Creston Valley Agricultural Association Organized---Officers Elected

A meeting of the Creston Agricultural Association was held on Saturday evening the 7th. inst. Mr. Walter V. Jackson being in the chair The committee appointed to look into the matter of obtaining a suitable sight for the Association presented their report. The committee had held a joint meeting with the Directors of the Creston Park and Recreation Co. who offered to sell all their real estate holdings, consisting of over 8 acres, for the price the Company had paid for the land and expended in improvements on the same amounting in all to $3575 00 to the Association, provided it is incorporatep under part 2 of the Agricultural Associations Act, and to accept fully paid up shares in the Association as payment. The committee regarded this as a most generous offer as the land had been purchased three years ago, and the Park Company did not ask anything for the increased value of the land since the date of the purchase or for any interest on the money that had been invested, and the committee strongly recommended that steps should at once be taken to acquire the park property for the Association. Motions were then carried that the report of the committee be accepted, and that proceedings be taken to organize the Association under Part 2 of the Agricultural Association Act. The following were elected provisional directors of the Association:—Messrs. E. Mallandaine, R. M. Reid, C. O. Rodgers, Walter V. Jackson, J. B. Moran, S. G. Bradley. F. Callander, and G. A. M. Young.

Mr. Walter V. Jackson presented his report as delegate to the Fairs Convention, and gave some very interesting information he had obtained regarding community breeding of pure-bred stock, and the advantages to be derived therefrom. He also reported his conference with the Minister of Agriculture respecting grants in aid of Fairs. The Creston Fair was set for Thursday the 15th. October, 1914. On motion a hearty vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Jackson.

At a meeting of the directors of the Creston Valley Agricultural Association held on Monday evening the 9th. inst. the following officers were elected:—Hon.-President, E. Mallandaine; President, C. O. Rodgers; Vice-President, W. V. Jackson; Secretary-Treasurer, C. A. M. Young; among other business transacted the Secretary was instructed to take the proper legal proceedings to have The Creston Valley Agricultural Association Act.

Parker Williams on Legalized Murder

Victoria, Jan. 22—"Last evening, Mr. Speaker, I had the honor of seconding the resolution of sympathy to the family of the late Lord Strathcona a man to whom the highest gift in the power of the people of the empire had been given. Today I wish to speak of another who is dead—this time a mere boy, Joseph Mairs, who died two days ago in the lowest ignominy to which a people may reduce anyone. I refer to the youth who died two days ago in the jail at Burnaby, a son of one of the Ladysmith miners. He hall been arrested in connection with the disturbances of last August. They were occurrences of no size whatever, to anyone who knew of conditions, in spite of which fact large numbers of men are serving long terms of imprisonment. And this mere boy was one of these."

Speaking with a loud voice choked with feeling, Mr. Parker Williams opened the debate in reply to the speech from the throne today, having outmanoeuvered Sir Richard McBride last evening by moving the adjournment, and thus having the first right to speak today. He spoke for two hours and ten minutes, never pausing for notes, and while he was discussing the case of Mairs, a dead silence prevailed in the assembly.

"I have a personal interest in the Joseph Mairs case," he continued, because my son, who is about the same age, was also implicated. I understand that this mere boy Mairs was told that is he pleaded guilty to rioting he would be released, In my boy's case he refused to do anything like that and he was acquitted. This boy Mairs did plead guilty. He had made no reply at the preliminary hearing and pleaded guilty at his trial. Whether any promises were made to him I cannot say, but he was sentenced to twelve months in jail.

"I make no apologies for discussing here in the house Judge Howay, of New Westminster, who sat on the case in Nanaimo. I have some conception of what the duties of a judge in this province are, or rather, until now I believed and thought I did have some conception, but it seems these judges assume functions which they have not the right to assume. Judge Howay, instead of dealing with these men, made the mistake of going to Ladysmith before he sentenced them and after hearing the evidence.

"He rubbed noses there, not with

PRESENTATION TO BANK MANAGER

One of the most enjoyable social events of the season passed off in Speer's hall on Tuesday evening when the board of trade and the citizens of Creston tendered a farewell reception to Mr. and Mrs. Fowler, who leave to take up their residence in Fernie. On Thursday afternoon the news was circulated that Mr. Fowler had been promoted to the managership of the Fernie Bank and would leave at once. The board of trade held a meeting on Friday evening and appointed a committee composed of Messrs. Mallandaine, Bevan and W. Jackson to receive subscriptions for the purchase of a suitable present and to arrange for a public meeting at which to make the presentation. The proceedings opened with a short program of vocal and instrumental music and then President Reid presented an address from the board of trade and in a few brief words also made the presentation of a silver tea service from the citizens of Creston.

