City Council Concludes to Hold Telephone Company to Agreement

A special meeting of tne City Council was held last Monday evening, Mayor Ruttan in the chair and a full board present.

The first matter to be disposed of was the amending Building By-law, which has been up for consideration at recent meetings, the amending clauses of which have appeared in a previous issue of the Press. The By-law passed its third reading and was duly signed and sealed.

Tenders for the post of assessor, laid over from last meeting, from N. H. Kenny, for $125, and from Jas. Johnston, for $98, were taken up. It was moveh by Ald. Grant, seconded by Ald. Worthington, that the tender of Mr. Johnston be accepted Ayes, Grant, Worthington and Hartry; noes, Blanchard and Teece.

A financial statement from the treasurer for the months Jan. 1st to Sept. 30th, was submitted for the guidance of the Council in future expenditures for the balance of the year. The report showed a small margin to the good, but indicated that there would have to be close calculating all along the line. The total receipts for the nine months were shown to be $65,420. The estimated balance of receipts for the year are placed at $8,240, against which are expenditures footing up $7,985.

The following letter was read from Messrs. Billings & Cochrane:

Mr. Graham Rosoman, C.M.C., Enderby, B.C.

Dear Sir: We are in receipt of your letter of the 6th inst. with agreement made between the Teleuhone Company anh your city. The same question has come up in respect of the city of Vernon,and the Municipality of Coldstream. As a matter of fact, the agreement you have is with the present telephane company, and in this respect you are in a much better position than the city of Vernoo, who made its agreement with the Okanagan Telephone Company, Ltd, which was absorbed by the present company. The present compan is under the impression that the agreement you reler to was made with the Okgnagan Telephone Company, Ltd., and not with the present company, and we think that if its attention is called to this it will certainly not attempt to force on your municipality the changes in the rates that it suggests.

The difficulty that the city of Vernon is having with the present company is by reason of the fact that the agreement entered into by it was with the old company and not the new one; hence this city's troubles cannot be so easily settled as yours.

We would strongly recommend that the city of Enderby, in the case of its own phones or those of some individual subscriber, make a test case in case of a breach of agreement. The writer considers your city's position rather exceptional towards this telephone company, and we think it should be brought to time as it is certainly getting too high-handed.

We return copy of the By-law and agreement which you forwarded to us.

Yours truly,

BILLINGS & COCHRAN.

It was explained by Ald. Worthington that he had instructed the City Clerk to write Messrs. Billings & Cochrane, and the above letter was the result.

Mayor Ruttan said he did not see why we should allow the telephone company to override the agreement. He thought the matter had been settled long ago that we were to hold the company to the terms of the agreement with the city. Personally he believed the people would stand back of them if they told the company either to comply with the terms of the agreement or get out.

Ald. Worthington did not think the city could go any farther than to order the city's phones out. He was afraid the agreement was not sound.

Mayor Ruttan: "What makes you think the agreement is not sound? I feel so sure about it myself that I am prepared to tell this Council that I, myself, will stand the cost of taking it into court if we find it necessary. Besides, here we have the opinion of a solicitor that the agreement is sound. What more do you want?"

Ald. Worthington then proceeded to explain. He said he did not want to say so much for the company for fear somebody might think he had some financial interest in so doing. He had, however, some idea of fairness. He said he was strolling down the street in Vernon on a recent visit, when Mr. Dobie, manager of the telephone company called him into a hotel and invited him to go up and have a quiet talk with Mr. Jones, president of the company. He found Mr. Jones to be a very nice man. He laid before Mr. Jones every point in connection with the telephone controversy here, and on every point Mr. Jones assured him that the telephone company was right. The Enderby business was not paying, Mr. Jones told him, and they simply had to reduce the hours of service and raise the rate."

Mayor Ruttan: "It seems to me the company has taken a poor way to increase their business here."

Ald. Worthington thought that may be. If he could just be sure that the agreement was binding he would then feel safe. But there were two clauses in the agreement that he had been informed by a solicitor were vital, and simply destroyed the whole contract.

For fully an hour the conversation lingered along this line of argument. Then Ald. Teece asked Ald. Worthington to point out the two sections in the agreement which he felt were weak. Ald. Worthington was scanning the agreement at the time, and in a few minutes read out Sec. 11, which reads:

"This agreement shall be binding and enure to the benefit of as well the parties hereto as their respective successors and assigns."

He was perfectly clear as to the city being bound but had his doubts about the company.

He was asked to read out the other vital section. After scanning every section of the agreement, he had to admit that he could not find any clause that said what he had thought was there.

