BOARD OF TRADE BANQUET

Splendid Speech from H. H. Stevens---Highly Successful Gathering.

Had the poet Byron—or his restless shade—wandered along the Esplanade on Tuesday evening, his own immortal line would have recurred to him, "There was a sound of revelry by night." It was the occasion of the Board of Trades' second annual banquet and the convivial noises referred to issued from the Hotel North Vancouver, in the dining room of which sat a goodly assemblage of Board of Trade Knights and a handsome array of guests withal. To enumerate them by name would be to catalogue most of the leading lights of our North Shore community, together with a string of distinguished visitors from across the Inlet.

Mr. P. Larson's faculty for carrying out to a nicety the catering and general management of an event of this kind was again exemplified on Tuesday evening, when a most excellent repast awaited the company. The four attenuated tables were decorated effectively, but without restraint, so that one never had to fumble among artificial trappings for a knife and fork. The attendance was brisk and assiduous, and the menu was wisely set forth in comprehensible British language—with the exception of the young turkey, which did not taste any the worse for being "en cressan."

The health of his gracious majesty the King having been toasted with enthusiasm, Mr. G. H. Morden was called upon to propose the Dominion Government.

Mr. Morden dedicated his remarks to the entire body of representatives elected by the people to control their national affairs. The opportunity and government rested upon three bases: firstly the geographical situation of the country which is governed; secondly, the people who populated the country; and thirdly the place the country occupied in contemporary history. The speaker then dabbled in statistics, proving this "little Canada" to be territorially equal to 30 United Kingdoms, 17 Germanies, 18 Frances, 33 Italies, two British Indias and one Europe. The Dominion possessed a coast line of 13,000 miles (of which British Columbia comprised 7,000), and no less than 22,000 square miles of fresh water. This latter advantage, Mr. Morden contended, would supply the other interesting respects, the speaker described graphically the exceptionally splendid possibilities of Canada.

Respecting the country's place in contemporary history, Mr. Morden predicted that it would very naturally be an important one. Considered, however, as a portion of the British Empire, it would probably become the most integral factor in the working out of the destinies of the British people.

The speaker then alluded to the position of greater Vancouver and to the ambitions of the district in regard to the establishment of a great national and even international seaport. He was proud to number Mr. H. H. Stevens among his personal friends, and proud that the electors of Vancouver had chosen him to represent them at Ottawa.

Mr. Stevens, responding to the toast, said that the theme was one to inspire any true Canadian. He warmly congratulated the Board of Trade on the splendid repast and the success of their evening's entertainment, and added that it was just gatherings as that that smoothed away the rough portions of life. He hoped that the banquet of which this was the second would be perpetuated. He could not conceive any better way for the business men of the city and of greater Vancouver to get together, and surely the work that had been accomplished in the past and was to be undertaken in the future.

"I recognize," said Mr. Stevens, "the grave responsibility that is vested in me as representing such a rapidly developing district as that of North Vancouver and the other municipalities that go to make up what we are happy to call greater Vancouver. The one object I have in view is to serve the people who have seen fit to place this responsibility upon me. I think that no man could have a higher or nobler aim in life than to represent such a district as that comprised in Vancouver and Greater Vancouver. I believe this is Canada's century and in the development of Canada this district will take a most important part. This Dominion of ours is young. It is not a great many years since Confederation, and it must be remembered that this Canada of ours, as we see her at the present day, has been moulded into vigorous young nationhood not by the labors of any one political party but by the efforts of all patriotic citizens

"The welfare of Canada," continued the member, "has been largely brought about by a series of communications east and west and by interprovincial trade. I think that we as British Columbians should exert ourselves to improve interprovincial trade to the utmost and especially trade between British Columbia and the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. We require for our perfect nationhood a homogenous Canada in which each province fulfils its proper function."

He urged the Board of Trade to seek to promote interprovincial trade. It was upon these lines and principles that Canada had been built up.

There were numerous problems with which the Dominion was faced. One was the problem of immigration. "If," Mr. Stevens declared, "we allow people to come into this country whom we cannot assimilate or who are not prepared to live up to our traditions and constitution, we are going to have a very serious problem to deal with before very long. The immigrant from Northern Europe is highly desirable, the immigrant from Southern Europe is much less so, and the Asiatic, and I wish to emphasise this, is entirely undesirable."

His attitude towards the Asiatic had, he knew, been criticized, but he assured the company he had absolutely no axe to grind, no personal interests to serve. He freely admitted there were some lines of business in which Orientals were utilized as a means of securing larger returns. He was not interested in the principles of such businesses. He was interested in the building up of such an industry as would be looked upon as an asset to the country when its founder was gone.

Some people had urged that the Japanese were British subjects and that therefore and interference with them was out of the question. They might be called British subjects and yet they were denied the franchise. This very fact showed that the people of the Dominion of Canada did not wish to receive them on the same basis as other immigrants. Why then were they admitted at all? The method which had been pursued in naturalizing the Asiatic was a farce. It was time that this farce was put an end to.

Then there were those who said that if there was any interference with the Japanese it would create ill-feeling with them between this country and Japan. How in the world, if the Japanese were British subjects could it create any ill-feeling since the Mikado had evidently nothing to do with them.

"I have met many Japanese, and the Japanese gentleman is one of the finest and most courteous of all," declared the speaker. "But we have a duty to our country. The Japanese cannot assimilate and all immigration of this kind should be discouraged in the interest of the future of this great country of which we are now laying the foundation stones."

Mr. Stevens defined the question of citizenship as one of supreme importance. He thought that citizenship in Canada was held much too cheaply. A man upon whom was conferred the rights and privileges of Canadian citizenship, should have some knowledge of the traditions of the country in which he proposed to make his home. Citizenship should be looked upon as a sacred trust and should not be entered upon lightly. The member then dilated on the subject of public utilities, arguing that it was dangerous to allow corporations and individuals to acquire too many of the public utilities of the country. He could not blame man or corporation for laying their hands upon all they could grasp, but it was the duty of the government to see that man's avarice did not go too far. Conservation of resources was a subject upon which the government should take instant and decisive action. Already the Rockerfeller interests and other New York interests had laid hands upon the waterpower of this country and were skilfully acquiring the right to great sources of electrical energy in anticipation of the future.

At this point Mr. Stevens' flow of argument drifted into local channels. He touched upon the question of harbor developments. He had been securing the views of the different sections of the constituency, and had concluded that the suggestion that he had made some weeks ago was the wisest one,—that the government should appoint an expert commission to investigate the requirements of the port of North Vancouver. Further, the Dominion government had promised him that the dredge which is now at Nanimo would commence work at the First Narrows before Christmas in the removal of the shoal there. The engineer in connection with the Second Narrows bridge was expected to arrive today, and there would be no time lost in getting to work upon something which was of vital importance to the district. Railway connections were absolutely essential to North Vancouver. There were 8000 people on he north shore without such facilities, and a city of these dimensions without railway connections was a curiosity indeed.

He very heartily responded to the toast of the Dominion Government.

The president, Alderman Smith, then called upon ex-president Alexander Philip to propose the toast of sister Boards of Trade.

