REFORM VS. LIBEL

CRIMINAL LIBEL ACTION AGAIN ADJOURNED.

Brothers McInnes in Evidence—One as Plaintiff and Witness, the Other as Counsel — The Representative of "Many Others" Declares the Platform With All Its Many Planks to be His. Charles Herbert Beevor-Potts Gets Good Advertisement—He Takes the Stand in Resplendent Form—The Platform Brought into Court.

The preliminary hearing of the now famous criminal libel proceedings against Mr. W. J. Gallagher, the editor of this journal, was formally opened yesterday morning in the police court, His Worship Police Magistrate Planta presiding.

Mr. E. M. Yarwood, of Yarwood & Young, appeared for Mr. Gallagher; Mr. W. W. McInnes, brother of the principal plaintiff, appeared for T. R. E. McInnes, Angus McKenzie and the "many others."

It was not at first the intention of THE TELEGRAM to give these proceedings in full, believing that the whole business is simply a scheme on the part of a couple of young men, who have not yet got over that vealy zeal, usually experienced by most young men starting out in life, to get some cheap notoriety and advertising. However, there is a considerable amount of amusement cropping up as the proceedings go on, as well as many items of general interest.

When His Worship called time, all the parties interested were present, except Charles Herbert Beevor-Potts, who, no doubt, owing to rush of business, could not leave his office until sent for to take the stand.

When Charles Herbert did appear, he looked slick. He was dressed in a brand new suit and had every appearance of having enjoyed a good night's rest.

When the case was opened, His Worship said the information had been read on a former occasion, and that there was no necessity to repeat it.

Mr. McInnes then opened the case by saying that the alleged libel was contained in an item which appeared in the defendant's paper, THE DAILY TELEGRAM, of the 14th of March, headed "A Strange Coincidence." He then called for his brother, Mr. Thomas R. Edward McInnes, and asked him to take the stand.

Counsel McInnes—What is your business? Plaintiff McInnes—Solicitor.

Q.—Where do you live? A.—Nanaimo.

Q.—Do you know of an organization called the Reform Club? A.—I do.

His Worship—Kindly do not ask the witness leading questions.

Counsel McInnes—I do not intend to, your worship, except a few preliminary ones.

Counsel McI. to witness—What is your connection with the Reform Club? A.—I am president.

Q.—Where were you on the morning of Sunday the 11th of March? A.—I went to Northfield with Mr. Angus McKenzie as delegates from the Nanaimo Reform Club.

Q.—What was your mission? A.—To wait on a meeting of the Miners' Union assembled at 11 o'clock.

His Worship—You cannot say what you were to do.

Witness continuing—A political meeting was arranged for the Monday evening following in the K. of P. Hall, Northfield.

Q.—What association was formed on Sunday? A.—There was no association formed practically, but on Monday evening following a branch of the Nanaimo Reform Club was organized at Northfield.

Q.—After the meeting on Sunday morning where did you go? A.—I returned to town.

Q.—What is that (handing witness a paper)? A.—That is THE DAILY TELEGRAM Nanaimo, a copy purchased by me at defendant's office on the 16th March from the person in charge.

Q.—Are you referred to in that paper?

Mr. Yarwood—I object to that question.

The plaintiff again taking up the paper and assuming his gravest air and also the appearance of a much injured gentleman proceeded as follows: "Ram—Pant Reform:"

"According to the Opposition organ in this city, a meeting of Northfield electors, opposed to the present Provincial Government, was held in the K of P. hall yesterday morning (Sunday.) Mr. T. R. McInnes, president of the Nanaimo Reform Club, and Mr. Angus McKenzie were present from town.

"The platform recently promulgated by the Reform Club here was discussed. In view of this the platform is evidently minus a plank. It should be immediately added that they favor Sunday as a political day, when meetings are to be held and political questions should be discussed. Then it would deserve the title of the Ram—Pant Reform Club."

Q.—When did you see that article. A.—I saw that article on Tuesday morning.

His Worship—First time I have seen this.

Q.—What gentlemen are referred to? A.—Myself and McKenzie.

Q.—What association? A.—The Nanaimo Reform Club

Q.—When did you again go to Northfield? A.—On Monday the 12th I went to Northfield.

Q.—At what time? A.—At 7:30 in the evening.

Q.—Who went with you? A.—Angus McKenzie, Ralph Smith and other members of the club.

Q. What was done? A.—I formed a branch there.

Q.—What is that (handing witness another copy of a paper)? A.—Another copy of THE DAILY TELEGRAM, which I bought at defendant's office on the 16th of March. This issue contains the libel complained of.

