Haste Quite Unnecessary

The evening was damp and cold and foggy, and the Rev. Sandy Macgregor, while walking absent-mindedly along the street, fell heavily into a deep hole which had just been made by order of the local sanitary authorities.

For a long while the Rev. Sandy struggled to escape. Then despairingly he began to shout for help. A passing laborer heard his cries, and looking down into the hole, asked who was there.

The minister informed him, but in return received only meagre comfort.

Weel, weel, said the laborer, ye needna kick up sic' a noise. You'll no' be needed afore the Sawbeth, and this is only Wednesday nicht!

Friday afternoon. Mr. Grigson was busy, and being particularly anxious to get away from the office, greatly resented the arrival of visitors.

Still, business is business and word had come up that there was a gentleman downstairs waiting to see him on an important matter. So Mr. Grigson swallowed his resentment and bade the messenger bring up the gentleman.

The gentleman entered—a cheeky-looking little whipper-snapper, four feet nothing in his socks.

Mr. Grigson glanced at him angrily.

What the dickens do you mean by saying you want to see me on important business, he thundered. Are you the boy who was here a week or so ago looking for a job?

Yes, sir.

Then what the— began Mr. Gregson, now purple in the face. But the youth interrupted him.

You said then, sir, he remarked calmly, that you wanted an older boy. That's why I've come back again now.

Two travellers in the fireproof safe line were soliciting orders from a merchant, who decided to bestow his order upon the one whose advocacy proved the most convincing.

Well, remarked Number One, a cat was put in one of our safes, and a fire raged all round the safe for 24 hours and the animal came out alive.

A cat was put in one of our safes, asserted Number Two. Then the safe stood in a fire for 48 hours and the animal was taken out dead!

Ah! snorted Number One triumphantly.

Yes, added Number Two. The cat was frozen to death.

Number Two got the order.

Tommy Knew

The teacher was endeavoring to illustrate to her pupils the association of different species of life with common substances.

For instance, she explained, you will always find plants where there is soil, birds where there are trees, and so on. Now can anyone tell me what we associate with fish?

Suddenly, with the velocity of an aeroplane, a hand shot up from the back row. It was the property of Tommy Jones. Please, miss, I know, piped that worthy.

Well, was the teacher's query.

Chips, was the unexpected reply.

Wanted to be Realistic

She could not see his face as he knelt and asked her to be his. She was glad of that, for she did not wish to know how much suffering her refusal caused him.

She told him as gently as she could that their lives could not be linked together; that, although she admired him and esteemed him, she felt that it would be risking his future as well as her own to consent to a union where she was sure no affinity existed. It was a touching speech, and she threw so much heart into it that she did not observe that he was taking notes in shorthand. When she had concluded he arose and put his notebook in his pocket. Extending his hand, he remarked, genially:

I'm ever and ever so much obliged to you.

S-t-r-r-r!

You said it so nicely, and I'm under a thousand obligations. I'm writing a novel, and I have a scene in which a girl refuses to marry a man. I was anxious to avoid the stereotyped style of depicting such incidents and make it realistic. You're the seventh girl I have proposed to, and every one of the others accepted me. If you had said: Yes, I think I'd have been completely discouraged.

There ought to be only one head to any family, shouted the orator.

That's true replied a married looking man in the audience.

You agree with me? shouted the speaker.

I do, replied the married looking man; I've just paid for hats for nine daughters.

CHILDHOOD COLIC COMPLETELY CURED

I know of no other medicine for little ones to equal them." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Tired of Waiting

Puddleton and Mudmore were met to decide supremacy at cricket, and the newly-elected captain of the Puddletonians, to signalize the honor done to him, was defraying the cost of a hot luncheon. This repast was to be taken at the close of the first innings and things looked promising for an early meal until the last two Mudmore batsmen took it into their heads to offer a sturdy resistance to the home bowling. This fact seemed particularly disquieting to a stout man in a white apron, who stood at the entrance to the pavilion signalling to the home umpire.

How's that? bellowed the bowler, at length, as the ball struck the batsman on the head.

Hout, came the reply.

Hout! cried the batsman, scornfully. Well I'm done.

Yes, snapped the umpire, and so's the mutton, guv'nor. I ain't goin' to eat cinders for nobody.

Tit for Tat

The other morning a warder entered a cell and found the prisoner had not finished his allowance of bread, and was trying to hide it. The warder immediately threw it out of the window, remarking that it would do for the birds to pick, and gave the prisoner his supply of oakum to do. He returned some time later to collect the prisoner's work, but found him asleep, and upon remonstrating with him, and inquiring where his work was, received the following reply:

Well, guv'nor, yer see you threw my breakfast out of the window, and I threw the oakum. If the birds can pick my bread they can pick my oakum, too!

A Tiffin, Ohio, man once discovered in ambush a sad-faced little girl with a fistful of mud. She was standing in a sheltered corner of a grocery store and was from time to time peering around down the street.

Who are you waiting for, little girl,, asked the man.

Henrietta.

What's Henrietta done? asked the man with a significant glance at the mud in the child's hand.

Nothin'. Don't you know she's she's queen of the May?

Young man, we need brains in our business.

I know you do. That is why I'm looking for a job here.

To those About to Wed

For the benefit of prospective bridegrooms, a vicar has proposed several don'ts. Whatever you do, he says, don't spoil everything on the wedding day by telling your wife what ripping tarts your mother makes. Swallow the bride's pie, tell her it's a dream of delight, and then take a pill on the sly.

When you marry a woman don't imagine that you know her. You'd be a fool if you did. She knows you right enough, or she wouldn't marry you. Judge a person by intellect rather than bulk. I'd back Disraeli any day against Jack Johnson. Because a woman is well dressed, it does not follow that she is clever; some stylishly-dressed women are fools. Don't judge her by her lips or nose, or the quality of her dimples, but by intelligence and goodness.

The vicar told an amusing story of a good-living lass who was asked by a chap sitting next to her in a railway carriage whether she believed every word in the Bible. She said she did.

Surely, the man exclaimed, you don't believe that Jonah was swallowed by a whale?

I do, she answered. When I get to heaven I'll ask him about it.

But suppose he's not in heaven? said the man.

Then you ask him, the girl replied.

Obliging Him

Arthur Roberts, the famous comedian, like most celebrities of the stage, was from time to time pestered by would-be actors who had an idea that they were born geniuses. One young man was particularly persistent in his attempts to see Mr. Roberts, and wrote to him frequently asking for advice as to how he could get on the stage.

Mr. Roberts politely advised him to give up the idea, but the young man would not do so, and began haunting the stage-door of the theatre, until at last the comedian could stand it no longer. The aspirant was invited in one evening, and Mr. Roberts met him on the stage after the fall of the curtain.