The following will be the inscription that will be engraved on the tray, "Presented to Percy B. Fowler, Esq. by the citizens of Creston, B. C. on the occasion of his leaving the community and as an appreciation of his many efforts to aid in the development of the District. February 10, 1914."

Mrs. Fowler was presented with a silver mesh hand bag. Mr. and Mrs. Fowler have lived for over seven years in this district and have seen and been a part of the developing factors that have gone to make the district what it is today.

In a few words Mr. Fowler thanked the donors for this mark of their respect and stated that they were both sincerely sorry to leave Creston, but they would ever carry in their hearts pleasant memories of their stay here. His remarks were received with great applause and the program was resumed.

At about ten o'clock refreshments were served and afterwards dancing was enjoyed until midnight.

ANTON STROME TAKES OWN LIFE

At about 9:30 this morning word was sent to Dr. Henderson that their was a man sick in Winlaw's camp. The Doctor, who had several other appointments sent out some medicine and said he would be out very shortly. He was about to leave for his next appointment when a messenger came running saying that he was wanted at once at the camp. In a very few minutes he was on the way arriving there to find that the sick man had taken his own life by cutting his throat.

The incision was so deep and the man had lost so much blood that the Doctor could do nothing for him and he died in a few minutes.

J. B. Winlaw interviewed stated that the man had recently engaged in a spree which lasted several days and when he was not at work this morning but was sick he attributed it to the usual morning-after effect but said to have the Doctor called. In a few minutes however he was called to the office and was then told that Anton Strome had cut his throat. He at once sent a hurried message to the Doctor and the latter arrived on the scene in a very short time.

There was no indication of mental unbalance as far as the men about the camp know, and the event came as a complete surprise to everybody.

Anton Strome had lived in and about Creston for the past year or two working mostly in the woods.

Efforts are being made to communicate with his relatives and an inquest will be held tomorrow afternoon at the Undertaking Parlors of Geo. Hendren Creston.

J. B. Winlaw has the name of giving his men the very best treatment and medical attention.

The ladies of the Methodist Church gave their annual bean supper on Tuesday last in Mercantile hall.

The annual meeting of the Conservative Association will be held in Mercantile Hall on Saturday evening. Important matter will come before the meeting including the election of officers for the ensuing year.

We have been requested to publish the article on Parker William's address on Legalized Murder. We do so on understanding that we in no sense are responsible for it or for any of the statements there in contained. As a matter of fact its appearance here at this time precludes us from making any comments on the sad affair it deals with and we shall have to take the matter up at some future time, if at all. The article in question is from the Western Clarion, a Socialist organ, but it gives credit for the article to the Sun of Jan. 23, 1914.

The social gathering which occurred last Tuesday evening when the citizens of Creston District made a presentation and said farewell to Mr. and Mrs. Fowler ought to point a moral to our young men who are soon to assume the sterner responsibilities of life, namely to so conduct themselves that when occasion arises that they may be promoted or transferred they may take with them the respect and appreciation of the people whom they have served and they may leave behind them friends and admirers. To do this one requires honor, stability, business system a good deal of common sense and above all the ability to appreciate the other man's situation and the viewpoint from which he regards the proposition.

A sense of duty is necessary, and the proper appreciation of the sacrifices that some times are necessary in order to fulfill one's duty.

The tokens of esteem which were presented on Tuesday evening represented not any one class or sect but the whole community and the affair was a splendid tribute to the value our community places on the virtues, honor and faithfulness.

Making the Little Farm Pay

By C. C. BOWSFIELD

RECALLING the costly experience of last season, farmers and gardeners are preparing to make war on the cutworm and other pests of the kind. Caterpillars, in their various forms, were unusually destructive last summer in all parts of the country. They seemed to be getting the start of land owners in corn and cotton fields as well as in orchards and gardens.

The diculty in fighting the cutworm lies chiefly in the fact that it operates extensively in fields and hides in the ground. Its operations cover such a wide territory and its migrations are so rapid that ordinary spraying processes are not effective. This caterpillar is identical with the army worm and probably the same as the cotton worm. In habits and formation it is identical, though rather larger in southern localities than in the northern lake region.

