Budget report

The university must be true that this will require a reduction in resources allocated to some or all other activities of the university.

(2) Even though The University of British Columbia is an older institution than the other two universities, in many areas of its activities it has not yet been able to allocate to all the resources that they require. A conscious effort therefore needs to be made to preserve and generate additional revenues. This must not, however, lead to the establishment of a high quality and to improve in areas where the quality is lower than it ought to be.

(3) If enrolment in an area of core activity appeared to be low, prima facie efforts should be made to increase it. A suggested approach to a perceived "high" enrolment is set out in paragraph 3.06 (4). (4) Special value to Canada or British Columbia, or uniqueness, is simply added reassurance to the existing program or developing core activities of the university.

(5) Despite the very strong presumption in favor of retaining and developing core activities, there could be cases where the university should consider contracting or even eliminating completely, an activity otherwise regarded as core. For example, if the quality and enrollment in an existing program were low, if the costs were high and alternative programs were offered at other institutions, one might argue that it would be better for the university to eliminate the program completely.

3.1.1 (2) In the case of core related activities, the university should retain existing activities, but as a general principle should consider with great care any proposals to add new activities of this type. That would be particularly the case where the proposed activity builds on, rather than creates, the foundation for core activity.

3.1.1 (3) The quality of any existing core related activity is poor, consideration should be given to improving its quality. (3) If enrolment in a core-related activity is perceived to be high, the universities should be more prepared to reduce enrolment than it would be in the case where enrolment in a core-related activity were low. This is a period of time when a case could well exist for reducing the support for such activity.

(4) Special value to Canada or British Columbia, or uniqueness, would be reasons for retaining and strengthening any core related activity.

(5) The university ought to be prepared, more than in the case of core activities, to reduce or even eliminate core-related operations. For example, if the quality and enrolment in a particular program were low, and the costs were high, the program might be reduced or even eliminated completely, and this event though there were no replacement activities being offered in the province, the university might wish to eliminate the program.

3.1.2 (1) The university should not have any core activities which are the result of financial abundance. Therefore, even if there is no financial inducement to do so, the university should consider whether it wishes to continue in work in non core activities. If it wishes, for example, to provide a further degree course, and to provide this for a number of years, it should be prepared to bear the costs of this course.

(2) A non core-activity's continued existence at the university could, however, be justified. For example, this might be done on the basis of high quality and low costs. High enrolment and the lack of any other similar program in the province.

3.1.3 Assuming that an academic plan is developed following the suggested guidelines, there are three matters which in a sense are of an ancillary nature, but which are nonetheless of importance:

(1) The procedures we have proposed exclude by implication either expansion or reversion by pro rata increases or reductions in the allocation of resources. Decisions must be made by reference to certain principles that have been agreed on in advance of making specific decisions.

(2) The social and human impact of any reorganization of the work of the university cannot be foreseen. Attention will therefore need to be paid to the effects of reorganization on faculty staff and students. Equally, the effect of the alteration of academic activities on students who might have been planning to attend the university will have to be borne in mind.

(3) Any plan that it developed can not be excessively rigid. Some latitude must be made for flexibility in its application, and in the implementation of the academic plan, the university needs to reconsider from time to time the general structure of any plan that it adopts.

IV. IMPLEMENTATION

4.0.1 In the time available to us we have not been able to give proper consideration to the implementation of the principles which we suggest should form the framework of any academic plan adopted by the university. In any event, we doubt if we could draw up any implementation scheme without some reasonable period of consultation within the university. In this respect therefore we do not more than state what we consider to be the principles. First, if the university should accept our proposals as providing the framework for an academic plan, it should then immediately set to work to apply this framework. Second, whatever the framework of implementation, it needs to be done with the due involvement of the academic bodies of the university, in particular the faculties and the Senate.

Oriental night helps library

UBC raised almost $10,000 for support of the Oriental Night event at the Robson Square shopping center.

The largest single donors to the fund raising event were the Museum of China and the Vancouver Chinatown Lions Club. Some 50 individuals also made contributions. Entertainment was provided by the University Union, Vancouver's Chinese-language journal.

Those who attended the event have a selection of Japanese and Chinese music and film screenings and a martial arts exhibition.

Funds raised by the event will be used for support of the Library, Music Program and Cultural Centre. The proceeds of the event will be donated to the library of its kind in North America.

NITEP reunion

The 50th anniversary of the NITEP reunion will be held on July 10 at the University Fairmont Hotel in Vancouver. Tickets are $25 each. For information call 228-2693.
