A RUSSIAN VERSION

Japs Cannot Damage Port Arthur

BOMBARDMENT HAS NO EFFECT

Russian Squadron Chases the Japanese Fleet From the Port

Port Arthur, March 14.—Last night passed without incident. The Japanese squadron, which disappeared after Thursday's bombardment and naval fight, has not returned. The Russian squadron proceeded to sea this morning and returned this afternoon. It is understood that no Japanese ships were seen.

Although during the bombardment a number of shells from the Japanese ships burst in the streets of the town the damage to the buildings was comparatively small. The new town sustained the great damage. A shell burst a few yards from the house of M. Sidorski, a lawyer, and his daughter was killed on the spot, her head being blown off. M. Sidorski was injured by fragments of the same shell, and another girl was injured and died soon afterwards in the hospital. A Chinamen was killed and Several chinamen were wonded.

General Stoessel, the commander of the Russian troops at Port Arthur, and his staff, while watching the bombardment, were peppered by splinters from a shell, but sustained no injury.

On Golden hill, lieutenant Wachtin and one soldier were wounded. Two sentries on Electric cliff were wounded. A Japanese shell and slowly withdrew. The bombardment, which was severe, only ceased at 12.45 in the afternoon.

The Arlington

At the Arlington, Ymir, 20 men are employed in developing, as shipping for the season has stopped. During the past three months 24 carloads of abaut 20 tons each have been shipped, aggregating 480 tons. The ore averaged about $1000 to the car. This is considered a good showing for a mine that was given up as no account two years ago. The mine is being operated by the Hastings, B. C. Syndicate, under the management of Leslie Hill. The development now in progress consists of drifting and raising on the 450 and head Arlington levels. The development work will be continued till the roads get in good condition, which will be about June 1, when shipments will be resumed.

The Black Prince

Good luck is following the lessees of the Black Prince, Slocan, and they are getting all kinds of ore. Two weeks ago they broke into 14 inches of ore in the raise and they are carrying it with them it being the highest grade they have yet encountered.

PINGYANG TO BE THE BASE

Another Russian Outpost Is Driven in.

CONDITIONS OBTAINING AT SEOUL

Capital of Korea Is in No Fear of the Bear—The First Attack on Port Arthur.

Seoul, March 14.—An engagement took place on the 8th instant between Russian and Japanese cavalry scouts near Kosan, 57 miles north of Pingyang. One Japanese trooper was killed during the fight. The Russians were eventually forced to retire.

Detachments of Korean soldiers marching up and down the main streets in the neighborhood of the palace at all hours of the night and day give an air of martial activity to this city. But few Japanese soldiers remain here. All have gone north, and the foreign legations continue to be guarded by marines. Foreigners, however, feel perfectly safe, although there is more real business activity at Chemulpo. The Japanese authorities treated foreigners very courteously and have given Commissioner Allen permission to go to the front with a passage on a transport to Chemulpo, which is expected to arrive today. The funeral of the late Empress Dowager took place Sunday.

The United States cruiser Cincinnati will leave Chemulpo tomorrow for Chenampo to bring away the women and children from the American company's mines at Unsan. The families of American missionaries south of the Yalu are not considered to be in any danger but every precaution is being taken for their safety. A messenger from the mines, who left Chenampo Wednesday last, says that everything is quiet in the vicinity. Only a few reconnoitering parties of Cossacks have been sent north of that point and there are probably only a few hundred Russians in all, south of the Yulu. There is little prospect of any serious conflict in this quarter within the next six weeks.

New York, March 14.—The European edition of the Herald prints the following despatch from Seoul:

The Japanese will have an army of 150,000 men in Korea within three weeks, including the 35,000 already landed in Chemulpo. The scene there daily is one of disorder and chaos. The harbor's edge is piled with 200,000 tons of stores, packs of equipment, light guns, carriages and bullet proof shields, and there 5,000 cavalry and pack horses there.

The country north of Seoul is thick with parties converging into the Pingyang neighborhood. Pingyang will be the northern Japanese base, under Major Kigoshi. It is an ancient stronghold capable of easy defence. The fortification of the walls is being hurried forward.