The witness then proceeded to read the article headed, "A Strange Coincidence," as follows:

"Although we do not wish to create public preju—dice against any political organization, it seems, however, a strange coincidence that the recent dynamite outrage at Wellington occurred but a few hours after the formation in that section of a branch of a certain political organization with well known leanings to anarchy and Sunday meetings."

Continuing the witness said this forms part of the column containing the article headed "The Wellington Outrage."

Counsel I intend, Your Worship, to put in the whole paper.

Q.—Who did you purchase these papers from? A.—Mr. Burns, at the defendant's office. I bought the papers on the 16th instant.

Q.—What was Mr. Burns' connection with the paper? A.—He was in the business office with another gentleman whom I do not know.

Q.—Do you know what dynamite outrage is referred to in that article? A.—Well, yes, it refers to the recent outrage which occurred at Wellington a short time ago.

Q.—What impression had this article on you? A.—The impression was that I was referred to—myself and Mr. McKenzie were referred to especially, our names had been mentioned and the members of the Nanaimo Reform Club referred to in general. While on my way to Victoria a short time afterwards the passengers in the train had taunted me, and passed insinuations, in reference to my being a dynamiter, anarchist, etc.

The counsel for the prosecution then asked the witness to read the article in exhibit "B," headed, "The Wellington Outrage."

His Worship—I cannot permit the reading of this article, on the ground that I have not yet had any evidence of an outrage having taken place at Wellington.

Mr. McInnes argued that this was immaterial and that it was not necessary to show that an outrage had occurred. However, he would put in the paper as documentary evidence and would not urge to have the article read.

In reply to another question the witness said the paper is delivered to him regularly, and that he had read the article in the issue of the 14th of March last.

Q.—What impressed you to believe that this article referred to you? A.—On my way down town that morning several of my friends accosted me as "dynamiter," "anarchist," etc.

Mr. Yarwood—I object to this going in. The witness has no right to say what anyone said to him. If he wants to prove this he must put the parties who accosted him in the box.

Q.—What led you to think this article referred to you? A.—From what was said to me I formed the opinion that the article referred to myself.

Mr. Yarwood—I must insist on my objection being observed by witness.

Q.—What led you to institute proceedings? A.—The impression I received from reading the article and from what others said to me led me to institute libel proceedings against the defendant. I first demanded an apology.

Q.—What was your private impression on first reading the items? A.—I considered that both myself and Mr. McKenzie were directly referred to, as well as all the members of the Reform Club.

The prosecution then wanted to put in a copy of THE TELEGRAM of April 5th in order to prove malice.

Mr. Yarwood objected, stating that if the plaintiff felt aggrieved on account of anything appearing in subsequent issues of the paper he could institute another action.

Hereupon the prosecution withdrew the paper.

Q.—Do you know the defendant Mr. W. J. Gallagher?. A.—I know him as manager and editor of THE DAILY TELEGRAM.

Q.—Had you known him before this libel suit began. A.—My knowledge of the defendant has been gained from business relations with the defendant subsequent to these proceedings I had known him as editor and manager of the paper at the time the libel complained of was published.

Cross-examined by Mr. Yarwood.

Q.—About what time was this Nanaimo Reform Club organized? A.—I think about the middle of February last.

Q.—Who are the officers—who is president? A.—I am the president.

Q.—Mr. McKenzie is a member; is he an officer? A.—Yes, Mr. McKenzie is a member of the executive committee.

Q.—Is there a vice-president? A.—No.

Q.—A secretary? A.—Yes. J. McKenzie is secretary. Messrs. Ralph Smith, Arthur Wilson, D. S. McDonald and J. E. McKenzie are on the executive committee.

Q.—How many members are there? A.—I think one hundred and fifty.

Q.—All of whom belong to Nanaimo City? A.—Yes.

Q.—Then the Nanaimo Reform Club established a branch at Northfield! A.—Yes.

Q.—The meeting for that purpose was held on Sunday? A.—It was decided to establish a branch at Northfield and myself and Mr. Angus McKenzie were sent out as delegates on Sunday, March 11th to Northfield. A preliminary meeting was held then when the aims and objects of the club were explained. It was then resolved to hold another meeting on the following night to perfect the work of the organization.

BACHELORS' BALL.

The Post Lenten Society Event of the Season.

The scene at the Opera House last night was one of the prettiest and most effective that has ever been witnessed in Nanaimo. The Bachelors of Nanaimo set out with the intention of making their dance the event of the season, and last night's gathering verified their purposes; they not only deserved success but commanded it. The decorations of the house were extremely ornamental, and escaped that heaviness of effect which so often prevails in like affairs. There was a nice adjustment of draped mirrors which reflected the dancers in the graceful waltzes and other dances. The front of the stage was beautifully garnished by plants and flowers which were kindly loaned by Mr. Geo. Holmes of the Sunnyside nurseries. These made a cooling and pleasing effect, gratifying to the eye and ornamental to the room. The orchestra engaged was Herm's, and consisted of seven pieces, Mr. J. W. Trendell of Vancouver being especial y engaged for the ball.

