FOR the FAMILY LIKENESS

By MARTHA McULLOCH-WILLIAM

Copyright, 1904, by T. C. McClure

"She's coming today," Trix Vener said despairingly, looking up from an open letter. Bernice, the eldest Vener, smiled wanly. "I knew it," she said. "Misfortunes never come singly. Cassy, the youngest of them, who had foolish dimples and floss silk curls all over a wise little head, protested mildly: "Don't say that, Berry. I'm sure Cousin Angela means to be very kind."

"Why, somebody, anyhow, must go to work," Trix answered, sighing. "I'm already in business, raising chickens," Bernice said, smiling whimsically. "Hereafter I shall sell broilers and fresh eggs instead of letting them be eaten at home. You needn't laugh—I can make something out of my chicks—and Trix has at least a chance to be an organist at St. Michael's. Cassy must keep house and help me with the brooders. Oh, we shall manage famously without troubling Cousin Angela."

"I hate to trouble her, but there isn't any other way," Cassy said, with her most infantile smile. "The other two stared. "You don't mean you are going to live with her—be a companion and dependent?" Bernice cried, red spots flashing out in both cheeks. Cassy patted the red spots softly as she answered: "Oh, no; I'm just going home with her for a visit. She likes to have me at Vendale, because Carter Lee said once we two made such an artistic contrast."

"Why does she not marry him and have done with it, I wonder?" Trix said reflectively. Bernice had turned away her head, the red dying out quicker than it had come to her cheeks. Cassy sat very straight. "That is one of the things I am going to find out."

"Their Last Quarrel." There could be no excuse for family quarrels if it were not that they are pretexts and excuses for happy recollections. No honest man will say that he and his better seven-eighths never disagreed, says a writer in the New York Press. I have in mind one brilliant fellow who tells this on himself and his wife in deepest confidence: "We had our little after dinner spat, as usual. She vowed she was going home to her mother, who lived only two blocks away. I swore I was going to the club and stay all night. The five children of our happy union were asleep. The servants had gone to a ball. She got out of the front door a little ahead of me and started east. I went west. At the corner I looked back out of the slant of my eye and saw her standing still in the middle of the next block. After a little hesitation she walked back. I said, 'Quite a moon tonight.' 'Why don't you open the door?' she cried. 'Because my keys are upstairs,' I replied. 'Why, so are mine,' she cried. Well, I had to climb a tree and open the window on the third floor before we got in. And we haven't quarreled since."

"CASSY, WHO KEEPS YOU FROM MARRYING?"
she said; then as a thunderous knock sounded: "Talk of angels and angels! There she is, sure as fate!"
Miss Angela Vener, otherwise the family, was heavy in person as in purse. Notwithstanding Bernice, a slender beauty, was so curiously like her, Angela could not help hating her. Undoubtedly it was aggravating to have fate take the same general outline and color scheme, yet from it evolve a creature so exquisite as to make one seem a coarse and daubly caricature. Still, since Miss Vener had really a conscience she greeted Berry more affectionately than the others, even pumping a few tears.

"But don't you worry, Cousin Angela," Bernice said bravely. "We can take care of ourselves."

"Until I am ready to take care of them," Cassy piped; then, smiling up at her rich cousin: "I'm going to marry, you know—marry rich. After that we shall all be happy."

"Indeed! Who is the man?" Miss Vener demanded, half agitated. Cassy smiled more infinitely than ever. "I am not right certain yet," she said. "I am going home with you to find out."

"With all my heart, your ridiculous baby!" Miss Vener said, pinching Cassy's cheek. In her fortnight's stay she made at least fifty separate plans, but went home with Cassy under her wing, assured that her poor cousins were ungratefully bent upon working out salvation in ways of their own devising.

Midsummer always brought Vendale to its best. This special midsummer it was fairly enchanting. Cassy had been there two months. Carter Lee and his bachelor uncle, the major, had kept things social humming. The two balanced beautifully—Carter had money and willful strength, the major gallant experience. Between them it was no work at all to make Cassy the belle of the countryside. Miss Angela had let them into Cassy's pious purpose and so set them to fetching in the dignified heads.