BRIDGE ENGINEER ARRIVES

Mr. E. Crutwell, bridge engineer representing the firm of Sir John Wofle-Barry and Partners of London, England, arrived in Vancouver on Wednesdy, for the purpose of taking in hand the preparation of plans and the carrying out of the contract for the construction of Second Narrows bridge. Mr. Crutwell has carried out similar commissions for the firm with which he is associated, in different parts of the world, but this is his first visit to Canada and the Pacific coast. He has already visited the site of the new bridge and incidentally had a look at Burrard Inlet as a harbor and is impressed with the fact that the work which he has undertaken is destined to constitute one of the outstanding features of what will be one of the greatest harbors in the world.

The preparation of the plans will be proceeded with at once, and when completed Mr. Crutwell will proceed with them to England, where they will be pronounced upon by the firm of Sir John Wofle-Barry and partners. They will then be submitted at Ottawa for departmental approval, immediately after which tenders will be called for, the contract awarded and construction will proceed forthwith.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

The North Lonsdale Presbyterian choir are having a social evening tonight in the church. Strangers are especially invited.

Alderman Henderson returned to the city on Tuesday after a two-weeks' sojourn at Salmon river Vancouver Island, where he managed to kill the two birds, hunting and business, with one stone.

On Tuesday a coating of crushed rock from the new crusher was spread over a portion of the Esplanade and rendered solid by the recently-acquired road roller. Mayor McNeish states that the rock was laid on the street for less than a dollar a yard and to his knowledge, this is the first time that a concrete road-making system has been launched.

Mr. A. J. McCardie has returned from a short visit in the old country. When he left North Vancouver it was Mr. McCardie's intention to remain in England for at least two years and perhaps permanently, but he found the "luer of the west" so strong that he compromised at two months and is again happily identified with the trend of progress about Burrard Inlet.

Mr. W. B. Campbell has purchased the interest of his partner, Mr. Seeds, in the well known business the "Grotto" and is now sole proprietor. "Bert" as he is familiarly known, is one of the old timers of North Vancouver and his personal popularity adds greatly to the prosperity of the business of which he is making so conspicuous a success.

The youngsters of the city made the traditions of Hallowe'en a peg on which to hang much mischief. Front gates were discovered to be mysteriously hanging on the rungs of telegraph poles and other similar elfin pranks were indulged in after darkness on Tuesday night. Apart from the propagation of bad language among the citizens, no other damage, moral or material, has been reported.

Thomas Martel was charged at the city hall yesterday morning with having driven a team of horses and wagon along the sidewalk on Second street. The chief admitted that the street was not in good condition but the offender had had two tons of coal on his wagon. Magistrate Kealy pointed out that the defence might have done the city a $1000 worth of damage. A fine of $5 and costs was imposed.

A social will be given by the ladies of St. Thomas' parish, North Lonsdale, at Mr. Archibald's residence on Nov. 9th at 6 p. m.

Mrs. M. A. Russell, corner of King street and St. George's Avenue, will receive on Tuesday next and on the first Tuesday of each month thereafter.

At the First Baptist church next Sunday morning the pastor, Rev. A. J. Prosser, will preach on the subject "A conflict between a bluffer and a fighter." In the evening the series on "Great Investigations" will be continued.

At yesterday's meeting of the ferry directors, a letter was considered from Mr. J. W. Haworth, who was recently the victim of an accident on the ferry wharf for which the authorities compensated him. He found, however, that he had to undergo further treatment in consequence of the mishap, and in view of this he asked the directors to give him a life pass. The secretary was instructed to inform Mr. Haworth that his claim had already been settled in full.

LYNN VALLEY NOTES

THE POST OFFICE SITE

Deal Not Closed--Chief Architect's Instructions

Following the information published in the Express on Tuesday with reference to the instructions received by Mr. Angus Cameron to take levels etc. on the lots to which objection has been taken as a local post office site, Mr. H. H. Stevens wired Hon. F. D. Monk asking to be advised as to the significance of those instructions, as did also the secretary of the North Vancouver Conservative Association, Mr. Percy King. Yesterday replies were received to the effect that instructions had been issued to the dapertment of public works on September 14th, that all proceedings with respect to this matter were stayed. Inasmuch as no further instructions have been given by the minister, the fact is clear that the instructions received to take levels etc. must have emanated from some other source. Upon inquiry from Mr. Cameron it was ascertained that the letter which he received was signed by the chief architect. It would therefore appear, that not being aware of the fact that any instructions had been given the chief architect by the outgoing minister this particular branch was not included in the notification that the purchase is stayed and the architect therefore proceeded with the usual course when that particular item appeared next in the order of busiess in his office. Meantime, however, the entire matter of the purchase of a post office site is yet to come under review with a view to revision by the present Minister of Public Works.

HOCKEY

North Vancouver vs. Vancouver

The local club play the first match for the B. C. Challenge Cup tomorrow against Vancouver on the Boulevard Park at 3.15. The match is bound to prove close and exciting and a large number of spectators will probably attend. North Vancouver will be represented by the following: Goal, E. J. H. Cardinall; backs, G. Green-Armytage and H. Cameron; half-backs, S. Humphreys, E. S. Baylis and Montgomery; forwards, H. L. McPherson R. F. McNaghten, R. G. Ward, Brain and P. N. Baylis. Umpires, Whittaker and Palmer.

The joint meetings of the Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian churches of the city are now bejng held in the Baptist church and are being well attended and are of an interesting character. Rev. Mr. Schlichter will preach this evening. Next week the meetings will be held in the Presbyterian church every evening except Saturday. Rev. Mr. Macleod will conduct the service. Rev. A. J. Prosser will preach on Monday night.

Sweet Mistress Margery

A Short Storey by Ivan P. Gore.

My Lord Burnside had fed of the best the "Old Mitrie's" larder could produce; likewise he had drunk heartily of the choicest wines money could tempt from the cob-web guarded bins in mine host's cellars, and now he stretched his long booted legs wearily before the fire of blazing logs and prepared to doze till such time as he must needs ride forth again.

Food, wine and fire, each and all, made him contented with the world at large, and he slept as only a soldier can, grunting occasionally as his dreams touched on a woman's face or recalled the battles he had fought during his long service across the seas.

Suddenly his eyes opened wide and the sleepiness left them as his hand crept to the rapier hanging at his side, tightening on the hilt as he moved his head in such a way that he could the better watch the danger, which a soldier's instinct told him was at hand.

The room was nearly dark save for the flickering firelight, but that sufficed to show him the softly opening door. Then, as he softly freed his rapier from its scabbard, he saw a white hand creep cautiously around the lintel, and heard the hurried breathing of his stealthy visitor.

The fire died down and he sprang to his feet, rapping out a sharp challenge as his spurred heels rang on the tiled floor. There was a gasp from the intruder, a hurrying and scurrying of light feet across the room; then as he came en garde, someone clasped him firmly round the knees, praying, entreating, whereat he lowered his blade and cried aloud in his surprise.

"By St. Denys—spit me, if 'tis not a woman!"

"Oh, good sir," a sweet voice pleaded, "an' you are a gentleman, I pray you save me from those who follow closely on my steps."

Gently he disengaged her clinging hands, and in a trice had the candles flaring in their sconces; then he swung on his heel and loked at her. As she encountered his keen look her head drooped, but she quickly held it up again, and met him proudly eye to eye.

"Save thee? Aye, and most willingly," he answered, for, truth to tell, fighting and gallantry were as life to him, and the adventure promised both. "Come, sweet mistress, dry those tears and tell me what fair fortune throws so happy a chance across my path?"

"Sir, I am run away from home!"

"So——" The adventure promised more than he had thought. "And wherefore?"