The invitation committee had issued its cards with judgment and care, so that all present were known to each other and there was no social distraitement. The reception committee consisted of Messrs. G. D. Barlow, H. Mahrer, R. T. Cooper, M. Stewart, V. Good and T. E. R. Tagart. The floor manager was Mr. E. Van Houten, assisted by Messrs. L. W. Fauquier and M. Lamont. All these gentlemen discharged their various duties admirably.

The invited guests from Vancouver and Victoria included:

Mr. Skene, Vancouver.
Mrs. Green, Vancouver.
Miss Farren, Vancouver.
Mr. and Misses (2) Robinson, Vancouver.
Mr. Gintzberger, Vancouver.
Miss Johnston, Victoria.

The leading citizens of Nanaimo were represented by:

Mr. and Mrs. J. Mahrer.
Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Simpson.
Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Simpson.
Mrs. McLean.
Mr. and Mrs. Richardson.
Mr. and Mrs. Lewis.
Mr. and Mrs. McGregor.
Mrs. Capt. Dempster.
Mr. and Mrs. A. D. McKenzie.
Mr. and Mrs. Young.
Mr. and Mrs. VanHouten.
Mr. and Mrs. Williams.
Mr. and Mrs. Durrant.
Mr. and Miss Bate.
Mr. and Miss Cooper.
Mr. and Miss Stannard.
Mr. and Mrs. M. Wolfe.
Miss M. Meyer.
Mrs. Gordon.
Miss Durward.
Dr. and Mrs. Davis.
Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Potts.
Miss King.
Miss Glaholm.
Miss R. L. Spencer.
Miss Caldwell.
Miss Roe.
Miss Keddy.
Canon, Mrs. and Miss Good.
Mr. C. Dempster.
Mr. and Mrs. Sloan.
Mrs. Wilcox.
Miss Johnston.
Mr. and Mrs. Perkins.

The Bachelors present were:

Mr. E. Van Houten.
Mr. C. Van Houten.
Mr. G. Bate.
Mr. G. D. Barlow.
Mr. L. W. Fauquier.
Mr. V. E. Good.
Mr. M. Lamont.
Mr. H. Mahrer.
Mr. H. M. Stewart.
Mr. J. E. R. Tagart.
Mr. R. T. Cooper.
Mr. E. M. Yarwood.
Mr. F. Field.
Mr. W. C. Scott.
Mr. P. B. Fowler.
Mr. Cane.
Dr. Curry.
Mr. J. Good.
Mr. A. E. Waterhouse.

Following is the programme of the dances which numbered twenty, with four extras:

1. Lancers—"Welcome.
2. Waltz—"Breeze of the Night."
3. Polka—"Our Babies."
4. Waltz—"Two Little Girls in Blue."
5. Jersey "Old Time."
6. Lancers—"Favourite."
7. Bon Ton—"Graceful Dance."
8. Waltz—"Our Darling."
9. Schottische—"Two Sweet to Live."
10. Waltz—"Talking in my Sleep, Harris."
11. Lancers—"Queen of the Ball."
12. Comus Waltz—"Maiden's Reverie."
13. Polka—"Stephanie."
14. Newport—"Springtime."
15. Jersey "Same Old Way."
16. Lancers—"Northern Roses."
17. Waltz—"After the Ball."
18. Polka—"Tric Trac."
19. Schottische—"Sweetest of Them All."
20. Waltz—"Daisy Bell."

The music was admitted to be exceptionally good and admirably adapted to the different dances.

Some of the costumes worn were very handsome, including materials of all sorts and all shades. The predominting colors were black and cream or white, which afforded pleasing contrasts to the brighter colors. THE TELEGRAM would like to particularly describe some of the dresses worn, but as it would be impossible to include all, it fears to offend some fair friends who inadvertently might be omitted. One thing it can say, that is, that the ladies of Nanaimo in a ballroom will compare favorably with any gathering of a like kind in the Province—in fact, Nanaimo's fair ones may take as a motto, nelli secundus.

Last, but by no means least, was the splendid supper catered by Mr. George Raymond of the Wilson House. It was a cold collation of a sumptuous kind. The most delicate appetites would have been tempted by the fare provided much less the healthy, hunger and thirst induced by the "poetry of motion."