You are the gentleman who wants to know how to get on the stage? he said. Well, isn't it simple? Isn't it easy? You're on it now! No, not a word of thanks! I'm delighted I'm sure! You'll find find it just as easy to get off. Good-night. After that he was left in peace.

A Household Medicine.—They that are acquainted with the sterling properties of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil in the treatment of many ailments would not be without it in the house. It is truly a household medicine and as it is effective in dealing with many ordinary complaints it is cheaper than a doctor. So, keep it at hand, as the call for it may come most unexpectedly.

Served Him Right

At a local cricket match in a village not far from Durham the captain of the home side, in playing a fast ball from the crack bowler of the visiting eleven, received a sharp crack on the knuckles. As the batsman danced round the crease in obvious pain a small boy in the crowd was heard to exclaim: Serve him right!

You shouldn't talk like that, my lad, observed an old gentleman, reprovingly. The man's hurt, you know.

Yes, Aa knaw, retorted the youngter, an' it'll teach 'im what a rap o'er the knuckles is like.

The batsman was the village schoolmaster.

Must Have a Grumble

I have a complaint to make.

It was a guest at the seaside hotel who spoke.

What is it? asked the polite proprietor.

My room, said the angry guest, is comfortable, and the bed is soft.

But, my dear sir—

The bathing is actually good, and the London newspapers reach here in three hours.

Why, I—

The table is good, and the waiters do not expect to be tipped.

But sir, I don't see—

In fact, the place is delightful, and your bill last week didn't bear a single thing that I had not had. I can't stand it!

But what do you mean? I have purposely arranged everything for the comfort of my guests, and thought I had done all in my power.

That's the whole difficulty. Everything's so good that I can't believe it's true, and I lie awake all night for something to happen and my dream to end. I'm fretting myself ill over it, and if you can't give me something to grumble about pretty soon I'll have to pack up and go home!

When the new girl from the employment agency had duly presented her references and the mistress had read them over, she regarded the girl with a stern eye.

I am not satisfied with these references, she finally said.

I'm not, ayether, mum, said the frank Celt, but they're the best I could get, mum.

A King Murderer

The Story of the Two Unfortunate Princes

By MARGARET BARR

The romance-tragedy of English history is the career of the Duke of Gloucester, afterward King Richard III. Within it are many stories, and Richard is both the hero and the villain of every one of them.

When King Edward IV., Richard's brother, died, Edward's oldest son, who became king, was a little boy. Richard, whose courage was equaled only by his ambition and who possibly at the time designed to make himself king, at once dashed at the head of a troop of his adherents to where young Edward was and captured him.

The next important scene in the tragedy is the little king riding on horseback from the city of London to Westminster abbey, his Uncle Richard riding beside him, regarding his nephew-sovereign with every pretense of reverence and affection. It is probable that Richard was even then plotting to supplant the child; that this apparent devotion was to win the confidence of the people with a view to furthering his opportunity, but whether the arch fiend then contemplated murdering his brother's son has not been proved.

The little king's mother as soon as she saw reason to fear her brother-in-law took refuge with her other children in the sanctuary of Westminster, for in those days no person, king or commoner, might drag one from the sanctuary without incurring the anathemas of the church. But the boy remained with his uncle, who also secured possession of his younger brother, the Duke of Clarence.

The Tower of London, which for more than two centuries has been only a fortress and is now mostly an object of curiosity for tourists, was then also a palace and a prison. Richard fixed the residence of his nephews there, assuming to reign in the minor king's name. England at the time needed a strong governing hand. Richard succeeded in convincing certain persons of influence that he had better be king. Others he threatened; others he put out of his way by beheading them. Many of the commoners were with him.

When all was ripe he seized the scepter. From the first the little princes were virtually prisoners in the Tower, though they were treated with all the reverence due a king and a prince of the blood. But they never came out from the gloomy walls. The people never saw them. Young as they were, they were old enough to realize that they were in the hands of one in whose way they stood and their lives were in danger.

Richard had a son of his own whom he idolized and whom he desired should succeed him on the throne of England. Probably this feature of the case turned his mind to the murder of the two princes, his nephews, for so long as they lived their title to the crown would stand before that of Richard's son. At any rate, there came a time when Richard determined to murder his nephews and looked about for some one to do the deed.

He sent an order to the lieutenant of the Tower to have the princes put to death. The officer refused to obey it. In this he braved the king, then an all powerful sovereign, but to force a man to commit the murder would have at once made the murder known, and this did not suit Richard's purpose. When he received word that the lieutenant would not do his bidding he lamented aloud that he had no one on whom he could rely in his extremity. A page overheard what he said and, knowing his meaning, told him that he knew a man who would serve him as he wished to be served. The man was called, accepted the commission and left for the Tower.

For four centuries a pitying world has been wondering as to the death scene of the poor little king and his brother. All that is known is that to keep their cries from being heard they were smothered in their bedclothes. When all was over their bodies were taken down to the foot of the stairs below the room in which the deed was done and there buried. Later, when the murder became known, it was given out that they had been buried in Westminster abbey. But this story was disproved many years later, in the reign of Charles II., when on making changes in the Tower the skeletons of two children were found at the foot of the staircase, as recorded by one of the murderers at the time of the murder.

The taking off of the princes, being known only to a few, was kept for a long while. But there were whisperings, and in time it became known to the queen mother and her daughters that their dear ones had been murdered by their uncle. In addition to their horror at the crime and their bereavement, they dreaded lest the king murderer, defying the sacredness of their refuge, would drag them from the sanctuary and kill them also. As time passed and nothing was heard by the people of the princes, who were supposed to be living in the royal apartments of the Tower, they began to wonder. Then the dreadful news spread from mouth to mouth, and a great horror fell upon all England.

At last the murderer received his first punishment. His beloved son, for whom he had committed the crime, sickened and died. Richard had no other son, and at his death, after all, the crown would rest on another head than one of his own family.

Meanwhile the queen mother of the murdered king remained in the sanctuary. Her oldest daughter, Elizabeth, was now heir apparent to the throne. The Duke of Buckingham, a powerful noble, conceived the idea of marrying this princess to a prince of the blood, the Earl of Richmond. The princess being of the house of York and the earl of the house of Lancaster—two families that had kept England in a protracted warfare by their disputes for the crown—the marriage would unite the two families and end the wars. Richmond was in France, but he crossed the channel and landed in England at the head of a French force. The attempt, however, was a failure. Richard with his accustomed energy attacked him before the French and English columns were prepared to fight and defeated and routed them. The Duke of Buckingham was captured by Richard and immediately beheaded.