"They would marry me——" the red mouth trembled, and once more tears welled to her eyes.

"Nay, nay—I pray you—why, what is marriage but the common lot of womankind, if they are beautiful enough to——"

"Aye, put they who marry against their hearts be fools," she retorted, "and those who would force the marriage—knaves!"

He groped blindly for a suitable reply, but, finding none, stood staring at her, while a wave of pity for the man who had been chosen swept through his heart, to be followed on the instant by one of envy for the man whom she, of her own free will, should choose.

"I'faith," he said at length, "so you—er—will not marry with the fellow of their choice?"

"Never! Sooner would I die!" she answered quickly, dropping her eyes again. "'Tis this way: A week ago they came and told me that my brother had chosen a fitting mate for me, methinks with a view to replenishing his empty coffers. The man was on his way from Flanders to see that the purchase was worth the price, and so they bade me prepare. Upon this I fired up and told them nay, and that none too sweetly. Whereat they locked me in my room till such times as the stranger should arrive to do his wooing."

"Your brother—he did this?"

"Nay, but 'twas by his orders. He had ridden away, doubtless to meet and hurry up the buyer. Today I saw my chance and fled, but ill-luck dogged my steps and nigh placed me in the grasping hands of Master Michael Bream, my brother's steward, who follows hard behind."

"Ah! What company he rides with?"

"Half a dozen rascals, nigh as ebon as their leader."

"What! Only six to one!" he laughed gleefully. "I'faith, 'twill scarce be worthy of us, yet the lesson must be taught."

For answer she held up a small finger and bade him listen. From down the road came a clattering of hoofs and the hoarse cries of the riders as they urged their horses on.

"'Tis they," she whispered, all of a tremble and clinging to his arm.

"Fear not, they shall not lay hand on you while I stand firm and this old friend stays blade to hilt," he answered grimly. "Get you in yonder corner while I parley with them."

They drew rein in the cobbled yard, and a second later the listeners heard them tramping and swearing in the corridor as they bade the landlord tell them whether he had seen their quarry. Then came a banging of doors and a further tramping of heavy feet as they hunted through the house. My lord smiled and ran his thumb along the strip of shining steel as he held. Anon there was silence; then whispering at the door as though the handle turned and two of their number came stumbling in.

The lady gave a little cry and they shouted in triumph to their fellows that the bird was caged at last; but, even as the words left their lips, they saw the tall figure, blade in hand, and paused irresolute. They would have beat a retreat, but those who were left in the corridor, mistaking their dismay, pushed forward until all were in the room.

"A fair even to you, gentlemen," quoth Burnside, wondrous soft of voice though a very devil lurked in the eyes that scanned them insolently from head to foot. "Nay, do not hesitate, I'faith, you are most welcome."

They muttered among themselves, till, with a foul oath, one, more neatly attired than the rest, pushed forward, a great hanger swinging in his hand.

"What fool's play be this?" he snarled. "Dolts, see you not that we have but one man to deal with. Seize you the wench while I dock this fine gallant of his plumage."

"Ah, Master Bream, 'tis you, eh?" my lord laughed, but as they moved forward, his voice rang out like a trumpet. "By the Cross, lay but a finger on the lady and you go to meet your Master, Father Satan."

Scarce had he spoken before their leader rushed at him. Once, twice, he struck with the heavy weapon that he bore; then with a chuckling cry fell back among the shadows, and after squirming once or twice, lay still.

"One!" cried my lord and swinging swiftly round prepared to meet the others. A dark browed ruffian rushed at him with a chair, but danced back howling, clutching at his arm from which the red blood dripped.

"Two!" Then, as he hung back, he cried impatiently, "Come, come, 'tis not courteous to tarry over long and uninvited in a lady's presence."

Quick as his own bright blade he sprang among them, striking with the flat, till the oaken rafters rang with their cries of pain and terror. 'Twas soon at an end, and dodging the whirling blade as best they might, they rushed headlong from the room, nor did they pause till they had gained the safety of the open road.

Having wiped his rapier on the tails of the dead man's coat, he turned with a gay laugh to his companion.

"Odds on't!" he cried, "but they be gallant gentlemen." Then, becoming vastly serious, he stood and looked at her, stroking his great square chin. "Now, what's to be done with you, pretty mistress? Having no further cause to fear Master Bream, who lays quiet yonder—wilt return?"

"That will I never! I no longer have a home to shelter me. Therefore I must to some seaport from where I can gain passage to France, where, methinks I still have friends — true friends."

"Then our paths are side by side till I see you aboard some vessel that will bear you safely to these same friends."

She swept him a courtesy, then blushed hotly as she saw how closely he was eyeing her.

"Nay, do not blush. I mean no rudeness, but much as the gown you wear pleases the eye, yet 'tis not fit for a maiden to ride, stirrup to stirrup with a rough soldier."

"How, then, can I ride?" she asked

demurely. "Faith, I know not how to change my sex."

"Nor I. Still, we must e'en make some shift at it."

With noiseless strides he crossed the room, and flinging the door wide open, caught the landlord deftly by the collar as he fell in.

"Ah, good master Boniface," he cried, as he dragged him to the middle of the room, "Hast gotten a taste for keyhole peering?" Mine host's teeth chattered like castanets as he beheld the overturned chairs and the still body in the shadow round which a dark patch was slowly forming.

"Oh, my lord," he whined, "believe me, had I but known—had I but thought, those cut-throat knaves meant harm to you, or to the lady—"

He would have fallen on his knees had not his captor, tightening his grip plucked him to his feet again.

"Lord me not, but harken well to what I say. As I rode to the door of your vile inn today a youth stood in the doorway. A slim stripling with a roguish eye."

"My son, my lor—good sir—my only son."

"Good! Now friend, take heed lest you wish to join Master Bream yonder and make that fine lad an orphan. Go, find a suit of his—a wholesome one and not too gay—then, having found it bring it hither. That being done, get you to the stables and see to the saddling of my mount, and—methinks I saw a roan colt——"

"My son's good sir——"

"God of my fathers! But the youth is a lad of parts and most accommodating. Bring both horses to the door, and not one word of that which you have heard and seen, or——" He tapped his rapier hilt significantly.

"Not a word, good sir. Oh, but 'tis an honour to be of service to so fine a——"

But, my lord, being scant of temper with some folk, cut his whining short and helping him to the door, kicked him outside.

"So much for apparent sex, mistress," he chuckled, returning to her side. "But hast ever ridden straddle-legs?"

"Aye," she answered, the bright color rushing to her cheeks again. "Many a time have I, in happier days before——" She turned her head swiftly, lest he should see her tears.

"Here comes our worthy host," my lord cried, breaking the silence as the landlord entered, his arms full of clothing. "Marry, but you have done well."

"All is here, worthy sir, coat, breeches, boots, hat as well——an' please God, I lose not by them."

"Um!" My lord paused in his examination of the clothes and looked at him, whereat he edged toward the door. "More is to be done ere we talk of payment. To the stables and remember——"

"Now, sweet mistress," he exclaimed, as they heard the fellow's feet go clattering along the corridor, "Haste, doff your pretties and don the Sunday garb of Master Son, while I keep watch upon the threshold. When ready call, for we must not dally here." As he paced the corridor impatiently he shook his head and swore lustily beneath his breath.

"Man, man," he muttered, "me thought you had left your mad pranks tother side, and now—but she is wondrous sweet, and, dear heaven, I'd give a thousand golden crowns to have the killing of her rescal brother."

