That Dock Money.

If the government propose to let their actions be influenced by the various newspaper suggestions which have lately appeared, it may happen that they will find more difficulty in disposing of the dock money than they experienced in getting it. It is already known that the government have decided to expend the whole of this money on the mainland. To this the Nanaimo Free Press takes exception. It declares that the money should first be applied to the payment of provincial loans obtained on dry-dock account, and the balance should go into the treasury as ordinary revenue. If any section of the province is entitled to a larger share of this money than another, it thinks the island is that section. The Colonist of Saturday replies to the Free Press, and its reply so perfectly meets the case that we give it below. We must say that in this matter the Colonist shows a spirit of liberality and fairness which some other newspapers in this province might imitate with profit. It says:

While a few of the people of the lower mainland are proclaiming that their interests have been outraged by the settlement bill, which, they say, gives the island everything and the mainland nothing, we confess to a feeling of surprise that an island newspaper—and one, too, that has always worked hand-in-glove with the malcontents of New Westminster—has raised the cry that the mainland is getting too much and the island too little. The paper referred to is the Nanaimo Free Press. That journal has of late years cultivated a friendship with the mainland. To its exertions, chiefly, is due the establishment of a "steamship line" which was to draw off the provincial commerce of Victoria and confine it to Nanaimo and New Westminster. As a sturdy opponent of the island railway the Free Press occupies a central figure, and as a Victoria hater it is not excelled even by the Guardian. Now, of all the journals on the island it was not expected that the Free Press would raise an objection to the distribution of the $340,000 of the dry-dock money, so long as it fell to the share of the mainland. Yet it has deceived all expectations and come out in opposition to the expenditure of the whole of that large sum on the mainland. Here then, we have the spectacle of the Guardian, on the one hand, abusing the government for not giving the mainland more, and the Free Press abusing the government for giving the mainland too much! The spectacle presented of these worthy newspapers falling foul of each other on the all important matter of the distribution of the spoils, forms so singular a picture that one is almost disposed to imitate the man whose wife was attacked by bruin, and cry, "Go it, bear! Go it, wife! I don't care which whips!" But there happens to be underlying all the narrow-mindedness of the Free Press and Guardian a dangerous spirit, the existence of which cannot be too strongly condemned. The Guardian has raised the banner of sectionalism. It declares that the mainland must have the capital, the dock, railway, the $750,000, and all else worth having, even at the expense of a dissolution of the union between island and mainland. The Free Press—equally sectional—declares the mainland is only entitled to a small share of the dry-dock money; indeed, it goes further and says "the island is more justly entitled to the money than the mainland, for the dock is purely an island matter from beginning to end." This is an absurd statement. The dock was a provincial work. Its construction was undertaken by the province with provincial money; it was intended to benefit the shipping of all nations, not that of the island alone; its objects were commercial, and every business man on island or mainland had an interest in it. Mainland and island contributed alike towards the construction, it is true; but the mainland was by far the heaviest contributor in an indirect way. The Walkem-Beaven government maintained the island roads and bridges in fairly good order; but they suffered mainland roads and bridges to fall into a condition of almost hopeless decay. When money was demanded for the preservation of costly public works on the mainland the applicants were informed that there was none for that purpose, although there was always plenty for the dock. The deplorable condition in which this government found the public works on the mainland rendered it necessary that a very large sum of money should be applied to their restoration. The sum of $340,000 will not be sufficient to attain that most desirable object, but it will go a long way. It has, therefore, been decided to lay out the dry-dock refund on the mainland. This is a wise and thoughtful step. The island is limited in extent; the mainland is almost boundless, and has ten miles of road to maintain where the island scarcely has one mile. Our unsophisticated friend of the Free Press writes as if money when laid out on the mainland is sunk there, when the fact is that it is only put in circulation. Spending a dollar on the mainland is like coasting down hill on a toboggan. It only requires a slight push to cause the sled to go thundering down the declivity to the bottom. So it is with a dollar spent on the mainland. It is only set in motion there and it continues to roll and roll until it reaches the island. Public money expended on the mainland is not lost; it is invested where it earns compound interest. It enable the stockraiser and farmer to reach a market; it sweetens labor by cheapening food and other necessaries; it increases the value of property and farming produce, and causes thriving communities to spring up in all directions. No; money spent on the mainland is not thrown away. It is kept from rusting, and when in the fullness of time it finds its way back to the capital, it has been worn smooth by the many hands through which it has passed while circulating on the mainland.