For a young person thus speculatively bent Cassy was no end difficult—so difficult, indeed, Miss Angela begged

Carter to take her to task roundly. "She is letting slip the best chances she can ever hope to have," said Cousin Angela. "Refused three men last week to my certain knowledge, each of whom has thousands a year." So Carter lay in wait for Cassy as she went out to the rose garden. For a minute they walked silently along the petal strewn paths; then the man faced about, asking plumply, "Cassy, who keeps you from marrying rich?"

"Carter, who keeps you from marrying rich? You've been engaged, as I have not, this last seven years," Cassy retorted, looking at him sideways.

"He laughed not quite easily. "Don't you know about my engagement?" he asked. "I courted Alice to please my grandmother, who was in love with Vendale. I have not married her—as yet—to please myself."

"I see. Your delay is the reward you allow yourself for diligence," Cassy said, dropping her eyes. "Stop," Carter said roughly. "You know I love Bernice, who will have nothing to say to me because she thinks I agreed to sell myself and rightly enough despises me."

"If I tell you a secret—two secrets—will you ever tell?" Cassy asked irrelevantly, smiling roguishly. Carter nodded. Again she laughed and put her mouth close to his ear, saying: "I can't whisper; the secret is too big. Major Lee is dead in love with Cousin Angela."

"O Lord! Cassy, don't joke! It would be too cruel!" Carter gasped. Cassy ran on as though she had not heard: "He's courting her, too—courting a heap better than ever you did. And she likes it. The only reason she doesn't say 'Yes' offhand is she thinks the loss of her mother will kill you."

"Oh, how can I deceive her?" Carter cried. Cassy looked at him with lofty compassion. "Don't you think her eyes would be opened if you married somebody else?" she asked.

"You said there were two secrets. You don't, you can't mean Bernice does not quite hate me?" Carter demanded, trembling as he spoke.

Cassy looked wise. "You have heard all you can bear for one time," she said.

Mrs. Major Lee, born Vener, loves to tell over her romance and commonly wind up with: "It is really too touching. After poor, dear Carter had so nobly stood aside for his uncle he married my cousin because of the family likeness."

The King of Bells. The Czar, or king of bells, as the Russians call it, is in the Kremlin at Moscow, and, in spite of one or two other claimants for the title, it is undoubtedly the largest bell in the world. It was cast in 1733 by order of the Empress Anne. There is no record of its ever having been rung. It was found imbedded in the earth where it had fallen and was excavated and set in position by order of the Emperor Nicholas in 1850.

It is 10 feet 3 1/2 inches high and weighs 432,000 pounds. It is said there were more than 2,000 tons of bronze melted for its casting.

The king stands in the middle of a square on a base of granite and looks like a great bronze tent. A fragment broken off from it lies near the tower of Ivan Veliki. It is used as a chapel, the fissure being so great that a man may walk through without lowering his head. It is a beautiful piece of work, and its tone is said to have been particularly sweet. The sides sweep out in a broad and mighty curve and are encircled with a top and lower border of artistic merit.

A Good Enough Excuse. A memorable instance of presence of mind was the adventure of a certain Desaugiers at the time of a popular uprising in Paris, when the people took possession of the Tuileries. The hero of the incident sagely acted upon the theory that a poor excuse is better than none and sometimes better than a better one would be.

He was an inquisitive person, and regardless of the danger he hastened to the Tuileries at midnight to see what was going on. At the gate he was stopped by two revolutionists of ominous appearance. "Why do you not wear a cockade, citizen? Where is your cockade?" they asked.

A mob gathered about him and demanded fiercely, "Citizen, where is your cockade?" Desaugiers took off his hat, turned it around and around, looked at it on all sides and then said in a tone of mild surprise: "Citizens, it is strange, very strange! I must have left it on my nightcap."

