COAL GAS RESIDUALS

While Germany has been the largest producer in the world, of by-products from coke and gas works, these industries have become even more important since the outbreak of the war. In Germany such by-products as benzol and tar oil replace gasoline, the importation of which has ceased, and sulphate of ammonia is taking the place of Chili saltpetre, to be used as fertilizer and in the manufacture of explosives.

To obtain sufficient by-products, the coke production has been increased. The German government buildings and railways, etc., are now obliged to use cake, together with fuel of other kinds, and orders have been issued regulating the proportion of coke to be used in the mixture.

The principal coal gas residuals recovered are tar, naphthalene, cyanogen, ammonia and, in the case of coke-oven gas, also benzol.

TAR.—The tar produced from coal gas is one of the chief residuals. It finds its most important application in the arts, where it forms the basis of aniline colour production; 392 different colours and shades are listed as made from tar. These are produced by distilling the tar and. after a a certain temperature has been reached, water-like oil is secured. This oil forms the base of all the beautiful coal-tar colours.

Carbolic acid, naphthalene, anthracine, and benzol are also produced in like manner, and each of these in turn produces a long series of other products. Alarizarin, a valuable colouring matter which forms the base of artificial indigo, is produced by treating anthracene.

In 1913, Germany exported coal tar dyestuffs worth over $55,000,000 (equivalent to 40 per cent of the mineral production of Canada.) During the same year the gross value of byproducts (estimating dyestuff, etc., in the form of crude intermediate products) wasted, by beehive coke ovens in the United States amounted to over $75,000,000. It is probable that the loss in Canada, due to the use of such ovens, is greater in proportion than that of the United States.

Dr. Poltz is said to have discovered a new typhus antitoxin and Dr. Obitsky will remain in New York to make an ample suppiy of the serum for use in Servia.

NO SANDBAGS REQUIRED

In our last issue we were requested to publish an appeal for sandbags, and that the local Boy Scouts had been detailed to make a house-to-house canvass on the 24th of July. Now comes the statement from the corresponding secretary of the Canadian Red Cross Society and secretary of the National Service Committee of Toronto, who says that Mr. F. G. Colmer, secretary of the Canadian War Contingent Association, states most definitely that the British War Offic is providing all the sandbags and respirators necessary and begs that none be sent from Canada. with the request that the information be spread as widely as possible. It is a mistake to instruct the Boy Scouts to canvass for that which is not wanted.

Dr. F. S. Reynolds, of Nanaimo, was here on a visit on Monday.

RECORD IN PATRIOTISM

The small town of Puntledge is one of the most patriotic little places in the West. Situated about three miles from Cumberland it came into existence with the sinking of No. 8 mine of the Canadian Collieries (Dunsmuir) Ltd. When the call of "Halt, Fall in!" came, fifty per cent of the population responded.

Three years ago the single men of Cumberland wanted a holiday and with the assistance of the agitators and the U,m.W. of A. they obtained the desired vacation on the funds of that foreign organization. Supported thus for some considerable time, they were eventually left on the drifting planks asleep, with no work and in absolute want. The provincial treasury came to their assistance in the unfortunate circumstances into which they had placed themselves, brought about by their own actions, with no one to blame but themselves. Now the Provincial Government has seen fit to withdraw the allowance from the single men and the latter are now requesting the civic authorities to intercede on their behalf that they might secure work. The call to "Halt. Fall in!" has been sounded and recruits are wanted for the front. The men who have tried and failed in the medical examination have done their best. But what about those who have never tried at all—those white feather men conspisuous with the red flag when the district was prosperous.

Re-alignment of Industry.

In talking with people about the proposal to place an import duty on foreign fuel oil we have uncovered some curious objections to such a tariff. Strange to say they come from people whose interests are bound up with the very industry for whose benefit the tariff is suggested. They have not been, and will not be, used by the fuel oil interests, because they are not sound reasons, they will not "hold water." But they cannot be wholly ignored because they reveal a surprising lack of understanding as to the real bearing of the facts about fuel oil invasion.