California's Great Mistake.

California's wheat crop for the present year is estimated to be worth $60,000,000. One-third of this will be retained in the State for home consumption and seed, and the rest will be exported to foreign countries. The wheat product of the other Pacific Coast States and Territories will be worth $20,000,00 more, making the value of the total wheat crop of the Pacific Coast $80,000,000, which is more than the entire value of all the precious metals mined in the United States during 1882. These figures show the monstrous folly of which the people of the Pacific Coast were guilty in past years when they pinned their faith and their hopes of future prosperity upon their gold and silver mines and in a great measure ignored and neglected their far more valuable agricultural resources.

SURPRISING A CONGREGATION.—Life is made up of surprise, but probably no one was ever more completley astonished than the subject of this story by the Newburyport Hearld: "Formerly it was the custom, more than at present, to 'have up notes' in the pulpit for loss of friends, etc. A neighboring clergyman on an exchange read a notice that Mr. A. desired prayers that the death of his wife might be sanctified to him, etc., and the clergyman prayed most earnestly for the brother sitting lonely and desolate in his pew, etc. He noticed a rustling in the congregation and to his consternation learned that the note had been shut up in the Bible a year, and the man had his new wife for the first time in the pew. The good peopled smiled."

General Sherman recently had some shirts made at a furnishing store in Washington, and the cutter at the store, a few weeks later, met the General with a friend walking down the avenue. The General remembered the face, but could not locate him, and the cutter greeted him with, "Good morning, General. How are you to-day?" The General stopped, shook hands, and the cutter, preceiving that the General's mind needed refreshing, said quietly: "Made your shirts." "Oh, I beg your pardon," said the general quickly, and turning to the gentleman with whom he was walking, he said: "Ah! Colonel ——, allow me to introduce you to my friend, Major Schurtz."

"Well, how is your brother doing in St. Louis?" asked the first as he halted a moment at the door of a business house on the Bowery.

"Vhell, he doan' fail yet."

"Seem to be doing a good busines?"

"Seems dot vhay."

"Well, I hope he'll do first rate."

"I hope so, too, but I dunno. He has been dere tree months und doan' fail yet, and I can't exactly make out vhat he means. Six weeks vhas blenty of time to bust oop in a blace like St. Louis, and pay ten cents on der dollar?"

A letter from Capt. Dawson, commander of the British Circumpolar Expedition, states that the Indians have reported the existence of ruins about twenty miles distant from Fort Rae, and that, if the descriptions given are correct, the remains must resemble those of Mexico and Yucatan. The Indians are superstitiously afraid to approach the ruins, but Capt. Dawson's communication announces his intention to make an early trip to them.

A novel method is adopted in China to protect carrier pigeons from birds of prey. An apparatus made of about ten small bamboo tubes is attached to the pigeon's tail in such a way that a shrill whistling sound is produced by the rush of air across the tubes.

The final revision of the Old Testament has been completed as far as the close of the Pentateuch.

The frost on the 8th badly damaged growing crops in the Mississippi valley.

W. J. Guppy, druggist, of Newbury, writes:—"Dr. Fowler's Wild Strawberry is just the thing for Summer Sickness. I sold out my stock three times last summer. There was a good demand for it." Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is infallible for Dysentery, Colic, Sick Stomach and Bowel Complaint.