Scarcely had the horses been brought round and the roan submitted to his critical inspection, before he heard her call on him to re-enter.

He found her standing in front of the fire, head thrown well back, and the broad brimmed hat she wore all but covering her golden curls. She met his admiring gaze defiantly, and it seemed to him that much of her fear and sorrow had vanished with the woman's gear that lay, neatly bundled on the table.

"'Twill do," he cried. Then he laughed as he spun her round. "Faith, have a care, for maids be wondrous coy, and many a day will pass ere they set eyes on so sweet a youth again."

"'Tis you must correct me, an' you find me growing over gallant," she replied, darting a swift look at him as he led her from the inn.

Amid the benedictions of the landlord, who had received a sum of gold that all but made his greedy eyes start from his head, they cantered down the road till a thick hedge hid them from the inn, then they broke into a trot.

"Who knows," he told her, as they jogged along, "but that yonder rabble might return with reinforcements. 'Tis well we put some distance twixt us and possible pursuit."

When some two houre had sped, and as they walked their steeds up a steep and rugged hill, he suddenly reined in and turned to her.

"What may your name be—er—boy?"

"Margery—Margery Raynham."

"Ah, 'tis a sweet name, and one I feel most kindly to. Still, till skirts once more take the place of breeches, I'll call you Will." He rode on for some minutes, seemed to meditate, and she could have sworn she heard him mutter her name as though he sought to allay some doubt, then he turned to her again.

"He—whom they would have had you wed, what manner of man is he?"

"A braggart soldier of fortune." She tossed her head contemptuously. "A drinking, swearing, quarrelling knave, and one who, if report be true, cares no more for a woman's honor than his own. They call him Wolf Derwent, Captain Wolf Derwent, an it please you."

"Ah!" He shut his white teeth with a snap. "You paint a black picture of him, Mistress. Try to think not so hardly of one—whom you know not."

"Tsh! You men cling closely to one another."

"Needs must when women judge so harshly upon mere heresay," he replied, a touch of sternness in his voice. Then the brow of the hill being reached, he lashed his steed into a gallop and she followed as best she might, marvelling at his sudden show of temper.

The morning of the third day found them clattering down the rough street of a tiny seaport town, from whence he hoped she might embark for France.

Little had they spoken on the last stages of their strange ride, both being too busy with their own thoughts. His were gloomy ones; those of a man who had ever scoffed at love, only to find that a pair of bright eyes could deal as deadly a wound as ever musket ball or rapier thrust, and as he stole furtive glances at her winsome face, his heart ached, for he knew that the time approached when they must part.

Arrived at the water-side he had no great difficulty in finding a lugger almost on the point of sailing, and after a little haggling her captain expressed his willingness to take the boy across the channel.

So bidding her sit on a bale of merchandise and not move till he returned, he went forth alone into the town to purchase such things as were needful for her comfort on the journey.

His errand over, he hurried back to find her missing. He called her name, thinking that some mischievous humor had caused her to hide from him, but all in vain. Then a grim fear took hold of him and he started running hither and thither in frantic search of her. But 'twas all of no avail, and he was about to question the captain and if needs be, search the ship from poop to fo'c'sle, when, of a sudden, he heard a cry for help, and running swiftly in the direction of the sound, presently found her crouching in an angle of the wall, while a group of men and women stood around jeering and casting vile epithets at her. At the sight of him, sword in hand and white-faced, bearing down on them, they turned and fled. The danger past she reeled, and would have fallen had not his strong arm held her safely.

"How now!" he whispered trying to speak sternly, while the joy he felt at finding her alone shone in his eyes. "Methought I told you to stay where I did leave you, and on no account move till I returned."

"An' I did," she sobbed, "until a woman saw through my disguise and set the others on. Oh, I thought I should have died of shame and fright!"

"By ——!" He swore a fearsome oath, and for once, it passed unheeded, "'Tis plain you are not fit to be alone therefore, I must prolong this travel till I see you safely housed among your friends." Whereat she was comforted but the smile she gave him through her tears only added gall to the wormwood that was already in his heart.

But while the lugger strained and creaked on the restless sea, he took heart o' grace, and pleaded his loneliness so well that, when they neared the shore they stood hand in hand and watched the screaming sea gulls.

"See," she laughed, "even the seabirds welcome us."

But he kept his eyes fixed on the distant shore and answered not. Till, with a little cry, she turned to him, her eyes sparkling, her cheeks aglow.

"Faith," she cried, clasping her hands in mock, though pretty, consternation, "Here be I, a maid and promised wife to a great swashbuckling soldier, who clipt me in his arms and nigh ate me up ere I could answer 'Nay'— promised to him, am I—yet I know not his name.

His face grew graver and the lines deepened round his grim mouth, yet his voice was very gentle when he spoke.

"And knowing it, would still love this soldier?"

"Still?" she echoed saucily, "why, I swear I never said I loved——"

"Would'st still love him?" he persisted.

Woman like, she hesitated for a second, then stood atip-toe and wound her arms round his neck.

With a hand that trembled slightly he drew the golden hair away from one pink ear, and, stooping, whispered:

"My beloved, ere death gave me a title—in those wold days when my good sword was my only fortune, men called me—Wolf Derwent. Yet, by St. Denys, I swear I knew not of your brother's scheme."

Swiftly she raised her head, and looked into his eyes. "Oh, my lord—my lord," she whispered. Then ducked again for the shelter of his shoulder.

THE SETTLEMENT OF PROVINCIAL FARM LANDS

In discussing some of the features of the population of this province in "The British News of Canada" Mr. Arthur Hawkes, the editor, observes "The relation of city to country population in British Columbia, is too high. You can't have prosperous cities all the time without prosperous territory behind them. The vital prosperity of the coast cities of British Columbia is the vital prosperity of the valleys that lead from the backbone of the continent to the sea."

In themselves these are remarks which might consistently be made with reference to any country in which there has developed that pronounced trend of population toward the cities, which is characteristic of the present day. They might be made for instance with reference to New England states where there are "tens of thousands of abandoned farms" or with reference to Ontario, where it has been computed that there are "one hundred thousand fewer people living on the farms than in 1901."

Nevertheless it is possible that the disparity between the rural and the urban population is more pronounced in British Columbia than in other places and that that disparity is really so great in this instance as to afford ground for special comment.

There cannot be any serious dissent from all that is to be said with reference to the essential character of a proportionately large and industrious agricultural population, to the welfare and prosperity of any country. The remarks of Dr. E. S. Rowe, when dealing with this topic at the Board of Trade banquet, Tuesday evening, were quite within the mark, when he observed that any state is top heavy—it is lacking in the rooting which is essential to stability and to national welfare—which does not possess a proportionately large rural population, attached to the soil and rearing their families in that environment.

Recognizing the correctness of this position and admitting that the province of British Columbia would be in much better position were the rural population much larger in relation to the urban population than it is, the question yet remains, how is this much-to-be-desired settlement of the agricultural lands of the province to be effected?

At the outset the problem is beset by the peculiar difficulties which attend the accessibility of the farm lands in this province and the providing of the necessary transportation facilities to and from the centres of population at which the market is found. It is not reasonable to expect that parents with families will be found ready to locate in large numbers upon farm lands, remote from our towns or cities to which perhaps the sole means of access consists of a trail. Hence, until railroad facilities are provided, or until other centres of population spring up, contiguous to remote arable areas, it is reasonable to suppose that those lands will remain, in large degree, unoccupied and that the settlement of agricultural lands will be confined meantime in the main to locations within reasonable distance of present centres of population.