One of these alleged reasons for a "do-nothing" policy is as follows: There are oil fields in Alberta which may become as heavy producers as the California fields at some future time. A duty on foreign fuel oil cannot affect these new Canadian supplies, and it is to be anticipated that, owing to its nearness, Alberta oil will eventually prove to be an even more serious competitor to coal than California oil now is. Therefore, it is said, it is useless to put California oil under a duty.

There are two fallacies in this argument. In the first place it is quite wrongfully assumed that possible future competition from another direction has a bearing on present competition. It has no such bearing. The Alberta fields are not proven to such an extent as to make their future a matter of certainty. Even if they are successful it must be years before they can become producers on anything resembling the California scale. In the meantime, we are facing a crisis of the immediate present. Let the future wait.

In the second place it is wrongfully assumed that the future competition of Alberta oil will be of the same purely destructive character as the present competition of California oil.

There is apparent in this assumption an inability to see the vital difference between domestic and foreign competition, as they affect the labor situation. Either kind, if successful, will wipe out the capital of the defeated industry and throw its plant into the scrapheap. But as touching the labor involved there is this difference: foreign competition entirely destroys the market for labor, which results in prolonged and aggravated unemployment; whereas domestic competition results merely in a re-alignment of industry—a transference of labor from one industry to another. There may be a certain amount of distress while the adjustment is proceeding, but nothing at all resembling the acute and widespread distress which is inevitable when an industry is destroyed by foreign competition.

Suppose for a moment that Alberta oil instead of California oil were competing successfully with coal today. This is what would happen: The new oil industry would require large quantities of labor. Many of the out-of work coal miners would go directly into the oil works, while many others would be absorbed into other industries in place of still others who had shifted into the oil industry. Since oil does not employ as many men as coal there would be a residue of unemployed amongst whom there would be some distress, but even they wouldeventually be absorbed through the continually expanding demands of new industries allied to the oil industry. The final outcome of this realignment would be that Canada would have an Alberta oil industry instead of a British Columbia coal industry. All the benefits of the industry would remain in the country.

As it is, in place of the jeopardised coal industry, there is grow ing up a California oil industry which is giving employment to American labor through a realignment of American industries. Canada (British Columbia) is left with an indigestible mass of pauperized labor for which there is no apparent opportunity of usefulness in any direction.

Therefore if we ignore the possibility of future competition from Alberta it would seem to be wise to protect ourselves against the present competition from California; and if with timorous pessimism we quail before the Alberta bogey, still it will be sound policy to put shackles on the California invader now; so that when the coal trade has to go down the Alberta oil industry may be able to absorb our labor speedily, without the hindrance of having to fight against an entrenched and fortified foreign foe.

A Salesman who wants no Salary

A SALESMAN willing to work day and night. Neither Eats nor Sleeps. Goes anywhere. No hotel bills---just transportation. A most persuasive talker. Well dressed, pleasant spoken, handsome. Can ----and does----get to the "boss" nine times out of ten tries. Gets orders. Will be welcome when he calls again.

THIS Salesman offers you his services. He's a Wizard, and he's ready to start out Monday Morning in your name to sell your goods. Can go earlier if the case is urgent. His name is G. P. Matter (G stands for good, and P for Printed.)

He will work for any and everybody----the small retailer, the big manufacturer, the banker, and everybody else who needs a salesman. But G.P.M. prefers to work for those who will dress him up decently and neatly. He is willing to wear a red necktie or a scarf of any other striking color, but he prefers to have his apparel made a color harmony. He has one other preference; he likes our tailoring.

YOU know what we mean. This A1 Salesman, this peerless one, is a circular, a booklet, card, or any other form of representative. Sent personally addressed, with the King's Stamp on it to give it swift delivery, this ambassador of yours can and will plead your cause eloquently. It will be your fault, not his, if he fails to achieve his mission.

Good Printed Matter costs nothing: that is, it more than repays its cost, for it sells what you have to sell, at your own price.

We're printers. We do good work----this job proves it. Come and examine the paper we have in stock----good and attractive in its blank state. The addition of PRINTER'S INK will transform it from being a dead, voiceless thing into a living SPIRIT, with a tongue that speaks and a charm of personality that will win your eyes and attention, and hold both.

