NOTE AND COMMENT

The report of the Ontario Bureau of Mines for 1896 recently issued contains some statistics which furnish food for thought. While $121,848 worth of gold was produced, it cost in wages alone $91,210 to get it. On the other hand a total value in iron was taken out of $353,780, which only cost $47,000 in wages, while the wages paid for $1,955,205 worth of refined petroleum were only $100,740.

The year book for 1897 gives some very striking statistics under the head of education. For instance the expenditure per head in each province for education shows some startling disparities. While Quebec, which is the lowest spends $1.06, Manitoba, which is the highest, spends $4 15, or nearly four times the amount, with Ontario a bad second with $1.90. British Columbia is fifth with $1.66.

The HERALD is glad to note from Mr. Peterson's letter in its last issue that the Gold Commissioner has power to clear obstructions from the streets, lanes and alleyways of this town and is using it. His action in this matter will clear the ground for the coming city council. The HERALD hopes to see it comprehensive and impartial, even extending to government buildings and fences, if they infringe, as the letter in question states they do infringe, on the roadway allowances of the town. Because, if he does not do this, there is no question but that the first council will find this duty devolve on them and their officials. Quite recently the old smelter boarding house obtruding at least two feet on the sidewalk has been given a new face, so that the oldest timer would scarcely know it, in the most childlike confidence that these things will continue forever. But it will ultimately have to be moved back to its legal position and the time to do it was, one naturally would think, while these startling renovations were taking place.

The Province acts the part of the "candid friend" of the Liberal government in this province. In its current number it deprecates that excessive abuse of the C. P. R., which was such a stock cry, and for that matter such an effective one, with the stump orators of the party of political purity before the last election. It points out that British Columbia owes its present prosperity very largely to that much abused line. As a matter of fact a good deal more than even the material prosperity of the whole of Canada is due to the construction of the C. P. R. The whole of the present national sentiment, which has become such a striking feature of the Dominion today, has sprung up since that road was completed and is distinctly traceable to its construction. In the old days people out west, west of the Red River, did not consider that they were in Canada at all. Canada with them meant what we now call "the east," and even in Ontario there was no such thing as a national Canadian sentiment much less any feeling of pride in the Empire. The favorite attitude of young Canadians in those days was distinctly favorable to annexation. If to-day Canada is, as Sir Wilfred Laurier assures with an almost "damnable iteration" a nation, it is distinctly due to that great enterprise which his party opposed tooth and nail when it was first mooted and which they never ceased to sneer at and abuse up to the last few months. The Grit leaders are reaping where they did not sow and where they did their best to prevent anybody else sowing. It was the "national highway" that made the "nation" of to-day a possibility.

Klondike.

W. M. Bean came down on Friday from doing development work on the Klondike claim, in which Messrs. W. H. Crage and F. B. Wells are interested. Thirty feet of an open cut has been run and the lead has widened out from 18 inches to three feet under development. Large chunks of two or three hundred pounds weight of solid iron ore are encountered in the lead. There is a second lead on the property on which there are indications of a still larger body of ore than in the lower one which is being developed. The ledge on which this claim and the Yukon is staked is situated on Carnes Creek and is traceable through the country rock, which is slate, for over a mile.

If you miss seeing Sammy Johnson, the Boy "Coon," you'll only regret it once and that will be always.

THE CANOE RIVER.

A Fine Open Valley Drained by a Gold Bearing Stream.—From Big Bend to Peace River.

Mr. Sam. Gough has just returned from a two years absence on Canoe river. He came down the river in a canoe boat, in which he left Beaver on the trip two years ago. Mr. Gough has a considerable acquaintance with the west. He carried despatches from Prince Albert to Saskatoon during the rebellion of 1885 and has travelled over the Athabasca, Great Slave Lake and Peace River countries since. His knowledge of the country immediately north of here extends to Peace River. Speaking of the Canoe River country, where he has been prospecting for the last two years he describes the Columbia from the end of the pack trail, at Goldstream, to the mouth of Canoe river as easily navigable by boat or small steamer. The mouth of Canoe river is a wide valley, five or six miles wide, covered with an abundance of high grass, through which the Canoe and Wood rivers empty in the Columbia about 400 yards apart. Along Wood river lies the old H. B. Co's. trail through the Rockies to the Athabasca river. Canoe river is navigable by boat for 60 miles from the mouth, along the whole of which one can pole either up or down without difficulty. The first 40 miles runs through an open flat through which a road could be constructed with but little grading except on a few side hills. After 40 miles the mountains close in and the banks become more rugged and glaciers are frequent. Sixty miles up, a canyon is met with, running for seven miles of unnavigable water, after which one can take a boat clear up to the head waters of the river. A portage of 12 or 14 miles below or about eight above the Canyon reaches the Fraser river, which runs through flat and swampy lands as far as Tete Jaune Cache. The portage presents no difficulty, as the rivers are only separated by a low divide. At Tete Jaune Cache the Fraser strikes into the mountains. There are no obstacles to the passage of a boat clear down the Fraser to the portage by which the Parsnip is reached and the Parsnip itself is a fine large river running into the Peace river. Still the Fraser is pretty difficult water requiring careful navigation. Fine gold is found almost any where on Canoe river. Mr. Gough found the best prospects for placer on the second creek on the right hand going up the river, which empties about 12 miles from the mouth. There are good indications of quartz, and a fine strike of copper was made by him on Wood river. There are hot springs of very high temperature just below the canyon, where a man called Jackson has built a shack. Mr. Gough has left his three partners to winter on the first creek which runs into the Canoe river on the left, 20 miles from the mouth. His visit to town is for the purpose of getting his eyes treated.

WRESTLING AND BOXING.

Exhibition of the Manly Art in Peterson's Hall.