Ald. Hartry said that so far as he was concerned, he had thought the telephone users were asking the city to test out in court their case. He did not before realize the importance of the agreement, and that the agreement was binding.

Finally Ald. Teece moved, seconded by Ald. Hartry that the Okanagan Telephone Company be notified that it must return to the hours and rate provided in the agreement, by the 10th of December, 1913, failing that the City will then enforce its option provided in Sec. 7 of the agreement, which reads:

"If the Company shall fail to operate and maintain its said local exchange when established, or the trunk line when constructed, at any one time for a period of one month, unless the failure to so operate and maintain shall be caused by conditions over which the Company has no control; or if it shall wilfully make default in substantially complying with the terms hereof, then the right and privileges hereby granted shall at the option of the Municipality forthwith cease and determine."

The motion carried.

A bill for $10, the cost of erecting a tent-room on the Cottage Hospital grounds for Miss Carlson, also one for her care at the rate of $10 per week was received from Mrs. Hatcher and ordered paid.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES

The anniversary services in the Presbyterian Church Sunday morning and evening were attended by large crowds, the church being packed to the doors at the evening service. In the morning, Rev. Mr. Dow occupied the pulpit, and in the evening, Rev. Mr. Henderson, of Armstrong, assisted by Rev. Mr. Brown, of the Methodist church. The selections by the choir at the evening service were of unusual sweetness.

The anniversary suppers given by the Presbyterian ladies, following each anniversary service, are always patronized to the limit, and this year the limit was pushed far higher than any previous record. The basement of the church was crowded from 6 until 8 o'clock, and a very happy gathering it was. The tables, with a seating capacity of 100, or thereabouts, were four times filled.

The concert following the supper was heard by a crowd to the doors, and every number was heartily enchored. Those taking part were: Miss Stevens, Mrs. Neil and Mrs. Turner, Miss Murray, Atmstrong, Mrs. Rutherford, Mr. Calder, Vernon, Mr. Courtney Mrs. Lawes, and Mr. Rosoman.

The visiting pastors of the several churches also unbended on the occasion, and afforded many a merry laugh at their clever feints at one another. To the Enderby Orchestra is due much of the credit for the unusual success of this affair. Their selections pleased everybody.

The entertainment given in the Opera House last night by local talent trained for the occasion by Mr. McDonald, under the auspices of the Hospital Auxiliary, was somewhat handicapped owing to so many other things going on, and the attendance was much smaller than it otherwise would have been. The performance will be repeated this evening.

K. OF P. MUSICAL EVENING

The concert and social evening given on Monday evening by the local K. of P. lodge, assisted by the Misses Dillon, Mr. Calder and Mr. Hill, of Vernon, and Miss Stevens, Mrs. Rutherford and Mr. Courtney, of Enderby, proved to be a huge success. Two coaches of Pythians and their wives and friends came up from Vernon, and the local attendance was larger than usual, with the result that K. of P. Hall was packed to the doors. All the singers taking part in the concert were heartily appreciated and sang with a freedom of expression that was most refreshing. Miss Stevens, always clever and pleasing in her selections, was especially fine, and the violin solo by Msr. Rutherford, and that by Mr. Courtney each was received with loud applause. Refreshments followed the concert, and after the refreshments cards and dancing were indulged in.

PRESIDENT WILSON AND MEXICO

President Wilson's diplomacy in dealing with the Mexican situation is fast gathering to his support all the diplomats of Europe, and it is doubtful if he will experience any further difficulty in making himself understood in his attitude towards Huerta, the murderer now governing Mexico. That he has a difficult task before him is recognized by all, but the big powers seem to have implicit faith in his ability to bring order out of chaos in Mexico, if given a free hand to deal with the situation.

The Daily Chronicle, of London, voices the sentiment of England, and no doubt of the other European powers, when it says:

"The danger in the situation is that the dictator (Huerta) may try to play off England against the United States, at the same time arousing the suspicions of the people who are none too friendly to Americans, by false suggestions that the United States has designs on the country. A month after the assassination of Madero, England, with regrettable precipitancy, recognized Huerta as the de facto ruler of Mexico. Our precipitancy then should make us doubly cautious now. Nothing must be done by England to hamper or thwart America's policy. President Wilson has put his hand to a difficult task. We hope he will succeed in it without bloodshed."

