Business Enterprise

Greenwood has never lacked for business men of ability and acumen. Today, after the past years of financial and commercial depression, which have been felt in most of the towns of Western Canada and the States, it is to the credit of the present business men in Greenwood that they have upheld the prestige of the town, in spite of adverse conditions. We have stickers here, and they are the right material to make a good town. Since the resumption of mining and smelting operations, conditions have improved a hundred fold and the reward of patience and perseverance is in sight for the business men in this center of the western Boundary.

Merchants.

The Hunter-Kendrick Co., general merchants, located at the corner of Deadwood and Copper streets, started business in Greenwood in 1898, R. Kendrick retiring from the firm and his place being taken by W. T. Hunter in 1901. They are located in one of the finest two-story blocks in Greenwood, and have for the past 11 years carried a first-class stock of dry goods, groceries and hardware, with a full complement of assistants, chief amongst whom is Jake Saunders, who has been with the firm continuously since its establishment, and is now manager. Mr. Saunders is noted for his efficient handling of the steel and hardware department and is one of the best buyers in the west. Mr. Hunter is well known for his genial presence and business keenness. The name of Hunter is most favorably known in the Boundary, where the brothers have large stores in the leading towns.

The P. W. George Co., on the corner of Copper and Center streets, in the Wallace-Miller block, was founded in the fall of 1901, as successor to the Wallace-Miller company, who came here in 1899, and handle men's clothing exclusively. Everything in this store is of the very best and prices are in keeping with the needs of the community. They have a similar establishment in Phoenix under the able management of P. W. himself. The Greenwood store is managed by Charlie Fair, who is a partner in the firm, with the assistance of A. E. Braithwaite. Both Mr. Fair and Mr. Braithwaite are old timers in the Boundary and are always ready to outfit even the most fastidious, at a moment's notice. Everything the mere man can want can be procured here.

Next door to the P. W. George Co. is the drug store of J. L. White. This was originally White Bros., and was established in December, 1899, by Jack White, who was later joined by his brother. Curry White went to the northwest this spring to swell the ranks of Greenwoodites in Calgary, and is running a drug store there. White Bros. were for 10 years located at the corner of Copper and Greenwood streets, only moving to their present location this spring. Mr. White carries every known kind of drug and medicine and is an obliging and popular pioneer business man.

F. Jaynes & Co., are grocers and bakers in the Wallace-Miller block, and have been in business since June, 1904. Mr. Jaynes has built up a fine grocery and bakery business, sharing the former business with the Russell-Law-Caulfield Co. in Greenwood. Arthur Jaynes, who was recently married, assists his father and is a most obliging and able storeman. The bakery is superintended by A. Sakris, and is clean and well conducted

The Thomas Drug Co. was first located in the Guess brick block, adjoining the Windsor hotel, and now occupied by Logan Bros., jewelers, and now occupies a part of the Mellor brick block. Mr. Arthur Thomas is the manager and proprietor and has an up-to-date drug store, musical instrument and optical business that few large cities can improve on. Established in February, 1904, the Thomas Drug Co. have maintained a first-class store since its inception, and by reasonable prices have made themselves most popular and are a credit to the town.

Wherever a town is thriving a Welshman can be found doing a good business, and Thomas Thomas, the tailor, is no exception. Mr. Thomas came here in 1905, and is ever ready to take orders for anything wearable, making a specialty of ladies' tailor-made suits.

John L. Coles, stationer, bookseller and fancy goods dealer, has been doing business in Greenwood for ten years. He was first located near the Imperial hotel, and later joined issues with Walter Frith, who left Greenwood some two years ago to accept the position of customs' officer at Keremeos Mr. Coles handles everything readable, including the Boundary Creek Times, and has a first-class stock of smokers' delights, as well as all the necessities of the angler and sportsman.

This article continued next week.

HARDY PRESENTATION

Thos. Hardy of Midway, a Boundary pioneer, was the recipient of two splendid arm chairs from many friends in Greenwood, Midway and Rock Creek, last week. Robert Kerr acted as spokesman and in a short speech enlarged on Mr. Hardy's good qualities. Mr. Hardy responded for himself and Mrs. Hardy and amongst other nice things stated that his latch string would always be on the out side of his door and all his friends were most welcome. Cards and music made the time fly and after a capital supper, those present danced till early morrow.

SATURDAY

St. Judes' Sunday School picnic will take place tomorrow afternoon, at Boundary city. Be at the church by 10 o'clock. Bring your baskets. Parents of children especially welcome, Come early, children.