Last Monday an exhibition of boxing and wrestling was given in Peterson's hall to a good size crowd. The first number on the programme was a glove contest between W. E. Holloway and F. L. Lemon, best out of three rounds. Lemon handled himself in a way which was a good deal of a surprise, but Holloway had the best of the contest. The wrestling match then came off between W. E. Holloway and Billy Gatt, a man from the coast and middle weight champion of that region. The match was best two out of three falls, catch-as-catch-can. The first fall went to Gatt, time 6 min. 10 sec., the second to Holloway, time 2 min., and the third, which was well contested, lasted 10 min. 30 sec. and finally went in favor of Gatt. Holloway was down five times before his opponent finally disposed of him. The weights of the contestants were Gatt, 185 lbs., Holloway 145 lbs. The Columbia Orchestra filled up the intervals with some excellently rendered selections.

Holloway and Gatt are matched for $100 a side to wrestle again next Wednesday evening, in Peterson's hall. Conditions of the match are the same, best two falls out of three, catch-as-catch can.

On Monday a French Canadian barber named D. Courtemarche was committed for trial at the next assizes for stealing $10 from a woman of the town, who goes by the name of Carry. He claims that the woman was drunk and gave him the money to keep and that he blew it in.

SOME LARDEAU PROPERTIES.

The Description of the Wagner, Black Eagle, Bannockburn, Glenside and Ethel groups.

The Commonwealth Co. has been doing a good deal of development work on their claims in the Trout Lake district. The Glenside group consisting of four claims, the Vera group, on the Horne ledge containing three claims, and the Brooklyn group.

The Glenside group has four parallel leads each from two to four feet wide running through the claims.

They have run in a tunnel of 80 feet on one side of the leads, which averages $90, and on another they have exposed a fine body of first class shipping ore. They have also erected a good substantial cabin. On the Vera group on the Horne ledge they have three parallel leads from two to 16 feet wide and have run in a tunnel 170 feet to tap one of the leads. The indications are excellent for showing up a good body of ore, the upper lead has a fine showing of gray copper. These claims are located on the North Fork of the Lardeau and the trails leading to them are very good. On the Brooklyn group on Canyon Creek, at the foot of the lake they have driven in a tunnel of 25 feet and have built good trails and a cabin. The members of the Commonwealth Co. are well satisfied with their summer's work, and have every reason to believe that they have good properties and that next summer will see them on the shipping list.

The Ethel and Keystone mineral claims were located on June 3, 1897 on Broken Hill, on the north side of the Glacier Basin, 2½ miles from Trout Lake City. These claims are favorably situated, plenty of timber and water and free from snow slides, they have a wonderful showing and reports from mining men who have visited them say that there is no doubt that the Ethel and Keystone are very rich claims, in fact one very seldom sees their equal. They have an open cut of 15 feet on the Ethel, exposing a pay streak of seven feet consisting mostly of dry ore such as chloride of silver, black sulphurets, gray copper and copper sulphurets. The assay they had went 2,400 ounces in silver $7 gold and 15 per cent copper. Some 20 tons of ore are now lying on the dump.

The Wagner group consists of six claims, the Lardo, Duncan, Princess Marie, Queen Mary, Frances Jewell and Lucille K. and is located at the head of Hall Creek about 14 miles from Trout Lake. This property adjoins the Abbott group and has been undergoing since it was bonded, a considerable amount of development. The lead which can be distinctly traced through the different claims, is about 20 feet wide and carries a silver lead ore which assays from 100 to 400 ounces silver and from 60 to 75 per cent. lead. The great bulk of the work has been done on the Duncan and consists of a tunnel 160 feet in length, and a shaft 60 feet in depth besides crosscuts. These latter have exposed the pay streak and show it to contain 2½ feet of clean ore and 7 feet of concentrates. Some assays were taken here and show the clean ore to run from 150 to 400 ounces silver and 65 per cent. lead. Of the six claims the Lardo and Duncan were bonded to Rugh, Bain and Johnson for $15,000. Three of the payments have already been made and the other one falls due on the 1st of January next, and from the satisfaction with which the bonders regard the property there is not the shadow of a doubt but that the final payment will be made.

The Black Eagle and Sunset are situated on Seven Mile Creek about three miles above Ferguson and are bonded to Vancouver parties. Some $500 worth of work has been done, mostly in stripping and crosscutting and has shown the vein to be about four feet wide carrying a paystreak of six inches. The ore is high grade and runs on an average of 60 ounces silver, $10 gold and 60 per cent. lead. The original locators were Messrs. Olesen, Sandin and Jacobson.

The Bannockburn group of claims situated at the head of Hall Creek are looking very well. The lead has been stripped for a distance of over 1,000 feet and shows it to vary from two to five feet of clean ore. Assays run 50 ounces silver, $8 gold and 42 per cent. lead. The ore on the Buckeye, one of the group, runs higher in silver, assaying 210 ounces.—Trout Lake Topic.

The Evening Union is another Rossland journalistic venture, which has just appeared. It is the outcome of the struggle between Eber C. Smith, of the Record, and the Typographical Union. The details are not of very profound interest to the outside public.

TAMMANY WINS.

VAN WYCK RETURNED AS FIRST MAYOR OF GREATER NEW YORK.

The United States Holds the Key of the Cuban Situation.—The Newfoundland Government Defeated.—The Canadian Teslin Lake Route the Only Practical one to Yukon.

(SPECIAL TO THE HERALD.)

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—Tammany was victorious yesterday in the first municipal election for Greater New York, by a plurality of 80,000 votes. Robt. Van Wyck was elected, H. George Jr. secured but 15,000 votes, Tracey 100,000, Lowe 145,000 and Van Wyck 210,000.

MADRID, Nov. 3.—In Spain's note to the United States, the foremer asks the latter for help to obtain peace and to stop United States filibustering.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., Nov. 3.—The final returns for the Newfoundland elections give Jas. Winter, the opposition leader, 21 seats, and the government candidates 13 seats.