ALBERTA'S LIBEL ACT

As the result of the work of the Alberta & Eastern B. C. Press Association, the Alberta legislature has just passed an amendment to the libel Act of that Province which gives the judge discretion as to costs in case a nominal verdict for damages is rendered after an apology has been tendered, and this provision was further amended so that all the plaintiff's legal costs up to the trial would accompany the nominal verdict in his favor.

While this is not considered so favorable as the clause that the executive of the Association had hoped to have passed, yet in view of all the circumstances it may not work out too badly. A publisher gets notice of intention to proceed in the libel action, which gives him an opportunity of settling the matter before it goes into court, and in case of "straw" plaintiffs the judge has discretion to compel such plaintiff to put up security for costs.

OKANAGAN SHIPMENTS

One hundred and thirty carloads of fruit and produce were shipped from the Okanagan Valley during the week ending Nov. 4th, according to figures compiled for the Vernon News by C. P. R. freight agents. These shipments bring the total for the year, in carload lots only, to 1583, which, at a conservative valuation of $750 a car, represents an export value of $1,187,250. Shipments reported for the week and year are as follows:

	Week	Year
Vernon	42	465
Okanagan Landing	41	463
Armstrong	40	325
Enderby	6	325

BURIED BY CAVE-IN

A shocking fatality occurred at Penticton on Thursday last, when three city employees met their death near the end of the Okanagan River bridge on Lakeshore Drive, when several hundred tons of dirt slid from the cliff and buried the men working in the gravel pit below. The dead are: James Campbell, James Boyce, and Malcom Nicholson. Billie Weir, who was caught at the edge of the slide, escaped with a broken leg.

BUMPER CROP PREDICTED.

"I predict a bumper crop of fruit in the Okanagan Valley next year," said Thomas Cunningham, Provincial Inspector of fruit pests, after a visit to the Summerland Apple Show.

"I have never seen the trees ripen so well. The fruit buds could not possibly be in a better condition," continued Mr. Cunningham, "I have never seen better samples of beautiful apples of the standard varieties."

"I was glad to find an active spirit of co-operation amongst the fruit growers, which is sure to result in the success of the settlement. The government purchased many fine lots of apples which will be shown at the approaching Chicago exhibition. I predict as great success at Chicago as the government achieved at Winnipeg this year, where they captured the Gold Medal.

"The good prices obtained for fruit this year, and the active demand for it, have put fresh courage into the hearts of the growers. It is to be hoped that provision may be made for an adequate supply of properly constructed fruit cars for next year by the companies which serve British Columbia.

"Now is the time to take up this question, instead of waiting until next year when the season for shipping will be upon us.

"I hope that the various Boards of Trade throughout the Province will begin a vigorous campaign along this line. Growers may succeed in producing the highest quality of fruit and pack it carefully, but if we fail in getting our fruit to the markets in the best possible condition, all the efforts of the growers will be rendered useless."

AN HONEST BUSINESS.

If there is joy in work there must be joy in business.

A man can take the same pride in building up an efficient business as in building and developing his home, his rent roll or in making a collection of stocks and bonds.

A man can not leave a finer legacy to his family and the community than a well ordered and profitable business.

While there is not one of us but what would steal in order to provide for our families, yet our first duty is to the community. By observing this scientific community relation is where we get that by which we provide for our families without stealing.

This does not mean that we should give the community anything, but rather that we should take in return for what is given.

A man should contribute in service to his community or his market, just as you have in mind to call it, but always to his own profit.

He need not be like the man who charged $5.00 a hundred for auction bills, but reduced the price to $3.00 as soon as he installed a cylinder press and a boiler and engine. Instead of keeping about half the saving for his brains and courage, he gave it all to the community.

In order to perpetuate a business it must be its founder's fad and his amusement.

If he wants to make it his savings account and his insurance policy he must not only manage it, but manage to educate men, morally and materially, to conduct it in the days of his waning activity and after his passing.

In order to keep dry rot out of his business, a man must keep it out of himself.

AN IDEAL TOWN.

Klingenberg, a town in Southern Germany, on the river Main, may lay claim to many of the characteristics of a modern Utopia. It not only supplies every resident with well-paid work and relieves him of all his municipal and state taxes, but gives him an annual allowance of $400 for pin-money, with occasional gifts for holiday celebrations.

The fortunes of Klingenberg, which has about 1700 inhabitants, are founded upon its deposits of clay, which on account of its fire-resisting properties is widely exported, particularly to the United States.

The deposits are worked by the municipality directly at an annual profit of $100,000, and every Klingenberger is entitled to a position as miner. The fortnightly pay day is observed as a holiday, without detriment to the regular German holidays, on which an extra payment of a dollar to a dollar and a quarter is made to every citizen to enable him to celebrate properly.