COUNCIL MEETING

The city fathers met last Saturday and granted permission to Ole Lofstad to extend the road from Jenkins' house to Argo tunnel. The right to one inch of water from Twin creek was granted to Wm. Jenks. Forty dollars allowed to put Greenwood street in order. Lawn sprinkling is allowed only from 6 p. m. to 7 p. m.

PIONEER SOCIETY

The annual meeting and dinner of the Kettle River and South Okanagan Pioneers' society will be held at Fairview, on Friday, September 17. All pioneers who are able to attend are requested to notify the secretary, A. Megraw, Hedley, B. C.

The mining town of Reno, Nev., was the scene of a cloud burst last week. Many women and children are missing and 165 buildings were destroyed.

COMMERCIAL EVOLUTION

The evolution of Canadian commerce is of peculiar interest, so startling is the present day perfection compared with the crudities of the earliest times.

Canada's first store can be said to have been a ship. With the landing of Columbus and the Spaniard in 1492, American commerce was commenced. In 1535, however, Cartier performed what was probably the first trading transaction in Canada, landing at Cape Diamond, and from his ship trading with the Indians the first goods which ever entered the port of Montreal, and they entered duty free.

Then came the fortified trading post, which no Indian was allowed to enter, but which were stores no less, whose patrons sat on the ground outside and bartered their skins for beads and other gaudy commodities. This can be called the fur era, and it lasted for 250 years. It is chiefly noted for the birth of the Hudson's Bay company.

Then came the long period of free trading by stealth between the U. S. A. and Canada, when rough hewn stores sprang up on every side along the frontiers, when smuggling was the spice of life, and life was picturesque.

The age of the square timbered store followed. Trading was keener than ever, and trading it really was. A man's surplus production for other commodities at the local store. Eggs were worth so much butter, and butter so much flour. Life became less dangerous, and flowered waistcoats were the order of the day.

The circular saw mill wrought the next great change. The old log buildings were relegated to the chickens, and the lumber "stores at the corner," lath and plastered, became the trading centers of the day, a day of hoops and sun-bonnets.

The era of red brick came next, with cedar block pavements, when Muddy York became Toronto, and gas lighting made the streets safe and gay at night. This was the period of Bustle.

In 1882 the Robert Simpson company commenced business in an old brick building in Toronto. When the first store was erected in Toronto men wore moccasins and the women blankets. Now the fashions of Paris are the rule, and reinforced steel structures are springing up on every side. The stately edifice of the Robert Simpson Co. is a fine example of the completed perfection of the erstwhile trading post and a sign of the general prosperity of Canada.

MAYFLOWER DAY

A model of the old Mayflower has been built on Lake Union as a feature of the New England day celebration at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition, September 11. Bearing a crew of 102 "Pilgrims," who will represent the different people who made up the party of the original Mayflower, the ship will land its passengers on a model Plymouth Rock, located at the foot of the Pay Streak of the exposition.

The party will be dressed in the old Pilgrim costumes and will present a quaint appearance as they land from their ship. They will be met by a party of Indians, who will be secured from one of the attractions on the Pay Streak for the occasion, and a pow-wow will ensue, which will end in the smoking of the pipe of peace.

TAKE WARNING

In a recent issue, we published an abstract from the fire bylaw and its penalty. This penalty is about to be enforced, so don't grumble if the next small yard fire you set out costs you money.

ON THE TOP OF THE WORLD

Had the North pole been discovered by an Englishman, or a Canadian, and had the American papers come out with long doubting articles, we Britishers would have been furious. There is no reason to discredit the magnificent feat, and the dash and courage displayed by Dr. Cook, the American, who has at last reached the North pole.

After three centuries of failure, often attended by complete disaster, illfated expeditions have made attempts to realize the dream of old, the discovery of the North pole. Sir John Franklin, the Duke of the Abruzzi and Commander Peary are the most noteworthy of the many who have risked death in the frozen North to reach the great goal.

Dr. Cook, who has been the first to stand on the coveted spot, has been a member of other expeditions, and was the doctor with Peary on one of that famous explorer's trips to the far north. He has written his name in large letters on the scroll of famous men, and his immense task is deserving of every recognition and respect. For reward, Dr. Cook's book of his adventures will be read by millions, more largely than was Nansen's "Farthest North," and that book made Nansen wealthy for all time. Congratulations are pouring in on the doctor from every country on the globe. A royal reception has already been tendered to the doctor in Europe, and his reception in America is being planned on a large scale. Well he deserves it.