A second landing was made by Richmond, and Richard again sprang forth to his work.

On the king's way to the battle which was to decide his fate he slept in an inn called the Blue Boar. Richard took with him his own bed and had it set up for him to sleep in the night before the battle. He had on his conscience the crime of murder, his nobles were beginning to desert him, and there was no one to whom he might turn for comfort.

In a house not far away lived a boy under the care of a man who, though he gave him every comfort and educated him, told him that he was not his father. The boy's name was Richard Plantagenet, and this is all he knew of his parentage.

The night before the battle of Bosworth a trooper rode up to the house where the boy, Plantagenet, lived and told him to come with him. They went to the inn where the king was lodged, and the boy stood in the royal presence. Richard embraced him and told him that he was his father, though the lad had not been born in wedlock.

"Tomorrow," said the king, "I fight for my crown. If I win I will acknowledge you, and you shall hereafter live with me as my son."

Quite likely Richard contemplated—in case he won the fight—to force this natural son upon the English people as his successor. Be this as it may, young Plantagenet the next day took position on a hill overlooking the battlefield on which was to be decided whether he was to live the life of a royal personage or that of an outcast.

The king awoke in the morning showing by his appearance that he was under a terrific dread. His face was livid, and he complained of having had frightful dreams. The crime of murder being on his conscience, knowing that he could not rely upon some of the nobles who had brought their retainers to serve him, it is likely that he feared defeat and punishment.

And what saw young Richard Plantagenet from the hilltop? When the battle was well on, one of the nobles who formed a part of Richard's army swung his troops to the other side. This was the signal for the defection of others, and presently the greater part of both armies were opposing the king.

Then the boy saw his father make a marvelous dash to turn the tide in his favor. The king saw the Earl of Richmond and, putting spurs to his horse, followed by only a handful of retainers, made straight for his opponent. Coming near the earl, he struck down single handed those who defended him. But the struggle was too unequal. A soldier bore down the king and dispatched him.

History gives no definite account of the subsequent life of the boy who from the hilltop saw the dashing of his hopes. But there is an account of a man who was a bricklayer and who at noontimes, when his fellow workmen were resting, would be found to be reading. On one occasion a person, curious to know what he read, looked at the book. He found it to be written in Latin.

This man was Richard Plantagenet, who from a hill near Bosworth field saw his father slain and his sudden hope of living the life of a prince go out forever. This man afterward was for many years known to be the natural son of Richard III., king of England. On a tombstone over a grave near by where he lived is his name, Richard Plantagenet.

The king being dead, the bedstead he had slept in the night before his death remained in the Blue Boar inn. One day many years after these events happened the landlady while cleaning the room heard something drop on the floor and roll away. Picking it up, she saw that it was a gold coin bearing a date just previous to Richard's death. The bed was examined and found to have a false bottom, which was full of money. It had been so fitted by the king to carry treasure.

The victorious Earl of Richmond went from Bosworth field to London, where he was received by the people as their sovereign. He married the Princess Elizabeth, thus uniting the families of York and Lancaster and ending the celebrated wars of the roses.

For four centuries the fate of the little King Edward V. and his brother has stirred the sympathy of all peoples. Artists have chosen the children for themes for pictures, and Shakespeare made the deeds of King Richard the subject of one of his principal tragedies. It was the last act in the real tragedy, the wars of the roses, in which multitudes perished while kings fought for a crown. But when the other historic events shall have passed into oblivion the murder of the royal children will continue to excite the sympathy of the world.

Tattooed Royalty.

Quite a number of members of European royal families bear tattooed designs. The Grand Duke Alexis of Russia, for instance, is most elaborately tattooed; likewise his cousin, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha. The queen of Greece and the king of Sweden are also tattooed. On his arm Prince George of Greece has a wonderful representation of a flying dragon in many colors. One of King George's arms bore a similar design, and Prince Francis of Teck has a curious picture of a frog leaping for a small beetle tattooed on his right forearm.

Are you weary? Breathe more; eat less.

Active exercise will not rest you from mental work.

"When you are tired with mental work," says a well known physician, "do not think you must take active exercise. That will make you more weary. All you need is rest and more air in your lungs. Sit down quietly and comfortably and breathe deeply twenty-five times. Rest a moment and repeat.

"This air forced into the body removes the waste material which makes you weary.

"Don't eat all you want.

"Food not needed for support of the system is so much extra work for the body and requires more air to dispose of it.

"This regimen will diminish your grocery bill and save your shoe leather."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Quite a Difference.

When the Baroness Burdett-Coutts was Miss Coutts, the great heiress, it was rumored that she was to wed the Duke of Wellington. A friend asked the duke if the rumor was true, and the duke answered irritably:

"I said Miss Angela Coutts deserved to be a duchess. I never said that I would make her one."

This observation of the duke's was repeated to the heiress. She flushed on hearing it, smiled a little bitterly and remarked:

"The duke should have said 'could,' not 'would.'"

His Only Subject.

Mlle. van Vorst in a recent book tells a story of a dinner at Chicago given by the ambitious wife of a millionaire tanner. The lady noticed, to her annoyance, that her husband did not speak a word to their smart guests, and when she got an opportunity she whispered angrily, "Why don't you talk?"

"What's the good?" replied the tanner contemptuously. "There ain't one of 'em as knows a thing about leather."

An Odd Business.

"Insurance people are queer."

"How so?"

"First they convince you that you may die within a week to get you to apply for a policy; then they must convince themselves that you'll live for years and years before they'll issue it."—Boston Transcript.

He Could Run.

An anxious traveler on a street car, with watch in hand, seeing he had only a few minutes in which to catch a train, said to the conductor, "Can't you make any faster time than this?"

"Yes," answered the conductor, "I can, but I have to stay with the car."—Everybody's.

An Awful Threat.

Kitty—Why are you so fearfully glum, dear? Marie—Jack made an awful threat last night when I rejected him. Kitty—What, to shoot himself? Marie—Oh, worse than that. He said he'd never propose to me again.—New York Sun.

"Now, Thomas," asked the teacher of a small pupil, "can you tell me what a junction is?"

"Sure I can. A junction is a place where a railroad gets a divorce from itself."

RATHER GREWSOME.

In Fact, the English Hunter Was Sure It Was Quite So.

In the Nairobi club I met a gentleman with one arm gone at the shoulder. He told his story in a slightly bored and drawling voice, picking his words very carefully and evidently most occupied with neither understating nor overstating the case. It seems he had been out and had killed some sort of a buck. While his men were occupied with this he strolled on alone to see what he could find. He found a rhinoceros that charged viciously and into which he emptied his gun.