Surprising. The London Morning Post states that Canadians never fought for their existence. To the shades of those Canadians who fought and fell in the war of 1812 this information must be somewhat surprising. It is much longer ago since Britons fought for their existence. The British wars of the past two centuries have all been fought in foreign lands.—Montreal Herald.

SNU-GOLD.

By Helen M. Merrill.

"All day the sun drops gold, the grassy head
Like miser olden hoarding underground,
Till soft-silken June will track it, like a hound,
Scents the lone covert where the wild deer feed."

"Then from an ample mint, with lavish hand
In every fold, he every fountain-side,
Shall scatter gold-lots round her far and wide,
In flower cups o'er all the fragrant land,
"Wherever buttercups and wild daisies
You'll mark her presence in the green lush grasses;
You'll hear her lightly singing as she passes
On sunny uplands where gold violets grow."

Sketch of Miss Merrill.
Miss Helen M. Merrill is the daughter of Judge Merrill and a native of Napanee. She was educated at Ot-tawa Ladies' College and has made a specialty of entomology. So far as I am aware she has published no collection of verse, but her poems have appeared in various Canadian periodicals and given pleasure to many by their graceful form and in-dubitable note of true emotion. The above lines are contained in "A Treasury of Canadian Verse," compiled by the late Dr. Hand. Miss Merrill is now resident in Picton, P. Maris, in the Globe.

OFFICIAL REPORTING.

Stenographer Butcher's Elaborate Staff at the Ganney Trial.

Mr. Nelson Butcher, the official stenographer of the Ganney investigation, made elaborate preparations for his task. Mr. Butcher has a staff of a veritable regiment of each day's proceedings in the hands of the court at 10 o'clock of the following day. The copies are for the use of the commissioners and the solicitors and principals on each side. To reproduce them in the required time Mr. Butcher has a staff of 10 or 12 experts, with other professional operators in reserve in case of accidents. Even with so large a staff the most laborious and exacting labor will be required to carry out the contract.

Mr. Butcher himself remains in court during the proceedings and takes most of the shorthand report himself. This occupies his time from 10 o'clock to 4. To extend his notes he uses a Retinal instrument. This is an electrical appliance, which works on something of the same principle as a phonograph. Mr. Butcher reads his notes into the instrument, and this operation takes about the same time as the pro-ceedings took in court, that is until about 11 o'clock at night. The Retinal attachment, while Mr. Butcher is speaking into it, is connected to successive rollers, which reproduce his words as by a phonograph to two expert operators on typewriting machines, who make the first copy of the evidence. A few minutes after these two start working another relay begins making the copies of their sheets, and in this way the 16 copies are complete before midnight. After that there are two or three hours' work verifying the report. This is done by reading the type-written manuscript back to Mr. Butcher, who follows his shorthand notes throughout.

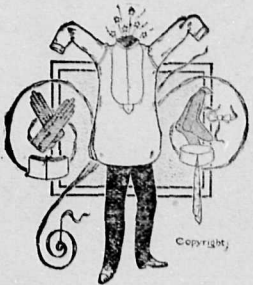

The officials thought at one time of attempting to reduce the report to printing each night for the following day, but this plan was given up as impracticable owing to the limited time. Retinal copies are, however, available on the second day, after each day's proceedings.

Mr. Butcher has one or two Retinal instruments and several typewriting machines in reserve in case of accident, as a breakdown with such a limited time to work in would be disastrous. One of his typewriting machines is run by electricity—said to be the only one of its kind in Canada. It is a ponderous instrument, but the keys require only the merest touch to depress them and form the letters. Magnetism does the rest. The speed of the machine is almost unlimited.

A Garden for Birds. I knew a certain garden that was made solely to attract the birds, says a writer in Country Life, and it is in every way an unequalled success. It is free from murderous cats and small boys, and the birds like it. Thirty-four different species have been counted at different times of the year in great abundance, and if at any time there is not enough the owner of the garden supplies the birds with various tubs. Sun-flower seeds are always on hand, as well as quantities of crisp lettuce. These supplementary stores are placed on a stand called the birds' band, scattered low, under which bugs and worms hide in the damp earth. Hydrants are left dripping, where birds may drink or bathe to their hearts' content. Strings, threads and cotton are hung about on bushes and trees, so that building material may be easily accessible. Many of the birds become so tame and so wise in the ways of the place that wise Mr. Grinnell overturns a log they will flock to her like a drove of chickens.