Tokio, March 14.—Capt. Matsumura, who acted as signal officer on the Mikasa, Admiral Togo's flagship, during the first attack on Port Arthur, of February 9th, gives a graphic story of the fight in Jiji Shimpo, Japan's most widely circulated newspaper. The account by Captain Matsumura is the first by an eye witness. The captain was wounded in the foot as he stood on the bridge, by a shell from one of the Port Arthur batteries. His story reveals the fact that the Japanese battleship Fuji was badly damaged, but not disabled, by Russian shells, while two of its officers were killed by a single shell while standing on the bridge. Capt. Mutsumura's description of the naval battle and the events leading up to it is as follows:

Admiral Togo called the captains of the allied fleet to his flagship in Sasebo harbor on February 6th. Plans were discussed but of course were not revealed. At 2 o'clock that afternoon the fleet left the harbor. At 8 a. m. February 7th smoke was noticed on the horrizon. The Tsukushi was despatched to investigate and discovered the Russian steamer Rossia, which was captured. Shortly after this prize was taken, Rear Admiral Uriu and one of the divisions of the fleet started for Chemulpo. Admiral Togo directed the hoisting of signal flags that read: "Attack the enemy's boats as soon as they are seen."

Late that day a Russian torpedo boat chaser was seen and shots were exchanged at a distance of a distance of about 3000 metres. The second class cruiser Chitoz, and two other smaller vessels were dispatched at 9 a. m. on February 9, towards Port Arthur to reconnotre. They reported sighting five enemy's boats, who fired at them. The fortress did not fire, so admiral Togo signalled. "Attack the main fleet at once." As the Japanese fleet proceeded towards Port Arthur they met, coming out of the harbor, a Japanese and a Russian merchantman, the Manchuria. The Russian vessel was captured without firing a shot. At 11 a. m. a distance of 10 knots from Port Arthur, one of the enemy's scout boats was sighted

AN ALTERNATIVE

The Miner states that there is no alternative proposal if the water on Trail Creek is not sufficient for running a lighting plant. It will probably felicitate the WORLD (?) on having pointed out recently that there were several alternative proposals to that mad scheme, apparently mooted so as to draw a red herring across the trail. The WORLD now wishes to show that there is another possible alternative if one of the mining companies in the city is agreeable, and it is the business of the City Council to ascertain the state of the case. And that is to acquire the 40-drill compressor on Centre Star gulch. It might be rented or it might be sold. The cost of erecting the plant was $30,000, the cost of altering it and putting in a steam driving plant would be about $15,000 as an outside figure. The plant will generate 660 kilowatts, enough to supply the town with 8,000 lights; more if the machinery be driven quicker. The cost of the water and light plants five years ago was something short of $90,000, about half of which was paid for the water, The cost of the lighting plant, including the ramshackle machinery at the foot of Spokane street, part of which, however, might be used for a steam driving plant, should not be more than $45,000. That is to say that the whole scheme should not cost more than $90,000. Taking interest and sinking fund at $8000 per annum, and maintenance at as much more (the real figures will presently be forthcoming) the lighting will have to clear $16,000 per annum in order to clear expenses and provide for the repayment of debentures. If there are 4,000 lights in the city, and there are more, (the real figures will have to be forthcoming shortly) and their rental value at 50 cents per month (some are charged at $1) the income per month would be $2,000 and for a year $24,000. This would net the city at least $8,000 per annum, which would help out in paying aldermatic salaries.

As to the raising of the money, a firm has recently written to the city, asking about some of its debentures. If written to they might be inclined to take up the lighting debentures were they secured on the revenues arising. $90,000 seems a big price, but it is purely a question of income. Moreover it is just possible that the Power company themselves, knowing how profitable a thing was the light, might take some debentures themselves, under certain conditions of reverting. Again it is not at all unlikely that the owners of the lighting plant, the compressor alluded to, might be willing to take up the debentures themselves as far as the cost of the plant was concerned as long as a certain amount was taken up every year. It is a nice point for the Finance committee to elucidate, and, like the Russian battleship Retzivan, "cover themselves with glory."

No Economy Here.

London, March 13.—An additional vote of $350,000 for the British exhibit at St. Louis, making a total of $750,000, is included in the civil service estimates for the coming year. With the already announced estimates for the army and navy totaling upwards of $325,000,000 it appears that the full estimates will show an expenditure for the year of about $710,000,000.