Sir William Whiteway, the premier, has neen defeated, and all his cabinet except two. The opposition leader carried his district by a majority of two to one and the opposition majorities throughout the colony are in most cases very large.

VANCOUVER, Nov. 3.—Jennings, who was to survey the all Canadian route to the Yukon, has returned with Mr. Sifton's party on the Quadra. He says the Canadian route is the only one practicable to Teslin Lake and will be taken next spring by all travellers. Mr. Sifton got through the Chilcoot Pass and accompanied Major Walsh well on his way to Dawson City. He is conferring with the Provincial Government regarding improvements to the Teslin lake route.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—Silver, 56½; lead, 3¾.

A ROSSLAND CONSERVATIVE

Sizes up the Situation in Provincial Politics for the Record

"Why it is impossible to keep party lines out of Provincial politics," said a prominent Conservative today. "This unusual activity of the Liberals means something. I expect to next hear of them forming a woman's liberal club, in connection with the young liberals' club and the old liberals' club. They wish to blindfold us into the belief that party lines won't be drawn, and then snatch the offices out from under our noses. A liquid lake is not more transparent than are their bland protestations, that they wish above all things to keep clear of party lines."

"Are the Conservatives doing anything?" he was asked.

"We are sawing wood, we are," said he, "but you want to watch our smoke about election time. The more amunition the Liberals fire away now the less they will have election time. That is when we shall come forward with our big guns and then watch the fun. The Conservatives may not be in evidence now but you can warrant they will come in with a spurt on the home run. We may appear so but we are not asleep by any means," concluded the Conservative.

Projected Raid on Dawson City.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—The Sun today prints a letter from Juneau, Alaska, outlining what purports to be a raid into British Territory and the capture of Dawson City. The letter bears the date of Juneau, Alaska, Oct. 21st, and read as follows: "In the same mail in which this letter goes, there will go to Attorney-General McKenna, at Washington, a warning of a wild cat filibustering scheme, which for daring can be likened only to Jamieson's raid on the Transvaal. It is nothing less than a plan to seize Dawson City in the name of the United States, and open up the reserved claims for immediate operation. The story comes here from the United States commissioner, J. N. Smith, at Dyea, and it is the general belief at that place that the United States marshall considered it of sufficient importance to notify the Washington authorities at once."

PRESS GANG METHODS

(From the Calgary Herald)

If report speaks truly the workmen on the Crow's Nest Pass are being swindled right and left. Report may be wrong, but it says that these men, the majority of whom are from a great distance, engaged themselves to the contractors on the understanding that they would receive free transportation, and that they are now made to forego part of their wages to pay for said transportation. Report, we know, is liable to be erroneous, but it says that they were told, on engaging, that board and lodging would be at the rate of $3.50 per week, but found on arrival that it was $5.00. Report may be, as it sometimes is, the product of a wild and vicious imagination, but it affirms that the working month on the Crow's Nest Road consists of 31 days. Report says these things, and pertinacously repeats them from day to day. Yet no one rises to make a denial. We come to the funny part when we remember that numbers of these men were brought here with the idea that they would become settlers. They were induced to leave their native land not merely because there was was prospective work for a year on the line, but because they were led to believe that at the end of that time they would have at their backs some little capital to help them in making a fresh start in life under better conditions than they could hope for at home. This suggests an idea which we humbly beg to lay before the Minister of the Interior for his consideration. It is nothing less than a new system of immigration. Let us, for the sake of brevity, call it the press gang system. The press gangs, as our readers will remember, were the means by which the navy, in the last great war with France, sought to recruit its impoverished ranks. The method was simplicity itself. You sent on shore a few of the toughest of your crew with instructions to bring off to the ship any man or men likely to prove sailors. If the man or men thus selected objected—he might have objections, you know—he was to be knocked on the head or otherwise made tractable. Now the scheme we propose to Mr. Sifton is in the main after the fashion of the press gang. But there is one difference. To forcibly transport suitable Europeans to this country might rouse the ire of their respective governments and would therefore be dangerous. What we propose is that, by such blandishments and enticements as immigration agents can devise, they shall be induced to seek our hospitable shores and that then, the door of the trap being closed, we should proceed to divest them of such means of returning as they might possess or earn, in other words, knock them on the head. Thus we shall, by one stroke, enrich ourselves and people the country with a "happy and contented class of settlers."

Numerous protests against the lateness of the date selected for Thanksgiving appear in the eastern press—Liberal as well as Conservative. The fact that the same date has been fixed in the United States does not afford any excuse for withholding Canada's thanks for a bounteous harvest till November 25. Heaven should be dealt with directly and not by way of Washington, U. S. A.

Brer Cameron, of the Hamilton Spectator, is a profound student of human nature. His comment on Mr. Fielding's loan is an example: "When the announcement that Fielding had borrowed ten million was made, Tarte was the best pleased man in Canada. He didn't ask what the rate was—the fact that the money was coming was all he cared for."

WIRED FROM OTTAWA

THE ATLANTIC MAIL SUBSIDY STILL OPEN

Canadian Representatives for the Paris Exhibition—Manitoba Extra Hard Wheat Defined—The Would be Assassin Adjudged Insane.

OTTAWA, October 28.—The Premier informed a Montreal deputation yesterday that the offer of $50,000 will still hold good to any reliable company who would perform the Atlantic mail service according to the Government's requirements.

He said a commission would be appointed shortly to arrange for Canadian representatives to the Paris exhibition.

An order-in-council defines "Extra Manitoba Hard" to consist of wheat grown wholly in Manitoba or the Territories, weighing not less than 62 lbs to the bushel and containing not less than 85 per cent of hard red fyfe wheat.

Home Rule for Cuba Opposed—Bloody Affray on An Indian Reservation—Andree Heard From—The Peruvian Cabinet Tenders Its Resignation.