Surprising. The London Morning Post states that Canadians never fought for their existence. To the shades of those Canadians who fought and fell in the war of 1812 this information must be somewhat surprising. It is much longer ago since Britons fought for their existence. The British wars of the past two centuries have all been fought in foreign lands.—Montreal Herald.

FAREWELL WORDS.

Rev. Auvache and family left on Tuesday for their new home at New Westminster. A large number of friends were at the station to say good-bye, and their departure was the source of sorrow and regret on the part of their friends and themselves.

On Friday night a farewell social was tendered Mr. and Mrs. Auvache at the Baptist church. There was a large attendance, and among the speakers were the other ministers in the town. Many kind words were spoken, and a purse of $88 was presented to the pastor by the members of his church, and the following address read:

Rev. F. W. Auvache. Dear Sir:—In the short life of our church we are called upon to experience one of those precarious circumstances, not knowing with any measure of assurance what the future may have in store for us. During the short time that you have gone in and out among us we have been blessed with a large measure of prosperity as a church, both numerically and financially. It is said that in the best family circles there are times of friction and disturbances. There may have been some very small frictions, but so exceptionally small as to be unnoticeable. This pleasant relation between pastor and church has been due to your discretion and christian courtesy. You have commanded the respect, not only of those immediately associated with you in church life, but of a large number outside the church, many whom you little think of will regret deeply your departure from our midst. Your moral integrity has been such that to even attempt any comment upon it appears presumptuous. You will leave behind an example worthy of copy, one that eternity itself will not obliterate. Many have been moved to emulate your life, proving that it will be perpetuated in other lives in Cranbrook when you are far away. Our sister church at New Westminster is to be congratulated, while we have to deplore your departure.

May a monument be erected high in our memories with the prayer "Mizpah" mutually inscribed thereon.

We are assured that you will ever have a tender place in your heart for the church and people of Cranbrook and that you will ever be anxiously looking and praying for an increasing blessing of success to attend the very good work already commenced.

Your successor may justly be added will have a great advantage over yourself in starting work in Cranbrook. You found a few and suffering under a painful calmness over which they had no control but which your christian worth, wisdom and patience have materially assisted to bury in oblivion. He will find a prosperous, harmonious and peaceable church. You found practically an unorganized church, with the bulk of the work in the Sunday School and church devolving upon yourself and family and demanding your unremitting attention. He will find a well organized church, with well equipped brethren and sisters in every branch of the church work, to readily and efficiently lend a helping hand.

In conclusion we shall ever continue to follow you with our prayers, assured that we too shall have a large place in your prayers for the Greatest of Divine blessings to rest upon us mutually until that day when we shall meet where partings shall be no more. May an ever loving and all wise Father continue to pour upon both yourself and family and our sister church to whom by His Providence He is leading you, His richest blessings so that there may be given to you souls as seals to your ministry and as stars in your crown of rejoicing for eternity.

We cannot let this opportunity pass without in some way showing our appreciation for the services you and Mrs. Auvache have rendered. We therefore ask you to accept this purse, not for its intrinsic value but as a slight token of the love and esteem in which you are held.

What Boys and Girls Read.

The pupils in one of the rooms of the school the other day were asked to tell something about the books and magazines they had read in the past year. It is rather interesting to know of the books that are, locally, most read by boys and girls. It would be impossible to say what are the most popular. Contrary to expectation, "Nick Carter's Detective Stories" and "The Life of Harry Tracy," were, so the confession goes, but little read. The younger girls apparently thrive on "The Elsie Books," while, of course, quite a number of boys would live and die by Hentz Shakespeare, Ralph Connor, Longfellow, Jules Verne, Charles Reade and Ernest Thompson Seton are apparently the favorites. "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" is liked by many, for, as one girl put it, "It seemed more real and true to me than the others." It is pleasant to hear this: "The book I liked best was 'Beautiful Joe,' as it was about kindness to dumb animals," and of the heroine of another book, that "She was so good and kind." To another girl "Evangeline" is best, because "It is the most beautiful and pathetic story I have ever read."