The tables, in buffet style, were loaded with cold meats in aspic jelly, hams, tongues and roast joints; fish and vegetable salads, sandwiches and hors dœuvres; pastry, sweets, tartlets and fruits, including bon-bons all in choice confusion, but laid out in admirable order. To an ordinary newspaper man, the supper room held out more attraction than the ball room, especially so in the case of the claret cup which was made and dispensed by Mr. Archie McCallum who must be congratulated on his palatable production.

The strains of the orchestra were still audible as we were winding up for the night, and everyone went away satisfied with having spent a most enjoyable evening. Well done Bachelor's of Nanaimo!

THE KISS OF GOLD.

By KATE JORDAN.

[Copyright, 1893, by J. B. Lippincott Company and published by special arrangement with them.]

he was leaving her was exquisite pain. The familiar landmarks frowned an unbearable reproach.

"What a fool I am!" he thought and gave his shoulders an impatient shrug. "When I'm with Delatole, I see I've done right. When I'm here—pshaw! what's the use of these regrets? They lead nowhere. I can't turn back. I must go on. I'll never forget Virginia, we can be friends still, and some day, in a year maybe, when I'm sure of myself, if she but loves me, all will somehow come right."

He went first to his own room and sat down, looking before him in a dazed way. Would it all come right? Did he believe that? Was he trying to deceive himself at the last? Then for the sake of action and to keep thought away as much as possible he put his clothes and books in his trunk, locked and addressed it. Even when that was done he hesitated. A tumult seemed striving to tear his heart asunder. His hands were like ice.

"I must go to her. I must. Why delay longer?"

He found her leaning against the melodeon, her fingers buried in the fur of the little white kitten he had often teased. Her face was perfectly colorless. She looked at him steadfastly, coldly and uttered no word. It was evident she had heard his voice in the hall and was waiting for him.

There was a long and painful silence. The words that came thronging to Tom's lips were those he dared not speak.

"You have come to say goodby," Virginia said abruptly, still bending upon his face that full, disconcerting gaze. "I heard all you said to father. There is no need to go over it again."

She held out her hand, and he seized it eagerly, only to find it cold and unresponsive. Oh, if she but uttered one pleading word, one reproach, that he might in some measure defend himself! But this chilling repose was a wall which shut him away from her.

"Do not misjudge me," he burst out passionately, his voice broken, and at the words she looked away. "I am going away for a time to work hard, very hard. And I want to believe that your good wishes go with me, that you still remain my friend."

No reply, but her eyes were upon him again, as eloquent with reproach as the eyes of the murdered Cæsar gazing on the face of Brutus.

That look told all. He felt it in his inmost heart. He knew himself contemptible. But Delatole's worldly wise, humorously cynical counsel was with him, impressive and significant as the tenets of a new creed to a convert.

He dropped her cold hand in silence and half turned away.

"I'll come and see you very often, Virginia, if I may," he said haltingly. "New York is not a wilderness, you know. Whenever my work permits, I'll come and have a chat with you, just—just the same."

The words died on his lips. He knew he lied. He knew it would be long ere he should choose to see her changed face, if indeed ever again.

Her silence maddened him.

"Have you nothing to say, Virginia?"

"Goodby," she said, and smiled—but such a smile! There were agony and scorn in it.

"Is that all?"

She held up her little head proudly, and again from her pale, tense lips came a murmur clear and defiant:

"Goodby."

Then her eyes closed. When she looked up, he was gone.

Her body seemed weighted, and she moved with an effort to the window, finding a dreaminess that soothed the hurt in her heart in watching the even fall of snow.

The chapel yonder was ablaze with light, rainbow coloring from the windows falling in bars upon the fresh snow that lovingly outlined every twig and angle. And now the students came thronging out, still singing the chorus of the Christmas hymn, passed from her sight, and silence fell again.

"Have you nothing to say, Virginia?"

A light touch on her arm made her turn, and she saw her father. There was an angry light in his eyes, although he smiled.

"So our young gentleman has gone?"

"Yes."

"M-m," and he pursed up his lips reflectively as he swayed lightly to and fro, his hands behind his back. "Just so. It's the way of the world. I know it. I have seen my friends depart one by one. Only the few stanch ones have remembered and remained. But there is one consolation. We haven't lost much. Our young friend was a fair specimen of the genus cad."

Virginia winced at the word and shielded her face with her hand.

"We don't want him. I've learned to snap my fingers at the pleasures that won't stay and make the most of those

CANADA'S CANAL SYSTEM.

The annual report on canals was presented to the Dominion Parliament on Tuesday of last week by Hon. Mr. Haggart. It appears that the total amount spent on constructing and enlarging canals was $52,210,131. There was further expended for renewals, repairs, staff and maintenance, the sum of $71,310,793, making a grand total of $130,520,924. The total revenue received from the canals was $9,850,578.