COMMANDER PEARY ALSO AT POLE

Commander Robert E. Peary reached the North pole on April 6, '09, just one year after Dr. Cook, who discovered the pole April 21, '08. This expedition started July, 1908. He is expected back in civilization this month, and has already sent a telegram from Indian Harbor, Labrador, to the New York Times. Commander Peary undertook his first expedition in 1886, and has since made several trips to the far north in quest of the North pole. Everyone will be glad to hear of his success and a huge welcome awaits him.

CAMPBELL—McCURDY

On September 1st, the marriage took place of Mr. Ronald Campbell, formerly a resident of the Mother Lode mine, and Miss Margaret Catherine McCurdy long a resident of Greenwood, at the Idaho Hotel, Coeur d'Alene city, Idaho. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. W. Stanton. Mr. Carl Codding officiated as best man, while Miss Tilly McCurdy, the bride's sister, acted as bride's maid.

After a short honeymoon spent in Spokane, the happy couple returned to Greenwood, on Saturday evening last, and have taken a residence on Silver street.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Campbell are well known in Greenwood and are deservedly popular. On their returned last Saturday the members of the local miner's union presented them with a handsome silver teapot, cream jug and sugar bowl, and the usual time honored chivaree was responded to by Mr. Campbell in a most generous manner.

All who know the bride and bridegroom wish them every possible happiness and the Times extends its good wishes with the rest of their many friends.

A TRUE FISH STORY

This week several enterprising local sportsmen secured small stocks of trout, from Boundary Creek, to stock Long Lake with.

The local Fish and Game Protective society also promised some boys at Anaconda 25c. a dozen to catch small trout for the same purpose. The boys dug a channel close to the creek, and caught 60 fish, leaving them all night in the channel prepared, but next morning all the biggest had disappeared. They could not get out, and it is known who the "sportsman" was, who, fishing in the neighborhood, this augmented his catch and spoilt a good days work. Long Lake is the loser. It is to be hoped a bone stuck in his throat.

WESTERN LIFE

The Citizen Printing and Publishing Co., of Vancouver, have enlarged the scope of their excellent monthly magazine, "Marine Life," and to extend its field of usefulness, are introducing new features of equal importance to B. C. The new publication has just made its appearance as "Western Life," and is up to date and interesting. Try it. Monthly, $1 a year. Start with the September copy.

LABOR DAY

The Labor Day celebrations at Phoenix were a great success, an elaborate program of races and sports was carried out under the auspices of Phoenix Miners' Union No. 8, W. F. M. There was a large attendance from outside towns. In the evening a ball was given in the Miners Union Hall. Perfect weather added much to everyone's enjoyment.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1909.

OUR BIRTHDAY

Today the Boundary Creek Times is 13 years old, and has almost come to years of discretion, if it is not quite independent and earning its own living. It's trying to, anyway.

In case no one else wishes us happy returns of the day, we will go out, right now, and drink our own health—and yours, and our own again.

Thirteen years is a long time, and during that period so much has happened. Some have died, many are married, and a few others are in jail, too. But we are today starting on our fourteenth year, so why dilate on the sad and sorrowful events of past years. A bright and glorious future is in store for British Columbia, therefore for the Boundary, hence for Greenwood, and, of course, for the Times. So here's to the health of our debtors, our creditors and ourselves. Prosit! Immer noch eins! Whoop!

SIR WILFRID LAURIER

There is every possibility that Sir Wilfrid Laurier will be persuaded to accept the vice-regency of United South Africa, and no greater compliment could be paid to our Dominion and the new Union.

The peaceful birth of a new nation in South Africa, after the disjointed troublous times of previous years, is the outcome of tact and diplomacy unequalled in the history of the world, for only a few years ago war was rife in what is now, or soon will be, the South African Federation.

That a Canadian should be chosen as its first ruler is only a fitting compliment to the oldest and most advanced division of the Empire, and Canadians should be proud of the home country's excellent choice, while South Africans will feel complimented at the selection of so eminent a Britisher as Sir Wilfrid.

The ruler of the new South Africa will have no easy task. There are grave questions to be settled, such as emigration, but a man of Sir Wilfrid's successfully diplomatic temperament may be trusted with so important a post without any misgivings.