If you are broken down in constitution and wasting away by sickness, dissipation, too great nervous taxation, or suffer from any chronic disease, do not abandon hope until you have tried Burdock Blood Bitters. What it is doing daily towards restoring others, it might do for you.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS THIS DAY.

Proclamation.....Jno. Robson
Appointments (2)....Prov. Secretary
Notice.....E. M. Johnson
Grand Concert.....Drill Shed

The British Columbian.

Wednesday Morning, Sept. 19, 1883.

The Victoria Standard professes to have information of an approaching dissolution of the provincial assembly and a new election. We are afraid our contemporary will be disappointed if he really cherishes any such anticipations. Unless there are grave reasons which have not yet come to the surface we should regard dissolution a most unjustifiable and imprudent waste of public funds. There has been no new policy proposed by the present government which was not fully ventilated at the general election. The Standard does not seem to apprehend the fact that a new election would not, in all probability, bring into existence a new government.

A company has lately been formed to establish and work a pneumatic tube between Chicago and New York. The tube is to be 4 inches inside. At each end there will be a powerful air pump. One of these will exhaust the air from the tube while the other forces air in at the opposite end. The force of this air, it is calculated, will be sufficient to carry a package between New York and Chicago in 4 hours. Packages sent through this tube must, of course, be small, and they will be enclosed in cases of sole leather. The cost of constructing the tube and machinery is put at $4,250,000, and the cost of maintenance $1,155 daily. It is estimated that the daily earnings will be $12,000. When this pneumatic tube has been extended to New Westminster we may be able to go from this city to New York in less than a day.

Speaking of British owners of U. S. lands the St. James Gazette says: "Sir Edward Reed, M. P., owns no less than 2,000,000 acres in America; the Duke of Sutherland, 400,000 acres; Lord Dunmore, 100,000 acres, and Lord Dunraven, 60,000. Messrs. Philips, Marshall & Co., own a farm of 1,300,000 acres; the heirs of Colonel Murphy, 1,100,000 acres; H. Diston, 12,000,000 acres, and the Standard Oil Company, 1,000,000 acres. It appears that nine men own a territory equal to that of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island combined. Then there are the great railroad corporations whose free gifts of land from lavish Congresses amount to upward of 200,000,000 acres. Eleven corporations have received 120,000,000 acres. The Northern Pacific road had grants amounting to 47,000,000 acres, and other grants made range from 1,000,000 acres upward."

The result of the inquest in the case of Mrs. Mitchell, and the arrest and incarceration of Dr. Masters, has produced quite a little sensation. The evidence given before the coroner seemed very conclusive, and it is difficult to see how the jury could come to any conclusion other than the one found in their verdict. It yet remains for us to hear evidence on behalf of the accused. The evidence may seem incontrovertible, but the public should not pronounce upon the guilt of Dr. Masters until he has had a full opportunity of defending himself. In cases of this kind the patient is absolutely at the mercy of her accoucheur, and it is of the greatest importance that those who undertake that most responsible office should be able to act with intelligence and judgment. If Dr. Masters has been guilty of criminal negligence, resulting in the death of an innocent person, he must suffer the consequences. But if he can successfully show that proper precautions were taken, the law as well as public opinion will acquit him of wrong-doing. There is a disposition in some quarters to question the propriety of the action taken by Dr. McLeod. No such feeling should exist. If Dr. McLeod honestly believed that Mrs. Mitchell's death resulted from malpractice, it was manifestly his duty to lay information, and he deserves the thanks of the public for obtaining a thorough investigation.

Mr. Villiard's visit to Victoria was so extremely brief that it almost took away the people's breath.

There was no quorum in the council chambers Monday night, and council adjourned until this evening.

The disabled locomotive has been taken up to Port Hammond for repairs. It is expected to be ready in about two weeks.

At the Victoria license court last Saturday there were 3 applications for new licenses only one of which was granted.

We are informed that the the steam ferry will begin operations as soon as the ferry wharf at the foot of Mary st. has been constructed.