The total expenditure on construction account for the year ending 30th June, 1893, was $2,069,573; for renewals, $196,185; for repairs, $204,759; for staff and maintenance, $291,588. The net canal revenue for the fiscal year was $375,089. This shows an increase over the previous year of $32,614.

The number of tons of freight moved on the Welland Canal was 955,554, of which 528,569 tons were agricultural products. On the St. Lawrence canals the quantity moved was 966,755 tons, of which 464,672 tons were agricultural products. On the Ottawa canals the total quantity moved was 647,011 tons, of which all but 20 tons was the produce of the forest. There passed to Montreal by way of the Welland and St. Lawrence canals 261,954 tons of grain, of which quantity 195,244 tons were reported. During the season 268,830 tons of grain arrived at Kingston. Of this Canadian vessels carried 159,000 tons and American vessels 109,000 tons. Only 4,341 tons were taken to Ogdensburg and transhipped to Montreal.

The Sault canal, which is now in course of construction, is by agreement with the contractors to be completed by the 1st of July next. The canal will admit vessels drawing 20 feet of water. The expenditure on this work during the past year amounted to $590,000. For the first half of the current fiscal year there was expended upon it a further sum of $768,546. It is confidently expected that the canal will be completed for operation next summer.

The above figures give some idea of the vast cost of the Canadian canal system, which is universally acknowledged to be about the finest in the world. The amount of freight, chiefly grain, which is carried on these canals is very great, as the figures quoted above show. The St. Lawrence and the Canadian canals are in point of fact one of the great main routes by which England obtains food to support her teeming population. The building of the Sault canal completes the last great link of this grand system on Canadian soil. Some further enlargement of the St. Lawrence and Welland canals is contemplated, and will no doubt be proceeded with year by year. When completed, ocean going steamships, drawing about 20 feet of water, will be able to proceed by the St. Lawrence and the great lakes to the head of Lake Superior, and thence back again to Europe, loaded with the products of the teeming west. This is the ideal which Canada has done so much to realize, and which when completed will put her in possession of the grandest canal system in the world. The Canadian canal system, costing as stated over £26,000,000 sterling, is a monument to the energy and enterprise of the Canadian people, and one of the best proofs of the vast value of Canada to the British Empire. If a second proof is needed we can point with pride to the Canadian Pacific Railway, our great national highway, constructed without assistance from the Mother Country.

SERIOUS rioting has taken place near Pittsburg. Chief Engineer Paddock, of the Frick Coke Co., has been brutally murdered by riotous Hungarians, and several other persons seriously wounded. It is also stated that ten of the Hungarians have been killed or fatally wounded by deputies and citizens who were pursuing them for the murder of Paddock.

A PARIS despatch reports that persons representing 722,000 shares in the Panama canal undertaking met in that city on Wednesday, and resolved to entrust a syndicate of five with the work of founding a new company to complete the canal. They agreed to provide a first subscription of 20,000,000 francs, to be subscribed proportionally, the share of the existing committee to be deducted from the assets distributed among them. It is to be hoped that the French will be at last successful in completing the canal. They are at least showing a praiseworthy spirit of perseverance in the matter.

THE excitement in South Carolina over Governor Tillman's proceedings to enforce the liquor laws lately passed there, whereby druggists were made the only legal dispensers of alcoholic beverages, is dying out. A special session of the Legislature is to be called, and the Governor's powers defined. Some say that he has much exceeded his powers, which others of course deny. At any rate his efforts to promote temperance, if that was his real object, have not been very successful. It is alleged that it is a notorious fact that there are more than 30 "blind tigers" in full operation in the city of Columbia. However right Governor Tillman may have been theoretically, practically his proceedings are leading to very bad results. It takes a wise man to make a successful practical reformer, and that, it is to be feared, is exactly what Governor Tillman is not.

SENATOR SCOTT, leader of the Opposition in the Senate at Ottawa, made an elaborate speech on the school question in the Senate on Wednesday. He denounced the Martin and Greenway Government of Manitoba, as composed of political tricksters, who passed the Manitoba act to suit their own ends. Senator Scott is a Grit, and as Greenway and Martin are Grits likewise, it is to be presumed that the Senator knows what he is talking about when he denounces them as a pair of humbugs. But Senator Scott does not stop there; he advocates the abolition of the right of appeal to England. It is not easy to see what good that would do in bringing about a settlement of the school question, but a Grit always seems to find comfort in kicking at the British connection when there is nothing better to be done. Senator Scott's hearers must have reflected, that there are more humbugs in the Grit party than Messrs. Martin and Greenway.