The manner in which the provincial government is encouraging and urging railroad construction throughout the province, the many millions which are being spent on the construction of good wagon roads to open up farming districts, the policy that is being followed with reference to reserving and surveying large tracts of farm lands, with a view to their transfer to actual settlers, all goes to show that the government is fully alive to the situation and that so far as such inducements can be made effective, in building up a large agricultural population, they will be employed to the utmost limit.

But after the most astute and enterprising policy has provided all that can be demanded in these respects, the major factor in the problem yet remains to be dealt with, namely the prospective settler himself. How are settlers to be induced to take advantage of the opportunities that are offered and to actually settle upon the soil? It is safe to say that all but the smallest fraction of the population at present established in our cities and towns, will remain in urban life, in spite of all that can be done. It is likewise safe to say that a very large proportion of those who are continually coming to the province from other places either come from city life or are retiring from agricultural life and they will inevitably establish themselves in city homes.

At the same time there is without doubt a considerable portion of the incoming population, which, because of one consideration or another is approachable upon the project of taking up farm lands, provided attractive advantages or suitable inducements are offered. In this connection there appears to be good ground for the conclusion that some effective government scheme might be evolved, whereby the members of this ever increasing tide of annual immigration might be met at the gateways of the province and worked upon with excellent results, with a view to building up our agricultural population.

In view of the exceedingly great importance that attaches to this problem in the minds of public thinkers of all classes, it might be in order for the government to proceed even further and to consider the advisability of instituting systematic propaganda of education in other countries with respect to the advantages afforded by settlement upon the agricultural lands of British Columbia, with a view to colonizing our rural districts, upon a large scale under government supervision.

The problem is admittedly a large one and as important as it is large. Any measure that can be adopted to expedite settlement on provincial farm lands will undoubtedly strengthen the very foundations upon which the progress and prosperity of the entire population rests.

THE INFLUENCE OF THE WEST

The recently published census returns for the decade ending with 1911, bring out, in a very forcible manner, the position of commanding influence which that portion of the Dominion commonly known as "the West" is destined to occupy in federal affairs.

The number of members in the house of commons is controlled by the basis of representation in the province of Quebec. The number of representatives from Quebec is fixed at 65 and the total population of that province apportioned in this manner gives the unit of representation throughout the Dominion. During the decade just terminated the population of Quebec has increased more rapidly in proportion, than that of any other province in the east. The result is that the electoral unit has increased relatively more than the corresponding increase in the other eastern provinces. Hence, although Ontario, for illustration shows an actual increase in population of over 300,000, yet in redistribution Ontario would lose four members. Relatively the same conditions obtain with reference to the representation of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

The net result is that the east loses at least ten members while the west gains at least twenty members. While this of itself does not materially affect the balance of the house at present as between the east and the west, it nevertheless clearly denotes the process whose ultimate effect will inevitably be to throw that balance in favor of the west. Even under the changed composition of the House as indicated above, the east would still have a preponderance of three to one, but each succeeding decade will show more and more pronounced changes in favor of the west, until, in the ultimate settlement of the vast agricultural areas of the west, the creation of centres of population, for the development of the stupendous natural resources of the west, the controlling influence in national affairs will itself migrate westward and will be located between the north shore of Lake Superior and the Pacific ocean.

Although the day may seem somewhat remote, to the present generation of electors, it is nevertheless one of the certain developments of Canadian progress that western sentiment, western influence and the western viewpoint are destined to become the controlling factors in Canadian national affairs.

NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNERS

Sewer Connections

PUBLIC NOTICE is hereby given that all owners of real property fronting or abutting upon a street or lane in which or under which a main or commen sewer is laid are hereby required to connect any building or premises upon such property with such main or commen sewer.

Permits may be obtained from the Plumbing Inspector at his office at the City Hall between the hours of 9 a. m. and 10 a.m. and 1 p.m. and 2 p.m.

No house sewer pipe shall have a less fall than 1 to 40, unless special permission is granted in writing by the Council. Said pipes between the iron pipe, to the connection of the public sewer to be of the best quality standard salt-glazed vitrified clay sewer pipe, and shall have a diameter of not less than 4 inches. All pipes shall be sound and well burned throughout their thickness, impervious to moisture, with a clear ring, smooth and well glazed on interior and exterior surfaces, free from flaws, cracks, blisters, fire checks or other imperfections.

The pipes must be so laid in the trench that after the sewer is completed, the interior surface thereof, shall be to a true and even grade.

In making the joints, a gasket of oakum or hemp, freshly dipped in cement grout, must first be used and packed into place. The joints shall afterwards be tightly packed full and bevelled off with mortar, composed of one part by volume of approved Portland cement to one part by volume of approved sand.

All joints shall be made water tight, so that they will stand a head of 10 feet of water, when tested by the Plumbing Inspector at the owner's, plumber's or contractor's expense.

By order of the Council:

THOMAS SHEPHERD,
City Clerk. tf

Mr. Philip expressed regret that the presidents of the Boards of Trade of Vancouver, South Vancouver and Burnaby were unable to be present. He was glad, however, that they had among them the esteemed president of the New Westminster Board. He believed that the sister boards were coming closer and closer together with them in the cause of developing common interests. There were now a great many live issues that might be presented for the consideration of the Board, and Mr. Philip strongly advocated the combined earnest efforts of all the Boards of Trade. It was a pleasure to him to propose the toast.

President White of the New Westminster Board of Trade, responded. He extended the greeting of the second oldest incorporated board to the most recently incorporated one, and complimented the latter upon its splendid turn-out. He regretted to say that his own older board was possibly feeling the weight of its twenty-eight years. They had not held a banquet for three years, and their secretary has now gone away to New York on a mission concerning potatoes. "We are very interested in potatoes at present," said Mr. White, demurely. The speaker designated a Board of Trade as being among the most important organizations in the country. They must certainly all develop together and assist each other as much as possible. The Royal City president outlined the prospects of his own Board, and in conclusion expressed a hope that they might be able to welcome the North Vancouver Board or a representative at a banquet which he was endeavoring to organize during his tenure of office.

The proposal of the Provincial Government fell to the lot of Mr. Lambert Bond, who delivered hiimself characteristically. Like "poor Yorick," Mr. Bond is a "fellow of infinith jest, of most excellent fancy," capable of "flashes of merriment that were wont to set the table in a roar." He justified this Shakespearean simile on Tuesday night by instancing as a sample of the north shore's exporting powers, the not altogether proven fact that the famous cougar emanates from this side of the Inlet. Becoming suddenly serious, however, he considered that, whatever British Columbia's natural resources were, the province depended greatly upon the large and wide public spirit of its citizens. In the cherishing and bringing-up of that spirit, no one could be more useful than the Board of Tralle. Mr. Bond referred, now eloquently, now humourously, to the qualities and functions of the provincial authorities. "The greatest test of all," he remarked, "was for a government to be put into power with no opposition." He believed that the best function of a government was to leave people alone.