Two men were arrested at Seattle last week on suspicion of being connected with the Hesse murder. Supt. Todd went over, but they proved to be the wrong men and were set at liberty. It is now stated that Anderson went to Victoria from here, and took a steamer to Astoria or Portland.

FROM TACOMA.—The str. Gipsey arrived from Tacoma at 10 o'clock last Saturday morning, bringing about 80 tons of freight. She left on Saturday evening.

W. C. T. U.—A meeting of the ladies interested in the Women's Christian Temperance Union will be held in the Skating Rink at 4 o'clock this afternoon. It is desirable that there should be as large an attendance as possible.

Doors open at 7; commence at 7:30; refreshments during intermission. Admission 25 cents, in aid of the funds of the Religious Tract Society.

BIG TIMB.—The str. Yosemite arrived from Victoria 5 minutes before 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. This is a good deal quicker than the time the people of this city have been accustomed to, and the change from the old service must be highly appreciated. It makes a great deal of difference to business establishments whether the mail steamer arrives at 2 o'clock or at half-past 7.

FIELD MEETING.—Arrangements are being made for holding a field meeting of a religio-social kind on Wednesday, 26th instant, at the junction of the Scott and McLellan roads near Boundary Bay. License Court.

The license court for this district in the court house on Saturday at 11 a. m., the following justices the peace being present: His Worship Mayor Edmonds, in the chair, Bole, Clarkson, Ferris, W. Cunningham, Mathers, and Sedrigh. Three applications for licenses were presented: from McInnes, for his bar on Front; F. Eickhoff, for the Eickhoff, Front street; and John Tobet for the Cleveland House, Columbia. The applications of Messrs. Eickhoff and McInnes were supported by McColl, who stated that licensing had been denied Mr. McInnes by former sitting of the court for selling liquor without a license, and no steps had been taken to prevent him from so doing, he believed it was at least an open question if he required an additional license for the place in question was but a continuation of the Union Hotel, for which he held a license. He was, however, willing to give the city treasurer the benefit of the doubt and pay for the license. His worship the mayor stated that the policeman had been instructed to ascertain whether the persons obtaining liquors were being sold at the place specified, and his report was that temperance drinks only were obtained there. He (the policeman) had since then reported the sale of liquor by persons obtaining liquors in the building in question to Mr. Ferris did not consider the building in question an extension of the Union Hotel, as it was a detached building on a separate lot, on a different street, whereas the application for the Union Hotel license described the premises as situated on Columbia street. The one license could not cover the two establishments. The court was understood to concur. Mr. Ibbotson urged his own application upon the ground that he had invested over $4,000 in the building, which he had carried on as a temperance house for the last four months. He stated, however, that his boarders, not being able to procure liquor upon the premises, went elsewhere for it and sometimes came home drunk—were sometimes brought home and laid at the door. He had a license to sell in his own building, so that those who drank to excess might be put to bed and properly cared for. The applications were opposed by the Rev. E. Robson, president of the D. C. branch of the Dominion Alliance. His contention was that there were already practically in the city 18 retail licenses, 1 wholesale brewery licenses and 3 druggists licenses where alcoholic liquors were sold for medicinal purposes—in all 25 licenses which was too many by far. The applicants were not the only places, as it appeared that Mr. McInnes had been selling without license, and that there were other places where liquor had been sold illegally, under very different circumstances from those existing in Mr. McInnis' case. These places, at which licenses were asked were situated within a stone's throw of existing bar-rooms and were not needed, had already in fact been refused licenses. The members of the court were asked to remember that the licensed houses of this city were all kept open during the whole of the Lord's Day, and that unusual temptations were put in the way of the people, and that they should do what none else would do—guard the moral welfare of the city in this matter. One of the proposed bars in close proximity to the Indian encampment in the south end of the city, and it was not right to allow the Indians to encamp in the suburbs of the city and then allow men to carry on the traffic in intoxicants in their immediate vicinity. He had frequently seen the Indians loitering round the doors of the saloons on the lower and upper ends of the city. A delegation from the Women's Christian Temperance Union, consisting of Mrs. Jas. Cunningham, Mrs. Naughten, and Miss White, were present, and the secretary, Miss White, read a clear and strong protest from that association against the granting of any additional licenses. The court then retired for a few minutes and on resuming, announced that none of the licenses applied for had been granted. His worship the Mayor then said that as the Rev. E. Robson had read an address, stated that there were more places than Mr. McInnis' where liquor was sold illegally, he hoped that Mr. R.) would communicate to the authorities the names of these places and the evidence upon which he based the statement. The reverend gentleman signified his willingness to do so, and the proper officers whatever he could in carrying out the provisions of the law. The court then adjourned.