A BILL has been introduced in the Spanish Cortes by the new Minister of Justice for the more effectual punishment of anarchist criminals. The bill provides that any man responsible for explosions, which are likely to cause death or serious bodily injury, shall be punishable with death or penal servitude for life. It further proposes that all newspaper editors and others, who commend bomb throwing and bomb throwers, shall also receive exceptionally severe punishment. The bill declares all anarchist associations illegal, and provides for their dissolution. The law is stringent, but we think not too stringent under the circumstances. The anarchists will have to be suppressed, no matter at what cost. The Spanish Government, in introducing this law, is setting a good example to the other Governments of Europe, which it is to be hoped they will have the sense to imitate. In the controversy with anarchy, civilization, religion, property, human life itself—all that men hold dear on earth—is at stake, and must be guarded against the efforts of a lot of immoral wretches, who if they were to get the upper hand anywhere would at once proceed to establish a reign of terror to which that of the first French revolution or of the Commune in our own day were trifles. They must not be permitted to get the chance.

Will Issue a History.

So as to permit of his giving more time and attention to the production of several publications which Mr. Alexander Begg has in course of preparation he has been obliged to discontinue the agency in British Columbia of the Western Publishing and Advertising Co. Among other things Mr. Begg promises a complete history of the Northwest from the early discoveries to the present time, a work for which he is peculiarly fitted. It will contain, it is understood, a great deal of information which has never been published, and it will therefore be a valuable addition to the history of Canada. Mr. Begg has also associated himself with Mr. J. H. Hoare of Vancouver, B.C., in the publication of a Guide and Handbook for Travellers which will give British Columbia, its cities and places of interest a prominent part in its pages. Mr. Begg's home continues to be in British Columbia, his family residing in Victoria but his time will hereafter be spent chiefly in the east.

In the London Queen's Bench division of the High Court of Justice yesterday, several addresses were delivered eulogistic of the late Lord Hannen, Lord of Appeal in Ordinary. Mr. Frederick Andrew Inderwick, Q. C., in speaking of Lord Hannen's illness said that during the sitting in Paris of the Tribunal on Arbitration of which Lord Hannen was a member, he was attacked with a tumor, which, in spite of treatment, rapidly developed. Notwithstanding the great mental strain and physical suffering to which his duties and his afflictions subjected him, he continued his active connection with the arbitration court to the end of its labors. His physical condition was never bettered from the time he was attacked with the tumor which ended his life.

The Highest Authority in America.

Printers Ink, the highest newspaper authority in America, speaks thus of THE DAILY TELEGRAM:

"Did you ever hear of a place called Nanaimo? It is on the Island of Vancouver and 75 miles from Victoria. If you live in what you consider an enterprising city and believe that your local daily paper is first-class, write to the publisher of THE DAILY TELEGRAM, Nanaimo, British Columbia, and ask for a sample copy of his paper, and when you obtain it compare it with your home production. Go down and talk with the publisher about it afterwards, and ask him why it is that he can't print as good a paper, or obtain as good a local patronage, or have his paper as free from dead-head or objectionable advertisements? A useful lesson may be learned from Nanaimo."

(Chorus—all together, boys.)

As I walk along Commercial Street,
With an independent air,
You can hear the boys declare
Kitchin is the Auctionaire.

You can hear them sigh,
You can hear them say they'd rather die,
You can see them wink the other eye,
At the man, their friend, the Auctioneer.

that will. We'll snap our fingers, Virginia. He's gone away like a puppy with a bone he wants to eat alone. Let him go."

But still Virginia looked out at the snow and felt each of the city's muffled sounds like the surge from a sea on which her dearest had embarked, leaving her alone.

"We'll not miss him, Virginia," pursued her father in the meditative voice that maddened her to a dumb fury in that moment. She opened and closed her hands and set her lips hard. "I say we'll shed no tears for him. We'll forswear all sentimental dreams if we had any. We'll remember that his leaving the church for the stage was, viewed in this latter light, but an evidence of the rowdiness inherent in our young friend. Very, very rowdy. We will console ourselves by remembering how much we are above him and that we couldn't have expected more from a man whose father was a brown fisted Irish immigrant, his mother an ignorant girl of the plains."

He lit a cigar with a nice deliberateness and put on his cape and hat.

"I'm going for a walk in the snow now. This room depresses me. Stir the fire and turn up the light. When I come back, I'll have you play that little thing by Mozart."

He turned her lightly to him and kissed her on the brow. If her flesh had been touched by marble lips, the caress could not have chilled or sickened her more. She could not cling to her father and sob out her pain. He had always quietly transferred his griefs to her. How could she expect him to help her now?

But when he was gone the loneliness became unbearable. His voice could at least keep the shadows from closing around her like a tomb. Her heavy glance took in each familiar thing. The girl with the mask laughed at her from the corner. The keys of the organ flashed back an eerie intelligence.

