LODE MINING.

Atlin's Prospects in Quartz Mining Excellent.

Much Preliminary Work Being Done and Some Excellent Showings Made.

The Atlin district has now made a world-wide reputation for its auriferous gravel deposits, and before many years it will have a record second to none as a hydraulic mining district. The extent and richness of these deposits have not yet been thoroughly estimated or proved, yet the available territory can be roughly put down as not less than 1200 square miles.

Much of our space has been devoted to the auriferous gravels of the different creeks of the district, but little has hitherto been said regarding prospects of lode mining, yet quartz mining has prospects not dreamed of by many of us. It has been found well-nigh impossible to obtain reliable information on the subject, and as the numerous locations are beyond our periodical rounds, we have been unable to visit them personally. We would now make an appeal to all miners who are interested in quartz properties in the district and who have been working on them to send us from time to time notes of the work done and the showings made, both for their own benefit and for that of the camp as a whole. Several thousand dollar's worth of assessment work has been done between last fall and the present time, yet we rarely hear anything about it or of the results. However, what we have heard justifies us in stating that the general results are most gratifying, and in one or two instances bodies of rich ore have been exposed.

With the shutting down of the Monroe mountain mine, speculation was rife as to the cause of doing so, and it cannot be concealed, that, for a time, a feeling of depression took hold of the quartz miners. Human nature, however, is easily swayed, and ere many weeks men were on the still hunt again.

We have heard rumours of a property, consisting of several claims, on the east shore of the lake, not many miles from town, which has shown up so well, that the parties who took a bond on it last fall are returning, when navigation opens, with a ten-stamp mill. It is also stated that a party of St. Paul capitalists has become interested in property in the same locality and will operate extensively this season.

On Fourth of July creek very considerable work has been done and the result is very promising. For the most part the prevailing rock of this district is galena, carrying small values in gold. The writer was shown some rock from one of these claims a few days ago and was pleasurably surprised at the promising nature of the samples. It would be foolish to say that, under present conditions, the most of this galena ore would pay, but the property from which this sample came is extensive enough, and the showing would justify the installation of a concentrator.

On some of the free-gold bearing properties, the use of an arrasta could undoubtedly be adopted with profitable results.

It is fully anticipated that most satisfactory arrangements may this year be made with the White Pass Railway Company for the transportation of trial shipments of ore to the smelters on the Sound, and, as much work has been done on the most promising properties, it should not be a difficult matter for the miners to make up among them a trial shipment of, say, ten tons.

In conclesion, we may be pardoned for saying that in many instances work has been done by men without having from time to time had assays made of their rock, and we regret to say that much valuable time and money have thereby been wasted on worthless ground. What may be said of the inexperience of lots of placer miners may equally be said of would-be quartz miners. From the failure in cases such as these much of the evil report on this branch of mining has arisen, to the great loss of the camp. The field of lode mining in Atlin is still in its infantile stage, though in very many instances the "bairns" have the indications of making big, strong men, if such a simile may be excused.

NEWS OF THE CREEKS.

The miners at the Blue Canyon, on the upper waters of Spruce, have almost completed the laying of their flume and we predict a successful season for them. The aid and experience of Lambert & Jackson of Pine creek was a valuable acquisition to the owners of this ground.

Lambert & Jackson are now pulling out of Pine, and will devote most of their time to Dominion and Spruce creeks. We hope the same good fortune will follow them in their new ventures as they have met with on Pine during the last three seasons.

To Boulder creek belongs the honour of doing the first piping for the season. The De Lamare Syndicate, after three weeks preliminary work, began piping last night, with the best of prospects ahead of them. There is a fine and increasing head of water and good way is expected to be made within the next few weeks. Much work is now being on the creek.

SATURDAY, JUNE 1st, 1901.