Our Story.

NELLIE'S MEMORIES.

We'll have the laugh at you one of these days, Dudley, when we see you enslaved by some angel in blue."

"Not he," I cried, preserving strict neutrality no longer; "I've no fear of his being led away by a pretty face; he'll look for something better."

"Something resembling his little moon-faced sister, I suppose," said Dudley, pinching my cheek. Herwald looked at us and sighed; then changing the subject—

"To whom have you been writing all this morning, Nellie?"

"To my indefatigable correspondent, Louie, to be sure."

"Louie! that reminds me of a piece of heresy on the part of master Herwald. We were chatting last night in the library about the home people, and I asked him if he remembered Louie, and he said, 'Oh yes, well; she was a buxom red-haired girl.' Fancy that description for Queen Loo."

"I'm sure her head was red," persisted Herwald, laughing; "red, decidedly so, and she was buxom, or stout, well-favored in fact; I dare say she has grown up a handsome girl."

"Look at Nellie's vixenish eyes, she is ready to quarrel with you."

"No, it is true, Louie's hair has red lights in it, but we think it a beautiful color."

"If Bruce were here he would spout whole pages in praise of what he calls her Borgia head, and as to buxomness, she is a fine woman."

"I hate fine women," was the cynical remark, sotto voce; and, pulling Sprite's ear viciously, "and flirts——"

"Herwald!"

"Well, is she not a flirt? don't look so savage, Nellie."

"What have you been saying, Dudley?" I exclaimed, in hot eagerness to defend the absent.

"Oh, nothing, nothing, a mere trifle;" then with a flash of the eye and a set lip, "Colonel Gray is my friend, that is all."

I started.

"You know; oh, Herwald!"

"Yes, I know that which I own has greatly lowered my estimate of your sister's character; but I must in candor now, that I did not learn this from himself, but from Dudley. I happened to mention the name while talking last night, saying what a capital fellow he was, and how much liked, and I saw the young man opposite me glower and frown and change the subject abruptly; and so with my usual sagacity, putting two and two together, sundry hints lately dropped of the siren-like qualities of the second Miss Mortimer, and certain unaccountable lingerings of the Colonel in a particular neighborhood, I came to one conclusion, and so I told Dudley, and it all came out."

I was silent, and I must say I blushed for the sister who was not here in her own person to cry "mea culpa, mea culpa;" for I felt that if she knew Herwald as well as I had learnt to, even in these few hours, she also would have cared to stand well before that simple noble nature. That she had forfeited this esteem I doubted not; for both Herwald and Dudley were singularly grave and strict in this matter; among their fellows of the young giddy generation they were as apostles of a new religion.

"I must say," continued Herwald, "that I think ill of your sister's taste in refusing such a man; there is not a truer gentleman, a more accomplished officer, in all her Majesty's regiments than Arthur Gray; steel to the backbone, without an enemy in the world, and a thorough good-hearted fellow in the bargain."

"She called him conceited," I stammered.

"You have put it mildly," replied Herwald, with a little mocking smile. "Insufferable conceit, I think, was the expression used;" again I looked at Dudley reproachfully.