WINNIPEG, October 28.—The wife of Thos. Wilson was found dead in bed at the Manor House this morning. She was restless last night, and in taking a sleeping medicine she swallowed an overdose which killed her. The deceased arrived from Mine Centre with her husband yesterday and both were en route to Manitou to take up their residence.

AUTONOMY WILL BE OPPOSED

MADRID, October 28.—The constitutional (Conservative) party, while condemning any illegal action, have decided to oppose constitutionally the granting of an autonomous form of Government to the Island of Cuba. The autonomists of Porte Rico have demanded that the autonomous scheme of government be extended to the island of Porto Rico.

NEWS OF ANDREE

CHRISTINIA, October 28.—Advices from Spitzberger say that the crew of a wrecked ship have reached that part of the world and a rumor prevails that the seamen brought news of Prof. Andree, the Swedish explorer and baloonist.

A FATAL INDIAN FIGHT

ST. PAUL, October 28.—A despatch from the Leroy Lake reservation, Northern Minnesota, says: "Information by special messenger has reached the reservation that a fight occurred yesterday between two Indians and a game warden in which all three were killed and also an Indian woman.

ANOTHER CABINET CRISIS

LIMA, October 28.—A rumor is current that the Peruvian Cabinet has resolved to tender its resignation to the President. The whole of yesterday's session of the Chamber of Deputies was devoted to a debate on a proposal to censure the Cabinet.

The Kingston Whig says editorially under the heading "A Clerical Boombshell": "Nothing could be more intense than the sensation created by the pastoral of His Grace, Archbishop Cleary, read in St. Mary's cathedral on Sunday, and probably issued ere this for general circulation throughout Canada. The language used towards Protestantism is more than exasperating; it is grossly insulting and threatens wider cleavage between the two great classes than has ever yet occurred here. His Grace must have been carried away by unnatural intensity of feeling when he singled out a bride and groom for the subject of such an assault and made public reference of a lady of his own congregation."

ON THEIR WAY TO KHARTOUN

PARIS, October 29—Leclair publishes a remarkable article to the effect that three French missions are now on their way to Khartoun, by forced marches, as the result of an understanding with the Mahdi, reached in 1896, by which France recognizes the Soudan as an independent state under suzerainty of the Sultan of Turkey, in return for certain concessions. In conclusion the paper says: "France is acting in these regions by the express desire of the Mahdi, in conformity with the principle of maintenance of the integrity of the Ottoman empire, so incessantly proclaimed by Hanotaux."

CHICAGO, October 29.—Leutgert has quarreled with Attorney Vincent, who will most likely drop out of the case.

KILLED BY A SOW.

CHATHAM, October 29.—John Patterson, a lad 11 years old, was attacked by a savage sow on the farm of Wm. Cameron, Harwich. The lad was feeding the young pigs and the sow ran savagely at him and bit and tore his body dreadfully. The boy died yesterday. He was a waif whom Cameron took charge of a week ago.

PREVENTED A LYNCHING.

MANHATTAN, Kan, October 29.—The presence of a detatchment of United States troops prevented the lynching of "Ike" Warren who was charged with the murder of Sheriff Lard last week. A hundred armed men assembled yesterday for the purpose of lynching him, but when they heard that the troops were in town they dispersed.

KILLED HIM IN PRISON

CLIFTON, Arizona, October 29.—Several hundred Mexicans broke into the jail here and filled Juan Madera, a prisoner, full of lead. Madera had been arrested for murder. He was an inoffensive Mexican laborer and supposed to be one of the Chacon gang that tried to capture the town a few months ago. Several other murders are also laid to his charge.

ANOTHER POLAR EXPEDITION

It is announced that Capt. Sverdup, who accompanied Nansen on his recent expedition, is about to start for the polar regions on his own account. The Norwegian government will allow him the use of the Fram, and will give him 20,00 kroner (about $1,000) to enable him to refit her. Sverdrup will take 16 men and 400 dogs with him. The expedition will be provisioned for four years.

John Scully, proprietor of the hotel in which, at different times, two guests met their death through the carelessness in allowing an escape of gas, is charged with manslaughter and will stand his trial on that charge.

Warlike preparations seem to be in the air just now. England is increasing the numerical strength of her army. General Mills, commander in chief of the U. S. army, is recommending a like course to the States; and the Emperor William, in spite of the opposition of his parliament, seems bent on augmenting the power of the German navy.

BETWEEN TWO SINS

BY BERTHA M. CLAY.

She held out her beautifully rounded white arm to him, and showed him the little red mark caused by the broken gold. In doing so her hand touched him. It was accidental, I believe; but I shall never forget the incident. It was over in a moment; but, while that moment lasted, the scene was terrible. His face changed, fierce anger flamed from his eyes. He shook the white hand from him as though it had been a viper.

"You forget!" he cried in a voice so cold and hard that I recognized it with difficulty; and, shuddering, white, trembling, she shrank away from him.

"Good-night, Miss Forster," said Sir Rudolph, abruptly. "I hope you will make yourself as happy as you can."

He was gone before I had time to reply.

Lady Culmore stood quite still for a few moments;; then she tore the jewels from her hair, from her neck, from her arms, and dashed them upon the ground.

"Am I so hateful, so horrible," she cried, "that he will not look at me, that I may not touch him? Oh, heaven, am I so hateful, so loathsome as that?"

Suddenly she remembered my presence, and looked at me with a wild, passionate despair that touched my very heart. I went to pick up the beautiful gems strewn upon the ground. I laid them, a glittering, magnificent mass, on the table. She came up to them with a half-shamed face.

"How passionate I am, Miss Forster!" she said. "What can you think of me?"

"I have had no time to think at all yet," I replied.

Then she walked to one of the large mirrors, and stood before it for some minutes in silence.