To prevent the flooding of this ideal place of residence by Germans from all parts of the empire, it has been found necessary to limit rights of citizenship. No one is admitted without a payment of $425 to the municipal treasury. More favorable terms are granted, however, to men taking wives in the town.

She Hoped For Strength From Above, but Got on Well With What She Had

By F. A. MITCHEL

One morning in the year 1660, more than two a half centuries ago, a young man and a young girl walking side by side passed what was then called the ordinary, afterward the tavern and which we now call hotel, in the village of Hartford, Conn. The ordinary of that day was the central feature of the town. There political affairs were born, discussed; from there domestic news, gossip and scandal were sent forth. Indeed, the ordinary embodied everything in the village.

It was not kept merely for money making purposes. Since a stopping place for travelers was necessary in the town one of the first citizens was invited to take charge of it. The reasons for this were manifold, though the most important was that since liquor must be sold—so it was then considered—and since our ancestors were thoroughly impressed with the abuses liable to this traffic they desired the management of a man they could trust.

Now, on that morning when the young man and the young woman, Jacob Murline and Sarah Tuttle, passed the ordinary at Hartford within the taproom sat an Englishman who had just made a forty days' voyage from London to America for the purpose of studying the manners and customs of the colonists with the intention of writing a book about them on his return. He was sitting with the landlord, who had just brewed a bowl of flip, a concoction of beer sweetened with sugar, molasses or dried pumpkin and rum, into which had been thrust a redhot iron called the loggerhead, causing it to seethe and foam. The landlord was giving his guest some account of the said manners and customs in vogue in the colony of New Haven.

"Do you see that girl walking with that young man? Well, there's trouble brewing there. The girl is old Goodman Tuttle's daughter, and she's keeping company with young Murline without her father's permission. He'll get fined a dozen lashes at the whipping post if he doesn't mind."

"The whipping post! Have parents power here to whip those who pay attention to their daughters without their consent?"

"Indeed they have, and a goodly custom it is. The laws of the colony say that any tempting without the parents' sanction cannot be done by speech, writing message, company keeping, unnecessary familiarity, disorderly night meetings, sinful dalliance, gifts or in any other way."

"And if they disobey this law?"

"Heavy fines may be imposed with a plentiful supply of lashes to the inveigler of the girl."

"And is she not punished?"

"Not by the law. Her father can attend to her case as he likes."

"Is the punishment in public or in private?"

"In public, of course. We have no private punishment here in the colonies. Heaven knows there are in this desolate land few amusements. Our punishments serve us in this respect in good stead. When I was in Boston last, drinking with others a cup of sack, we were much diverted at seeing a man who had had too much of the same mixture laid by the heels on the ground, with a bar of iron fastened and locked to his legs with sliding shackles and a bolt. There were salvages (savages) present who stared at him, not understanding this method of torture."

While the two were talking Jacob Murline, who had passed with his love out of sight, repassed, going the other way, and under very different conditions. A citizen held one arm, another citizen held the other arm, while Goodman Tuttle, the father of the girl he had been walking with, led the way. On Tuttle's visage was a stern and relentless look that boded the prisoner no good.

"Now," said the landlord of the Hartford ordinary, "you have an opportunity to witness one of our customs, showing how parents discharge the duties the Lord has imposed upon them in the case of their offspring. They will take the boy to the magistrate, where he will be tried for inveigling the girl, and later you may derive much pleasure at seeing the cat o' nine tails laid on his back. And maybap if the judge has not had sufficient sack this morning to steady his nerves and replenish his temper after the five bowls he had here last night the pleasure derived may be heightened by the gashes on the swain's back being supplied with salt and vinegar. Come, let us finish the bowl before us and be off."

The landlord and the author of a future work entitled "A Voyage to New England," with a highly diverting account of the manners and customs of the colonists, published in London in 1662, drank the remains of the plutonic mixture before them—the author with a grimace—and proceeded to the meeting house, which was the only available shelter for a court except the ordinary. They arrived soon after the prisoner, and the inhabitants of the village were gathering for one of the few diversions they were ever accorded. Everybody knew Jake Murline and Sarah Tuttle for a pair of innocent young persons, who were passing that delightful period when lovers may sit intwined in each other's arms while the clock is striking the happy hours away. And now Jacob was to pay the penalty for their happiness, for every one knew that there were witnesses who had seen them hugging and kissing apparently without thought of what was to follow such conduct when indulged in without Goodman Tuttle's consent.