When a farmer knows in the spring that there are cutworms or army worms in his fields he should adopt vigorous measures. The extra work involved is cheaper than replanting his crops. A second plowing of the land is helpful, the last to be as near seeding time as possible. All methods of stirring the soil as summer warmth comes on are beneficial. The plow tears up the nesting places, throws the insects out where birds may get at them and creates a general disturbance.

This extra tillage is good for the land and will go a long way toward exterminating the pests. In connection with the work of plowing and cultivating it will pay to make a preparation made on the basis of one pound of Paris green, thirty pounds of bran and two quarts of molasses. Moisten the bran with water before mixing. This may be manufactured in larger lots if needed. It is to be spread thinly about the fields. If placed around a garden, orchard or field it may serve to exclude all caterpillars. Kerosene emulsion is also recommended.

Where any crop has been damaged by the caterpillar pest, it is a good policy to sow alsike. This is a profitable product, almost equal to cotton or corn, when cost is considered, and it is of great value to the soil.

Another good plan is to sow part of the affected ground to rape and allow a drove of hogs to forage on it. A rotation of crops, with an occasional application of the preparation described, will rid a farm of cutworms and similar creeping pests.

The cankerworm is best known as a pest of apple and cherry orchards, but it is even more destructive to elms. Modern methods require frequent spraying with arsenical poisons as a protection of fruit against the codling moth, and this has the incidental effect of killing canker worm.

The San Jose scale can be destroyed by the use of one of the lime and sulphur mixtures, which may be purchased ready made or brought into solution by boiling the raw materials together as follows: Fifteen pounds of lime, fifteen pounds of sulphur and fifty gallons of soft water. For fifty gallons of the spray heat twelve gallons of water in a four gallon iron kettle, mixing in a separate vessel fifteen pounds of sulphur with enough water to form a thin paste. Add this sulphur to the water in the kettle and bring the mixture to a temperature just below boiling. Then add fifteen pounds of best lump lime, keeping cold water at hand to use as the mixture threatens to boil over. After the lime is fully slaked, boil for forty minutes with almost constant stirring. Then strain into a fifty gallon tank and fill with warm water.

Codling moth, attacking apple and other fruit trees, should be treated with the bordeaux mixture, which can be purchased ready for use or made up as follows: Copper sulphate (blue vitriol), four pounds; quicklime (not air slaked), four pounds; water to make fifty gallons. Dissolve the copper sulphate by putting it in a bag of cheesecloth and hanging this in a vessel holding at least four gallons, so that it is just covered by water. Use an earthen or wooden vessel. Slake the lime by addition of a small quantity of water and when slaked cover freely with water and stir. Strain the milk of lime thus made into the copper sulphate. Pour more water over the remaining lime and stir the strain into the other until all lime but stone lumps is taken out.

The bordeaux mixture is effective in treating asparagus rust, cabbage worm, mildew, rot and parasites on grapes, early blight, scab and Colorado beetle on potatoes, leaf blight and insects on muskmelons and watermelons, worms on tomatoes, raspberries and blackberries, slugs and leaf blight on roses, leaf spot on strawberries, rot on fruit trees and nearly all insect pests and fungous diseases.

SHED FOR MILK CANS.

Of Great Benefit in Shipping and Storage.

It is a great convenience to have milk cans on a level with the wagon which is to draw them to the factory, and it is a good plan also to have the platform covered by a shed. This is especially useful in rough weather and during the winter.

The illustration shows a shed which has proved popular in many dairy sections of Canada. The door is not essential, but is very useful in keeping out flies during the summer. It is built of light material covered with wire cloth and hung on spring hinges so as to close itself.

A building of this kind complete will cost only a trifle compared with its value and, if painted, will last for many years.—Iowa Homestead.

Heavy Horses Pay Well.

The breeding of heavy draft horses is always profitable, and it greatly adds to the farmer's income. Small, scrubby horses are not wanted, and the mares for breeding should be large and well built. The demand is for a draft horse of not less than 1,500 pounds. Size in a draft horse is necessary.—Rural Farmer.

ORCHARD AND GARDEN.

Orders for fruit trees should be placed early to insure choice stock and prompt shipment. Nurserymen always appreciate early orders and give the best of service.

Remember that plants from which seeds are to be selected must be thrifty, free from diseases and insects and the seed well matured. Make no mistake in these matters.