ON FRUIT RAISING

To raise fruit successfully there are several qualifications necessary to make this pastime pleasant and profitable. A parcel of land is first and foremost. The size of it depends on the depth of the fruit farmer's pocket. A railway platform, the public highway and a tin roof are alike unfitted for fruit culture, the best possible location being a sloping bench or bottom land, where water is procurable, anywhere from three inches square to three miles being highly recommended. The water is a necessity, as the fruit should be washed before packing, and this is done in an airtight compartment to keep out the flies and other cattle.

Having secured the land, next to planting it with the desired varieties of pomegranates or pumpkins, it is as well to erect a stone wall around it to keep off bears, boys and other fruit loving birds. The expense of this is considerable, but the results satisfactory, especially if the said wall has a high iron trestle running its entire length. As to the culture of the fruit trees, this can be done in your spare time and is of no great importance. Sunday is an exception, when no work of any kind should be indulged in, as the trees need a rest.

When the crop is superabundant, call in your neighbors and give them permission to make themselves ill. Pack what they leave, and ship to the furthest point on the map where a similar fruit is growing wild, and your name and fortune will be assured.

For any further or more detailed advice on how to raise fruit, ask yours truly, or C. A. T.

OUTLINES OF CURRENT EVENTS

Welch & Stewart, contractors, have purchased the river fleet of the G. T. P. Railway. The steamers will be used in construction work carrying supplies.

Jim McCreath has measured the following distances by instrument on his motor car:—Beaverdell, 52.7 miles; Gorman West, 40.9 miles; Westbridge, 29.5 miles; Sam Larson's, 19.8 miles; Boundary Falls, 3.2 miles, from Greenwood.

The Ash—Shehab (The Brilliant Star,) the only Arabic paper published in Canada, is on our exchange list. Any Syrian in Greenwood is welcome to see it at any time.

In 1896 there was no Canadian Northern railroad, today there are 7,000 miles of it in operation, under construction or surveyed. At the present rapid rate of extension it will, in a few years, form a continuous streak of steel from ocean to ocean, making the third transcontinental highway in Canada.

BOOMING

Tell me not in mournful numbers that the town is full of gloom, for the man's a crank that slumbers in these bustling days of boom. Life is real, life is earnest and the grave is not its goal, every dollar that thou turnest helps to make the old town roll. But enjoyment, not sorrow, is our destined end or nay, if you have no money, borrow—buy a corner lot each day! Lives of great men all remind us we can win immortal fame. Let us leave these chumps behind us, we will get there just the same. In this world's broad field of battle, in the bivouac of life let us make the dry bones rattle—buy a corner for your wife! Let us then be up and doing, with a heart for any fate, still achieving, still pursuing, booming early, booming late.

The proprietor of a Buffalo news paper, while travelling on the Erie Railway, handed a pass to the ticket collector. The offical did not like the looks of the passenger, and doubted that he was the man, so he wired to the head office: "Man representing himself as William J. Conners presents Conners' pass, think he is a fraud. Looks like a prize fighter and talks like a blackguard." Back came the answer, "That's him."

Want to be strong?

Eat more Quaker Oats. Eat it for breakfast every day. This advice is coming from all sides as a result of recent experiments on foods to determine which are the best for strength and endurance. It has been proved that eaters of Quaker Oats and such cereals are far superior in strength and endurance to those who rely upon the usual diet of heavy, greasy foods.

When all is said and done on the cereal food question, the fact remains that for economy and for results in health and strength, Quaker Oats stands first of all. It is the most popular food in the world among the foods sold in packages. It's worth a trip to Peterborough to see these great mills.

Put up in two sizes, the regular package and the large family size, which is more convenient for those who do not live in town. The large package contains a piece of handsome china for the table.

Afraid of Ghosts

Many people are afraid of ghosts. Few people are afraid of germs. Yet the ghost is a fancy and the germ is a fact. If the germ could be magnified to a size equal to its terrors it would appear more terrible than any fire-breathing dragon. Germs can't be avoided. They are in the air we breathe, the water we drink.

The germ can only prosper when the condition of the system gives it free scope to establish itself and develop. When there is a deficiency of vital force, languor, restlessness, a sallow cheek, a hollow eye, when the appetite is poor and the sleep is broken, it is time to guard against the germ. You can fortify the body against all germs by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It increases the vital power, cleanses the system of clogging impurities, enriches the blood, puts the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition in working condition, so that the germ finds no weak or tainted spot in which to breed. "Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, whisky or habit-forming drugs. All its ingredients printed on its outside wrapper. It is not a secret nostrum but a medicine of known composition and with a record of 40 years of cures. Accept no substitute—there is nothing "just as good." Ask your neighbors.

