The Exhibition Marches On

Construction of the new million dollar horse pavilion at the Canadian National Exhibition grounds will mark another step forward in the equipment of the world's greatest annual fair. In the past half-dozen years five new structures have been added: the Ontario government pavilion, $600,000; live stock building, $1,400,000; electrical building, $600,000; automotive building, $1,000,000, and now the new stables at a similar cost. What other permanent exhibition can show an expenditure of $4,600,000 on permanent new structures in the space of six years? In addition to this the Exhibition has added new eastern gates of impressive beauty, and entrance from the east is this year being facilitated by the reconstruction of the Bathurst St. bridge. Additions are also being made to the provision for transportation within the grounds.

The Exhibition marches on. Year by year, in times of prosperity or in times of depression, it offers new features and new advantages to its patrons. It has a unique record for orderliness and freedom from crime. In no other city is a comparable exhibition held with such an absence of graft and such a freedom from extortionate prices.
