Why Are Good Mines for Sale?

This question is probably, the hardest one that mining brokers have to contend with. Purchasers of mining properties are a very suspicious set and invariably look on a good property that is offered with dubious eves, and about the first question asked is, "why do you want to sell?" There are a great many reasons, and numerous answers could be made to this seemingly important question. There is comparatively little, if any "mine saiting" in these days, and it is about time that investors took properties on their merits, and let the question of why owners wanted to sellalone. Generally this question can be answered in the following simple statement : In a great many instances the owners are men whose lives have been spent in poverty and a daily struggle for existence. They know they have a fortune; they have had enough of battle and strife. They want to enjoy life. They have dreamed of a "good time," and they want to realize their dreams. The man, no matter whether young or old, who never before had a dollar, who suddenly finds himself the owner of property worth many thousands, has an uncontrollable desire to see his fortune in shining gold or crisp bank notes. He wants to take life easy. He wants to move out of a miner's cabin into a home provided with all the Juxuries o. life and he don't want to wait. He has not been wealthy long enough to want more. He feels that he never will want more, but what he has in the way of property he wants to convert at once into cash. It may be added that there are now many prospectors climbing the mountain Division of Vale District, B. C. sides, searching for the precious metals, who have owned great mines, sold

A Winnipegger's Big Mining Deal. A big mining deal is reported from Winnipeg. It is said that John Inkster of that city has just completed a contract for the sale of a gold mine at Rat Portage, in which he has some considerable interest. According to information received by the Nov-Wester, Mr. Inkster purchased the mine for $10,000, on the understand-ing that the deeds were to be placed in ing Division of Yale District, B. C. the bank, where he and his partners in the scheme deposited their paper for the amount, Tais done, Mr. Inkster set sail for England. from whom a cablegram has come to his partner saying that the deal was completed and that the sum of $500,000 would be paid so soon as the Eiglish engineer, who is said to be now on his way here, should certify that Mr. Inkster's assertions are verified. This will leave $200.-000 to each of the two concerned, after paying the purchase sum to the first owners.
