LIBRARY ACTIVITY BOOK FOR HOLIDAY FUN

ST WIBBY REPORTS...

HERE it is Christmas again and what a wonderful time to announce two new arrivals on the Planet Earth.
MAN CHILD was born to Mr & Mrs Ken MacKenzie, John Duncan arrived Nov. 29th and weighed in at 8 lbs 11 onzs. Donna, John Duncan's proud mother, was in the Law Library.
Also from over their we hear that Mr & Mrs Tom Fletcher (Brenda) welcomed a son named Ian on December 8th. Brenda was also with For/Agr. for a short while. Congratulations to both couples.

SORRY Curric- Lab. I left you off the list of those now on the Automated System. Incidentally you have probably all read by now that a new record was set on Tuesday Nov. 24th when 17,870 transactions were tabulated on that day.

DO MAKE an effort to go up to Special Collections to see that most exciting display of the "Dali Alice" folio. Each plate is originally monographed and the folio is personally autographed. Well worth a visit.

DONT forget a visit to the new conservatory on the top of Little Mountain. We hear first hand that it is fabulous.

JULIE LANE and ELVI EIGENDORFF both of Cataloguing won that Football Pool. How about making it more general next year.

IN THE LUCKY stiff department Ture Erickson of Sedgewick off to Hawaii and Mary Harwood of Systems celebrating her 21st birthday on the 21st of Dec. - in England.

For that let down feeling after Christmas don't forget the WINE AND CHEESE party at the Cecil Green Park January 3rd Saturday. Everyone welcome. Where else could you drink all the wine or soft drinks you want, eat all the cheese you can consume (crackers too) and dance to the music of Leo Aquino's band. for the low price of $2.00. Get your tickets now (pay Jan 5th if you like) but book now so that the Lib. Assts. Assoc. get an idea how many bottles etc to order.

GOOD LUCK and speedy recovery to Martina who has been sadly missed this month by her fellow Biblos staffers.

REMEMBER to bring your goodies for the HOSPITALITY TABLE Tuesday and good luck to every one in the draws even though only a few will be chosen.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT re. those draws.
Last month we rashly stated that there would be a number on each of the issues of Biblos this month to be used for the draws to be held in conjunction with the HOSPITALITY TABLE however it was decided at the last meeting of the Biblos staff that to avoid confusion the names of all staff members, including Hourly will be written out and put in a hat. So it will be names that will be drawn to receive those "fabulous" prizes. Good luck.

ANN GARDNER of Serials wishes to add to our announcement of last month re. the transfer of those 1000 Reading Room titles. She didnot do it alone, but was ably assisted by the team work of Vera Niesson, Heather Hogins Of the Reading Rooms, the extra effort of her colleagues in Serials, David Miller and his loan of an extra typewriter, Pat Lanphere (temporary help) and in fact Uncle Tom Cobley and all...including Walter.

Well St Wenceslas awaits and I'm off to celebrate. Happy Christmas to one and all and I'll see you again in the Seventies. Here's hoping they will bring new hope to the World.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT. To avoid embarassment it must be stated here and now that owing to unforeseen circumstances beyond our control all typing in this issue of Biblos was done by persons other than those in the Front Office. They cannot be held responsible. Next month we will be back to normal - I hope. Merry Christmas Lynn Pat and Judy.

A CHRISTMAS MEMORY

"Anne", I stated with some force, "I most definitely think we should put something old-fashioned back into Christmas."

"Perhaps Christ?" Anne suggested as she hauled another sack full of stocking-stuffers up the stairs.

"Yes and no", I replied, gingerly fingering a mysterious, masculine-looking package. "This commercial approach to the season isn't entirely bad. I enjoy receiving presents as well as the next fellow." It was socks. Definitely socks. "It's just that so much of what we do is in terms of dollars and cents. In later years Tommy should have some warm and cherished memory of a special way we celebrated the Nativity in our house. Sort of a tradition of our own making."

I took another sip of the Old-Fashioned I had just mixed.

"If I don't get off my feet soon", Anne ventured, finishing her third trip to the car, "Tommy is going to have the warm and cherished memory of a nativity right in his very own kitchen. How's that for a tradition of our own making?"

Anne, then in her eighth month, was becoming slightly sardonic in her outlook.

"Here, let me help you", I said, getting up and taking her purse. "The doctor said you mustn't overdo things right now. Anyway, I have a great idea. Why don't we make a little crêche scene for the mantle? I'll build the stable out of twigs and fashion a little manger. Then I'll carve the figures out of soap or something and you can make the costumes. We can set the whole thing on cotton-wool and add some lights. It'll be a real family thing to do! What do you think?"

Anne seemed strangely dubious. She was obviously picturing the dripping faucet I had promised to fix two years earlier.

"How about Tommy? Where does he fit in? He's only two and has four hands."

Tommy would be just fine I assured her. The climactic moment could be his. As the crowning touch, he could put the babe into the manger. The vision of the three of us on the floor in front of a blazing fire, with the voice of the Vienna

Boys' Choir carolling in the background, was irresistible.