Goodman Tuttle was there, expectant of vengeance, and presently his wife came in with their daughter, who showed in her visage and demeanor an unholy protest against parental authority. They took seats in front, while the space behind was filled by citizens and Indians. Then the judge, all being assembled, asked Goodman Tuttle to state his charge against Jacob Murline.

"What proof have you to substantiate it?"

"On May day last without asking my permission the prisoner had some boisterous lovemaking with my daughter. It began by his seizing her gloves and demanding the forfeit—a kiss. Whereupon they sat down together, his arm being about her and her arm upon his shoulder or about his neck, and he kissed her, and she kissed him, or they kissed each other, continuing in this posture for about half an hour."

"Call your witnesses," said the court.

Since this outrage against parental authority had been committed on a holiday when all were Maying together, there were plenty of witnesses to prove it. Some testified because they were obliged to, but many did so that the town might be accorded the amusement of seeing Jacob tied to the whipping post receiving the strokes of the cat-o'-nine-tails. Perhaps there were some who were selfish enough to testify in order that they themselves might be accorded this favorite amusement. When the testimony was all in Goodman Tuttle, confident of receiving a goodly sum of money from the prisoner for fines and anticipating the pleasure of hearing Murline's howls under the cat, looked much pleased. The spectators were getting ready to go out to witness the punishment, and it appeared that nothing could interfere with the merrymaking. The judge asked Jacob if he had anything to say for himself, whereupon Sarah Tuttle, shamefaced, arose and said sorrowfully:

"I have something to say, your worship."

"What is it?"

"Jacob Tuttle did not inveigle me at all. I wished to induce him to kiss me. In fact, I enticed him. I dared him to steal my gloves that he might have cause to demand a kiss."

Here was a damper on the assembly. By these few words the case against the prisoner fell to the ground.

"You're a 'bould virgin,'" cried the angry judge, "and I must fine you for inveigling the prisoner instead of fining the prisoner for inveigling you."

"But," exclaimed the disappointed Tuttle, "I shall have to pay the fine. My daughter has no money."

"That's nothing to me," retorted the court. "I'm here to administer the law and must administer it as it is. It's lucky that I'm not compelled to administer the cat as well." Then turning to the prisoner he added: "The Lord will administer the cat to you, you jade! You've set a pernicious example to all the maids of the colony, and I am troubled that I can make an example of you only by the fine."

"I'm sorry, your worship," replied Sarah demurely, "and I hope God will help me to carry it better for time to come."

Since Sarah had thus far "carried it" pretty well for herself in saving her lover from a frightful punishment for making love to her it does not appear why any assistance was necessary. To outwit her father and the judge, besides depriving all present of the pleasure of the only amusement vouchsafed them at her lover's expense, was a work not to be despised.

When the court was dismissed the Londoner and the landlord went back to the ordinary, where, in order to blunt his disappointment at not having been able to give his guest a specimen of the favorite amusement of the colonists, he brewed an extra strong bowl of flip, pumpkin flavored, and to make it doubly effective gave it a dash of mustard.

Excuses of Messenger Boys.

Mr. Herbert Samuel, the British Postmaster-General, related some amusing stories of excuses made by messenger boys at the prize distribution and display of the Brady Street Club for Working Lads, in the Pavilion Theatre, Mile End, London, recently. In his official capacity, explained Mr. Samuel, he employed about 14,000 telegraph messengers, and he heard a good deal about boys and their ways. The boys always tried to maintain a high standard of conduct, and if they fell away they were always very ready to own up.

The postmaster in one town called upon Messenger Brown to "explain your conduct towards an old gentleman in George street." The following reply came:

"To the postmaster. Sir,—As I was passing through George street an old gentleman stood in the street. I threw a potato at the gentleman. I am very sorry, and hope it will not occur again."

Not long ago, continued Mr. Samuel, the written explanation offered by a boy messenger when there had been some disturbance in the office read:—

"Messenger Smith called me a wooden-head, so I poured hot tar over his dinner and punched him on the nose. Hoping this will meet with your approval."

At all events, remarked Mr. Samuel, they might claim that, so far as the boys were concerned, they regarded truth above all things.

It Was a Dog.