Covering; Copper History, Geology, Geography, Chemistry, Mineralogy, Mining, Milling, Leaching, Smelting, Refining, Brands, Grades, Impurities, Alloys, Uses, Substitutes, Terminology Deposits by Districts, States, Countries and Continents, Mines in Detail, Statistics of Production, Consumption, imports, Exports, Finances, Dividends, etc.

The Copper Handbook is concededly the

WORLD'S STANDARD REFERENCE BOOK ON COPPER

The Miner needs the book for the facts it gives him regarding Geology, Mining, Copper Deposits and Copper Mines.

The Copper Consumer needs the book for every chapter it contains. It tells what and explains how and why.

The Investor in Copper Shares cannot afford to be without it. The Copper Handbook gives statistics and general information on one hand, with thousands of detailed mine descriptions on the other, covering the copper mines of the entire world, and the 40 pages of condensed statistical tables alone are worth more than the price of the book to each and every owner of copper mining shares.

Price: $5.00 in Buckram with gilt top, or $7.50 in full library morocco.

Terms: The most liberal. Send no money, but order the book sent you, all carriage charges prepaid, on one week's approval, to be returned if unsatisfactory, or paid for if it suits. Can you afford not to see the book and judge for yourself of its value to you?

Chapter 12

IF the man who had been the subject of the observations Jessica had heard had been less absorbed as he walked leisurely along on the opposite side of the street he would have noticed the look of dislike in the eyes of those he passed. They drew away from him, and one spoke—to no one in particular and with an oath offensive and fervid. But weather beaten, tanned, indifferently clad and with a small brown dog following him, the newcomer passed along, oblivious to the sidelong scrutiny. He did not stare about him after the manner of a stranger, though so far as he knew he had never been in the place before.

But Harry Sanderson now was not the man who had ridden into oblivion in the motor car. The rector of St. James' was in a strange eclipse. Mentally and externally he had reverted to the old Satan Sanderson of the brilliant flashing originality, of the curt risk and daring. The deeply human and sensitive side that had developed during his divinity years was in abeyance. It showed itself only in the affection he bestowed on the little nameless dog that followed him like a brown, shaggy shadow.

He was like that old self of his, and yet if he had but known it he was wonderfully like some one else, too—some one who had belonged to the long ago and garbled past that still eluded him; some one who had been a part also of the life of this very town till a little over a month before, when he had left it with dread dogging his footsteps!

Curious coincidences had wrought together for this likeness. In the past weeks Harry had grown perceptibly thinner. A spare beard was now on his chin, and the fiery sun that had darkened his cheeks to sallow had lightened his brown hair a shade. The cut on his brow had healed to the semblance of a thin red birthmark.

Fate—or God—was doing strange things for Harry Sanderson!

In the nomad weeks of wind and sun, as the tissues of the brain grew slowly back to a state of normal action, the mind seized again and again upon the bitter question of his identity. It had obtruded into clicking leagues on steel rails, into miles afoot by fruit hung lanes, on white Pacific shell roads under cedar branches, on busy highways. It had stalked into days of labor in hop fields, work with hand and foot that brought dreamless sleep and generous wage; into nights of less savory experience in city purlieus, where a self forgotten man gamed and drank recklessly, audaciously, forbiddingly. Who was he? From what equation of life had he been eliminated? Had he loved anything or anybody? Had he a friend, any friend, in the world?

The man of no memories gave no heed to the men on the street, who looked at him askance. He sauntered along unconsciously, his hands thrust deep in his pockets. With a casual glance at the hotel across the way he entered a saloon, where a score of patrons were standing at the bar or shaking dice noisily at the tables ranged against the wall. The bartender nodded to his greeting, the slightest possible nod. The dog which had followed him into the place leaped up against him, its fore paws on his knee.

"Brandy, if you please," said the new arrival, and poured indolently from the bottle set before him.

The conversation in the room had chilled. To its occupants the man who had entered was no stranger. He was Hugh Stires, returned unwelcome to a place from which he had lately vanished. Moreover, what they felt for him was not alone the crude hatred which the honest toiler feels for the trickster who gains a living by devious knaveries. There was an uglier suspicion afloat of Hugh Stires! A blue shirted miner called gruffly for his score, threw down the silver and went out, slamming the swing door.