"When I came to," he said, "it was just coming on dusk and the lions were beginning to grunt. My arm was completely crushed, and I was badly bruised and knocked about. As near as I could remember, I was fully ten miles from camp. A circle of carrion birds stood all about me not more than ten feet away, and a great many others were flapping over me and fighting in the air. These last were so close that I could feel the wind from their wings. It was rather grewsome." He paused and thought a moment, as though weighing his words. "In fact," he added, with an air of final conviction, "it was quite grewsome."—Stewart Edward White in American Magazine.

TURKISH STOICISM.

A Very Poor Shot and a Perfectly Good Natured Target.

An incident that occurred in the experience of an English officer is told by the London Spectator to illustrate the calmness and indifference to death and bodily danger characteristic of the Turkish soldier.

The officer, accompanied by a guard of Turkish soldiers, went to the edge of a cliff overlooking the sea to shoot at a seal that he saw disporting itself in the water below.

He fired a good many times, and the last shot had gone very near the bobbing mark when one of the soldiers came to him and politely asked, "Do you not think, sir, that you have fired often enough at Sergeant Yussuf?"

The supposed seal was indeed the sergeant.

Presently the sergeant came ashore, put on his clothes and came up the cliff smilingly. The officer apologized handsomely and blamed himself freely. But Yussuf, like his companions, did not think there was much to be concerned about. After all, the mark had been very small. It was natural to fire at it, it was unlikely that the officer would hit it, and he (Yussuf) had not minded it at all.

When You Are Weary.

Are you weary? Breathe more, eat less. Active exercise will not rest you from mental work.

Age of Westminster Hall.

Westminster hall is quite five centuries old, possibly more, for Richard II., who is credited with its building, was really little more than a repairer of "Rufus' roaring hall," as Pope described it. The hall, so intimately interwoven with the history of England, has, according to Fuller, the distinction of possessing "cobwebless beams." They were, so a popular tradition affirmed, of Irish oak, in which it was impossible for spiders to live and spin their webs. Cunningham tells us that the roof "is of chestnut and very fine, the finest of its kind in this country." It was the meshes of the law, if not spiders' webs, one might have looked for here of old, for during long centuries England's courts of law were held in Westminster hall.—London Chronicle.

Bigger the Steal, Smaller the Crime.

The Manx law of old times had many oddities, but none, surely, quainter than to make the greater the crime the less, because of the impossibility, within the narrow limits of the Isle of Man, that the bigger thief should be successful.

"If a man steal a horse or an ox," so ran the law, "it is no felony, for the offender cannot hide them, but if he steal a capon or a pig he shall be hanged."

A Contractor.

"What's your husband's business?"

"Contractor."

"What line?"

"Debts."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Milady's Mirror

New Wrinkles About Wrinkles.

It is a great mistake to suppose that all wrinkles indicate old age. Some wrinkles and lines are indications of temperament and character and result from a muscular contraction of the cheek or brow. These lines become permanently engraved in the face as the underlying tissue shrinks from the steady contraction and consequent lack of circulation.

Wrinkles are often caused by ill health, mental strain and nervousness, and generally these wrinkles can be induced to leave by careful treatment and by building up the health and nervous system.

Whatever tends to promote the general health, to increase the deposit of fat in the skin tissues of the face, will help to obliterate these telltale lines and restore firmness and smoothness.

Very often the skin of the face has become extremely dry, and lines form themselves very quickly and for no apparent reason.

While it is absolutely necessary to keep the face perfectly clean, some skins are so delicate and tender that the use of a bland soap is harmful, and such skins need an entirely different treatment from the stronger, coarser skins. It is also necessary to give the skin a chance to recuperate from the drying and parching effect of the steam heated air of modern houses. Skin that is parched and inelastic will wrinkle much sooner than soft, pliable skin. Use plenty of good skin food; don't skimp it; it really does not pay; then wipe it off with a soft towel or piece of cheesecloth.

How to Massage.

Massage the face with a good skin food for twenty minutes at night after the face has been washed with tepid water and the soap paste. Massage, besides stimulating the skin by increasing the circulation, smooths the surface. Think of the skin as a piece of wrinkled soft paper. To make the paper smooth so that it can be used again one pats and smooths out the creases. The same treatment should be applied to the face, the main difference being that the flesh requires a firmer stroke than would be given to a more perishable material.

The following is an excellent skin food for this purpose:

White wax, one ounce; spermaceti, one ounce; lanolin, two ounces; cocoanut oil, two ounces; sweet almond oil, four ounces; rosewater, two ounces. Melt the first five ingredients in a double boiler, take from the fire and while beating slowly add the rosewater. When quite cold put into jars. This food will not cause a growth of hair on the face.

A good lotion for use in treating premature wrinkles is made from the following formula: Alum, sixty grains; almond milk (thick), one and one-half ounces; rosewater, six ounces. Dissolve the alum in the rosewater; then pour gently into the almond milk, shaking constantly.

How to Remove Dandruff.

An excellent dandruff remover is made up of alcohol, resorcin, cinconci, cantharides and quinine.

A shampooer who takes an interest in her work pays as much attention to the removal of the dandruff as she does to cleansing the hair. The dandruff should be loosened from the scalp by massaging the scalp with the finger tips or by the use of a small brush like a nailbrush. The hair should be parted at intervals so that the scaly substances can be easily reached.

Dandruff on a neglected scalp cakes. When this happens there is an irresistible impulse to remove it. Do not do this with the finger nails, as it often causes the blood to flow and may destroy the root of the hair.

Not only does dandruff retard the growth of the hair, but it certainly offends the eye of every one who has any conception of neatness to see the clothing of another covered with these scaly particles. Each of us ought to have sufficient pride about our appearance to endeavor to keep our scalp clean and our clothes immaculate.

Mistress (whose chauffeur has just informed her that Fido has been shut up in the stable because he leaped up at a strange lady in the road)—How odd of him! Do you suppose he thought it was me? Chauffeur—Couldn't say what he thought, my lady.—London Punch.

As He Diagnosed It.

"I fear you do not really love me," said the young doctor.

"Why do you say that?" demanded the girl.

"Your pulse does not seem to accelerate any when I hold your hand."—Washington Herald.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 14, 1913

At the present time when so much is being written about the high cost of living, the tightness of the money market and other kindred subjects which so closely affect the pocket of the average citizen, anything that tends directly or indirectly to solve these important questions is naturally deserving of the closest investigation.

One of the most beneficial schemes in this connection is that for obtaining money for legitimate industrial enterprises, for improvements to farms or for home building, at reasonable rates of interest and on long terms, and the average workingman who can take advantage of facilities of this kind for building and owning his own home and putting the profits of the landlord into his own pocket has gone far towards a solution of the problem of living.