Mr. George Smedley, the Toronto banjo and guitar player, is doing well "across the line" with his big vaudeville act. Mr. Smedley had a thrilling experience while playing a small Ontario town some years ago. It was a fall fair concert, and those who have attended concerts on the evening of the fall fair know that the presence of the "fresh" young man is very much in evidence. During Mr. Smedley's first number he was interrupted by some one whom he thought was imitating a dog yelping. Mr. Smedley stopped his work, advanced to the footlights, and gave the supposed imitator a "piece of his mind." "If that dog up there in the gallery," he said, "will come down here for half a minute I will make him feel like the cur that he is." Then Mr. Smedley resumed his selection. At the conclusion he was generously applauded. Advancing to acknowledge it, Mr. Smedley heard a shrill, childish voice of a boy up in the gallery saying these words: "It was a dog, Mr. Smedley." And to bear convincing testimony, the boy held up a yelping dog by the back of the neck.

The Woman Militant.

Those militant women,
Those ladies, gadzooks,
Who think that good actions
Are more than good looks,
Are busy these days
In their sweet, gentle ways
Of smashing the windows
And bursting the doors
Of all public buildings,
Of houses and stores,
And throwing their brickbats
Promiscuous at men,
And getting arrested,
And at it again,
To show the man
How women can make laws
By showing to man
How women can break laws.
Oh, feminine logic!
Say, ain't it the goods
That's bound to get woman's Rights out of the woods?

Wrinkles Have Gone Out.

In a shop recently a well known actress who is noted for her perennial youth asked for a traveling bag of alligator skin. The shopkeeper, who had none of that particular sort, brought out instead some of smooth leather.

"And you tell me this is alligator skin?" objected the actress. "Why, where are all its wrinkles?"

"Ah, madam," replied the wily dealer, who knew his customer, "wrinkles are out of vogue. The correct alligator bag is made from the skin of an alligator that has been massaged."—Tit-Bits.

MUSIC AND MISERY.

Ills, Aches and Pains With Which Performers Have to Contend.

Pianist's cramp is more painful than writer's cramp and is the bane of all virtuosos. It is caused by the constant contraction and expansion of the muscles controlling the fingers. It becomes chronic when not guarded against, and many a promising virtuoso's career has been blighted in this way. The only remedy is to rest the overtaxed muscles and then work them up gradually to meet the strain of constant playing.

All concert pianists are subject to split finger tips. The constant stroke of the balls of the fingers on the hard ivory makes the flesh so delicate and tender that frequently playing becomes acute agony.

Violinists suffer a great deal of physical inconvenience. Most of us have an idea that the violin is held against the neck and shoulder by the player's left hand, which grasps the arm of the instrument. All great violin teachers insist that the left hand be left entirely free, and to achieve this the violin is actually held by the player's chin. In this attitude his head is held in a distorted position, and this, working against the elevation of the left arm and shoulder, causes compression of the heart and lungs and curvature of the spine.

Performers on wind instruments suffer many inconveniences, and in some instances their work leads to permanent physical disability. Bulbar paralysis from continued use of the tongue and lips is an ever present danger. Doctors have a fearsome name for the commonest result of wind playing. In plain language it is overdistention of the lungs. This stretching of the lungs from constantly heavy inflation leads to engorgement of the blood in the right cavities of the heart, and this produces dilation of the heart and hypertrophy.

Mental peculiarities of oboe players are traditional in the orchestral world, in spite of the fact that most oboe players are normal. Some explain that the oboe player is mentally affected by the fact that he is forced to blow through an exceedingly small aperture and the expiration is unusually prolonged. Others insist that the peculiarly melancholy quality of the tone produced and the invariable character of the music written for the oboe are responsible for any peculiarities displayed by its executants.

After this somewhat grewsome recital it is cheering to know that one instrument at least can be counted on to bring health and longevity to those who practice it. This is the flute. Doctors recommend it for incipient consumptives, as the operation of playing the instrument involves the precise motion of the lungs of most benefit to the consumptive—that is, full inspiration, not too full or strained, followed by slow and gentle delivery of the breath.—John Warren in Washington Star.

Simplify Your Home Grounds.

Don't inclose your property with hedges. Irregular borders of trees and shrubs are better. Hedges cut up a landscape and ruin it with their hard, artificial lines. Borders harmonize with the environment, have variety and give interest the year round.

Don't set trees and shrubs in straight lines except where absolutely necessary, as on streets; group them.

Don't trim every bush into a ball, cube or pyramid. Allow trees and shrubs to assume natural forms.—Country Life In America.

Nearly Shot by Proxy.

In 1862 M. Clemenceau served two months' imprisonment for shouting "Vive la Republique!" and in 1871 he was very nearly shot by proxy. He returned to Paris from a provincial speechmaking tour on the day on which Thiers and the Versaillais succeeded in entering the city. Blood was up, and his enemies were looking for him. A young Brazilian who resembled him was arrested in mistake for him and conducted to La Pelniere to be executed. Happily, however, he shouted for the Brazilian consul, and the Brazilian consul turned up in time to rescue him.