* * * *

Anne's role in the enterprise ended the day I went to Woolworths for a few materials. They came in a book called the Jumbo Manger Punch-Out Kit which sold for 89¢.

"It isn't exactly what I had in mind", I admitted. "And it kind of leaves you out. But there just wasn't time to start from scratch what with the faucet and everything."

"I understand dear", Anne managed, bravely.

"Anyway, I think there should be projects for fathers and sons to do by themselves. You know, things like plumbing, wiring, carpentry."

Anne gave me a look. "And punch-outs", she said.

Things started out well. The fire crackled merrily, the carols rang out joyfully, and Tommy sat beside me, a picture of innocent charm. This was just the mood I had imagined, and a flood of seasonal goodwill engulfed me.

"You see, son", I said gently, "here are the Wisemen who have come to see the Baby Jesus. They have travelled a long, long way and have followed a star right to the spot where Jesus is sleeping by Mary, his mummy."

At that moment Balthasar bit the dust. Tommy had suddenly snatched him from his perch. "Man go bye-bye", he shouted, crunching the king, frankincense and all.

"No, no", I said, retrieving the Wiseman and smoothing him out. "Tommy mustn't touch." I was trying to be patient but my voice had developed an unpleasant edge.

Anne looked in from the kitchen. "Everything alright, dear?"

"Fine", I said, "just fine. Tommy really seems to be getting the Christmas spirit." I looked at him. He was beginning to chew the donkey.

"Naughty boy!" I yelled. "Daddy said not to touch!" Tommy's face crumpled and he began howling.

The choir sang "Peace on earth and mercy mild".

"Now, Tom", Anne said.

"He's wrecking everything", I snapped, suddenly sullen.

"Well, he's only a baby."

"God and sinners reconciled". The choir pursued its theme relentlessly.

I gesticulated wildly. "Look at him now! He's walking all over the Baby Jesus!"

As I swept Tommy aside, I deftly eliminated the detachable star he had been examining. In his other hand he was holding the Madonna.

"Don't you dare touch the Virgin Mary!", I shouted, and made a lunge. Her head came off in my hand.

"Join the triumph of the skies!", sang the boys from Vienna.

"You finish the crêche. It's designed for children to do", said Anne, coolly, as she whisked our howling son off to bed.

I stood in the middle of the room, Bethlehem in shambles about me. Things had definitely not gone well. Scotch tape would help, but at that moment Scotch on the rocks seemed infinitely more appealing.

From the Humanities Division

A SHORT STORY - but true - St Wibby swears his pal Anthony had something to do with this.

One day there came a call to the Humanities Division, it was the voice of an elderly lady who we will call Mrs K. Mrs K. asked several questions about the University of Alaska and we tried to answer her as best we could being completely mystified as to the reason for her queries. After a very long conversation she finally offered to explain.

She had no intention of enrolling as she explained, she was rather old for that, but she had a problem. Apparently she was driving along the endless Canadian Highway in the Interior of B.C. around the Burns Lake area and with her was a friend from Manitoba, her homeland, who was interested in Botanics. They spotted some lovely coloured shrubs a little way off the road and stopped the car to investigate.

Stepping out into the vast emptiness of that part of B.C. Mrs K. walked to the bush to cut some branches. She bent to pick some other plants and as she did so saw the glitter of gold beneath her hand. It was a gold ring with a precious stone set in it. Inside the band was engraved three initials, the name of the University of Alaska and a date 1917.

We were able to tell Mrs K. that the University was founded in 1915 and an act in 1917 by the Territorial Legislation created the Alaska Agricultural College and School of Mines. Therefore the ring might be a commemorative of that date.

Mrs K. subsequently wrote to Alaska to find out if there was indeed a graduate with the same initials as those in the ring. She received an affirmative answer with the address of a graduate in the States. She wrote to him and asked if he had lost a ring and if so to describe it and the place where he thought he might had lost it. The reply received from him described almost precisely the place where Mrs K. and her friend had found the ring.

Mrs K. notified us that the Gold Ring of Burns Lake had been returned to its rightful owner.

POEM

My first is in greetings, garland and gay
My second in Woodwards but not in the Bay,
My third is in Noddy and Popeye and Pooh,
My fourth is in sandle but not in the shoe
My fifth is in Wassail, in the bowl too as well
My sixth is in bill but not in a bell,
My seventh in sparkle, glitter and glow.
My eighth in the mail which at Christmas will flow.

My ninth is in tree and the presents beneath
My tenth is in holly but not in the wreath,
My eleventh in wine, woman, water not beer,
My twelfth twice in Santa but not in reindeer.
My thirteenth in warmth and the crackle of logs.
My fourteenth in cider but not in eggnogs.
My fifteenth in snowmen, icicles, sleighs,

My sixteenth in mincepies and mistletoe sprays.
My seventeenth in shepherds and wise men at dawn
My eighteenth in manger and the king that was born

My whole is a thought that if practiced all year
Would bring peace to us all and a world without fear.