There are many incorporated companies and societies who make loans for building and other purposes, and which have undoubtedly been the means of a large proportion of the working population of towns and cities owning their own homes instead of paying a large part of their earnings to landlords and having nothing to show for their payments but rent receipts.

One of the best propositions of this kind that has come to our attention is that offered by the British North American Home Investment Company of Vancouver The company in the first place is sound and reliable, their directorate and managers being composed of shrewd business men of unquestioned integrity and their plan of making loans on the contract system at a low rate of interest and repayable over a term of ten years or less, is one that should be carefully looked into by every one whether of small or large means who contemplates making an investment or building a home.

Mr. E. A. West, the Vice-President of this company is in Courtenay at the present time for the purpose of looking over some property here on which they contemplate making loans in the near future, also property on which they have already made loans to one of our citizens who is now erecting thereon some very attractive houses. Mr. West is greatly impressed with the growth of Courtenay and has the greatest confidence in its future as one of the most important towns on Vancouver Island.

Mr. Cairns has purchased the old school house from Mr. Fechner and will move it onto a lot he has purchased from Mr. Parez.

The Post Office Department has selected the site for the new Post Office to be on Mr. Parez's lots on Isabel street, and he has been instructed to have the deeds to the three lots made out and forwarded to the Department. It is likely that the building will be erected this fall.

Mr. Harry Loggie one of our popular young business men journeyed to Vancouver on Sunday evening and on Tuesday morning returned with a blushing bride, nee Miss Edith Loggie, who had come from New Jersey, N. B., for the purpose. They were married at the First Presbyterian Church, Vancouver, by Rev. Dr. Fraser on Monday afternoon. After a trip about the city they took the night boat for Courtenay. The news leaked out shortly after their arrival home and despite the rain in the evening Harry's many male friends got together and started them off in life with an old fashioned chivari. They will reside in their new house in the Orchard.

Knights of Pythias

The Knights of Pithias held a meeting in the opera house Courtenap on Monday evening last for the purpose of instituting a new lodge in this town, Dr. Millard occupied the chair and gave a short address on the aims and objects of the order. T. D. Hind gave a lecture on "Our ancient and noble ancestry" commencing with the Knights of Pythias, organized 1864, and extending back into the prehistoric age. Showing that the Knights of Pythias are the successors of the Pythian Society, the Pythian Society was the successor of the Pythagorean Society, of which Damon and Pythias were members, and the Pythagorean Society was the successor of the ancient Egyptian Society. The Pythagorian Society was introduced into Greece in the year 540 B. C. by Pythagoras the great philosopher, who discovered the world was round. This society aimed to select only the best type of manhood as candidates for membership, who were in some instances required to study for years before being admitted to full membership. It was the leading educational society of the times. It not only required that its memebers should develop a high standard of morals and full rounded character, but were schooled in arts and sciences. This society stood for progress along all lines, for the highest development of mankind and for the best form of government. It was the constant effort of Damon and Pythias to maintain a free government along the lines of our own government; which caused the difference between them and the tyrant King Dyonecous, who caused the King to sentence Damon to death, and given but four hours to live, Pythias became a hostage for Damon, that he might go and see his wife and child before he dies. The headsman's axe was raised when Damon appeared and saved his friend.

The meeting was enjoyed by all present, and a number signed the list of membership.

The steamer drew near, slowed, shut off steam, turned round, and anchored. The whole process took about an hour from the time Jordan had first observed the approach of the little vessel. Out came the field-glass again. It revealed the landing of three men by means of a small boat which had been hanging in the wake of the steamer attached by a hawser. As soon as the steamer had landed its passengers and Jordan had satisfied himself there was nothing more to be expected in that quarter, he turned round the corner of the rock in the opposite direction taking a narrow path between two high banks which led towards Highdene. There was an elation in Jordan's step, a light in his eye of beneign satisfaction, which, to any who knew him, and who happened to be looking, would have betokened that things were going well with him, and in accordance with his preconceived ideas.

There was no hurry in his movements. They were those of a man of leisure, taking a stroll on a beautiful moonlight night.

To approach the house in a legitimate manner, it was necessary to cross a stone bridge over the moat formed of a single arch; but an agile man could jump the narrow stream of water at almost any point. Jordan was not apparently in a hurry to enter the demesne of the ancient monastery; for, after leaving the public pathway, he struck into a small wood which bounded the moat on the further side, and from which views, both of the house and the bridge, could be commanded in the clear light of the moon. Still smoking his pipe, he took up his position by the side of the gole of a large elm and waited. Completely sheltered himself from observation, the keen eyes of the watcher were on the alert to take in anything which occurred.

It was now nearer 12 than 11 p.m., and the greatest part of Highdene was shrouded in darkness, but there were lights in the smoking-room, and in Mr. Muller's bedroom, which was on the floor above, immediately over the dining-room. The bedroom was occupied; for now and again a shadow passed across the blind. The regularity of the occurrence suggested that some one was pacing the floor. While Jordan watched, the light in the bedroom went out. After a minute or two the blind was drawn aside sufficiently for a head to appear. The action was furtive and secret. The face formed a silhouette in the moonlight. Jordan easily recognized the massive outline of the master of Highdene.

The face remained for some seconds and then disappeared. The proceeding was repeated at intervals. On the first occasion Jordan muttered —

The beggar's going to let 'em in himself. He don't trust that footman of his with all his affairs of State, then. A wily customer you are, my friend Muller; but you've got a bit to learn for all that. There's a trick or two Jem Jordan can teach you, as you'll find out precious sharp before you're many hours older.

As the clock at Highdene stables struck the midnight hour, Jordan's quick eye detected a movement on the bridge over the moat. First one figure passed, then another, then another —three in all. They were going in single file, and very quietly. Having reached the Highdene side they stopped and waited, sheltered from observation by the ornamented termination of the parapet of the bridge. When the first figure had reached the bridge the face had been at the window. After the third had crossed it vanished. A minute later there was a tiny gleam of light at the great door of the entrance-hall. As soon as it appeared, the three men who had been waiting crossed the intervening space and one by one disappeared, passing through the entrance afforded by the partially opened door. As soon as the latter was shut too again and fastened, Jemmy, no longer with a pipe in his mouth, and with his quietude exchanged for palpitating activity, great pace across the greensward, leaped the moat and doubled at a bending as low as was compatible with great speed. Jemmy could have arrived at his destination with less likelihood of being observed by a more circuitous route; but he risked something so as not to miss the beginning of the conference about to take place.

