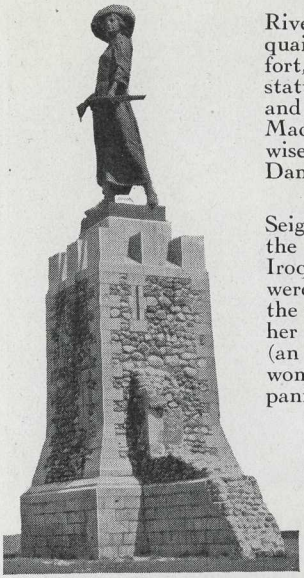
MADELEINE DE VERCHERES



On the south shore of the St. Lawrence River, 21 miles from Montreal, lies the quaint old village of Vercheres. An old fort, close to the water's edge, and the statue of a young girl, animated in pose and gesture, recalls the heroic story of Madeleine de Vercheres, or, as she is otherwise known, "The Heroine of Castle Dangerous."

In 1692 Madeleine, daughter of Seigneur Rochères, successfully defended the fort against an onslaught by fifty Iroquois Indians. The heroine's parents were at the time visiting Montreal. When the alarm came, the inmates of the fort—her brothers (two mere boys) a servant (an old man of eighty) and a number of women and children—were in a state of panic.

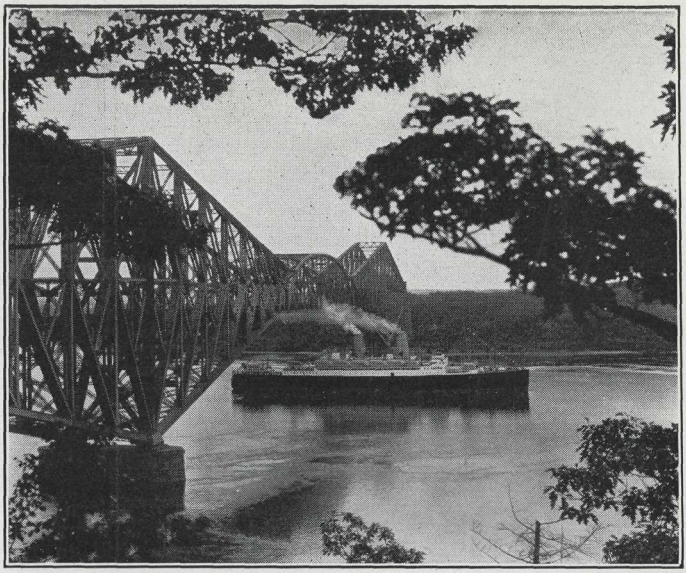
Madeleine, only fourteen years of age, at once took command. Taking a gun, she said to her brothers, "Let us fight to the death!" The boys were born soldiers and, inspired by their daring sister, they made good use of the opportunity before them.

The Indians did not know how weak was the garrison of the fort. Every few minutes "All's well" rang out from fort to blockhouse. The Indians heard it and thought the fort must be full of watchful soldiers, so the attack was postponed until dawn.

For a week the siege continued. During that time Madeleine took but hasty meals, and contented herself with brief intervals of sleep, sitting at a table with her head lying on her arms folded over her gun ready for action. Day after day the Iroquois camped in the woods till the garrison should be starved out, and whenever they attempted to approach the fort, the crack of a musket and the whiz of a bullet warned them to keep out of sight.

After seven days the splashing of paddles was heard in the St. Lawrence, and a hail in French told the besieged that help had come at last. Madeleine posted a sentry at the gate and walked down to the river. Saluting the officer in command, she said, "Sir, I resign my command." "Which could not have been more bravely held," was the reply; and the soldiers marched into the fort to relieve the worn-our defenders.

In Canadian history Madeleine will always be most famous as the "Heroine of Castle Dangerous."



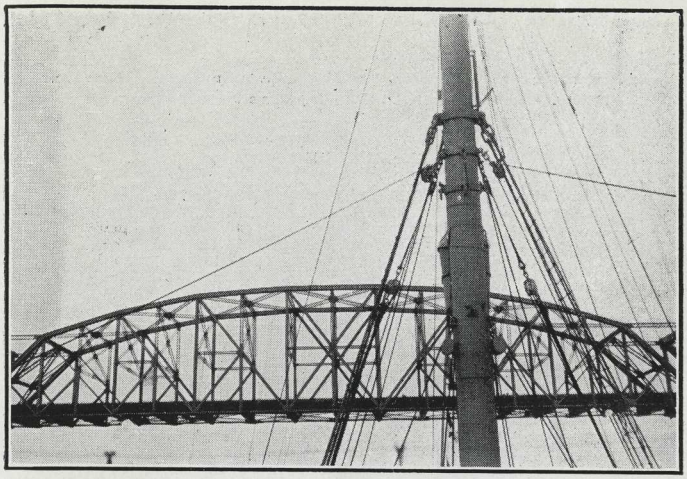
THE QUEBEC BRIDGE

Canadian Pacific Steamships from Montreal are approaching picturesque Quebec with its old world atmosphere when the huge Quebec Bridge looms up ahead.

There could be no greater contrast of ancient and modern! For this great triumph of engineering skill—a greater triumph because of the way man fought and fought again until he conquered—is the personification of modernity. It represents the genius of modern brains as surely and as distinctively as the Citadel in the Ancient City reflects the engineering of a bygone day.

Building operations were first commenced in 1907 and the bridge carried its first load October 17th, 1917.
Some interesting facts about the bridge are:

Span, 1800 feet—100 feet longer than the Forth Bridge.
Suspended span, 640 feet.
Height above river, 150 feet.
Total length of bridge between approaches, 3239 feet.
Total steel in suspended span, 5510 tons.
Total steel in pins, 1700 tons.
Total steel in whole bridge, 66480 tons.



An Optical Illusion

Massive though the big bridge is, its spider appearance when it is first sighted is deceptive. This deception of distance, however, is as nothing when compared with the sight that meets the eye as the bow of the ship, now cutting the merest of ripples in the smooth waters of the river, approaches the bridge and the formerly spidery beams and trusses take on a formidable appearance of mass and weight. Watched from the decks—even from the greater height of the ship's navigating bridge—the steel structure, bacause of its mass appears, as the ship gets closer and closer, to be hanging much lower than it actually is.

In fact, so great is the power of vision over the intelligence that although it is obvious to the mind that the ship will easily clear the lower stringers of the bridge, one cannot readily conceive how it is possible.

As a matter of fact even the Canadian Pacific vessels, which are the largest ships to pass under the bridge, have a clearance of from fifteen to twenty feet.
