First Session of the District Council

Reeve May Anticipates a Prosperous Year

The newly-elected reeve and council for the municipality convened in the district hall last night and were duly and formally sworn in. After the taking of the oath, Reeve May mounted to the official dias and tendered his congratulations to the six councillors on the successful issue of last Saturday's elections. He further congratulated the ratepayers on their choice of representatives. They were, said the Reeve, mischievously, a good looking bunch of men, and also good business men. He was evidently pleased to have three members of the old council to support him. In fact, he would liked to see it included in the statutes that only three councillors should be relieved each year. It would save probably thousands of dollars. When half of the council were left behind to give them the benefit of their previous experience ,there was a saving of great time and expenditure. "Let us this year," said the reeve, "do things expeditionsly and at the same time effectively." He looked forward to a year of prosperity during which they would have to deal with various questions of importance. He was sorry in a certain sense to hear that the western portion of the municipality was talking of leaving them; at the same time he was glad they saw their way to standing on their own ground financially. They would have to take up the question of the Second Narrows bridge, which was the pivot of al lthe future success. They would have to obtain the opinions of other municipalities and get a by-law to the people as soon as possible. "We must," said the reeve, "put our shoulders to the wheel and make that bridge an accomplished fact."

The appointment of committees was then proceeded with. These were arranged as follows:

Finance—Councillors Bridgman and Nelson.

Board of Works—Coun. Loutet and Ward.

Water—in the western part, Coun. Westover. In the Valley, Coun. Lawson and Westover.

Fire and Light—Coun. Lawson and Bridgman

Plans—Coun. Ward and Loutet.

Public Parks and Health—Coun. Nelson and Westover.

Hospital—Coun. Loutet.

Licensing—Coun. Bridgman and Lawson with Messrs. J. B.Cornish and J. C. Keith as Justices of the Peace.

B. C. Electric—Coun. Bridgman, Loutet and Ward.

There was some discussion as to whether reeve should or ould not be police magistrate. On his expressing his willingness, however, an affirmative motion was carried.

It was then decided that the council should this year meet every Thursday at 7.30 p.m.

A letter from the provincial deputy minister of public works was read and ordered to be filed. The missive stated that it was contrary to all precedent for the provincial government to release the reversionary interest in the right of way acquired through the Capilano Indian reserve but of course, the gazetting of the road would give the municipality ample protection.

On the motion of Coun Bridgman, the council will at the next meeting be supplied with a statement showing the amount of money the council has now in hand.

The reeve and Coun. Ward and Westover were added to the adjustment committee to help in negotiating the division of the municipality.

Coun. Nelson, in this connection, said the final meeting in respect of this matter would have to take place shortly so it was decided that it should be called in the district hall.

After several minor matters left over by the late council had been referred to various committes, the session was adjourned.

N. V. Yacht Club Entertainment

A Hilarious Evening Promised

The North Vancouver Yacht Club have taken the Lonsdale Theatre for two nights, January 23rd and 24th, when they will provide in the form of a minstrel troupe, an entertainment which promises to give the people of North Vancouver a musical treat and the most laughable two hours in the history of the city. The jokes are real jokes and they are new. The songs are good songs and they will catch your ear. You will be tickled to death with the harmonies of the quartette and the "Barber-shop chords."

Joe and Steamboat, two low-down coon comedians will sing "Aldermen are seeking office alleo lifee long," written by a North Vancouver Chinaman. The ears of some local celebrities may tingle as a result but all the others will laugh.

The curtain will rise on a circle of black men in charge of an interlocutor in the good old fashioned way, although the program is essentialllly funny Messrs. Hooley, Stovel and Farmer will render swinging rousing songs. Mr. Percy Ward with his famous quartette will also be there.

The whole program will be sprinkled with humorous hits, gags and allusions of local interest and the audience will only be allowed five minutes' interval in which to recover its decorum.

