wishes of the great Sa-ag-gas known to the whites as medicine men. They were commanded to love their friends and be kindly disposed towards the poor. They had never to fight with their friends and had always to attend the great dance festivals and give liberally towards the feasts. The Sa-ag-ga was their supreme guide whilst they were in this lower world and in this respect the medicine men usurped priestly functions and their mandates were oftentimes greater than those of their chiefs. For instance they were taught that they must only to go war against a foreign tribe at the command of their Sa-ag-ga, and he would then assure them of victory. If anyone be killed by an accident or in actual warfare the services of the Sa-ag-ga would gain him an admittance into Sha-tle-ge, and for this service the medicine man was accustomed to receive a bale of blankets valued formerly at sixty dollars. Finally, all who were happy while on this earth and did their duty according to the ancient customs in vogue would be admitted by the Great Chief into his beautiful kingdom, where they would continue to be happy until called upon to revisit this earth as the soul of some newly born infant. This is one of the difficult points to decide, whether the soul returned to this earth from the Great Chief's kingdom or from the domain of Chief Death. The old Haidas were really undecided on this point.