"Now there is not a man more truly humble than Grey; yet just because he has adopted the lounging, fashionable manner that men nowadays think highly bred, your sister has not wit enough to see that it is but skin deep, and that the gold lies at the bottom; did you ever see him?"

"Yes, one Sunday I noticed a singularly handsome man in the Thorntons' pew, and Louie told me afterwards it was Colonel Grey."

"Well, how many more of her Majesty's officers has Louie treated like poor Grey?"

"Herwald," I said, summoning dignity to my aid, "remember you are speaking of my sister." I felt it was time to break up the discussion, as I was hurt at the tone it was taking, hurt and angry at not being able to defend the indefensible.

Herwald rose, and with an old-fashioned courtesy that sat very prettily on him, put my hand to his lips. "I will remember it in future, Nellie; and now if you like I will show you the western corridor; you expressed a wish to see it yesterday, that and my bachelor's den besides."

I assented cheerfully, and as we left the room he said pleasantly, "Do not close up your letter without sending my kind remembrances to your sister and Bruce."

I gave him a grateful look for I felt the kindness that prompted the slight effort, and then followed him with a lighter heart.

In addition to the heavy curtains that draped the entrance to the corridor, was a red baized door; as he opened it Herwald said laughingly, "You see we of the western corridor are doubly guarded, nor will you be surprised when I tell you it contains gems worth all the house besides." As he said this, we found ourselves in a small but exquisite picture gallery, corresponding in size with the eastern corridor, and lighted artfully from the top; at the end, however, a beautiful bay had been thrown out, its recesses occupied by a low well-cushioned couch; this and one or two curiously carved oaken benches were the sole articles of furniture. Four marble statues lent grace to each corner of the room, and a Roman urn of rare beauty occupied the center; at my involuntary exclamation of surprise and delight, Herwald said—

"It was my poor father's idea turning this into a picture gallery; and his greatest pleasure during the last years of his life was in adding to his already beautiful collection. There are some pictures not yet unpacked which he bought in Belgium, Vienna, and Turin, and for which I must find fitting place; but," here he sighed heavily, "somehow the occupation has lost its zest; poor father, he will not see his beautiful Guido hung in its place of honor."

"You have some glorious pictures here, Herwald."

"I believe you; we have a Murille, a Rembrandt, and a Claude; some of Gainsborough, Reynolds, and Wilson; many from French and Spanish artists of merit, two or three Dutch, and the rest from contemporaries of our own time; among the rest there are some capital landscapes."

It was very pleasant to hear Herwald's criticisms on the various pictures; he descanted on the merits and demerits of each with the air of a polished connoisseur, and a true lover of art; his eyes lighted up with unusual animation, while pointing out the beauties of a Claude or a Poussin, and his whole manner warmed into unwonted enthusiasm. I had long noticed a large picture veiled with thin gauze; as we drew near it Herwald said—

"My mother's portrait," and undrew it. It was the picture of a little white lady, with a young tender face and shy eyes, out of which the girlhood had not yet faded.

"Is she not a pretty young mother?" he said, in a low tone; "she was not one-and-twenty when she died."

"So young, Herwald."

"Yes, so young, cut off at the very beginning of her happy married life. They had loved each other since they were children, and those few months had been so full of joy. My father's grief at her loss had been so frantic that for years he could not bear the sight of me, the hapless cause of her death; and it was a relief to him in his impatient misery when that appointment was offered him in India. You know the rest, how I came to live at Sunnyside, and how my father, weary at last of his long exile, and yearning for the boy whose childhood he had slighted, returned to home and me; and you know, or at least you can never know, the passionate love that sought to atone for those unhappy years of neglect and desertion."

We were silent, for we had known that love to be tyrannical, and had suffered from it.

Herwald continued musingly, "How strange to call her mother, whose lips never kissed me, whose weak arms never held me in a loving embrace!"

"Oh, Herwald, is this true?"