REEVE MAY REPLIES

In the exigencies of having to condense the account of an unusually lengthy meeting, mention was inadvertently omitted in the last issue of the Express of Reeve May's emphatic reply on Thursday night to certain statements made by Mr. J. C. Keith in his letter supporting the candidature of Ex-Reeve McNaught. In reference to the statement that "Mr. May has asserted that the municipality would have been bankrupt if he had not stepped in and guaranteed the finances with the bank," Reeve May contended that he was merely indicating the splendid progress of the municipality from a financial standpoint and not seeking to derive political capital from this allusion.

HOCKEY TONIGHT

The professional hockey match which will be played at the Vancouver arena this evening promises to be the best exhibition of the game in the season's series to date. The teams have been steadily improving in their play as the season has advanced and are now in position to put up first class hockey. Because of the particular teams which will meet this evening special interest attaches to the match. The Victoria team has forged into first place in the league by good play but the New Westminster team won from them on Victoria's own rink about two weeks ago and as they have been working hard since that time, they expect to repeat their victory tonight and thus check the winning pace of the capitals. The game should attract a record crowd and prove exceptionally fast and exciting.

EPWORTH LEAGUE NOTICE

Last evening the local Epworth League was given an illustrated talk entitled "Strangers within our gates" by the pastor. Mr. Ogle was to have addressed the meeting but owing to illness was unable to attend. The talk gave a good idea of the range of citizens being received and showed the need of support for home missions. Next evening, Monday, January 22nd, being "Citizenship" Messrs. Grey, Weir and Osborn will give addresses on the effect of art, literature and music on citizens." Everybody welcome and bring your friends.

According to the report of Mr. Cosgrove, the district engineer, a little over 21 miles of road have been opened by contract during the past year. Over 8 miles of road have been opened by day work. The total mileage of roads opened has been 29.78, and the mileage of roads macadamised, 1.60. Over 7 miles of sidewalk have been laid and in connection with the waterworks department, mains extending 4.71 miles have been laid, while water connections number 160. Subdivisions considered during the year number 222.

The city of North Vancouver has turned a new page in its history in a real estate transaction just completed with the sale of St. John's college for a considerable sum by the joint firms of Inkster, Ward & Co. Ltd. and the North Vancouver Trust Co. Ltd. to a syndicate of capitalists. Information states that it is the intention of the purchasers to shortly subdivide the college grounds into building lots which will be placed on the market by the above firms for the purpose of forming a new residential section. The disappearance of this old land mark is another sign of the rapid growth and advancement of North Vancouver.

David McLelland, Mayor McNeish's ward, who was for a time on H. M. S. "Rainbow" has been placed by His Worship in St. Louis College, New Westminster. The mayor intends to eventually place David in training for a naval career.

Councils Past and Present

New Aldermen Take Oath

A brief valedictory session of the "old" city council took place at noon yesterday The new pen-nibs, shining ink-wells and flake-white blotting paper placed in readiness for the new council made the three retiring aldermen almost regretful that it was not to b theirs to soil with usage.

Certain minutes having been formally passed, Mayor McNeish intimated that he had received a telegram from Mr. H. H. Stevens M.P. acknowledging the joint entreaty for a 30 days' delay of the pending application of the C. P. R. Company. Mr. Stevens' reply was: "Application will be adjourned about thirty days. Advise other organizations."

On the suggestion of Ald. Dick it was agreed that the clerk should communicate this message to the district council, Board of Trade and Ratepayers' Association.

Ald Dick further moved that all questions involving sidewalks, roads and water connections that had not been seen to during the past year be referred to the next council with a recommendation that they be attended to as soon as funds are available. Carried.

The mayor then expressed a sincere hope that the city had benefitted by the actions of the past year's council. "I also hope," continued His Worship, "that although you are leaving this body we shall still enjoy the benefits of your interest and advice, as a council cannot do everything as you are aware and it is through the unbiassed assistance of members of the community that we can hope to make things go ahead successfully."

Ald. McRae said that they would as surely miss their retiring colleagues and certainly they would miss Ald Kittson's genial smile!