"Never again," they seemed to say. "Never again."

A trembling seized her. She fell face downward on a couch and threw her arms out wide. How cruel it was, this sting of human love flung back to feed in bitterness upon itself! Oh, was there nothing more in life than this? Was this all? How had she failed? What had she forgotten or passed by that might have held him?

For, say what we will, a woman's heart does not beat only for the strong and true. Weak men and bad ones have without effort controlled a love the angels might have coveted. There is sometimes sufficient fascination in a trick of manner, just the fall in a voice, to outweigh in love's inconsequent balance all the Christian virtues.

It was Tom Virginia loved. No one better, no one higher. He alone had understood her. His sympathy, his smile had made her sunshine. And now he was gone.

A soft purring at her side, an animal warmth against her throat, aroused her, and she saw that the white kitten had crept under her arm and now lay cuddled against her like a ball of down, lapping her flesh in soft sympathy with its scrap of a tongue.

A cry broke from her. She caught it wildly to her heart. It was something living that pitied her. But the little thing wriggled from the violent embrace, spat at her and scratched her on the cheek.

Virginia started up, laughter heavy with sobs leaving her quivering lips. She pushed the kitten from her with a frantic movement, and then with contradictory tenderness picked it up again and held it against her lips, weeping wildly, as women do when pain is robbed of hope. Why should she hurt it? What had it done more cruel than Tom? She had held him too closely to her heart. He turned and scratched her.

CHAPTER X.

A year went by unmarked for Virginia by a single incident out of the common, gray as the wastes of a sea unruffled by a storm, unmarked by the approach of a sail.

Another year came, and when the opulent sunlight of early summer was deluging with its gold the dusty streets a coupe stopped one day at the door of the house in Chelsea square, and a man, a stranger, asked for Virginia Kent.

Crossing the threshold of her home, he had entered her life. Looking into her eyes, full of unforgotten days, something of his lost youth had awakened in his heart that could only die with death.

This man was Richard Monklow. Virginia had often heard her father speak of him, especially of his meeting with him in the auction room the day he had purchased "The Masker."

The first glance at him gave an impression that forever remained. He had followed the sea and followed it as a commander. His straight, powerful shoulders had a fearless poise. His glance was level, soft; his face, its first youth faded, brown as sere grass, under the shorn, glittering frost of his hair. His humanity was deep, strong, farreaching, as one could see who looked into his eyes, and his smile had a warm, bright sympathy. There were times when he looked startlingly youthful with his white hair. There were unguarded moments of sadness when the chronicle of his years flared eloquently—a confession in every deepened line. Then one knew he had lived the full life of a man in a crowded 40 years, in the sowing and harvest time, had garnered barren hopes and pain, yet without bitterness had tied the sheaves.

He had come to bring Virginia to her father's bedside. The tremors against which the old man had struggled so long had culminated after an excessive debauch in a paralytic stroke resembling death. He had drifted to Monklow's rooms and lay where he had fallen.

As she drove away with him that day Virginia did not dream that the summer would be past ere she returned to live again at Chelsea square, but so it was. In Richard Monklow's home, where the softness and fragrance of modern luxury were more caressing than the breath of the perfect summer mornings, she nursed her father to a semblance of health.

Her lonely heart won back a little of its freshness in these surroundings. Her lips again voiced joyous laughter. Friendship that rang like gold had been generously poured into her life. Her gratitude went out with equal strength to Richard Monklow, and to his sister, a soft voiced, sympathetic woman, who made her dimly realize what her mother's love might have meant to her.

Then she came home again, and the days settled back to their wonted placidity, but with this difference—that a bent and shrunken figure lay limply in a great chair, and the energy and pride in her father's still stubborn heart could only be read now in the hollow, morose eyes flashing beneath the puckered brows.

She stood beside the window one September morning, a letter crushed between her hot hands. A mild rain was drifting like tangled skeins through the gray air. Beyond lay the college grounds, a vista of damp greenness.

She opened the crumpled sheet, smoothing out its creases almost tenderly. Her lips quivered like a child's.

"You know what I am going to say," she read again. "During the summer that has been like no other to me, many times the words I longed to speak have trembled upon my lips, but something in your eyes always silenced me. Virginia, I can be silent no longer. I love you so! The years are dark before you, dear, but I would keep you safe. No harm, no pain, should touch you. Too old and sad, perhaps, you think me. The years have left their ashes on my hair. I am asking too much when I ask for your youth. Yes, yes, I know. But, oh! child, your eyes lured me to dream again. You woke my poor, chilled soul, and it is yours. It but responded to your unconscious call. Turn from me, if you must, and I will put away my dream, but my soul is forever yours. You possess it, and I would not have it back. But, oh, if you would come to me, Virginia!"