The newcomer regarded none of them. He poured his glass slowly full, sipped from it and, holding it in his hand, turned and glanced deliberately about the place. He looked at everybody in the room, suddenly sensible of the hostile atmosphere, with what seemed a careless amusement. Then he raised his glass.

"Will you join me, gentlemen?" he said.

There was but one response. A soiled, shambling figure, blear, white haired and hesitating, with a battered violin under its arm, slouched from a corner and grasped eagerly for the bottle the bartender contemptuously pushed toward him. No one else moved.

The new arrival looked smilingly at the soiled figure beside him, a fragment of flotsam tossed on the tide of failure. "I erred in my general salutation," he said. "Gentility is, after all, less a habit than an instinct." He lifted his glass—to the castaway. "I drink to the health of the only other gentleman present," he said, and tossed the drink off.

He looked smilingly at the soiled figure beside him.

A snort and a truculent shuffle came from the standing men. Their faces were dark. Tess Felder, the lawyer, entered the saloon just in time to see "Big" Devlin, the owner of the corner dance hall, rise from a table, rolling up flannel sleeves along tattooed arms. He saw him stride forward and, with a well directed shove, send the shambling inebriate reeling across the floor.

"Two curs at the bar are enough at a time!" quoth Devlin.

Then the lawyer saw an extraordinary thing. The emptied glass rang sharply on the bar, the arm that held it straightened, the lithe form behind it seemed to expand, and the big bulk of Devlin went backward through the doorway and collapsed in a sprawling heap on the pavement.

"For my part," said an even, infuriate voice from the threshold, "I prefer but one."

The face the roomful saw now as they pushed to the outer air and which turned on the flocking crowd bore anything but the slinking look they had been used to see on the face of Hugh Stires. The smile that meant danger played over it. There were both calculation and savagery in it. It was the look of the man to whom all risks are alike, to whom nothing counts. In the instant confusion every one there recognized the element of hardihood dumfounded. Here was one who, as Barney McGinn, the freighter, said afterward, "hadn't the sand of a sick coyote," bearding a bully and the most formidable antagonist the town afforded

The prostrate man was on his feet in an instant, wiping the blood from a cleft lip, and peeled off his vest with a vile epithet.

"That is incidentally a venturesome word to select from your vocabulary,"

Staring in a kind of strained and horrified expectancy.

said the even voice, a sort of detonation in it. "You will feel like apologizing presently."

Devlin came on with a bull-like rush. The lawyer's eye, shrewdly gaging the situation, gave the slighter man short shrift, and for several intense seconds every breath stopped. Those seconds called up from some mysterious covert all the skill and strength of the old hard hitting Satan Sanderson, all the science of parry and feint learned in those bluff college bouts with the gloves with Gentleman Jim.

It was a short, sharp contest. Not a blow broke the guard of the man whose back was to the doorway. On the other hand, Devlin's face was puffed and bleeding. When for a breath he drew back, gulping, a sudden glint of doubt and fear had slipped beneath the blood and sweat.

The end came quickly. Harry stepped to meet him, there was a series of swift passes—then one, two lightning-like blows, and Devlin went down white and stunned in the dust of the roadway.

So high was the tension and so instantaneous the close that for a moment the crowd was noiseless, the spell still upon them. In that moment Tom Felder came hastily forward, for, though sharing the general dislike, admiration was strong in him, and, knowing the temper of the bystanders, he expected trouble.

The man who had administered Devlin's punishment, however, did not see his approach. He was looking somewhere above their heads—at the upper balcony of the hotel opposite—staring in a kind of strained and horrified expectancy at a girl who leaned forward, her hands clinching the balustrade, her eyes fixed on his face. There was something in that face, in that intense look, that seemed to cleave the gray veil that swathed Harry Sanderson's past.

Only an instant the gaze hung between them. It served as a distraction, for other eyes had raced to the balcony.

The clamoring voices were suddenly hushed, for there was not wanting in the crowd that instinctive regard for the proprieties which belongs to communities where gentlewomen are few. In that instant Felder put his hand on the arm of the staring man and drew him to the door of the hotel.

"Inside, quickly!" he said under his breath, for a rumble from the crowd told him the girl had left the balcony above. He pushed the other through the doorway and turned for a second on the threshold.

"Whatever private feelings you may have," he said in a tone that all heard, "don't disgrace the town. Fair play, no matter who he is! McGinn, I should think you, at least, were big enough to settle your grudges without the help of a crowd."