The proprietor of the said smile facetiously expressed a hope that the relics of the old council would not take undue advantage of the innocence of the new members.

Ald Henderson then made a motion of congratulation, responded to by the mayor, who said it was a source of great gratification to him to have the confidence of the ratepayers He would promise to faithfully discharge his duties.

By this time the three newly-elected aldermen, Messrs. Foreman, Irwin and Fraser had arrived upon the scene and the mayor forthwith read aloud to each individually the formula by which aldermen are sworn into office.

This done, His Worship congratulated the city on its choice of the personnel of the council for the coming year. They were all men of experience and men who would benefit the city. "There is a great deal of work to be done,' 'said the mayor, "and doubtless we shall all endeavor to carry it out in a manner which will make the city better fixed financially."

His Worship exhorted the aldermanic sextette to pay every attention to the work that came before them. During the year they could not all expect to see eye to eye with each other on all questions, and the mayor entreated them to be considerate of one another. The following committees were then appointed for the ensuing year:

Finance—Ald. McRae (chairman) Ald. Irwin, Ald. Foreman.

Board of Works—Ald. Biss (chairman), Ald. Foreman, Ald. Fraser.

Waterworks—Ald Dick (chairman), Ald. Biss, Ald. Fraser.

Fire and Light—Ald. Irwin (chairman), Ald. Dick, Ald. McRae.

Parks, Cemetery and Boulevard—Ald. Foreman (chairman), Ald. Irwin, Ald .Biss.

Land, Lanes, Public Safety and Public Transportation—Ald. Fraser (chairman), Ald. McRae, Ald. Dick.

The mayor ex-officio member of each committee.

Court of Revision—His Worship Mayor McNeish (chairman), Ald. Foreman, Ald. Irwin, Ald. Dick, Ald. McRae.

Board of School Trustees

Presentation to Mr. A. B. Steacy

That progressive and important body the school trustees of this city, yesterday placed figurative laurels on the brow of Mr. A. B. Steacy, whose retirement from the board means to anyone who has followed his work in the past, a distinct loss to the educational department.

In recognition of the fact Mr. Steacy's colleagues convened yesterday and surprised him with the gift of a gold-mounted cane. The presentation address, uttered by Trustee McDowell, was as follows:

"Your retirement at this time from the position you have so ably and courteously filled on the Board of School Trustees presents a suitable opportunity of expressing our grateful sense of your faithful services, and our esteem for your personal character. You have continuously served on the board since 1905, and the thanks of the community are due to you for the capable and impartial manner in which you have uniformly performed your public duties in the interests of education during these seven years. Your late associates in office regard your determination to retire from public life as a subject of sincere regret, and, although deprived of your valuable services, will not cease to remember with gratitude the interest you have always taken, and still continue to take, in the educational prosperity of North Vancouver. You have filled the position of chairman with dignity and acceptance and to you, sir, by your tact in so guiding the deliberations of the Board in channels of harmony, is due, in great measure, the presence of that spirit of unison and concord which ever prevailed in our discussions, and by which all our transactions for the attainment of educational facilities have been consummated

We who have labored with you on the board of school trustees, desire to offer you a tangible token of the sentiments we express. We ask your acceptance, therefore, of this gold mounted presentation cane, not as a reward for the splendid services you have rendered in the cause of education, but as a memento of our appreciation of them ,and as a spontaneous offering of genuine attachment and regard from those who have had ample opportunities of truly estimating your character and abilities, both as a public man and a private citizen As such an emblem this souvenir is presented to you, sir, and along with it our earnest wish that you may long live in health and happiness to use it and may the possession of it revive pleasant recollections of your service on the school board and of your relationship with your colleagues whose names are here to subscribed"

Mr Steacy made a brief reply, embodying sincere thanks and appreciation of the action of his colleagues

Mr E A. Morden having been cordially welcomed as a member of the board, the appointment of officers and committees, etc. for the ensuing year was proceeded with as follows:

Chairman—Mr. M. S. McDowell.