"Miss Forster, come here," she said, after she had looked long and earnestly at herself.

I went to her, and we stood side by side. She regarded me critically.

"You are beautiful," she said, slowly. "You are dark as the daughters of sunny Spain, and your eyes are like dusky velvet—no, they are like purple heart's-ease; but you are not so beautiful as I am." She turned to me fiercely and clutched my hands. "Tell me," she cried—"you have had time to judge—tell me—am I not a woman whom any man could love?"

"Yes," I replied, quickly, half frightened by her strange manner.

"Look at my arm," she continued. "If any other man had been in his place, he would have kissed it; and he flung it from him!"

I had no time to answer. The footman came in to clear the table, and I went back to my room.

CHAPTER II.

What manner of house, what manner of people were these? What was wrong under this roof? What was the shadow where all should have been bright? I had been tired before, but the mystery and novelty had so excited and bewildered me that I could not rest. I could not sleep. Surely no one had ever spent a stranger Christmas Eve than this?

I drew aside the hangings. Ah, me, the sweet, white world that lay outside, the beauty of the Christmas night-sky and golden stars! I could not hear the bells, although I knew they would chime until past midnight; and I knew how the music of them would rise and fall over the trees, would die away across the snow. I should have wept in sheer desperate pity for my own loneliness had it not been that my thoughts were so deeply engrossed with the mystery of Ullamere.

I went to sleep at last, thinking of the beautiful face of the wife, of the noble face of the husband wondering what shadow, what sorrow lay between them.

Christmas morning dawned bright and beautiful. I drew near the window and looked out in wonder and delight. There lay the mere, known as Ulla Water, and the grounds of the estate sloped donwn to the very edge. It was a beautiful lake, on which in summer the water-lilies slept, green reeds and sedges grew on the banks and in many places the boughs of the trees dipped into the water. There was almost every variety of tree in the grounds—copper-beech and silver-beech, stately oak and graceful lime, trembling aspen and spreading walnut, the pride of the place being a grand old cedar. In its mantle of white snow, with the sun shining full upon it, the scene was most striking. The robins were flying about in search of food, and the laurustinus was in full flower. My heart and spirits rose. It could not be al misery in such a world as this, such a beautiful world, disfigured only by man and sin!

I went down-stairs, thinking that, if Christmas Eve were forgotten, surely, being Christmas, they would remember Christmas Day! But again there was no recognition of it—no holly, no mistletoe, no cheery voice, no laughter, no Christmas greeting. The house was as silent in the morning sunshine as it had been on the previous night.

Breakfast was served in the dining-room; but neither Sir Rudolph nor his wife came down to it. The old butler told me that Sir Rudolph's breakfast was served to him in his study, and that her ladyship took hers in her own room.

There was nothing to be done but to make the best of it, to take my breakfast in solitude and dream of the thousand happy homes where, on Christmas morning, the long-parted met again, and there was nothing but gladness and love; and while the sunshine does not deepen the shadow in this gloomy dwelling, I can tell the brief story of my life—how and why I came to Ullamere.

My mother, Mabel Averil, came of a good old English family. When not more than seventeen she ran away with her drawing-master, Alec Forster, a young artist, who had dreams of making a name and winning fame. Her family never forgave her, and my father took her to Paris. There he struggled long and arduously. The best engagement he had was as drawing-master to the pupils of Mme. Dudevant, who had a large and fashionable school in the Champs Elysees. He died suddenly of fever when I was four years old; and Mme. Dudevant, who was a kind-hearted woman, offered my mother a situation as English teacher in her school. My education was to be her recompense—and, truly, I received a first-class education. Had I been the daughter of a peeress instead of a poor English teacher, she could not have taken greater pains with me. On my life at the Parisian pension I need not dwell. My mother died when I was nearly eighteen; and after that I could never endure the place, it was so full of painful memories for me. Madame was very good; when I told her how unhappy I felt, she said the best thing would be for me to take a situation in England. She answered an advertisement for a young lady who spoke French, German and Italian, and was well acquainted with the literature of the three countries. It was essential that she should also be an excellent musician and a good singer. The salary proposed was most liberal, and a comfortable though exceedingly quiet home was offered.

"You will be very fortunate," said Madame Dudevant to me, "if you secure this."

Very fortunate indeed in a great many respects! The salary was one hundred per annum; the situation was that of companion to Lady Culmore, the wife of Sir Rudolph Culmore of Brooke, residing now at Ullamere, in Lancashire. Madame thought she had some reason for congratulating me, and I was only too delighted to have an opportunity of seeing England, the land I loved.

It was on the twenty-third of December that I left Madame Dudevant, the school and the gay sunny land of France. I was eighteen the same month. My experience of life was limited to that of a boarding school. I had a vague idea that all married people were very happy, never having lived with any. The only men I had seen were the masters who attended the school and the fathers and brothers of the boarders.

So, young and inexperienced, I was plunged into what I felt must be the very heart of a tragedy.

Mrs. Harper came to say that Lady Culmore was not very well, and would not be downstairs yet for some time, but that, if I liked, I could have the carriage and drive to Ulladale Church.

"Will no one else go to church, Mrs. Harper?" I asked.

"No one ever goes to church from here," she said sadly. "You will find this like very few other houses in the world, Miss Forster;" and I felt that her words were true.

I told her how glad I should be to attend church. It was pleasant to think of going out into the sunshine amidst the holly and the snow.

Tears came to my eyes when I heard the chime of Christmas bells at last. There was no lack of evergreens in the church; the whole place seemed to be filled with them. Again I prayed heaven, for my Christmas gift—some one to love me. I thought much, as I knelt there; of the darkened household whence no one went to church, and where they had forgotten Christmas Eve.

I drove home again when service was over, better and brighter for that my first visit to an English church; but, as I drew near Ullamere, the shadow fell over me again.