One window of the dining-room was in deep shadow, caused by one of the main buttresses of the house. He climbed up to it, removed a diamond-shaped pane of glass, which he had purposely left insecurely fastener from a previous expedition, shot back a bolt and lifted the catch, and noiselessly swung himself into the room.

Jordan had hardly landed, after securing the window, before the door opened on the opposite side, and Muller entered with a light. Fortunately the light served to show Muller to Jordan, not Jordan to Muller. This security was momentary only, as Jemmy well knew. By a wriggling motion, which could only have attained the perfection of present performance after years of practice, he got across the floor to a long horsehair sofa which left sufficient space at the back to admit a man of not too bulky proportions. The transit was performed without a rustle. Arrived at his destination, Jordan comfortably ensconced himself in the recess the sofa afforded him. Muller suspected nothing of course, but with habitual caution held the light above his head and glanced round the room—a very fine apartment with a handsome Turkey carpet on the floor. Nothing attracted his notice, and he at once went to the sideboard, taking from it a spirit-decanter and three or four long glasses, which he placed on a silver tray. He then returned to the smoking-room, carrying the tray in his hands.

As soon as Muller's back was turned Jordan crossed the dining-room to the aperture which connected the two rooms. On the dining-room side the space was covered with a small curtain, on the smoking-room side by a glass let into a frame, which could be moved into the wall when the aperture was required for the purpose for which it was originally constructed. This hole was a foot broad and eighteen inches in height. Jordan held the curtain aside and peeped through the glass into the room beyond.

The three men were seated round the fire, and were looking up at Muller, who was just entering the door. They were all Germans, and their faces and dress suggested the brine. None of the three was equal in social rank to his host. Jordan knew one of them by sight. He had seen him in London, where he was generally regarded as a political agent of the baser sort, not too scrupulous about the agencies he might employ to accomplish his ends even to the bounds of absolute criminality. The other two were strangers to Jordan; but previous knowledge of Muller's intentions, coupled with an intimate acquaintance with the seamy side of character, led him to feel that they were a desperate set of ruffians to deal with. Jordan had borrowed Murgatroyd's dainty little revolver before leaving the Falcon, as lighter to carry and handle than a clumsier weapon of the same kind he possessed himself. He new felt that it lay handy in his breast pocket in case of a scrimmage.

Muller had taken his place in the arm-chair in which he had sat when talking with Murgatroyd. By his side was a small table, upon which he had placed the silver tray with the whisky-decanter and glasses upon it. By the side of the tray were the materials for grog, and on the fire was a large pannikin filled with water. It was a conspiracy tempered by comfort. By the side of the man Jordan had known in London as Metzler, was another small table, upon which a packet of papers was placed, tied up with a thick string. An oilskin wrapper which had evidently been round them lay by Mezler's elbow, which rested on a corner of the table.

All the party were taken up with the brew that was going on at the fire. The solitary lamp stood on the mantelpiece, shedding plenty of light on the group of men, but none on the rest of the room. Jordan saw that it was his opportunity. He had no intention of remaining where he was; for he was perfectly certain that with the glass between him and the partie carree, he would hear next to nothing. They were not at all likely to speak loudly, as Murgatroyd and Muller had done on the last occasion when he had occupied the same vantage ground. It was necessary he should be in the room.

Jordan went out of the dining-room and listened at the door of the smoking-room. Then cautiously opened it with one hand, holding his revolver in the other. He glanced in. All four were watching the pannikin with the selfish interest of keen anticipation. Jordan glided in. He had fixed beforehand on his place of concealment, viz., under the card-table itself, which, when not in use, stood against the wall furthest from the fire near the door. There was no sofa in the smoking-room, and the only chairs capable of affording any concealment were in use. There was of course the risk that the card-table might be wanted for its original purpose, but Jemmy argued that the lateness of the hour, and the probable wish of the new-comers to return to the vessel and steam out of harbor as soon as possible, precluded the probability that cards would be introduced when the business which had brought the party together was transacted.

In any case it was necessary to run the risk, or the information he had come to obtain would be lost. So he dived under the card-table and awaited the denouement, with the toy revolver held loosely in his hand.

Some explanation is now due of the extremely hazardous course Jordan was taking, and the reasons which led to its adoption.

Jemmy had told Murgatroyd just as much of the story of his former visit to Highdene, as he had thought expedient; not that he had any sinister intention in concealing what he had not disclosed, but simply because he did not care to expose his cards before the game was played out.

SKIN ITCHED AND BURNED

Pimples on Legs and Arms. Scratched and Made Sores. Kept from Sleeping. First Application of Cuticura Soap and Ointment Gave Great Relief. Cured In a Few Weeks.

Lachine Locks, Quebec.—"I had itching commencing with my legs and increasing gradually until it reached all parts of my body. There were small pimples on my legs and arms and the skin was red and inflamed all over the body and itched and burned so badly that I scratched and made sores. It caused me so much pain that it kept me from sleeping during entire nights. I was troubled with it for about two years.

"After having tried several remedies without success I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment and from the first application I felt a great relief. I continued the treatment taking warm baths with Cuticura Soap followed by the application of Cuticura Ointment, and at the end of a few weeks the trouble had disappeared completely and I was cured." (Signed) N. C. Boulet, May 27, 1912.

For red, rough, chapped and bleeding hands, itching, burning palms, shapeless nails and painful finger-ends, a one-night Cuticura treatment works wonders. Soak hands, on retiring, in hot water and Cuticura Soap. Dry, anoint with Cuticura Ointment, and wear old, loose gloves during the night. Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment are sold throughout the world. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post card Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Dept. 42D, Boston, U. S. A.

Sir, began the young man nervously, I wish to ask your consent for my marriage with your daughter.

Eh? quickly rejoined the parent. What of your income? Is it sufficient to support a wife?

It is, boldly returned the slightly nettled aspirant, and what is more, it's sufficient to stand an occasional touch from my wife's father!

Then she's yours, my son!

BOTH GAINED

Man and Wife Fatten on Grape-Nuts

The notion that meat is necessary for real strength and the foundation of solid flesh is now no longer as prevalent as formerly.

Excessive meat eaters are usually sluggish a part of the time because they are not able to fully digest their food, and the undigested portion is changed into what is practically a kind of poison that acts upon the blood and nerves, thus getting all through the system.

"I was a heavy meat eater," writes a Western man, "and up to two years ago, was in very poor health. I suffered with indigestion so that I only weighed 95 pounds.

"Then I heard about Grape-Nuts food and decided to try it. My wife laughed at me at first, but when I gained to 125 pounds and felt so fine, she thought she would eat Grape-Nuts too. "Now she is fat and well and has gained 40 pounds. We never have indigestion any more and seldom feel the desire for meat.