Dr. Rowe, of the Vancouver Tourist Association, responded in eloquent terms, portions of his address, however, being rendered inaudible by a talkative individual of whom the doctor said, "I should be sorry to interrupt that gentleman." Proceeding, he declared that the government of British Columbia had before it an undertaking of immense magnitude. Some might wonder why Canada had not gone ahead faster than it had. The fact was that the handling of the country's vast resources was a thing that had been impossible in the infancy of the race. It was a job for the world to undertake after it had attained its majority, and after science had grown sufficiently to grapple with the many difficulties of development. The doing of it had been reserved until now, when the man could be found that could do it. Dr. Rowe dwelt, with earnest oratory, on the essentialities of a peasant population, arguing that any state that did not comprise a due proportion of the population settled on the soil was not a properly adjusted state.

On the question of citizenship the speaker enunciated that the man who became a citizen of his Majesty should be recognized everywhere as such. If he be a British subject in one place, he is a British subject in every place and is entitled to the protection of the Union Jack. The future of Canada, said Dr. Rowe, was a certainty. "We shall," he declared emphatically," be the very weakest and most incompetent kind of people if we do not develop the great resources at our hands." Upon these resources, and upon the many attractions of the province, the speaker touched in a poetic, but essentially sane manner, and in conclusion, associated himself heartily with the toast of the provincial government.

Reeve McNaught also responded, quoting the proverb that "good wine needs no bush." He believed that theirs was the best country in the world, and that British Columbia was the best province. He even believed that the lower mainland was the best part of the best province of the west country. He disagreed with Mr. Morden's theory that Canada's native-born population would increase as immigration increased. An interruption from his listeners provoked the Reeve to an earnest defence of celibacy. Finally, he imagined himself for a moment as the provincial government, and promised many beautiful things for North Vancouver.

Mayor McNeish, in the absence of Mayor Taylor, of Vancouver, rising to propose the toast of the North Vancouver Board of Trade, gave a short, breezy speech, emphasising the inestimable value of the Board of Trade.

The President of the Board, Alderman Smith, responded, and briefly thanked Mr. Stevens and President White of New Westminster, for their presence. Mr. Smith made allusion to the civic advertising and employment bureau. "This," he announced, "under the publicity committee is doing excellent work in finding employment for, and imparting valuable information to strangers. It is my opinion that this work ought to be assisted by the Provincial Government, as the keen competition with railway and shipping companies bring the settlers here—there numerous agents doing all the boosting required.

"We are pleased," continued the President, "that our friends across the way have, at last, seen the necessity of harbor improvements, and I am sure we on this side will endeavor to do our part in this, one of the most important works we can possibly undertake. I think another question that Boards of Trade ought to consider is that of providing work for our prisoners. My opinion is that instead of wasting money building jails we should use the men to build roads away back north through these mountains, where we have fine valleys of timber, also many plateaus which would make good ranches. This work while it would be worth millions to the Province, would also elevate and give vigour to these unfortunates. I advise that they get payment for their work, so that by the time their term expired, they would have something to keep them until the found employment. I am sure that you will all agree that this is a much saner way of converting criminals than shutting them up in cages like so many wild animals." Mr. Smith also announced that the following gentlemen regretted their inability to be present at the banquet:

Premier Richard McBride, Attorney General W. J. Bowser, Dr. G. A. McGuire, M.P.P.; Hon. F. Carter-Cotton, M.P.P.; and Messrs. Chas. E. Tisdall, M.P.P., Henry H. Watson, M.P.P., A. G. McCandless, Pres. Vancouver Board of Trade.

Vice-President E. H. Bridgman also responded, and put in a plea for an increased membership, accentuating the fact that the Board was non-political. North Vancouver, he said, had advanced to a population of 8000 with only two ferry boats, and he saw no reason why they should not one day be practically as great as the Vancouver side.

Vice-President Kealy, referring to the diminution of listeners said that North Vancouver had evidently grown tired and must go to bed at an early hour. He supported the previous speaker's plea for increased membership, advocating the Board of Trade becoming a kind of debating society so long as they got the varying views of the different sections of the community on the North Shore.

Mr. J. F. O'C. Wood, in proposing the health of the Press,, said that there was no denying the great power that it controlled. Delicately veiling some slight dissatisfaction, Mr. Wood expressed a hope that as North Vancouver grew, so would the length of the newspaper reports grow proportionately.

Mr. B. C. Hilliman, responding, said that the controlling power of the Press had been plainly exemplified that night, of the gathering had been steadily drifting after him. On behalf of his confreres, who had deserted him in his hour of need, he thanked them for their toast.

Mr. Kealy then proposed the assembly's hearty thanks to the good-natured persons who had enlivened the evening with music and song. These included Mr. Hooley, who was loudly encored; Mr. Stovell, who was similarly rewarded; Mr. Sharp, who sang Pelissier's "Awake" with admirable taste; Mr. Adamson, whose chorus was vociferously taken up; and a quartette consisting of Messrs. Ward, Sharp, Ward and Farmer, whose harmonies provoked a tumult of applause. The Lynn Valley orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. Chance, provided capital music throughout the evening.

Everyone concerned in the organization and management of Tuesday night's banquet should be complimented on a function which was highly successful in every respect.

Police Commissioners

Two New Appointments Suggested—Protection of Banks and Public Buildings

A police commission, comprising Mayor McNeish and Alderman Henderson sat yesterday morning at the city hall. The chief's official reports for the months of September and October were approved, the statement revealing that 21 and 17 police court cases had been heard in the two months respectively. The city pound-keeper reported that in September a bay horse was impounded and, being unclaimed, was sold for $10. A team of horses was redeemed by contractor Young on the payment of feed expenses, while a cow was claimed by Mr. T. S. Brown. In October, one horse, unowned was sold for $25.

The commission then discussed the advisability of appointing a clerk to attend to police court work and to take down notes of the proceedings in the small debtors' court which is about to be established. The Mayor suggested that the police court fines, instead of being turned into the treasury, should go to pay the salary of such a clerk.

Magistrate Kealy, who was present during this portion of the business, said there were other charges which they could legitimately make, such as charges for the transcription of evidence.

In reply to Alderman Henderson, the Chief said that this appointment would release Mr. Shepherd from police court work, the Mayor agreeing that as the city was growing so rapidly, there was enough work to keep the clerk continuously engaged in his own department.

Mr. Kealy commented on the fact that four mornings in one week, the court had not risen until twelve o'clock. The Mayor was in favor of paying a clerk a definite wage rather than for his services when called upon. He then could be retained and utilized on the premises.

Alderman Henderson held the same view. He recommended to the council that the appointment be a permanent one, and that a clerk be advertised for.

The commission then drifted into the technical points of a by-law relative to the "arrest of a cow." It was wondered whether the owner of cattle could be charged with having allowed the animals to wander after the said owner had collected the said cattle. It was contended on one hand that a cow could only be made the subject of a charge while it was at large, while on the other hand Alderman Henderson laid stress on the fact that an offense had been committed whether or not the owner had recalled the wandering one. In the end, it was decided to ask the city solicitor for information as to the nature of the by-law.

The Chief intimated that owing to the rapid growth of the city, it seemed necessary to make slight changes in the police department. He recommended that a janitor for the city serve as pound-keeper and jailor, and so liberate an additional constable for patrol duty to keep watch on the city's business houses and banks.

The Mayor said that the council had dealt with the subject and had left it in the hands of the Chief and himself.

It appears that the local bank managers had written requesting better protection. They asked that a patrol of two men should visit the banks every two hours during the night.