When I re-entered the house, I found that Sir Rudolph was out, and the butler told me that Lady Culmore wished to see me in her boudoir. The boudoir was a pretty little room leading from the drawing room and looking right over the mere. I went to her at once, feeling more curiosity than I cared to express. I found her very quiet, very sad, and pale. Evidently the terrible emotion of the preceding evening had exhausted her. She wore a dress of purple velvet that showed her tall, graceful figure to the greatest advantage. There was the same deadly pallor on her face, the same curious expression of restraint, fear and longing in her eyes as there had been on the previous night. She held out her hand to me, half clinging to me, as I noticed afterward she clung to any one who was kind to her.

"YOU HAVE BEEN TO CHURCH."

"You have been to church," she said, with a smile. "You found something like Christmas there?"

"A beautiful Christmas," I replied, "just as I had dreamed of it—all holly and laurel and mistletoe. And I love to hear the old Christmas carols."

"I have not been to church for so long, I almost forget what the services are like," she said.

"Do you not think it rather a pity not to go to church?" I ventured to ask. "It does not matter whether our trouble be of body or of mind, there is always comfort there."

"It would be useless for me," she said—"quite useless."

"But why?" I asked.

And her face paled as she answered: "If man can not forgive, how can Heaven forgive?"

"It is just the reverse," I answered. "It matters little about man forgiving, if Heaven forgives. But you— Oh, Lady Culmore, what a strange thing for you to say! What can you have done for such pardon to be required?"

They were imprudent words, and, had I stopped to think, I should not have uttered them; but she did not take them amiss. I saw a faint motion of her hands, as though she would fain wring them, and then she turned away.

"Lady Culmore," I said to her presently, "if you have a few minutes to spare, I should like to know what my duties are. Up to the present time I have not done anything for you."

"Your duties," she repeated, vaguely—"your duties as a companion to me? It was Sir Rudolph who insisted that I should have a companion. I do not know. He thought I wanted some one to be with me."

"What shall I be able to do to help you?" I asked.

"I hardly know," she replied. "Can you comfort me when I am most miserable?"

"I will do my best," I answered; and she turned from me with a low moan.

"I want comfort," she said—"comfort always."

CHAPTER III.

I could not describe the misery of Sir Rudolph's household. What the shadow was that lay over it I was unable to guess. Husband and wife were both young and handsome; they had almost every gift that Heaven could bestow; nothing was wanting, so far as I could see to complete their happiness; yet they were further apart, it seemed to me, than if a grave had lain between them—a thousand times further apart.

That first Christmas Day that I spent in England will never die from my memory. We did not see Sir Rudolph until dinner-time—seven o'clock; and then it appeared to me that my remonstrance respecting Christmas Day had reached the kitchen, for the dinner comprised something in the shape of Christmas fare—a turkey and a plum pudding. Some one, in a moment of ill-advised enthusiasm, had placed a pretty little sprig of holly—a few glossy leaves, with a fair sprinkling of red berries—on the top of the latter. Sir Rudolph looked at it, and then turned to the butler.

"What is this?" he asked.

"Holly, Sir Rudolph," he replied.

"And why has it been put there?" he continued.

"I thought — perhaps — Christmas Day," he said, stammering.

"Take it away," commanded Sir Rudolph, sternly.

And the butler, with great perturbation of manner and a crimson face, removed the unfortunate sprig of holly.

I read the expression of Sir Rudolph's face, and it said, as plainly as words could speak, "I will have no rejoicing, no outward sign of rejoicing, in this house."

And in such fashion Christmas was celebrated at Ullamere. I watched husband and wife, and I was never so completely puzzled. I could not make out the cause of disagreement at all. It was no petty feeling that actuated him, that had caused those lines on Sir Rudolph's face; one could see that. Some great, deep emotion was at work within him, and at times it almost overpowered him.

Lady Culmore was beautiful enough to charm any man, yet she evidently had no charm for him. Whatever the mystery might be, I felt sure it was not that he cared for anyone else. There was something so true, so noble about him that no one living could suspect him of anything wrong. He was polite to his wife, with a cold, icy politeness that was enough to madden a woman who loved him.

He never said an unnecessary word to her. When he was dining with us, he did the honors of the table. If, on asking her to partake of any dish, she declined, he did not press her. He never repeated the invitation. When a bow or gesture of any kind could take the place of words, it was made to do so. Any little act of politeness, such as placing a chair or a footstool for her, was performed with a formality and coldness that made matters far worse than if he had omitted it. He never went out with her. He went his way, she went hers. He never interfered with her arrangements. If Lady Culmore asked him a question, he replied to it as briefly as possible. He never offered any comment, any suggestion; in fact, between them a gulf lay wide and deep as the grave. But Lady Culmore, I could see, had a wild, passionate adoration for her husband. She loved him so well that she trembled at the sound of his footsteps, at the sound of his voice. Her eyes were always full of entreaty, full of pain and passion. She suffered terribly when he was present; she suffered even more when he was present. In one case it was an agony of longing, in the other an agony of pain. It was the strangest household, surely, into which any one ever entered. Sir Rudolph occupied the west wing. His rooms were all there—his study, dressing-room, bed room, gun-room—and overlooking the park. Lady Culmore's rooms were in the east wing. The great drawing-room and the dining-room, with one or two handsomely furnished reception rooms, were in the centre of the building.

There they met on neutral ground, as it were, but nowhere else. No messages ever passed between them. They lived as perfect strangers, barely interchanging the ordinary civilities of life. Strange husband and wife, surely. And the gloom that surrounded them seemed to spread to others. They went about with a hushed, subdued air and movement, as though they too felt the weight of the mystery.