Secretary—Mr. Geo. Campbell.

Building and Grounds Committee—Messrs Hay (chairman), Fraser and McDowell.

Finance Committee—Messrs. Perry and Morden.

School Management—The entire board, Truant Officer Chief of Police Davies.

Sanitarium for North Vancouver

Local Doctor's Project

It is the intention of Drs. Newcombe and Martin of this city to shortly open a private hospital—one which will be thoroughly modern in every conceivable respect. For this purpose they have acquired an admirable site on Second and Third streets between St. Patrick's and St. Andrew's whereon there already stands a building suitable in the opinion of the two doctors, to their project. The building has undergone a process of renovation and remodelling, and in its metamorphosed and modernised state is destined to be known as the Harbor View Sanitarium. Both Dr. Newcombe and Dr. Martin mutually intend this institution to be second to none in the province. In ten days' time it will be in readiness to receive all cases save those of infection and alcoholism .

The building itself is replete with up-to-date conveniences, has several rooms immediately facing in a sunny direction, and is surrounded by a verandah commanding, both to the south and to the west, a splendid and uninterrupted view of the Inlet.

The sanitarium will be under the management of Miss McLeish, a nurse particularly well known in Vancouver and this city, who will be assisted at the outset by a staff of three trained nurses and an orderly.

The annual meeting of the Horticultural society takes place this evening in the hall at 8 o'clock.

Mr. J. H. English is pleased to inform many inquirers that Master Charles English is out of danger and improving satisfactorily.

Mr. R. D. Cumming of Ashcroft is visiting his brother, Mr. W. S. Cumming of this city. Mr. Cumming has recently sold his business at Ashcroft and is enjoying a well earned vacation.

LONSDALE THEATRE

A varied and excellent program is on the boards at the Lonsdale theatre this week.

Mr Kingsburgh is certainly the King of Kards. His wonderful tricks border on the miraculous.

The youngsters greatly appreciated the ventriloquism of Mr. Brown.

The piece de resistance was the most amusing one act farce entitled "a pair of lunatics." Mr. Fearnley and Miss Van Dusen did ample justice to this extremely funny piece.

All the new pictures are excellent, but the "Shooting Star" is one of the most beautiful films ever shown. This will appear on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings for the last time.

The North Vancouver Yacht Club are to grace the theatre on the 23rd inst. and most of the tickets for that evening have been already sold.

NORTH SHORE MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS

The municipal elections in both city and district are now past and the official lists are filled up for the guidance of affairs during the journey to another milestone in the civic history of the North Shore.

In the city council the mayor and three aldermen have survived the annual upheaval and in this particular Mayor McNeish is to be especially congratulated upon capturing the distinction of being the first mayor of the city of North Vancouver to be elected by acclamation. In the district ,the council just elected presents a new and yet a familiar figure at the head of the council in the person of Reeve May ,who is likewise to be congratulated upon the conspicuous manner in which he has "come back" after retiring at the end of eighteen years of public life. Three of last year's council are again in their places and will participate in the administration of district municipal matters, for the ensuing term.

There will necessarily be some changes in the personnel of the district council when West Vancouver municipality is created out of the western portion of the district, an event which will probably transpire within a few months, but it is scarcely to be anticipated that beyond the retirement of the representative of that section who now sits at the council board the present council will undergo, material change, if any.

These years which are passing at present time are all years of exceptional importance in the history of the North Shore, because they are formative years. The foundations are now being laid which in an essential sense must exercise a controlling influence over the development of the North Shore, for all time. It is, therefore, imperative that municipal affairs be entrusted to men who will prove themselves both capable of the task which devolves upon them and worthy of the honor which has been conferred upon them ,by guiding the development of local affairs along lines which are at once safe and progressive.

The councils for 1912 are composed of men who without exception, have been for years, closely identified with North Shore interests, men who have proven their business capacity in the marked success which has attended their operations along lines of private enterprise, while for the greater part they are men of more or less actual experience in the administration of municipal affairs, all of which will be recognized as cogent reasons why the ratepayers of the North Shore may look forward with confidence to the year 1912 as likely to prove a year of able and progressive administration of the affairs of the city and the district of North Vancouver.