Alderman Henderson, while agreeing that full police protection was necessary, thought that the bank managers should be recommended to take some steps to provide up-to-date burglary alarms on their premises.

It was ultimately decided to recommend to the council that the Chief be empowered to employ a man to act as janitor, jailor and pound-keeper, thereby releasing the present jailor for patrol duty, and that the bank managers be communicated with on the question of equipping their premises with modern alarm appliances.

The International Sunday School Lesson. Fourth Quarter. Lesson VI. Esther 4:10;5-3., Nov. 5th 1911.

Esther Pleading for Her People.

The book of Esther is like a mountain stream. It is transparent and swift. It runs its course in ten short chapters. Yet it is a mirror of the soul. It reflects all emotions. It has been described as a wonderful and paradoxical history, and it is affirmed that the customs of the Persian court are correctly depicted in it. Aside, then, from the question of inspiration, the book commends itself to those who seek the best literature. . . . The fate of a race trembles in the balance held in the hand of a despot. How the irreversible decree shall be reversed is the problem. In the solution the destiny of the Hebrew nation is involved and with that also the hope of the Messiah. On the dark background of the plot the characters of the deliverers stand like white cameos clear-cut. Mordecai arrests the queen's attention, and even though cordon of seraglio conveys to his adopted daughter the urgent request for mediation. That Esther hesitates enhances the heroism of her ultimate course. Life is dear to her, as it always is to a young and healthful nature. She does not covet martyrdom. Yet at length, having viewed the case from every standpoint she assumes the mediatorship, exclaiming, "If I perish, I perish." The courage, patriotism, piety in that act is unsurpassed. . . Yet even she used the utmost tact. She drew upon all the fertile resources of her womanly wit. With no lachrymose face, nor disheveled hair, or piercing cries did she run into the king's presence; but every inch a queen, with womanly carriage, with completest toilet, and all the charm of her beauty, she stood unbidden and fully conscious of her peril. Her jeweled foot pressed her grave. A score of scimiters flashed in air and the tesselated pavement might have taken one more hue; but again the the heart of Xerxes was in the Lord's hand. He held out the golden sceptre. Esther touched it and was safe. This peerless drama hastens to its renoument. The queen makes no request. Instead she gives an invitation. Xerxes and Haman are the guests. Then comes a second invitation. The changeable tyrant is fairly tangled in the silken meshes of the net that love has spun. Between the first and second banquets comes that significant scene in which Mordecai is lifted from the dunghill and mounted like a prince, while Haman is made to hold his bridle-rein. Changes of fortune are of God. After the second banquet Haman goes to the gallows he had built for Mordecai, and the latter takes the vacant premiership. The decree of destruction can not be annulled, but it is made inoperative by a counter-decree and the Jews have light and gladness. To celebrate this glorious providential deliverance a new feast is instituted—Purim—gladdest of the whole Hebrew year.

The Teacher's Lantern

Carlisle characteristically calls the Bible "all men's book." It may be called "all women's book." The noblest ideals of womanly character are irradiated there. It has done more to elevate women than any book. There is no abuse of women it does not resist. If the Bible is the temple of womanhood, the book of Esther is its holy of holies. A king once asked a scholar what he thought the strongest evidence for the authenticity of the Bible. "The Jews your majesty," was the laconic answer. The feast of Purim is a strong evidence of the genuineness of the Book of Esther. If, two thousand years from the next 4th of July, the day should be celebrated with the reading of the Declaration of Independence, and it could be shown that the day had been so observed annually for that space of time, could the historic verity of the event or the integrity of that instrument called the Declaration be doubted? The evidence for the truth of the Book of Esther is not a whit less conclusive. Esther undertook her delicate and hazardous task only after a season of devotion. She engaged in the penitential exercise of fasting. She secured the advantage of concert in this approach to God. The abstemious and praying company in the palace was matched by one in the city. The name of Deity is not once mentioned in the book of Esther. Yet no scripture is a more perfect mirror of Providence. Esther's greatest honor was not when she was crowned, but when she was called. As the queen of Xerxes she would have been forgotten. Her call to deliver her people made her immortal. Timidity and indecision in times of peril increase danger. Resolution and courage reduce it to a minimum.

Mordecai's refusal to do obeisance to Haman can not be justified on account of racial prejudice, or even the recognition of the unworthiness of the man. On such ground his action would be reprehensible as bringing unnecessary ruin. His motive was religious. The posture required was such as a Jew could only take before Deity.

Young People's Devotional Service—November 5, 1911. John 21:20-25. Lessons From Great Lives. (XI.) JOHN (Consecration Meeting)

John was no neutral tint. He was not forever spreading hands and saying. "Little children, love one another!" He uses stout words—"liar" "deceiver," "anti-Christ!" Tradition says he once put himself in the way of being captured by a band of robbers—the chief of which was one of his back-slidden converts—and he did it in order to reclaim him. Heroic evangelism that!

City Council Meets

The correspondence included an invitation from the municipality of South Vancouver requesting the council's presence at a banquet to be shortly given in celebration of the opening of their new municipal hall. The invitation was accepted, the council expressing their willingness to attend the function.

Bailey Bros. & Co. Ltd. of Vancouver petitioned that action should be taken to stop the nuisance of washing the sidewalks with a hose on Lonsdale Avenue. The present methods left the whole treet in a muddy and unsanitary condition.

Ald. Smith thought that the question was one which should be taken up and on the motion of Ald. McRae, it was referred to committee.

A plea from McAlpine, Robertson & Co. for a plank sidewalk along Cumberland Avenue was handed over to the Board of Works.

Irwin & Billings Co. Ltd. wrote asking for a cement sidewalk kerb in front of the Lonsdale theatre now under construction. They were willing to pay cash for the full cost of this work providing that it be authorized by the council.

It was decided that the city engineer be requested to prepare an estimate upon the work in project.

Mr. L. Reda of the Palace Hotel complained by letter of six months' inconvenience through the condition of Second street. He described it as being in a continuous state of confusion. The matter was referred to the Board of Works.

Howard and Perrin, auditors and accountants of Vancouver, wrote concerning their account of $117 for auditing the books of the hospital. They had conceived the impression after conversing with Ald. Smith, that they would have difficulty in getting their money and therefore wrote emphasizing the leniency of the account.

Ald. Smith explained that [illegible] been his intention to mak[illegible] it had not sinuation as was refe[illegible] any such inter, but he h[illegible]rred to in the letter his opi[illegible]d certainly expressed and [illegible]ion in regard to the account [illegible]that was that the council was being overcharged. The question was deferred.

The council was asked for its support of the British Columbia Library Association, a body formed for the encouragement of public libraries throughout the province.

The clerk then read a letter from Messrs. Wade, Whealler, McQuarrie & Martin, solicitors, stating that they were instructed by Messrs. Macdonnel, Gzowski & Co. to commence an action against the city and Mr. Geo. S. Hanes in respect of the sewer contracts in North Vancouver. The firm understood that there had been protracted negotiations carried on between their clients and the city, but that the parties had failed to arrive at any settlement. Under these circumstances it seemed unnecessary to delay commencing proceedings.

The mayor immediately referred the matter to committee.