Only on Sunday morning did we all take breakfast together; and a most solemn and funereal affair it was. During the week Sir Rudolph and Lady Culmore never met until night, when we dined. We spent the day in study and sport. She—well, it seemed to me that her hours were spent in a fevered dream. I shudder now when I think of them. She was never at ease, at rest, for five minutes together. She would ask me to play and sing to or with her, and then in a few minutes would rise and cry out that it was enough; that she did not care for it. She would begin to translate some foreign work, and, ebfore she had written many lies, it would follow the fate of the music.

"Come out with me, Miss Forster," she would say. "I cannot bear the house; it stifles me."

We would go out, and perhaps before we had reached the park gates, she would say, with a dreary sigh—

"Let us go back again. I cannot bear the park."

On the beautiful restless face I never saw for one moment an expression of peace.

The evenings were perhaps the most dreary part of the life at Ullamere. Sir Rudolph never spent them with us. When dinner was ended, he went to his room, and we saw no more of him.

But one evening—ah, me, what a night that was!—a most terrible storm raged. The snow was all washed away, the rain fell in torrents. It beat against the windows as though it would shatter them. The wind was omething appalling in its violence. We could hardly hear each other speak; trees were torn up by the roots; the doors and windows rattled. Once or twice the great bell in the stable rang without rhythm or measure. The dogs howled, the servants were pale with fear.

As usual, Sir Rudolph rose to quit the dining-room. To my surprise, Lady Culmore went up to him. This time she did not touch him; she did not lay her hand upon his arm, but she looked up at him with the most despairing eyes I ever beheld.

"Sir Rudolph," she said—and her voice trembled with the passion of her earnestness—"I pray you remain with us; I am frightened. Heaven is angry to-night, and I am sorely afraid. Stay with us."

For a moment his eyes flashed fire. Then, looking at the white face, with its quivering lips and frightened eyes, the fire died out and profoundest pity took its place.

I thought my prayer added to hers might have effect, and I said:

"The wind and the rain would make any one afraid."

He hesitated half a minute. He did not look at his wife again, but glanced at me.

"Are you really alarmed, Miss Forster?" he asked.

"I should be glad if you would remain," I replied touched by the wistful entreaty of her eyes.

"Then I will," he replied; and the relief on her face was beautiful to see.

I could not understand why she cared so much for his presence. He never spoke to her nor looked at her, never went near her. If she made a remark to me, he was studiously silent; yet I fancied that he listened with some kind of curiosity to all that she said.

During that evening a feeling of friendship sprung up between Sir Rudolph and myself. He was well-bred, graceful and accomplished. To me there was something more than courtesy, something of chivalry in it. I found that he was an excellent French and German scholar. We talked of Goethe and of Heine, of that most graceful and original writer, Fouque, of whom he was an enthusiastic admirer. We had a most enjoyable conversation. Several times I tried my best to draw Lady Culmore into it; but, when I spoke to her, he remained silent. If she made any comment, he did not reply; so, from sheer pity for her embarrassment, I refrained from appealing to her. Still, it seemed strange. There was the husband, intellectual, a deep thinker, fluent speaker, delightful companion; here was the wife, fair and beautiful, as the morning star; between them was a gulf that no human power could bridge.

I liked Sir Rudolph. I could see no fault in him; but I noticed one thing. No matter what we said, no matter how the subject engrossed him, the shade of sorrow and sadness never left his face nor died from his dark eyes. Something of pity for the estranged wife filled my heart. Surely she must suffer terribly! He was so kind, so gentle in his manner to me—to her so cold, so silent. To me it became so painful at last that I said to myself that anything would be better than for Sir Rudolph to spend his evenings with us.

What was the mystery? Even as he talked to me over and over again I asked myself this question. I could see no fault in either, nor could I see in either any cause, any reason for the coldness that existed.

It struck ten at last. The storm had abated. Sir Rudolph arose.

"You will not be afraid now," he said, regarding me with a kindly smile. "The wind has fallen, and the rain has ceased."

I looked instinctively at Lady Culmore. His glance followed mine; but the expression of his face changed completely as his eyes rested on her. Then, with a bow, he was gone; and she turned away with an expression of mortal anguish on her face.

CHAPTER IV.

If Sir Rudolph did not like his wife, why did he not leave her? If she had done him any wrong, why did he not punish her? If there was anything against her of which he knew, why did he not charge her with it? Any mode of life must be better than this.

As the days passed on, I saw no difference, no relaxation of severity and coldness on his part, no lessening of the passionate love and bootless worship on hers. It would be always so, I supposed. I wondered in a dull kind of way at times whether I should spend my whole life in the contemplation of a mystery that I could not understand. Neither husband nor wife ever spoke of each other, or I might have gathered something of the truth from what they said. Sir Rudolph talked to me for hours together on every conceivable occasion, and I helped him occasionaly with some translations; but never once during the time we spent together did he ever mention the name of his wife. I was but young, and had the natural curiosity of youth. I must say I longed to know the mystery of the household in which I lived.

The new year came and was welcomed much as Christmas had been. At times I asked myself if I should remain at Ullamere, if I should not go out into the world, escape from this atmosphere of melancholy; but, odd to say, estranged as they were, I was growing most warmly attached to both—to the wretched husband and the miserable wife. I did not know which I liked best, or which I pitied the more.

HOW TO DEHORN

A simple process of dehorning is recommended by a writer in Hoard's Dairyman: This is the way to dehorn: The first day after the calf has sucked itself full it will lie down and sleep some, and then you can go to it, open the hair where the little horn is to come, and you will find a little naked spot where there is not any hair. Just put a little common potash on the spot, and it won't wake it up and the horn will never grow. By common potash I mean common box lye that they make soap out of. Take a soft wooden stick to put it on with; don't put on too much; just wetting the little button, as we call it, is all that is needed. The next day go and feel of it, and if the spot has a little dent there, then it is dead, and in a short time a scale will come off, and then the hair will grow and be as smooth as a mulley can be. If there is no dent there the next day, then you must put on a little more, but that is seldom needed; and I think it is so much better to have the horns off. Our dairy cattle have no use for them now, and I think it is merciful to kill the horn when it is so little and it can be done without even waking the calf up out of its sleep.