RESIDENT AND NON-RESIDENT VOTERS

In municipalities situated as are the city and the district of North Vancouver, the proportionate relationship existing between the resident vote and the outside vote, cast at the municipal elections, is a matter of interest to those who follow municipal problems.

The close proximity of a great centre such as Vancouver, within twenty minutes' run, coupled with the comparatively small proportions as yet attained in local population, creates a very large body of non resident ratepayers, who ,when conditions are favorable, muster in numerical strength of such formidable proportions at the polls, as to exert a most potent, if not a controlling influence on the municipal elections

It is an undeniable fact that the local situation is rendered considerably more complicated, because of this feature. The non-resident voter is in every way inherently equal to the resident voter, but it is quite evident that he is not so closely in touch with local issues as is the resident voter, he has not the same acquaintance with the local standing of the several candidates for office, he has not the same knowledge of the real inwardness of the situation and in essaying to mark his ballot paper he is at a decided disadvantage and in fact is frequently quite at a loss and proceeds more or less at random unless he has first applied to some personal acquaintance for disinterested (?) guidance in the matter.

There are, of course, instances, in which a non-resident voter is fully as well informed as any local voter and is, therefore quite as capable of marking an independent ballot, but this is the exception rather than the rule. It is not at all to disparage the non-resident vote, therefore, to say that the rapid development of a resident vote such as will at all times unmistakeably locate the controlling influence in North Shore affairs, with the resident ratepayers is a consummation which would make toward solidifying the foundation of local municipal development

So far as can be learned, the non resident vote was stronger this year proportionately in city elections than it was last year, while with respect to the district it was somewhat smaller as compared with the total vote than last year, although it constituted about fifty per cent. of the vote polled on Saturday.

course—who hadn't—and during his wanderings through the house the previous night, while he waited for Maillot to finish his business with Mr. Page, he had paused now and then in the vicinity of the library door. Twice he had heard the gem mentioned by those within.

Maillot accepted this statement with an offensive incredulity which was plainly deliberate.

"The house was very quiet," Burke made haste to add.

"Perhaps," Maillot spoke with sneering emphasis, his look frankly hostile, "perhaps you could have heard us; I'm ignorant of the degree of acuteness to which your hearing has been developed; but"—turning to me—"I want to say, Swift, that during the whole time Mr. Page and I were engaged in this room, our voices were not once raised so that a person beyond the closed door could have heard us intelligibly. I think, Burke, I see the imprint of a keyhole on your ear."

"Temper your language, Maillot," said the other, with a touch of asperity. Instantly Maillot was upon his feet.

"Shut up!" he thundered. "Don't you talk to me, you scamp!"

"Here, don't quarrel," I interposed pacifically, pressing the angry, glaring lawyer back into his chair with a persuasive hand upon his shoulder. I then said to him:

"You might appropriately relate what your business last night with Mr. Page was.'

"I will"—bluntly—"to you."

The proposal being a reasonable one, I agreed to defer the matter.

"However," continued I, "while you two are together there are some points upon which I want enlightenment. Reserve your personalities for another time. Is it positive that there was no one else in the house besides yourselves and Mr. Page?"

Neither spoke, each waiting, as it seemed, for the other to reply. My glance travelled between the two, and finally settled upon the secretary, whose long, nervous fingers were beating a silent tattoo upon the table.

"How about it, Mr. Burke?" I pressed him. "Your familiarity with the house entitles you to answer."

"I can take oath there was not," he now said. Stodger had already assured me that when he arrived every door and window was fast on the inside. So I net asked:

"When you went to notify the police, did you depart by way of the front door?"