The report of the Board of Works committee revealed that tenders had been received for the construction of sewers on the Esplanade and Crescent and that on the recommendation of Mr. Hanes, the tender of Kennedy Bros had been accepted, the price being $22,250. For the construction of sewers on 2nd street from 300 feet east of St. Andrew's Avenue to St. David's Avenue, the tender of K. R. Paykull had been accepted at a price of $10,504.80. An important question then came up in the form of a recommendation from the fire chief that the city council should enforce the school trustees to erect suitable fire escapes on their public school situated on Fourth street west. The chief considered it a "death-trap" should a fire break out during school hours, as the heating apparatus was at present situated under the wooden stair which is the only means of escape from the upper rooms. He would apply the same recommendation to the higher grade school.

Ald. Kittson said that was certainly a matter that should be taken up with the school trustees. The alderman pointed out that the last time they took up a question with that body the trustees were very wrath about it and thought it should be done by private correspondence before the newspapers were allowed to get hold of it. He was not an upholder of such kid-glove proceedings.

Ald. McRae advocated strongly that no school should be built without an outside entrance to the upper rooms.

Ald. Kittson emphasized the absurdity of having the heating apparatus under the only stairway. He moved that the building inspector be instructed to take the matter up along with the fire chief and to communicate promptly and personally with the secretary of the school trustees.

Ferry Directors

Board of Trade—Ratepayers' Delegation.

A joint deputation from the North Vancouver Board of Trade and the local Ratepayers' Association paid an afternoon call on the directors of the city ferries yesterday and made one or two suggestions and complaints relating to ferry matters.

Mr. H. C. Wright, the new president of the association, being chosen spokesman, said that they had come in the hopes of obtaining some information on behalf of the residents of North Vancouver in connection with the bridge which was supposed to have been put over the C.P.R. tracks near the approach to the ferries at Vancouver. It was understood that certain temporary arrangements had been made to do away with the danger now existing on the other side, and the Ratepayers' Association had recently passed a resolution asking the delegation to see if it was not possible to have a temporary bridge erected at once. They had obtained information from an experienced engineer to the effe[illegible] that such a bridge would no[illegible] cost more than $2,000 and if that [illegible] were the case, they considered it w[illegible] is their duty to have it done right [illegible]way The tunnel or subway wh[illegible]ch was to be constructed would [illegible] take probably more than si[illegible] months to complete, and in th[illegible] interim patrons of the ferry were daily running great danger.

Then there was the gate on the other side. Mr. Wright declared that at the busy times of the day the women and children were bumped up against that gate, which stands ajar like a lot of cattle. He asked if it was not possible to improve the gate or make other more satisfactory arrangements, so that it would not be a jostling match to get on to the ferry. Also there was the sidewalk from the ferry to the street which was promised by most of the gentlemen at the last ferry election. It had been said that $19,000 were to be spent on the wharf on the other side. The deputation failed to see where that amount had been spent, with the exception of a roof which had been put over a shed there.

Further, there was the question of bringing the cars on to the wharf on the North Vancouver side. During the rainy season a great amount of mud accumulated in the space which it was necessary to cross from the wharf to the present car line, and the delegation considered that it was possible to remedy this nuisance.

Mr. W. J. Irwin laid emphasis on the importance of the questions which Mr. Wright had brought forward. The deputation, he said, was there at the unanimous request of the Association and the Board of Trade. With regard to the Vancouver entrance to the boats Mr. Irwin suggested that it would be better to have the ticket collector near to the outside entrance. Then there would not be so much congestion as at present. The speaker then alluded to the sanitary conditions prevailing on the boats.

Mayor McNeish, in reply, outlined the course which the directors had taken to secure the pending construction of the subway. The railway commission had granted permission for the building of the tunnel and the government were to pay $5,000 towards its construction. It would probably cost between $25,000 and $30,000. Plans had been made and blue prints forwarded and probably the next thing would be to call for tenders and commence work upon the subway. His Worship asked Mr. Heard to produce a plan of the Vancouver wharf for the enlightenment of the deputation, and while this was being done, proceeded upon other questions. In the matter of the entrance gate, the mayor contended that the deputation, not being familiar with the troubles the directors had had would hardly credit the things that some people had done in order to beat the collectors and avoid paying their ferry fare. For this reason they had to keep the gate half closed. Persons had even jumped the picket fence in order to escape paying a three-cent fare.

At this point Mr. Heard arrived with the plan, and the assembly pored over it, Mayor McNeish explaining the outlines.

On the question of the temporary bridge Mr. P. Larson queried whether the C.P.R. would give permission for it to be erected since they had given consent for the construction of the tunnel. On the other hand he was of the opinion that the subway would not be completed for quite twelve months.

Mr. Wright interposed that he knew the C.P.R. did not like bridges, since it interfered with a certain branch of railway work in which the men stood on the top of the freight train when shunting.

Mr. Jesse Williams was in favor of such a temporary bridge but did not think they would be able to get it. He also pointed out that quite a lot had been done on the other side on the strength of the $19,000. For instance, the passengers had now a separate way by which to approach the boat, and need not comingle with the teams.

Mr. Boult asked if the same applied to leaving the boats.

In regard to the gate the mayor pointed out that the moving of the pay booth to the outer gate would necessitate the employment of another man.

Mr. Boult cont[illegible]nded that since the receipts of th[illegible]e ferries were increasing so the [illegible] employment of another hand wou[illegible]d be justifiable.

The mayor also said that in the unloading of the boats the fault greatly lay with the people themselves. He had seen passengers walk slowly off the wharf as if there were no teams to follow. If there was confusion the fault certainly did not lie with the authorities.

His Worship also touched upon the sanitary arrangements, laying particular stress on the disgusting habit which some persons made of covering the walls with indecent writing. He was sorry to know that this was not all on the men's side.

Mr. Irwin suggested that if the walls had a polished surface it would dispense with this nuisance.

Mr. Williams was not in favor of an extension of the carline on to the wharf unless a safety switch were supplied.

Mr. Wrigrt argued that a safety switch would be very necessary, since they had had three runaway cars in North Vancouver, in one of which he had been personally interested. He thought, however, that something should be done to accommodate passengers when leaving the wharf.

The mayor assured the deputation that all the points that had been raised would receive consideration. In regard to the temporary bridge the directors would interview Mr. Busteed on the subject and get to know the attitude of the C.P.R. in the matter. If the deputation would attend the next meeting of the directors the latter would report to them the results of this interview.

SCOTTISH CONCERT AND DANCE

Compliments are due to the St. Andrew's and Caledonian Society on the successful concert and dance which took place under its auspices on Wednesday night, in the Horticultural Hall. The president, Mr. J. R. Murray, being absent through indisposition, the chair was taken by Mr. Alexander Philip, who was supported on the platform by Mayor McNeish. The programme which was excellent throughout, comprised songs, dances and instrumental music, while every Scotch heart was given its opportunity to throb appropriately in sympathy with the weird strains of the bagpipes. At the conclusion of the programme, which was listened to by a "richt bonnie" gathering, Mayor McNeish thanked the performers and congratulated the Society on having so much talent and versatility in their midst. The concert was followed by an enjoyable dance, in which goodly numbers participated.

MILLAR vs. WHALLEY

Editor Express:

In your report of this case you quote the remarks of Mr. Ruggles alleging that I had originally given Whalley permision to take cordwood off my land, but it had been revoked in order to bring "the accused into court in settlement of some past grievance." As Whalley was a perfect stranger to me, I had no past grievance and as the cordwood was cut before my permission was asked I had given no permission to revoke and Whalley had no authority from me of any kind directly or indirectly to remove the 5½ cords of wood which he admits having taken from my land.

I am, Yurs faithfully,