WHILE hydraulic mining is naturally attracting much attention in the development of the camp, it has for the most part been a matter for companies only to take up, because of the amount of capital involved in the installation of plants, flumes, ditches, tail-races, etc., and it is one that men of small means could not take up single-handed. Yet there is a way open for level-headed miners to carry out the principle in a limited degree. An article appeared in our issue of February 16th last, under the heading of "Booming with a Shooter," dealing with the subject in hand at considerable length. Since the appearance of this article we have obtained the opinion of several old miners who have seen the boomer in actual operation, added to those opinions the practical results of one actually in operation in this district, the consensus of opinion is that a well constructed boomer will pay for its construction in a week. The one on Alder creek has a capacity of 3000 galions, giving 24 splashes or flushes a day, in low water and the work it has accomplished, even with five feet of snow to wash out, is almost beyond conception. A boomer is being constructed on the Stevendyke property with a capacity of 10,000 gallons and great results are anticipated. The object is that where water is scarce, by the use of a storage tank, so constructed that it can be used either to supply a steady flow of water under pressure or to automically flush its contents into the lead-boxes is obtained for ground-sluicing, with such force that nothing can resist the rush. It is easy of construction, and a little thought given to the boomer will soon satisfy one as to its utility and effectiveness.

The Luck That Was Spelled With a "P."

Under the caption, "Mining Successes That Were Not All Luck," a recent issue of SUCCESS contains an article by Robert Mackay on the discovery of the great Comstock property. The way the four great partners got together is interestingly told:

Just beyond "the divide" two men kept a store. They were Jas. L. Flood and William O'Brien. They had saved some money after a few years of trading with the miners, were ready for a deal in one of the mines, and had faith in Mackay and Fair. So when Mackay walked into their store one morning and remarked "Jim Flood, if you and O'Brien will put up the money, Fair and I will put up the brains, and I think the four of us can buy the 'Con' Virginia and make something out of it."

"How much do you want, John?" said Flood.

"Eighty thousand dollars."

The deal was closed on the spot. The history of the 'Con' Virginia is as well known, almost, as the story of Washington and the cherry tree. Before the four miners struck the "lead" they had exhausted their money and their credit. There seemed to be nothing in the rock they brought out of the earth. Other miners met them day after day and laughed at their apparently hopeless task. They were jeered and made fun of. But they kept serious faces and sober minds, and were not to be thwarted by the idle talk of idlers.

One morning when the prospect seemed blackest, a friend said to Mackay:

"John, luck has gone against you; why don't you quit and go prospecting?"

"The man who figures on luck in mining," said Mackay, "is a fool; the man who figures on doing a lot of hard work and not losing his grit will get something."

The four partners did not lose their grit, nor did they rely on luck. One afternoon the rumour spread over Virginia City that the 'Con' Virginia men had struck a body of ore. It spread as wildfire often swept over the Nevada prairies. The four men left their mine at sundown and walked down C street amid a babel of cheers. The next morning the Consolidated Virginia stock had gone from 80 cents to $250 a share, and in another day to $500 a share. In three days it was announced that the body of rock was so large that its value could not be estimated. In two weeks the United States Government was negotiating with the owners of the mine for the redemption of bonds whose value had been affected by the civil war. In two months the financial centers of Europe had felt the shock, and about the same time Mackay, Flood, Fair and O'Brien were able to announce that they were millionaires beyond the dreams of avarice.

FIBBING IN THE CENSUS PAPERS.

While our census enumerators are around the country making up their returns, the following, copied from the DAILY CHRONICLE — London, Eng. — is interesting as well as amusing:

This is the census week, and every letter-box in England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales will contain its note of interrogation. Courteous collectors will come to gather our answers to all sorts of rude questions as to our age, our diseases and our imbecility.

How much of truth will these answers contain? We are, perhaps, a little too hopeful as to the statistical result of the census. The most genial and patient of collectors will scarcely succeed in persuading the ignorant that the census paper has nothing to do with taxation or conscription.

number of the population we shall certainly be deceived as to its age. Even men who fear being too old at forty do not care to confess their age to their pen except under dire compulsion.