"I did," he replied in a subdued voice. And Maillot immediately added:

"It was fast, Swift—bolt and spring latch, both. I remember because the fact made me think there might be somebody else in the house. As soon as Burke left I went over the whole place, methodically and painstakingly, and I can now swear, if anybody was secreted in here anywhere, why, he's here yet. I inspected every door and window, upstairs and down; all were fast."

The unbroken, spotless mantle of snow outside limited the possibility of ingress or egress without leaving betraying footprints, to either the front or the rear door, where the paths had been kept clear.

Dismissing this nonplussing phase, I turned to the subject of the gem once more.

"Regarding the Ruby, Mr. Burke," said I, "do you know where Mr. Page kept it?"

Maillot fixed a scowling look—not at all relieved by his discolored eye—upon the secretary, while that young man thoughtfully shook his head.

"No," Burke said at length; "not certainly. I never heard Mr. Page mention it; but I have an idea that it is in a small concealed safe in his bed-room, because there is where he keeps those things which no eye but his own ever sees."

Was it possible that Felix Page had any hidden treasures of sentiment? If so, here, in all truth, was a surprising side-light thrown into an unsuspected recess of his character. I was to have a hint presently of what was tucked away there.

But Burke had something more to say. "Perhaps,"—slowly—"you would like to see that safe, Mr. Swift. I know where it is located, and can save you a needless search. It will have to be opened later on, I imagine."

"All right," I said, with much interest. "Lead the way."

Burke rose, with a queer glance at Maillot, and turned toward the curtained alcove.

If he had any intention of moving in that direction, however, he quickly changed his mind; for Maillot and I followed him through the doorway, down the length of the roomy panelled hall, to another door on the same side of the house as the one we had just quitted. I could hear a murmur of voices across the hall, where Stodger was entertaining the reporters.

"The safe," said Burke, as we entered a large, handsome, but very disordered sleeping chamber, "is what decided Mr. Page on selecting this room in preference to one on the second floor. It was placed here, I suppose, at the time the house was built; it is very artfully hidden."

The bed betrayed the fact that it had not been slept in recently, and the room that it was unused to a cleansing supervision. Some soiled clothing lay in a heap in one corner; a pair of trousers were collapsed over the back of a chair; the dresser-top held a lot of linen and cravats, both clean and soiled; half-closed drawers overflowed with garments that had been thrust in any way, and an over-turned ink bottle on a handsome mahogany stand had never been righted. Even a careless housewife would have been driven insane by such deliberate untidiness.

Our guide picked up a half-burned candle, lighted it, and then opened a closet door. Next instant he started back with a queer cry.

Maillot and I crowded forward and saw—nothing, at first, to explain Burke's conduct. But in a moment I comprehended.

A section of the closet floor was up, and now stood on edge leaning against a wall; beneath it was a shallow, cemented hollow, with four wooden steps leading down to the bottom, where, obviously, one might stand to get conveniently at the small safe thus disclosed.

It was also manifest that somebody had been doing that very thing. For the safe door stood open, as well as the inner door; and a flash of the candle, a single brief glimpse, assured me that—whatever it might have held—it was now as empty as on the day it left the maker's hands.

But, stay—there was something, though not in the safe. I took the candle from Burke, and went down the steps. On the cement floor, in the shadow of the open safe door, was a visiting card, yellowed by age. I thought it blank at first; but on turning it over I saw some writing, faint and faded but legible, which had been penned by a feminine hand:

"I pray that you be showered with all the blessings of the season. With love from CLARA."

And in the lower left-hand corner, a date was written—an old, old date: "Xmas, 1857."

Next I satisfied myself that the doors had not been forced, and that every compartment was indeed empty. Then I looked back over my shoulder, to be puzzled by the baffling, indecipherable stare of Burke's tawny eyes. Was he looking at me, at the reaved safe, or at the pathetic little reminder, which I was holding in my hand, of that long-ago Christmas present? Though I could not be certain, I somehow felt that his interest was, at the moment, intense, and that I had been mistaken in thinking him a young man.

As I slipped the time-worn card into a pocket, Maillot's voice broke in harshly upon my meditations.