How the words awoke all the old pain! She drew her breath in hard, the lips fell over her heavy eyes, and reading Richard Monklow's letter she thought of Tom. These words of searching strength, quivering with the rejuvenating breath of love, had been the lever that rolled the stone from the old grave, and she stood looking at memories she had believed were crucified.

"My soul is forever yours. I would not have it back."

The words were in her mind. She seemed speaking them in the darkness to that other who had not listened. Was it so always? Must one speak and one not hear? One live, the other wait?

"You have a very interesting letter there, Virginia. You haven't made a sound for half an hour." And at her father's voice, reduced now to a petulant piping that anger made shrill, she started guiltily and thrust it in her pocket.

"So you'll be a fool, will you?"

"It's from Monklow. He's asked you to marry him. There, there, I know. When a man is robbed of almost every faculty but sight and speech he uses them to advantage. Of course you're going to marry him. Of course you are. He is genuine. He is stanch. He has a few more years than a novelist would allow an impatient lover—what of it? He is younger than half the emasculated, juvenile dudes floating around this town. He is the most picturesquely handsome man I have ever seen and in the meridian of his strength. He is a gentleman by birth. The blood of ladies and gentlemen for generations flows in his veins. Ah, ha! lots of girls in his own set would stay at home and chase no more the poverty stricken duke if they thought there was a chance of catching Richard Monklow. I have no objection to him. He is everything I admire and commend. I give my consent, Virginia."

Since his illness Virginia had grown accustomed to treating her father like a pettish child. She went to him, laid both her warm palms on his bald crown, and smiling looked tenderly at him.

"No, daddy. I don't want to marry. I'll stay with you yet awhile."

The sudden fury of his gaze was like the leaping of an unlooked for flame from a dead fire.

"So you'll be a fool, will you? You'll say no? You'll fling away wealth that could give me, in my last accursed days, a few of the luxuries I was accustomed to? And why? Oh, you fool!" and his blue, quivering lips seemed to spit out the words, "and why? Because you are still thinking of that fellow, that scamp, that Murray, who gave you the go by. Don't I know? You sentimental idiot, he had no romantic memories to hold him back! He has looked to it that his bread will be plentifully buttered. Read today's paper. After a splurge in Europe, a courtship on the steamer coming home, he's going to marry General Baudoine's widow—a woman worth millions. Do you hear? Refuse to marry Monklow, and I'll never forgive you."

He was a terrible sight in this sudden spasm of rage—repression, his lifelong habit, fallen from him like a garment loosed by his palsied fingers.

LAUNCH "SKIP" BURNT OUT

At an Early Hour This Morning at the Outer Wharf.

The N. V. C. Co.'s launch "Skip" caught fire this morning at about 5 o'clock, and was entirely gutted, owing to the high wind prevailing, which sprang up about 4:30. The alarm was given from the machine shop and the Company's men were soon on the spot, doing all in their power to subdue the fire. As we go to press the fire is only smouldering, the engine and boilers being intact. The lauch was used for carrying the miners to and from Protection Island, and was brought here from San Francisco.

Kitchen's Latest.

Mr. T. Kitchin is a gentleman of fertile ideas and resourceful originality. Had the display which he had in his window yesterday, and which continues to-day, been exhibited in a large city, it would have attracted thousands of sightseers. The ladies of Nanaimo are particularly requested to call and see this original mode of advertisement.

Perkins WESTEND AUCTIONEERS.

LADIES ATTENTION!
AUCTION OF DRY GOODS!!

I shall start on Saturday, Feb. 10th, to clear out by Auction the entire stock of Dry Goods, Millinery, Mantles and Men's Furnishings, latelty bought from Mr. A. A Richardson at a ridiculously low price previous to making an entire change in my business. I have secured the services of Mr. Dufour an Auctioneer of over 20 years' experience in England and Canada, to conduct the auction branch of my business.

The Public of Nanaimo know that this stock is composed of really useful and serviceable goods, and this will offer them an oppotunity of purchasing at their own prices. I ask one and all to be at the WESTEND on Saturday, Monday and following days, when the whole stock will be offered without reserve. Sale from 2 to 5 each day.

MEN'S ATTENTION! Auction of Stock of Mr. James Caldwell.

We have received instructions from Mr. James Caldwell to Auction the whole of his well assorted stock of Men's Furnishings and Hats.

As Mr. Caldwell is going out of this line, and intends in the future to devote his entire attention to the Tailoring branch of his business, the whole of this stock will be offered without reserve.

Sale on Saturday, Monday and following nights from 7 to 10.