With women the disinclination is even stronger. Bachelor women who live in residential chambers in London are fiercely set against revealing their secret to the manager or the caretaker. And in country districts where the collector is the local clergyman or schoolmaster there is probably not one woman in a hundred who will tell the truth for the sake of the statistician.

Theoretically falsehood incurs a penalty; but has the penalty ever been enforced? The census would gain in value if it were known that a certain percentage of cases would be investigated and brought to book.

News of the Creeks.

SPRUCE:—Our information re this creek has of late been but meagre as our correspondent has been too busy attending to his own affairs to give much thought to the rapacity of the public's demand for "news" under this head. However, the old saying, "every little helps," and we are furnished with a synopsis this week, which, it is hoped, will be followed up by something more substantial right along during the season.

A great deal of work has been done on this creek during the winter, particularly from 89 to 115 below, and the results have been for the most part satisfactory, in some instances away above expectation. In the drifting work carried on by Pacey, McNicoll and others the winter's work has been very profitable, all the way from ½ an ounce to five ounces per day to the man having been taken out. In the case of Pacey, who sluiced and rocked most of the winter, taking out enough to pay all expenses and a profit besides, he is now sluicing the tailings and is making good pay. Owing to the nature of his ground, which is more or less of a cemented character, the dirt would not dissolve in the boxes, but with the action of the weather it has become slacked and washes more readily. He is putting on a few men next week to continue his drift on the north side of the creek.

There is much activity on and around 140 below. Capt. Martin is in good shape for accomplishing a good season's work. He has a splendid ground-sluice head and before the water recedes should have laid in a good bank roll. He has his pay channel on the south bench—the old channel of the creek—opened up for several hundred feet, and this, we should judge, is from 3 to 6 feet thick, with an over-burden not to exceed 10 feet. Being on the south bank of the creek the frost may bother him for a little time, but muscle and an occasional stick of dynamite may help to overcome this obstacle. We congratulate the Captain on his excellent prospects.

Billy Eaton and his partner are getting ready for the season's work just below Captain Martin, on the same side, and with the abundance of water and the close proximity and possible continuance of the same pay streak, they should do well this season. The miners in the creek bed in this vicinity are now ground-sluicing and will be able to take out some money before high water.

In the group of creek leases applied for by Ruffner and partners above the mouth of Spruce, Mr. French has some men prospecting the ground and has been much pleased as well as surprised with the prospects obtained just above the canyon. It is more than likely that Mr. Ruffner's contemplated drilling plant will be brought in and the prospecting of this ground thoroughly and systematically carried on during the summer.

Muirhead Brothers, who have been working all winter with fair results, have now ground-sluiced quite a piece of their ground in the neighborhood of 84 and the prospects of good pay are in sight.

Ward and Hall are installing their pumping machinery, brought in by Mr. Ward, and laying several hundred feet of flume and sluice boxes. It is a treat to visit this ground, so perfect are all the arrangements; you can see the result of brain work added to practical experience. Hitherto these men have done well and their prospects were never brighter; they begin sluicing next week.

At 10 and 11 below two miners from Dawson are actively prospecting and have laid in quite a fine camp equipment. They have also purchased some claims above discovery and deserve the best of luck on the ground they have acquired, though these claims received but scant prospecting by the previous owners, being considered too deep for "tenderfeet." If there is pay in the ground the Dawson boys'll get it.

There is little doing between 75 and discovery. Aitken and partners are plodding away on discovery claim on a lay and have been for the last two years. From the determined way they have held out against adversity they ought this year to reap their reward.

The "unconquered De Witt" has a gang of men with him on his hydraulic ground, above discovery, and he says he is going to pull out with a wad this year. He has withdrawn his property from the Columbia Hydraulic Company—A. A. Johnson, manager—preferring to paddle his own canoe.

A. A. Johnston is seeking to acquire the hydraulic ground owned by John McLennan and others, east of the canyon above discovery. He went to the coast, accompanied by Mr. Bickle, with this end in view. If a deal is made, trust to big Jack McLennan having the long end of it.