"So—we have a thief to deal with as well as an assassin," he observed, his glance roving casually over the secretary. "Burke, how would you, now, account for the safe being open?"

And for the first time I detected a sign of emotion in the yellow eyes: they darted a look toward Maillot, and away again; but it flickered with a spark of malice—gleamed for an instant with a light of malevolent contempt—which made me feel that the fellow had all along been keeping something in reserve, something which must inevitably come to light presently, to Maillot's utter discomfiture and undoing. It suggested that Burke was patiently biding his time until some sudden turn of events should permit him to triumph over the other. Clearly, there was no goodwill lost between these two men.

At once the eyes were again the same blank windows whose scrutiny was so indeterminate. Burke let down the trap-door in the closet floor, and I paused awhile to admire how cunningly it had been designed. Although knowing it to be there, I could discern no trace of the aperture. We then re-entered the bedroom.

I observed a door in the wall nearest the front of the house, and, seized with a sudden fancy to ascertain upon what it opened, went and laid my hand upon the handle. Burke's steady progress toward the hall door seemed to be aimed at diverting my purpose; realizing that he had failed, he turned and called aloud, staying my hand while it was in the very act of turning the knob.

"That's only the conservatory," his voice rang out; "it's empty—save for dust and cobwebs; there's nothing in it."

"Nevertheless, I have a fancy to explore it," returned I; and I opened the door.

A narrow passage was disclosed, across which was another door. Both swung open noiselessly, a circumstance which struck me, in view of the fact that the conservatory was empty and unused, as being rather odd; and as I closed the second door behind me, I turned round as if to make sure the latch had caught.

The hinges had been freshly oiled.

A bay of glass, semi-opaque with dirt, occupied the space of the outer wall, and the glare from the dazzling snow outside brought out the whole interior with a sort of brutal vividness. A number of water-stained shelves; a few shallow boxes disintegrating and distributing their contents of earth over the floor; one or two crisp, brown, dessicated plant-stalks; such was the interior of this apartment set aside and dedicated to flowers and bright growing things.

And it had been used infrequently as a passage-way, too. In the dust on the floor were footprints; some of them old, where later dust had settled, without quite obliterating them; some fresh, as if made but an hour ago.

As I came up to the next door I observed that its hinges had also been freshly lubricated, and was not surprised when it opened without a sound. When I stepped through it, I was in the curtained alcove off the library. Truly, there had been some secret, surreptitious flittings in this old mansion.

At that moment, in my abstraction, I was humming a little tune. I heard Stodger jovially speeding the departing reporters; and after the outside door closed behind the last of them, I shouted for him to enter the library. Our eyes met; and I indicated the secretary by the faintest of signs.

"Mr. Burke," said I, quietly, "will you please wait with Mr. Stodger while I have a few words with Mr. Maillot?"

The blank, pale face was turned briefly toward me—or Maillot—then the man bowed without a word, and followed Stodger. He paused an instant at the door, and looked across his shoulder at Maillot; enigma that he was, I nevertheless again caught a triumphant gleam in the tawny eyes. Then he passed on.

The fire on the wide hearth had been replenished during our round of the rooms; it was now blazing cheerily and doing its best to drive out the chill and the damp from the library; and it was a relief to get back to the easy chairs once more. I rested my forearms upon the back of one; but the instant the door closed on Stodger and Burke, young Maillot sank with a groan into a chair by the table.

The annual banquet and business meeting of the First Baptist church will be held in the Y. M. A. lecture room on Tuesday evening next. Supper will be served from 7.30 to 8.30, after which the various officers of the church and its auxiliaries will read their annual reports. Mr. Miller, a member of the building committee, will read the report dealing with the receipts and expenditures connected with the building of the new church. He will have a pleasant surprise for those who feared the consequence of such a large undertaking by so few people. The nominating committee will present the slate of officers and committees for the ensuing year. Provisions have been made for about one hundred adults. Any one vitally connected or actively interested in the work of the church is invited to attend.