"Yes, it is true," he answered, sadly. "When my baby lips were pressed to hers hers were as cold as ice; they tell me who stood round the bed, that rallying towards the last, she made signs for the baby to be brought; and when it came, her blue eyes, filmy then with death, cast one long loving look at it, and lifting up her hands as if to bless it, then turned and clasped her husband's neck with one long sob and died. Come," he said, rallying himself, "this ends, or rather begins the catalogue. Now for the bachelor's den; these doors on this side of the gallery, for there are doors underneath the curtains, lead to my father's apartments, but they are so dismantled and covered up that I cannot show them to you, though they are the best in the house; that was his bedroom, the next intended for a dressing-room, but never used by him as such, then his bath-room, and lastly his bureau, as he termed it, where he kept his papers and transacted business with his steward; but it is more suitable for a ladies' boudoir, with its gold and white paper and gilded door."

"Perhaps it will revert to its original use some day."

"Perhaps so, nous verrons; on the other side, Nellie, are my rooms; we will not open that door, for Allan sleeps there."

"Allan, who is Allan?"

"Why, that fine-looking fellow with the oriental beard, you know, who met you at the station; he fills the office of travelling courier, valet, secretary, confidential agent, personal friend, everything in short that is indispensable and valuable; he is away now on a secret mission, or you would have seen more of him; ever since he nursed me when down in the fever at Cairo, he has been as necessary to me as a mother to her child."

"Do you mean he enacts that character to you?"

"Almost; he takes care of me, is always giving me good advice gratis, and preventing me from doing anything foolish; he is everything that is good and kind; poor old Allan!"

"What's his other name, Herwald?"

"Duncan, to be sure; what are you making great eyes at, Nellie?"

"Nothing," I replied. "where does this lead?"

"To my bath, but it is under reprir, so you can't go in. Here is the anteroom, where my dogs sleep; that is Leo's rug, and here Max guards the doorway, and that is Sprite's cradle."

I looked at the little velvet-lined basket quite shocked. "Herwald, you house your dogs too delicately; you treat them as if they were Christian flesh and blood; that fair purple bed is more fit for an elfin prince to sleep in than for your impish favorite."

"Nothing is too good for Sprite; you are very disrespectful to her. Do you know she is the smallest dog in England? Allan pets her as much as I do. This is my bedroom; is it not a pleasant room?"

It was, but it was different to any sleeping apartment I had ever seen; the floor was of polished oak and destitute of carpeting, only two or three costly skins were thrown carelessly here and there. A small brass bedstead of exquisite workmanship stood in the middle of the floor. Herwald pointed it out to me, saying, "I took a fancy to it in a Parisian botique; and my father, without saying anything about it, had it sent over here at great expense. I believe he would have procured the roc's egg, or tried to, if I had expressed a wish for it."

The rest of the furniture seemed to have been picked up in the same desultory way. There was a large wardrobe of massive black oak magnificently carved, that looked as if it had come out of a mediæval workshop, and two or three chairs that must centuries ago have belonged to the altar of some old cathedral; the very dressing-table was dark and cumbrous, and adorned at each corner by carved stags' heads; and there were various grotesque spindle-legged tables about the room holding heavy brass-clamped boxes. I think I most admired a beautiful prayer-desk, over which was a small case of devotional books and a copy of Rubens' Descent from the Cross. This and a full length portrait of his father were the sole pictures, but there were some statuettes and bronzes of great beauty arranged tastefully about the room.

"Well, what do you think of it, Nellie?"

"I am so surprised; it is a beautiful room, of course, but I expected something more civilized, and," I added, mischievously, "more befitting the apartment of a dandy of the nineteenth century."

"How do you know I am a dandy? you have not peeped like Dudley in those big boxes, and found nothing but unguents, pomades, and escences both European and Oriental; neither do you know that big wardrobe yonder is groaning with outfits of every description. Allan scolds me dreadfully for my extravagance in dress; and I am afraid he is right."