A neighbor of ours, 68 years old, was troubled with indigestion for years, and was a heavy meat eater. Now since he has been eating Grape-Nuts regularly, he says he is well and never has indigestion.

I could name a lot of persons who have rid themselves of indigestion by changing from a heavy meat diet to Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

The Reward of Art

No wonder he felt proud—After all, he was quite a young artist and there it was—there could be no doubt about it—his picture, his great picture, was hanging in the Royal Academy. What is more, two people stood motionless in front of it, gazing at the canvas in rapt attention, while the artist stood gazing at them.

Then, I say, Charlie, he asked a friend, do saunter carleessly by and find out what they are saying about my picture. Perhaps they want to buy it.

Forthwith Charlie set out to do a careless saunter. Presently—to the expectant artist the wait seemed an eternity—he returned to his friend.

No business doing, he sighed. She's only blowing him up for leaving off his winter flannels too soon.

Confusing but Clear

It was a sad day for Mrs. Mullet. The last of her family now was married, and the poor old lady had the dismal prospect of living henceforth all alone.

The vicar was duly sympathetic when he called to see her some few days after the wedding.

You must feel very lonely nowadays Mrs. Mullett, he remarked, especially seeing that in the past you've had so many children to brighten your home.

Mrs. Mullett sighed.

Yes, sir, she replied at last, I do feel lonely sometimes. One day, you know, I misses 'em and the next day I wants 'em. But, all said and done, I thinks I misses 'em more than I wants 'em.

Smith was a constant worry to his friends. They never knew when to and when not to treat him seriously since, as he frankly admitted, he delighted in pulling other people's legs.

One day he and Brown met casually in the street, and stopped as friends often do, to gossip for a while.

Big blaze—that fire at the factory in Johnson street last night, wasn't it? asked Brown.

Yes, replied Smith, I went down to have a look at it. And my word, there were several mighty narrow escapes there, too.

Escapes, cried Brown, excitedly. But the morning paper said that there was no one in the building.

Smith nodded.

Oh, he said, the firemen brought the escapes down with them. So-long old chap.

Not Friends Now

Two young lady friends met, and after an interchange of the usual salutations, one remarked:

Oh, May, I'm so glad to see you. Indeed, I was just on my way to call. The fact is, I want you, as my oldest friend, to be one of my bridesmaids.

Bridesmaids, Daisy! How lovely! exclaimed May. But I didn't know you were engaged.

Well, I know it's sudden, was the answer, but he's awfully much in love, you know; and it's really, just too sweet to live. Will you act, May?

Act? Of course I will. I shall be charmed. But, and she took a step as though to move off, do come round the corner and tell me all about it.

Surprised the Manager

An increase of salary! exclaimed the pompous manager of a small omnibus company to a clerk who had just made that request. I am afraid, sir, that you are too extravagant!

He toyed with his heavy watch-chain and looked severely at the young man, who returned his stare boldly. It was the set phrase on such occasions and the applicant had heard it all before. He meant to have his rise or go—go somewhere else.

Excuse me, sir, he replied, respectfully, I haven't any chance to be extravagant on what I earn.

Young man, continued the pompous gentleman, I have risen from the ranks. How? By being careful. When I was young I made money by saving 'bus fares.

Ah, that was in the old days, said the young man, with a knowing wink. But with the bell punches and the present system of inspection, you would find you couldn't save sixpence without being collared, however careful you were.

The manager nearly fainted, and the young man had to look for other employment.

Did She Know Anything?

Mildred was visiting her soldier brother at the barracks.

Sis, he said, I wish you had said you were coming. I'm on duty, but a fellow bandsman of mine will show you the sights.

The girl naturally asked many questions of her brother's friend as they went the round.

Who is that man? she inquired, pointing to a color-sergeant.

Oh, he once shook hands with the King, said her escort. That's why he wears a crown on his arm.

The gymnastic instructor, with a badge of crossed Indian clubs on his arms, was standing in the yard.

That's the barber, replied the girl's companion in answer to her query. Can't you see he's wearing the scissors?

A number of stars upon the staff of a veteran next aroused the fair visitor's curiosity.

He's the battalion astromer, gravely explained her caviller. Guide us home by the stars when we've lost our way on night manoeuvres.

Very interesting, said the girl, with a twinkle in her eyes.

Then noting his bandsman's badge—the model of an ancient stringed instrument—she asked sweetly of her escort: I suppose that design on your arm denotes that you're the regiment lyre?

Always Serviceable.—Most pills lose their properties with age. Not so with Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. The pill mass is so compounded that their strength and effectiveness is preserved and the pills can be carried anywhere without fear of losing their potency. This is a quality that few pills possess. Some pills lose their power, but not so with Parmelee's. They will maintain their freshness and potency for a long time.

Johnny, who had been forbidden to ask for ice cream cones at the candy store, disobeyed and was kept in the house.

Why isn't Johnny out playing? asked the storekeeper of Johnny's little sister.

You wouldn't ask for a cone, would you? remarked the proprietor.

No, replied the little girl. But I would take one.

A fellow we know—one of those chaps who affect a terrible scorn for the lower classes, but who always pauses to hear a tale of woe from the lowliest victim of the present state of society—this fellow stopped on the curb the other day to hear the story of a little pickaninny who was weeping and alone.

What's the trouble? asked our friend gruffly.

Ah, got a new baby brother at our house! wailed the child.

Then why do you cry? Angels bring baby brothers.

A New Invention

Jimmie entered the large chemist's with a coin clutched tightly in his hand.

Well, my little man, said the assistant, what can I get for you?

Please, I want a thermometer! piped Jimmie.

Did your mother say what sort of thermometer she wanted? asked the shopman.

Jimmie looked slightly perplexed. Then a bright idea came into his mind.

Why, just give me the very biggest you've got, he replied, cos it's to keep my bed-room warm!

Hubby returned home rather late—well after midnight, to be precise—and, as often happens in such cases, wifey, though abed, was not asleep.

In consequence, breakfast that morning was a gloomy, silent meal. In vain, hubby strove to clear the air and by ill-timed levity, to dispel the atmosphere of constraint which hung heavily everywhere.

A penny for your thoughts, my love! he ventured presently.

The lady thus addressed stared at him grimly.

For tuppence, she retorted, I'd say exactly what I thought of you!

Hubby made no effort to raise the bidding.

A Future Financier

Ma, exclaimed young Teddie, bursting into the house, Mrs. Johnson said she would give me a penny if I told her what you said about her!

I never heard of such a thing! answered his mother indignantly. You are a very good boy not to have told! I wouldn't have her think I even mentioned her. Here's an apple, sonny, for being such a wise little lad!