Applied Maxim.

"My dear, I am very sorry, but the man who was fixing here said the fastenings were too short to put up this portrait of yours on the wall."

"All right. Just give me rope enough and I'll hang myself."—Baltimore American.

Anaesthetics For Plants.

Most plants living for a greater period than a year require certain intervals of rest. It is at these times that energy is stored up for future activity. The more complete this period of quiescence the better is the development and the quicker the rate of growth when the plant awakens from its sleep. Dr. Johansen of Copenhagen, after an elaborate series of experiments, has given to the market grower an effective method of rapid flower production based on an intensification of the plant's resting period. For long it has been known that vegetable tissue is much affected by the vapors of chloroform and ether. After a good deal of investigation the Danish professor was able to demonstrate that plants submitted to the influence of these anaesthetics were afterward capable of an astonishingly rapid growth. So satisfied has the practical grower been that the treatment will be exceedingly helpful to him that the method is being extensively employed.

The manner of procedure is decidedly interesting. When in an entirely restful condition specimens of lilacs, azaleas, lilies of the valley and other plants are placed in an airtight box. A small vessel affixed to the lid of the box is filled with chloroform or ether and the cover is placed in position. Being heavier than air, the vapors rush to the bottom of the box and mingle with the plants. At the end of forty-eight hours the specimens are taken out and grown in the ordinary manner. Nothing in the way of forcing is required, and without the employment of any great degree of heat the plants develop in a most remarkable manner. Lilacs were in full bloom within a fortnight after being placed in the vaporizing chamber, while lilies of the valley were hardly so long in coming to maturity. In no way did the treatment harm the plants, which produced flowers and foliage in profusion.

An Ivory Mat.

Many people have never even heard of such a thing, and it is not to be wondered at, for these mats are exceedingly rare, and it is said by those who know that only three of these beautiful curiosities exist in the whole world. The one we now write about is the largest one made. It measures 8 by 4 feet and, though made in a small hill state in the north of India, has an almost Greek design for its border. It was only used on state occasions, when the rajah sat on it to sign important documents. The original cost of the mat is fabulous, for 6,400 pounds of ivory were used in its manufacture. The finest strips of ivory must have been taken off the tusks, as the mat is as flexible as a woven stuff and beautifully fine.—London Graphic.

Enderby Amateur Horticultural Society Takes Step to Enlarge Scope

A meeting of the Enderby Horti- Hall last Friday evening. At this meeting the following report of the directors was read:

Your directors beg leave to submit their annual report for the year 1912-13: During the year that is past the Society has sustained a heavy loss in the resignation and removal of its president, Rev. Duncan Campbell. Mr. Campbell is an enthusiast in horticulture, and this Society and the city and district of Enderby owe much to him for the persistent way in which he worked for the beautification of the town and homes of Enderby. The ideal ol "the City Beautiful" was ever in his mind, and he strove for its realization, not only by precept but by example. The Presbyterian church garden, which was brought to great perfection, was the work almost entirely of his own hands, and may be considered practically the proneer garden of present-day Enderby.

An inspection of the town made by one of your directors during the past summer, revealed many partial attempts at garden-making; and, altogether, it is felt that a genuine start has been made in the conversion of Enderby into a "gardn city." One very noticeable feature was the considerable increase in the number of rose bushes. There are still some dwellings in the town, however, the fences of which are broken or falling down, and yards grown with weeds and littered with tin cans and other rubbish. The more thorough enforcement of the Noxious Weeds By-law, and the regular cutting, during the growing season, of the weeds on the city streets, are greatly to be desired.

The Annual Show, which was held in the Opera House on August 20th, was by far the most interesting and successful show which we have so far had. While the number of exhibits was not relatively large, nor the average quality of the very best, yet there were some excellent specimens shown in the various departments, and the show was, considering the circumstances, a most gratifying success. The number of prizes awarded was 43, distributed among 19 prize winners.

The Society is indebted to Mr. and Mrs. Alwyne Buckley, of Armstrong, for the exhibition of a number of beautiful specimens, the presence of which greatly enhanced the interest of the show; and many thanks are due to Mr. J. E. Crane, the Enderby Brass Band, and Mrs. Mowat, for their kind and much-appreciated musical contributions to the day's enjoyment; also to Mrs. Cobb, Mrs. Taylor and Miss Gibbs for taking charge of the refreshment department and to his worship Mayor Ruttan for presiding at the prize-distribution in the evening.