Away south went the pathway, trodden day after day by contingents of gallant troops from that knightly stronghold. Jove! one might have followed it at midnight: those jolly bands had made a trail throught copse and green wood, through hamlet and through heather, like the track of a storm wind. They had beaten down grass and herbage, they had robbed orchards and spinneys, and here their wayside fires were still a smouldering, and there waved rags upon the bushes, and broken shreds and baggage. Now and then, as I paced along, I saw in the hamlets the folk still looking southward, and standing gossiping on the week's wonders, the boys meanwhile careering in mock onset with broken spearshafts or discarded trappings. Oh! 'twas easy enough to knows which way my friends had gone!

So plain was the track, and is well my good horse acknowledged it, that there was little for me to do sit and chew bitter cud of fancy. All through the hot afternoon, all through the bright sunshine and shinning green bracken, did we saunter, back towards the grey sea I knew so well, back towards that void beginning of wandering, and as my sad thoughts turned to when I last had sat a charger in such woods as these, to my fair Saxon homestead, Editha, the abbey and its Abbot, my donning English mail and breaking spears for a smile from yon cold Peeress, with much more of like nature, went idly flitting through my head. But hardly a thought among all that motley orowd was there for Isobel or her tears, and my promised meeting with her playmate.

Thus it happened that as evening fell and found me still some two miles from where our troops lay camped along the shore, waiting tomorrow's ferrying across to France, I rode down the steep bank of a small river to a ford, and slowly waded through. There be episodes of action that live in our minds, and incidents of repose that recur with no less force. So, then—that placid evening stream has come before me again and again—in hot tumult of onset and melee in court and camp, in the cold of winter and in summer's warmth, I have ridden that ford once more. I have gone down sad and thoughtful as I did, my loose reins on my charger's arching neck watching the purple shine of the water where it fretted and broke in the evening light against his fetlocks; again and again I have listened to the soft lisp of the stream as he drank of that limpid trough, and I have seen in its cool fresh mirror my own tall image, my own crimson plumes, and the one white star of the evening above reflected upon it. And yet, if these things of a remote yesterday are fresh in my mind, even more so is my meeting with the slim gallat whose figure rose before me as I emerged from the ford.

As my good English charger bore me up from the hollow, on the brow of the opposite rise was a mounted figure standing out clear and motionless against the yellow glow of the sunset. At first I thought it would be some wandering spearman bound on a like errand with myself, for more than one ore two such had passed that day. But something in the steadfast interest of that silent horseman roused my curiosity even before I was near enough to see the color of his armour or the device upon his shield. Up we scrambled up that sandy heathery scar, the strong sinews of my war horse playing like steel cordage under my thighs as he lifted me and my armour up the gravelly path, and then, as we topped the rise and came into the evening breeze, that strange warrior advanced and held out a hand.

The Nellie Cotton

Some months ago the Nellie Cotton, in Phoenix camp, was purchased by Chicago capitalists. Some trouble was experienced, however, in getting the title straightened out. Now that this has been done, the company, to be known as the Chicago-Phoenix company, with a capital of some $500,000, has been formed, and preparations are being made to start active work on the claims as soon as the snow leaves the grrund.

The Handy Group

Four cars of ore are now ready for shipment at the Handy group, Poplar. Sinking has been discontinued until the machinery for hoisting and pumping has been installed. The tunnel on which they are now working is in 25 feet and is following a lead nearly at right angles to the ore body on which the shaft is being sunk. Col. Braden, manager of the compny, is expected at the mine this week.

and two shots were sent after it. It returned to the harbor.

Then the Japanese fleet formd in fighting line and approached the harbor. We saw Russian men of war trying to get back under shelter of the fort's guns.

The Mikasa first fired and then raised the atttacking flag. The enemy answered and the engagement became general. The Russian shells fell short but the fire from the fortress damaged the fleet slightly. Our men behaved splendidly. They showed no excitement but great enthusiasm in their work at the guns. We wished to continue the fight but the shells from the shore battery were falling alarmingly close and we feared the torpedo boats so the signal was given to retire.

Our casualties in the first attack on Port Arthur were: Killed, two officers, three non-commissioned officers, one man; seriously wounded, two officers, one non-commissioned officer, four midshipmen and eighteen men, slightly wounded, four officers, five non-commissioned officers and 25 men.

The Fisher Maiden.