I should think I am, ma! When she showed me the penny I told her that what you said was something awful and worth sixpence at least.

HEALTH AWAITS GOOD DIGESTION

When the Stomach is Wrong the Whole Body Suffers---How to Keep It Healthy

Indigestion is one of the most distressing maladies afflicting mankind. The stomach is unable to perform the work nature calls upon it to do, and the result is extreme pain after eating, nausea, heartburn, painful fluttering of the heart, sick headache, and often a loathing of food, even though the sufferer is half starved. People with poor digestion are prone to try all sorts of experiments to aid the process of digestion, and there is only one way in which the trouble can be actually cured, and that is through the blood. That is why the tonic treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cures even the most obstinate cases of indigestion. They make the rich, red blood that strengthens the stomach and its nerves, thus enabling it to do its work. The process is simple, but the result means a good appetite, and increased health and pleasure in life. Mr. R. Lussier, of Sorel, Que., offers ample proof of this. He says: "For several years I was a sufferer from indigestion, and the torture I suffered after meals was often almost unendurable. Often I would go without a meal rather than undergo the suffering that followed. Accompanying the trouble I had headaches, dizziness, and often a feeling of nausea. All the time I was taking one medicine after another in the hope of getting relief, but without avail. Finally I read of the case of a similar sufferer cured through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I decided to try them. I took the Pills steadily for about six weeks with result that I was fully cured, and could eat anything I cared for. I may add that I have not since had any return of the trouble."

If you are suffering from indigestion do not waste time experimenting, but begin to cure yourself today with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which go right to the root of the trouble through the blood. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Straight Tip

The old farmer was making his usual weekly call on Mrs. Wiggins.

P'taters is good this mornin', ma'am, he said, casting an admiring look at the basketful he had brought.

Oh, are they, retorted Mrs. Wiggin That reminds me. I want to have a word with you about them you sold me last week. How is it that them at the bottom o' the basket is so much smaller than them at the top?

Comes about like this, replied old John, a knowing look on his face. P'taters is growing' that fast now, that by the time I get a basketful dug the last ones is about twice the size of the first.

Walking Through the World

I walk beneath mysterious autumn trees,
An autumn twilight hour—
But when I walked in summer field and bower
These too, were mysteries.
Always there is a spirit and a breath
Beyond my spirit's call,
Almost the living trees confess the faith,
And yet I know not what creation saith—
But He who walks here with me knows it all.

There was an hour, O friend of mine, when we,
To each drew very near.
When hand in hand we both grew silent, dear,
Because love could not see;
Always there is a secret yet untold
The barriers do not fall.
Almost I find your life whose hands I hold,
And yet I know not what my hands enfold—
But love Himself is with us, knowing all.

Three-year-old-Arthur was taken by his parents to call upon Mrs. L., who had recently come to this country from London. He was greatly interested in everything he saw, particularly in a little English flag.

That is my flag, Arthur, said Mrs. L., in answer to his enquiry, and, showing him an American flag, this is your flag.

Has it always been my flag?

He was told that it had always been his flag.

Nothing more was said until time for their departure, when Arthur calmly remarked: I will take my flag.

And he took it—for, some way or other, explanations seemed inadequate.

Actors frequently receive unexpected proof of the realism of their art. Not long ago, on the occasion of the performance of Hamlet by a distinguished English player, there were no more interested, and absorbed spectators than two newsies in the gallery.

The boys had been watching the performance with breathless interest. The last act was drawing to a close. The duel almost dragged the lads from their seats.

Before their eyes the queen was poisoned, Laertes killed, the king killed, Hamlet killed. On the final tragedy the curtain started down. The audience was spellbound.

In the gallery there was a clatter and a crash as one of the boys mentioned started for the door.

Come on, Tommy! he shouted back to his companion. Hustle! Dere'll be extras out on dis!

The Plumber

We had a gentle plumber once,
We thought he came to plumb;
But by the time his coat was off
His dinner time had come.

He went at twelve and stayed away
An hour and minutes forty;
He 'wiped a joint,' then wiped his lips
Then trotted off so horty!

The pipe was only half an inch
(In width I mean, not tall),
Yet you could drive a motor through
The hole cut in the wall.

And after having had his fill,
Oh! see him slow returning!
"To one day's work" is on the bill;
He's thus his living earning!

An old darkey, sent to a hospital, on his arrival was placed in a ward, and one of the nurses put a thermometer in his mouth to take his temperature. When the house doctor made his rounds he said: Well, my man, how do you feel?

I feels right toldle, suh.

Have you had anything to eat yet?

Yessuh, I had a little.

What did you have?

A dame gimmie a piece of glass ter suck, suh.

A man having buried his wife, a woman of unusual size, a neighbor a few days afterwards attempted little in the consolation line by remarking:

Well, Mr. —, you have met with a heavy loss.

Yes, replied the mourner; she weighed close upon four hundred pounds.

Nervous Sufferers Often Look Well

While persons subject to disorders of the nerves are frequently thin and weak, such is not always the case by any means.

Many are of ruddy and vigorous strength and so healthy in appearance that they receive little or no sympathy.

In such cases the symptoms indicate trouble in the head and spinal cord. Though strong in a muscular sense, the nerves are affected, and spells of helplessness come over the sufferer. The condition is alarming because the result to be expected is paralysis.

As in all forms of nervous exhaustion, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is the treatment from which the best results are to be obtained.

You cannot sleep, and feel restless and irritable; you gain strength, and then a little extra excitement brings on a nervous collapse, and helplessness and discouragement come over you again.

It seems impossible to concentrate the mind and to apply yourself to the duties of the day. Yet your appearance is such that people are inclined to think you shamming.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food will do wonders for you if you only give it a chance. Gradually and naturally it restores new vigor to the nerves and new hope and confidence to the mind.

Hints to Housewives

In using a frying basket, always let it get heated in the fat before putting in the foodstuffs to be cooked; otherwise the foodstuffs will be apt to stick to the basket.

The torture of an ill fitting shoe will bring about a state of irritability often resembling nervous prostration. This condition soon becomes habitual.

Soiled clothing should always be put into a hamper, preferably away from the sleeping room.

Blankets should be put out in the sun and air at least once a week.

Poultry fat is excellent shortening for ginger cookies and spice cakes.

Fowl for chicken salad should be cooked the day before it is to be used.

Tubing makes the best pillow slips, and it may be had in two widths.

Before making new sheets, always measure the bed for which they are intended.

Wash green vegetables in warm water to remove the insects, and finish quickly in cold.

Dates and figs are both much improved if thoroughly washed and then allowed to drain.