Chapter 13

THE man whose part the lawyer had taken had yielded to his touch almost dazedly as the girl disappeared.

"That was a close squeak," said Felder to him. "Do you realize that? In five minutes more you'd have been handled a sight worse than you handled your man, let me tell you!"

The man of no memories smiled, the same smile that had infuriated the barroom—and yet somehow it was more difficult to smile now.

"Is it possible," he asked, "that through an unlucky error I have trounced the local archbishop?"

Felder looked at him narrowly. Beneath the sarcasm he distinguished unfamiliarity, aloofness, a genuine astonishment. The appearance in the person of Hugh Stires of the qualities of nerve and courage had surprised him out of his usual indifference. The "tinhorn gambler" had fought like a man. His present sang froid was as singular. Had he been an absolute stranger in the town he might have acted and spoken no differently. Felder's smooth shaven, earnest face was puzzled as he answered curtly:

"You've trounced a man who will remember it a long time."

"Ah!" said the man addressed easily. "He has a better memory than I, then!"

He gazed over the heads of the silent roomful to the simmering street, where Devlin, with the aid of a supporting arm, was staggering into the saloon in which his humiliation had begun. "They seem agitated," he said. The feeling of embarrassment was passing; the old daring was lifting. His glance, scanning the room, set itself on a shabby, clear figure in the background apologetic, yet keenly and pridefully interested. A whimsical light was in his eye. He crossed to him and, reaching out his hand, drew the violin from under his arm.

"Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast," he said, and, opening the door, he tucked the instrument under his chin and began to play.

What absolute contempt of danger, what insane prompting possessed, can scarcely be imagined. Felder looked for a quick end to the folly, but he saw the men in the street even as they moved forward waver and pause. With almost the first note it had come to them that they were hearing music such as the squeaking fiddles of the dance halls never knew. Those on the opposite pavement crossed over, and men far down the street stood still to listen.

More than the adept's cunning that had at first tingled in his fingers at sight of the instrument was in Harry Sanderson's playing. The violin had been the single passion which the old Satan Sanderson had carried with him into the new career. The impulse to "soothe the savage breast" had been a flare of the old character he had been relieving, but the music, begun in bravado, swept him almost instantly beyond its bounds. He had never been an indifferent performer. Now he was playing as he had never played in his life, with inspiration and abandon. There was a diabolism in it. He had forgotten the fight, the crowd, his own mocking mood. He had forgotten where he was. He was afloat on a fluctuant tide of melody that was carrying him back, back, into the far-away past toward all that he had loved and lost.

"It's 'Home, Sweet Home,'" said Barney McGinn. "No, it's 'Annie Laurie.' No, it's—hanged if I know what it is!"

The player himself could not have told him. He was in a kind of tranced dream. The self made music was calling with a sweet insistence to buried things that were stirring from a long sleep. It sent a gulp into the throat of more than one standing moveless in the street. It brought a suspicious moisture to Tom Felder's eyes. It drew Mrs. Halloran from the kitchen, wiping her hands on her apron. It called to a girl who crouched in the upper hall with her miserable face buried in her hands, drew her down the stair to the office door, her eyes wide with a breathless wonder, her face glistening with feeling.

From the balcony Jessica had witnessed the fight without understanding its meaning. A fascination she could not gainsay had glued her eyes to the struggle. It was he—it was the face she knew, seen but once for a single moment in the hour of her marriage, but stamped indelibly upon her memory. It was no longer smooth shaven, and it was changed, evilly changed. But it was the same. There was recklessness and mockery in it and yet strength, not weakness. Shunned and despised as he might be—the chief actor, as it seemed to her, in a cheap and desperate barroom affray, a coarse affair of fisticuffs in the public street—yet there was something intrepid in his bearing, something splendid in his victory.

To Jessica, standing with hands close clasped, the music seemed the agony of remorse for a past fall, the cry of a forlorn soul, knowing itself cast out, appealing to its good angel for pity and pardon. Hugh had often played to her, lightly, carelessly, as he did all things. She had deemed it only one of his many clever, amateurish accomplishments. Now it struck her with a pang that there had been in him a deeper side that she had not guessed. Since her wedding day she had thought of her marriage as a loathed bond, from which his false pretense had absolved her. Now a doubt of her own position assailed her. Had loneliness and outlawry driven him into

MINES AND MINING

Diamond fields have been discovered in German South west Africa.