We'd like mightily to endow with pulsing, pleading, persuasive LIFE a piece of blank paper for you to send out in your behalf.

COME in and talk it all over. Better still, let us go to you. Our phone No. is

A GERMAN'S "HONOR"

This photograph shows Heinz Hardenburg in the Tombs Prison Court Yard, in New York, where he is being held to testify at the hearing of Gustav Stahl the German reservist now under indictment for falsely swearing that the Lusitania was armed. Hardenburg was found in Cincinnati after a long search. He says that although he knew the Lusitania was to be torpedoed he urged his Irish sweetheart to make the trio on the boat---she was drowned in the disaster---so that he might be able to board the ship on the day she sailed and spy about to ascertain whether or not she was an armed vessel. The German witness-prisoner will swear that there were no guns on board the ill-fated Cunarder on her last trip,

FIRST-AID COMPETITION

The following is the report of the first-aid competition held in Bevan on July 1st, 1915, under the auspices of the St. John Ambulance Association.

The following teams entered for the competition: Bevan Nos. 1, 2 and 3; Courtenay No. 1, and Extension, but, unfortunately, the car in which the Extension team were making the journey broke down on the way: and two of the Courtenay team having joined the colors the previous day, left Bevan Nos. 1, 2 and 3 teams only to compete, which were composed of the following:

Team No. 1.—W. Chapman, Capt.; S. Cameron, H. Buchanan, M. Lyons, and J. Webber, patient.

Team No. 2.—T. A. Spruston, Capt.; E. Jones, J. O'Connor, S. A. Humphrey, and L. Humphrey, patient.

Team No. 3.—H. R. Tappin, Capt.; W. Williams, E. James, J. Sandland, and F. Yearby, patient.

The No. 1 test was as follows: "A man is removed from the water to the beach unconscious and apparently drowned. Give first-aid treatment."

No. 2 test: "A fireman overcome by smoke falls thirty feet from a burning building; he is found unconscious with the following injuries: (a) Scalp wound two inches long exposing bone over right temple; (b) Blood oozing from ears and nostrils; (c) Bruising, swelling, deformity and Crepitus on outer side of right thigh and ten inches above the knee-cap. Give first-aid treatment, place on stretcher and carry distance to bed (blanket)."

In addition an oral examination was held, many questions on first aid work being put to the competitors. The spectators were treated to an excellent exhibition of what can be done by trained men in first aid. The bandaging and stretcher work was as good as could be seen in any mining town in the country. A silver cup given by the Canadian Collieries (Dunsmuir) Limited, and $25.00 were awarded to the winning team, the prize going to H. Tappin's team. The judges were Dr. J. A. Gillespie, of Vancouver; Dr. Geo. K. MacNaughton, of Cumberland; Dr. Montgomery, of Comox.

The council of the municipality of Coquitlam at its meeting last week decided to hold a tax sale on October 4th, 1915.

TALLEST ONE-PIECE FLAGPOLE

The Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, through its Vancouver agency, Frank Waterhouse & Co. has been asked to handle the huge flagpole which is bound for London care of the British Columbia Government Agency. The pole has been donated by Brooks, Scanlon & O'Brien, and is claimed to be the tallest one-piece flagpole in the Empire. It was felled on Gordon Pasha Lake, and it was intended to ship it last fall, but a washout on the logging railroad delayed the plan. The tree was subsequently brought to Vancouver and trimmed. The flagpole is now 215 feet long. It is 32 inches diameter at the butt, and this dimension is carried on for sixteen feet. From the sixteen foot mark the pole is octagonal for 100 feet, and for the balance of its length is round. At the top it is twelve inches in diameter. It will probably be shipped on the Merionethshire.

The one principle of health which may fairly be described as fundamental and universal is temperance —temperance in the pursuit of pleasure, in excitement in speech, in thought, and above all, in worry, which kills oftener and far more surely than work. Next to temperance comes sleep. Insufficent sleep is probably the most frequent cause of nervous failure; and certainly when failure has come, sleep opens the surest avenue to recovery. Then indeed, too much sleep can hardly be taken; for, as in infancy, the recuperative powers seem to work only during complete sleep.