After the last-named interesting function the exhibits were cleared away, and an impromptu dance followed, which appeared to be much enjoyed by a number of people.

Your directors desire to place on ecord their high appreciation of the services rendered by Miss Cobb, the treasurer af the Society, upon whom the making of the preliminary arrangements, the arduous work of preparing the building, entering and allotting space for exhibits, and the conduct and management of the show throughout the day chiefly devolved.

Thanks must also be tendered to the management of the Opera House for a generous contribution to the funds, to the ladies of the Women's Auxiliary of St. George's church for loans of tables, and to other friends for help in various ways kindly rendered.

The show, of course, is the climax of the year's work, and there is but little to be added to what has already been said in this report. We would, however, express the hope that the Society, now that it is well established, will progress steadily on towards larger things. The facts that it is legally incorporated under the laws of British Columbia and is under the supervision of the Provincial Government, and that the prizes re awarded by psofessional judges sent by the Province, gives the Society a status which it did not enjoy previous to incorporation, and which cannot fail to inspire confidence and to attract an ever-increasing number of exhibitors as time goes on.

Your directors desire to draw attention to the work of the City Beautiful Association of Vancouver, which is bringing such excellent results in similar lines of effort to those of this Society, and would suggest that members would do well to acquaint themselves with its aims and methods.

In conclusion, we would remark that to engage in the cultivation of the soil is one of the primary instincts of humanity, and the training of the powers of observation, reflection and practical achievement in connection therewith is educational and developmental in the highest degree; through increasing interest in natural objects and processes the perceptions are quickened, and a love and understanding of Nature are promoted which in themselves go far towards the solution of some of those moral, social and economic problems which are causing so much anxiety to thoughtful persons at the present time. We commend the work of this Society to public attention, therefore, not merely as an attempt to popularize a pleasant and recreative hobby or form of amusement, but as constituting a serious effort in the direction of good citizenship and the welfare of the community.

The report of the directors was unanimously adopted.

The report of the treasurer was then read, showing the receipts for the year to be $86.70, with a cash balance on hand at the commencement of the year of $41.75. Expenditures, in prizes and expenses of show amounted to $81.70, leaving a balance of $5 on the season's business, and a total of $46.75 in bank.

A joint report was read from the treasurer, Miss Cobb, and Secretary Rosoman, regarding the question of Government assistance and re-organization. After citing the satisfactory growth made by the Society, and the very much better position attained since incorporation, and the obviously expanding field, the report says:

"When at the coast recently, we, your treasurer and secretary, interviewed the Department of Agriculture and again took up with them the question of obtaining government assistance. We were most courteously received, and the whole situation, from the Government's point of view was made clear. The refusal of aid during the past year had been due to the fact that the objects stated in the Society's petition for incorporation had been too restricted; had the petition included the whole of the objects stated in Sec. 4 of the Act, the Society would have been in line with other similar societies, and then would have participated in the very liberal appropriations made by the Government for their assistance; and it was suggested that the Society should forthwith make application for the amendment of its charter, so as to include therein the whole of the objects set forth in the Act; it was pointed out that this would in no way interfere with the continuation by the Society of its present line of work, but would simply remove the restrictions which it is under at the present time, and enable it to enlarge its sphere of operation as seemed advisable from time to time, and thus qualify for financial assistance by fulfilling the prescribed conditions."

After reciting the serious condition (which is world-wide) of the influx of population from rural districts into the towns, and the resultant decrease in the number of persons in the production of food, the report urges:

"An important work is to be done, here in the local field, by our Society It is not a mere matter of having a little show and celebration, and hearing the band and meeting with one's friends and acquaintances, it is a question of social science, public service and practical patriotism. We submit, therefore, that in recognition of all these facts and circumstances, the Society cannot continue to operate in the restricted field which it has hitherto occupied, but must justify its existence by accepting its responsibilities, re-organizing and entering on an enlarged sphere of usefulness in the service of the community."

This report was adopted by the Society, and it was unanimously decided to reorganize so as to conform to the requirements of the Act, the Secretary being instructed to prepare the papers and forward same to the Department.

The following members were elected as Directors for the ensuing year: Mrs. C. S. Salt, Miss Forster, Miss Cobb, Mrs. Lawes, Mr. Walker, Mr. F. Waby, Mr. G. Rosoman, Mrs. Worthington, Mrs. Mowat. It was decided that the directors should be called together on Wednesday afternoon to name officers.