Magazines and newspapers of every description came in for a share of reading. "The Wide World," "The Strand," "Argosy," "Success," "Munsey," "Collier's Weekly," "The Winnipeg Free Press," "Family Herald," "Toronto Globe," "Nelson News," "Ladies' Home Journal," etc.

In expressing his preference, one boy showed his nationality in this reply: "I like the Canadian Magazine best because it is about our own country." To another "Collier's Weekly" appeals, because "It makes known to you the most exciting events of the times," the "Review of Reviews," because it "tells all about the world," the "Munsey," "for its illustrations." One boy tells us he "don't read no magazines," evidently his opportunities for home entertainment are limited.

The Cranbrook Herald is enthusiastically endorsed. One pupil says, "Of the papers I like 'The Cranbrook Herald' the best. It has more in it than the others, and it tells what is happening in the town." To another, this great family journal is welcome because "It tells about things that happen far away."

Given a few dollars to spend in books, what would these boys and girls buy? Some would like copies of Shakespeare's plays, several would invest in "Evangeline," while a few show good judgment in making the Bible first choice. Some of the other choices are: "A good Cyclopaedia," "Peck's Bad Boy," "Huckleberry Finn," "Life of Gladstone." Several boys yearn for such a book as "Will give full information of the world." Several would risk mental indigestion on such wishy-washy twaddle as the "Elsie Books" and the novels of E. P. Roe. To read the "Korn" is the prayer of a sport-loving boy, while one of the most studious girls wishes for a book "with plenty of adventure and hunting incidents in it."

Good Times at Morrissey.

There are good times ahead for both Morrissey and Morrissey Mines. The mines have been opened and the extension of the railroad from Morrissey to Fernie is to become an actual fact this summer. The Fernie Free Press says that the output of coal and coke will be taken out by the Great Northern as formerly, and this demand will be materially increased when the Columbia Falls cut off, now nearing completion, is in operation. This cuts off 93 miles to eastern points and also does away with the 2,000 foot climb over the Hoskell Pass.

The cause of the tie-up at that place now appears to be chiefly due to the fact that the G. N. R. was overstocked with fuel from contracts entered into previously with American companies. This condition was aggravated by the falling off of trade in the winter months. These contracts are running out, the traffic is rapidly increasing, and the demand for Morrissey coal, which is admittedly superior to its American competitors, will steadily increase from this time on.

Jim Hill is Out After Scallops.

Nelson Tribune: The Great Northern is not confining its railway building to Boundary district. A contract has been let to extend the Crow's Nest Southern from Morrissey to Fernie, about ten miles. It is said Jim Hill is fighting for control of the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Company, and that he will either get it or bust the company. The C.P.R. and the coal company are not on good terms, and with coal mines at Blairmore, Frank, Coelman, and other places getting in shape to make large shipments of both coal and coke, the Canadian road will soon be independent of the coal company. Hill is striving for control of. On the other hand, if Hill gets control of the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Company, he will be able to care for its total output himself. The Great Northern will take the coal, and the smelters in Montana the coke. If he has coke to spare, he will be able to haul it over the Great Northern to the smelters at Grand Forks, Northport, and Nelson.

Searching for Water Supply.

M. McInnis and William Stocks left Tuesday with a pack outfit to explore Baker mountain in search of ample water supply for the new waterworks company. It has always been understood that another stream on the mountain can be easily diverted into the channel of St. Joseph creek, thus greatly increasing the volume of water now flowing in that creek. The company are pushing the preliminary work as rapidly as possible, so that there will be no delay when the time comes to get down to business.