Now is a good time to destroy peach borers. Look for them on the trunks of the trees, at the surface of the soil or just below the surface. Wax is a good indication of these insects. Cut them out with a knife.

Do not forget that good seed is a very important part of successful gardening. If you have any that are good save them; if not, buy from reliable seedmen and breed up the varieties. You cannot afford to plant poor seed.

RAISING FALL LITTERS.

With Right Care They May Be Made Very Profitable.

A subscriber of the Iowa Homestead whose attitude is favorable to the practice of raising fall pigs writes as follows:

I find that I make as much money from my fall litters as I do from the spring litters, and now is the time of year to be thinking of the fall litters. Sows must be bred early enough in the summer so that they will not go into winter before the pigs are farrowed. Winter pigs should have the same care as fall pigs, of course, but they do not have the advantage of the fall pasture or forage as do earlier pigs. Owing to this I do not think winter pigs are as profitable to raise as are spring, summer or fall pigs.

The greatest disadvantage I have ever found to fall or winter pigs is the quarters. Pigs of any age do not do well if compelled to sleep in a straw pile, out of doors or in a muddy shed or damp bed. These conditions are especially detrimental to young pigs. Hogs, and especially young ones, do not do so well when they sleep on the ground as when they sleep on a dry floor, or at least this has always been my experience.

I prefer my floors not more than six inches from the ground, as when they are higher they may be too cold when the weather is extremely cold.

Of course floors cost money, but they soon make it back in extra gains in the pigs' weight. The quarters of small hogs should be separate from those of the big hogs, for pigs never do so well when permitted to sleep in a heap with large ones.

To be sure, there is usually some bad weather in the fall, but we usually have it as bad and worse in the early spring. In the fall, between showers, the pig may be filling his tank with such green feeds as he likes if they have been provided. If they have not been provided he runs out in a dry lot, squeals, does not grow, and then usually the cry is, "Fall pigs don't pay."

While the pigs are on the peas and rape plow up their winter lots and sow rye.

This will be a good, rich soil for rye, and it will grow rapidly and very rank. It will not take a very large lot or a few small ones to afford plenty of pasture all winter and until rape is again ready in the spring. This will keep the pigs growing, if they have good quarters.

FOR POULTRY SHIPPERS.

Don't scald your poultry.
Don't ship unless properly cooled.
Don't kill fowls right out of the field or barn yard.
Don't fail to keep them penned up at least three days.
Don't ship to market without ice (except in extreme cold weather).
Don't ship poor stock.
Don't expect more than market price.
Don't feed the night before killing.
Don't fail to feed cornmeal while fattening.
Don't fail to write your dealer for shipping tags.
Don't fail to deal with responsible firms.—Farm Journal.

Market the Waste.

Many items on the farm, such as cull fruit, small potatoes, wastes from the kitchen and other things which will not sell, find a good market through the hog.—Farm and Fireside.

THE HUM OF THE HIVE.

See that all colonies have queens before it is too late.

If the bees are to be wintered outdoors use chaff or double walled hives.

A hive of bees will supply all the honey the family needs and, besides, pollenize the fruit. Nothing pays better in a small way.

A queen bee lives from two to five years, workers from forty-five days to six months, and drones seldom more than five weeks.

There seems to be abundant evidence that the Italian bees do work more upon red clover than the black bees, and therefore that they do have longer tongues.

If bees are to be wintered in cellar put several pieces of carpet or similar material over brood frames. No cover is needed. Light should be excluded from cellar. Damp cellars can be kept dry by aid of lime. An oil lamp will provide heat if needed and a window or door opened in the spring will supply ventilation to reduce a high temperature.

INTERNAL POULTRY PARASITES.

Poultry sure have their troubles, for they not only have lice, mites, fleas and ticks crawling, biting and scratching their exterior, but their interior is oft the habitat of round worms, flukes, tapeworms and thorn headed worms. These are found encysted, crawling, hanging, floating or in wiggling masses in the esophagus, crop, proventriculus (stomach), gizzard, intestines, caeca and mesentery.

The shortest worm is the Echinocotyle rosseteri (one-sixteenth of an inch long, one one-hundredth of an inch wide), and the longest is the Davainea crassula (eight to sixteen inches long and one-sixth of an inch wide).