A Quebec despatch says: "It is rumored that Judge Routhier has been appointed Lieutenant Governor of the North West, and will be succeeded here on the Superior Court bench by the Hon. F. Langlier.

When in New Denver Sir William Van Horne told the Leage man to put him down in favor of a Canadian mint. Sir Charles Tupper was non-commital, but another member of the party, E. S. Clouston, General Manager of the Bank of Montreal, naturally could not see any use any possible use for it.

The Duchess of Teck, the mother of the Duchess of York, England's future queen, died suddenly on Wednesday morning as the result of an operation performed the day before. The Duchess was one of the most popular of the Royal family, and her death is felt to be a national loss. Flags are half-masted on all public buildings throughout Great Britain. The Queen, whose cousin she was, was greatly affected on hearing the news.

Winnipeg Tribune: Complaints are constantly reaching the city in regard to the treatment of the men in the Crow's Nest Pass construction work. It is said that with the various charges against them they scarcely get a cent for the first two months' work, and that owing to the fact of the pay being so poor the Dominion immigration department are no longer advising new arrivals to go out to the work. As has been previously reported, all the men who have been able to get employment elsewhere have left, and the majority would be glad to do so if the opportunity presented itself.

At Springfield, Mo., the other day Raymond Allan, twelve years old, went to school carrying a stick of dynamite, which he found in a stone quarry, in his pocket, with a knife, top, marbles and a quantity of other things, common to boys pockets. Getting into a seat the boy banged the dangerous collection against the desk, causing an explosion which will probably cost his life. The child's right hand was blown off, on his right groin a wound was inflicted. The teacher, who was close by, had her skirts torn into shreds, but she was not hurt. The explosion caused a panic among the other children. Several were hurt trying to get out of the building.

One of the latest novels that is interesting the public is "Menotah," a tale of the Riel rebellion, by E. G. Henham. Louis Riel, as one might suppose, is not introduced as an active character, so that the plot tends more towards the study of passion and dwells upon the unscrupulous treatment the Indian women received at the hands of the white traders and settlers of that time. The mighty shadow which looms behind this tale of the rebellion is that of the loyalty the late Archbishop Tache showed, who, almost unaided, crushed the rising spirit of the halfbreeds and Indians and brought the insurrection to a close. Menotah's story is a sad one, and yet it might have been painted with a darker color.

All Read It

And Read It All—Every page, every column, every line. No paper in North Kootenay has one-fourth its circulation, or is as well read by so many persons as THE SEMI-WEEKLY REVELSTOKE HERALD. To reach the people of North Kootenay its columns must be used, and in fact it can boast of what no other paper in its district can. Every business house in Revelstoke advertises in it, and are satisfied it brings results. What better guarantee could outside advertisers ask?

Its newsy columns, its telegraphic, its typographical neatness, its free delivery, its interest in the welfare of Kootenay, are steadily increasing its circulation.

The meetings will be continued at the same time and place every Sunday afternoon in the future. All interested in the work are invited to attend and take part.

William Sepio is back from a prospecting trip in the Lardeau country, where he has been for the past three months. He reports that he has staked two claims on Five Mile Creek, at a point five miles from Trout Lake City. The vein is 35 feet wide and the ore assays $10 in gold and 15 per cent copper. It was only 12 miles from Thompson's Landing. It is Mr. Sepio's intention to develop the claims, as he considers them good property.—Rossland Miner.

The Australian Variety Company gave their first concert in Peterson's hall last night. The audience was not very large, but to judge by the applause appreciated the entertainment greatly. The programme comprised a variety of pieces including Hawaiian songs, Negro melodies, Spanish dancing and vocal and instrumental music. The numbers were frequently encored. The boy coon was very amusing and the general character of the show very high class. A second concert will be given to-night, when the company will no doubt get a good house.

Murder at Edmonton.

EDMONTON, N.W.T., Nov. 2.—Saturday night, the Mounted Police brought in a 16-year-old boy named Belther, who was committed for trial for the murder of a companion named Redmond, aged 17, at Leduc. On Thursday, the boys were present at a harvesting bee, and got wrestling. Redmond threw Belther twice. Belther got on a straw stack, and dared Redmond to come up. Redmond got on the stack, when Belther drew a knife and stabbed him in the neck. Redmond died shortly afterwards.

Along the line of the C. & E. several elevators are being erected this year. The Dominion Elevator Co. are building at Red Deer, Leduc and Wetaskiwin, Brackman & Ker at Wetaskiwin and the Manitoba Grain Co. at Leduc.

A third train per week has been added to the service of the C. & E. between Edmonton and Calgary. It will carry freight and passengers but no mail. Until further notice it will run on schedule time of the regular trains leaving Calgary on Tuesday morning, arriving at Edmonton at 7:00 o'clock the same evening, and returning at 8:00 on Wednesday mornings. The first trip of this train was made this week.

James Atkinson, a miner, who came down from Athabasca Landing last week for supplies, reports gold diggings in the vicinity of Isle LaCrosse, east of Fort McMurray on the Athabasca, worth from five to ten dollars per day.

A St. Paul company has begun getting out lumber on the Athabasca for the building of a line of steamers for the Mackenzie route. Work will be rushed and the steamers completed in time for the opening of navigation.

Donald Mining Division.

For the month of October four free miners licenses have been issued. Five claims have been staked and recorded. No assessment work has been recorded and there are no applications for Crown Grants. Donald division has not attracted the same amount of attention as the other mining divisions in East Kootenay have done during the past season. Next year however the tide of prosperity which is flowing north will reach Donald and that there will be a different record of business.—Golden Miner.