The Crescent mine, close to town, is shipping 20 tons of ore to Trail this week.

A coal seam of four feet has been struck on the farm of Thos. Murphy, near St. John, N. B.

A strike of quartz, 50 feet wide, and carrying values as high as $500 in gold, is reported in the Cariboo.

Today is the first pay day at the Mother Lode mine and the Greenwood smelter, since the resumption of work.

German New Guinea is a new source of gold but the German mining laws make prospecting almost prohibitive.

Work is progressing on the Carney Copper mine at Mullen, Idaho. This property is owned largely by Phoenix shareholders.

Mr. Hedley, of New York, has bonded the Evening Star group, six miles southwest of Kamloops. Work will commence October 1st.

The B. C. Copper Co., have bonded a number of mineral claims at Kamloops from Messrs. W. H. Fowler and E. B. Drummond.

A twenty ounce gold nugget was recently mined by J. C. Catlip of Granite Creek, near Barkerville. The nugget was valued at $359.

Tacoma capitalists are installing a plant to work the sea sands on the shores of Behring sea, where gold in large quantities is known to exist.

Once more the Tip Top and Bay mineral claims have changed hands. These claims are almost within Greenwood city limits and are known to be most valuable They have been bonded to an American syndicate.

Unless all signs fail, there will be one of the greatest oil booms before long in the Canadian northwest that the world has ever seen. Such is the opinion of oil experts all over the North American continent, and the chief interest at present centers in Northern Alberta.

Mr. Leicester A. Bonner has bought the whole of the Cariboo Consolidated, Ltd.'s, property, says an Ashcroft dispatch of August 30. The purchase comprises the whole of the leases and real estate on Lightning creek, together with shaft house and machinery, camp buildings, dwellings, etc. The Ah Quay hydraulic claim at Stanley and other small claims are also included in the sale. Mr. Bonner purposes to take the machinery over to the Pleasant Valley mine, but previously will unwater the La Fontaine mine and take up the track, iron and air pipe. Later on this mine may be worked on a different principle by the new owner.

C. P. R. LAND

As a result of the recent land advertising campaign of the C. P. R., not confined to B. C. only, but Manitoba, Ontario, and the whole of the United States, from July 1st to the present day, in the neighborhood of 5,000 inquiries were received and answered relative to the C. P. R. lands in B. C. As part of this campaign C. E. Lawrence, of Kamloops, a writer well known locally on agricultural subjects, has been appointed to visit points in southeast B. C. to interview ranchers, etc. When the C. P. R. have thus disposed of their B. C. holdings the lower country will be fairly well settled up.

DEATH IN A SCRATCH.

Simple Injuries With Serious Results.

Morris Quatzam, an eleven years old Windsor boy, has just died as the result of a scratch on his wrist. Poison entered the wound, which was caused by falling off his bicycle, and despite the physicians, the boy died. Such incidents as these—by no means in frequent—ought to make people realise the danger that may lie even in the smallest flesh wound

Take a simple illustration. When a a dirty knife, a rusty needle, a splinter of dirty wood, a barb wire fence, or a thorn, scratches the hand, the latter is inoculated with germs, of which the air about us is full. Directly these germs are introduced through the breach in the skin, a battle royal ensues between them and certain organisims in our blood.

When the invading germs are too strong for Nature's defences, in a few hours the finger will become hot and throbbing. A little later the wound may exhibit a whitish appearance in the middle of the swelling, and we have what is known as a festering or poisoned wound.

The way to avoid such serious results is to cleanse the wound and apply Zam-Buk. Zam-Buk is powerful yet painless germ killer, and when applied to the broken skin is absorbed into the tissue, instantly destroying the germs that spread disease and inflammation.

The flesh is thus soothed and purified the wound made perfectly healthy, and all poison and cause of festering removed. Having done this, Zam-Buk then proceeds to heal the wound or sore with new healthy tissue, in a quick, painless, and perfect manner.

Zam-Buk must no be confused with ordinary ointments. Zam-Buk is a unique preparation, possessing antiseptic, soothing, and healing qualities that are not to be found together in any other preparation. It is not only a unique healing balm, but it is also a skin food. For all skin diseases and injuries—cuts, bruises, burns, eczema, chafing, ulcers, ringworm, etc., it is without equal. It is also used widely for piles, for which it may be regarded as a specific. All druggist and stores sell at fifty cents a box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price.

We can supply your wants in House furnishings. A. L. White, Phone 16.