Five hundred and fifty-two of these worms were found in a single pigeon, and 12,000 eggs were found in the excrement voided by a pigeon in a single day.

Flukes seem to do no harm, but the others cause digestive disturbances, bore channels in the tissue, rob the fowl of the nutritive juices of food, cause fits, become so numerous as to block the organs and gradually worry the fowl to death or their burrowing so weakens tissue and organs as to bring sudden death.

The Trichosoma contortum, a round worm, is often so numerous in the aesophagus of Pekin ducks that food cannot pass, and they choke to death.

Thorn headed worms seem restricted to ducks and geese, while turkeys and pigeons are most afflicted with tapeworm. These pests are mostly found where fowls drink from filthy pools and eat on ground poisoned with filth, and scratch in droppings and manure piles.

The fowls lose appetite, become emaciated, dull, quit foraging, have fits, stiff joints, diarrhea, and worms and blood appears in droppings.

As a remedy remove all droppings and disinfect thoroughly. Quarantine victims. Feed mash fragrant with garlic or turpentine. One to three teaspoonfuls turpentine, according to age of fowl, and equal parts olive oil passed to crop through tube is fine and does quick work.

There is gold in manure, but you can't collect it while it lies in the barn lot.

The Forum

the whole population to get a fair conception, but with one section of the population and a small one at that, who were villanously and poisonously opposed to the miners. And after talking to this partisan section he returned and sentenced these mere boys and men to from three months to two years and was only restrained in his severity by the limits of the criminal code. I am sorry the attorney-general is not here to hear what I say, but nevertheless I must say it.

"I am reliably informed that if the diet and other conditions under which these men are maintained in jail are looking into, they will show us that the vitality of these men is being lowered. I have to tell you something, gentlemen. I hope you believe me. I don't fool in dealing with the miners of my constituency, nor do they fool in dealing with me. I am not fooling when I tell you I have received from these men in jail this message coming from their agony: 'For God's sake try and make some arrangements to get us sufficient to eat, even of the stuff we do get."

"Not only are these men ill fed, but in addition they are doped. They are vitally weakened and an easy prey to disease and this is what has happened to this mere boy from Ledysmith, Joseph Mairs, who is dead in a common jail.

And how did he die? My information, and it is reliable I believe implicity, is that he was ill a week before he died. His parents were not even notified of his condition. When the boy died there was no loving hand upon his brow, no hand or voice of parents or even friends in his last hour," and here the voice of Mr. Williams choked completely, "but the last voice he as he passed away was that of the cold brutal warden who was his guardian.

"A child once asked a famous sculptor who stood before a block of marble, what he would hew out of it. The sculptor replied, 'There is in that marble, man, devil, or angel, I must get what I can. There is all the goodness or all the evil that can be."

"So it was," said Mr. Williams to a solemnly hushed assembly, "with that boy. In that boy which the government so crushed were all the possibilities of good which are in any man. That is what the government destroyed when it destroyed that boy.

"I asked for the stunned mother and father no sympathy from this house. They will carry their agony to their grave. I shall not say much more, because words here but mock their troubles. But this I shall say: that the root of all this sorrow and this suffering will be found in the incompetency, inactivity, callous and domineering methods of the government in handling this situation from the beginning. I can say no more. Mairs' parents must bear their cross in silence to their graves. To appeal to you is to mock their grief."

It was the most dramatic indictment heard in the house for years.

Attorney-General Bowser had just taken his seat and Mr. Williams addressed him: "One boy is gone. The Another is going, and I shall be pleased to supply the attorney-general his name. Mairs is dead. This other is not. Something can be done for him. This young of 25 is one of the finest young men who ever came here from Scotland, that Scotland has ever given to British Columbia. If the attorney-general or the premier will take action I can supply evidence from even conservatives that he is incapable of the offense for which he suffers. Whed I saw him before Judge Howay in Nanaimo in August he was a wreck; when I saw him in December at New Westminster he was a wreck. Surely something can be done

"I quite understand that this subject is one for Ottawa. But I know enough of the workings of this and the Dominion Conservatives to know they are as closely linked in their actions as thieves at a country fair. Surely something can be done before he too goes the way of Joseph Mairs."

It was the most dramatic appeal so far made for justice, impartial and reasonable, for the miners of Vancouver Island. Mr. Williams chocked as he concluded. Recognizing the futility of a human appeal for the miners, he turned to other matters.—"The Sun," Jan. 23, 1914.
