REPORT OF THE UNIVERSITY LIBRARIAN TO SENATE

1963/64

For those who have been associated with the university for a long period the steady growth of the library may have seemed at times imperceptible. In the past year, however, change has been both evident and rapid, reflecting increases in services, collections and staff, increases which in turn may be traced to the recognition by the university of the importance of the library in the development of this institution and its academic program.

Buildings

Barely four years ago the Main Library was enlarged by the addition of the Walter Koerner Wing, which provided a much-needed College Library, Science Division and Special Collections Division, as well as increased stack capacity. Yet in this short space of time the need for additional book space, seating and services became very apparent. Completion of a stack well and remodelling of the older parts of the building began simultaneously on the first of June. The plans satisfied a number of requirements: more seats, more shelves, better traffic flow, new and improved areas for Fine Arts, Upper Year Reserve Books, Maps, Government Documents, Periodicals, Xerox Copying and Faculty study. Also included were improvements in ventilation, plumbing and fire protection. In order to expedite construction, hours of service were limited during the Summer Session. Many factors conspired to delay progress, with the result that the building was far from completion at the end of this report year, a circumstance which was bound to work a hardship against users and staff in the fall term of 1964.

By the end of August the Woodward Library, a new branch designed to serve the biomedical sciences, was near completion. Made possible by a gift of the Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Woodward Foundation, this library is a manifestation of a policy of decentralization of collections and services based on broad areas of knowledge.

Services

Within this academic community the function of the library is to provide information and reading matter to a user population of over fifteen thousand persons. Insofar as sheer numbers are a measure of success, the library was successful in fulfilling its function, since the general circulation of library resources increased from 653,091 borrowed items in 1962/63 to 743,155 in 1963/64. Additional hundreds of thousands of books were consulted in the library's stacks.

As the library grows it inevitably becomes more complex, and the user is less able to find the information he seeks guided only by instinct or guesswork. The role of the reference librarian is an expanding one, as is evidenced by increased workloads in all subject reference and special divisions. The Humanities, Science and Social Sciences Division together replied to some 28,000 separate inquiries in the course of a year. Other divisions noted startling increases: Fine Arts, for instance, loaned 41.3% more books than in the previous year. Yet despite the statistical increases it is suspected that the real need for services outstripped our capabilities. One of the major problems of mass education is how students are to be trained in the effective use of the library. If they are not trained, or if a plentiful amount of reference assistance is unavailable, the quality of education will suffer. In the educational process it is very often the reference librarian who carries on where the teacher leaves off, guiding students to materials which will make it possible for them to complete their assignments.

In its second year of operation the Xerox copying service again proved its popularity and usefulness by producing more than 150,000 exposures for students and faculty. This inexpensive process has saved hours of hand copying for students, and has undoubtedly helped to stretch the library's resources. Despite the success of this service, a need exists for self-operable copying machines in several locations in the library.

Collections

The finest library buildings and the most highly developed services would be useless without a book collection adequate to the needs of students and faculty. There are roughly three kinds of demands to be satisfied by the library's collections. First, the library should provide for that majority of students who require many copies of books which are on reading lists. In providing a College Library and an Upper Year Reserve Book Collection the library began to contend with the logistics of undergraduate reading. Cheap xerox copy has assisted, as has the "paperback revolution", which has brought many essential works within range of the student budget. Yet a great need exists for additional copies of scores of titles, and this need must be met, even though there may be no perfect solution to the problem of serving courses which enroll hundreds of students all requiring the same books at the same time.

Second, a collection of hundreds of thousands of scholarly books is required for the purposes of graduate study and faculty research, particularly in the humanities and social sciences. In the past year we moved toward fulfilment of this requirement through increased allocations to departments and through programs for purchasing a wide selection of books as they came into print. As in previous years, we relied on gifts and grants from generous donors and foundations. Despite impressive progress, our need for funds for research collections seems to increase, even more rapidly than our growth.

Finally, to expedite the work of students and faculty in the sciences there is a need for duplication of scientific publications, particularly journals. Science escapes the bounds of library classifications and of formal academic divisions. Fields of knowledge and interests overlap to an increasing degree, with the result that a single subscription, or even two or three subscriptions to a critical journal will not suffice. In preparing for the opening of the Woodward Library, a beginning was made in dealing with this need. As the decentralization of the library progresses, the need will be intensified.

These three types of need compete for the same funds, but as funds increase, competition decreases. In 1963/64, $393,838 was spent on books and periodicals, a 34.7% increase over the previous year. In 1964/65 we will be spending more than double the amount spent in 1961/62.

It is interesting to note that the staff in the Processing Divisions (Acquisitions, Cataloguing, Serials and Binding) will have increased only 36.7% in the same three-year period. Disproportionate increases in output were achieved however. The Acquisitions Division ordered 43,196 books, compared with 29,771 in the previous year. The Cataloguing Division added 53,711 books and periodicals, a 50.6% increase over 1962/63, bringing the size of the collection to 613,878 volumes. The Serials Division placed subscriptions to 361 titles and purchased 227 backfiles. The Bindery staff was increased by three persons for half the year, with the result that output increased by 23%, for a total of 16,172 volumes. Increased efficiency and plain hard work are not the only answers to problems of sheer numbers. A library is not only books and buildings, but also personnel and equipment.

Staff

In 1963/64 the library staff was approximately twice the size of the 1957 staff, numbering 171 persons, of whom 55 were professional librarians. Of this number 21 were graduates of our own School of Librarianship, which has graduated only 3 classes. The average age of the librarians is 36, the median 35.

In the library assistant and clerical categories, which account for about two-thirds of the staff, turnover continued to be a problem. The rate of turnover was 52.58%, only 1.86% less than in 1962/63. Time spent retraining personnel is time wasted. To operate effectively any large organization needs staff continuity. Employees at all levels should receive salaries competitive with those paid in comparable positions elsewhere, and they should be assured of some prospects of promotion. There is no substitute for quality personnel, well-trained.

The relationship between expenditures for staff and for books provides an interesting yardstick for comparisons. The Association of Research Libraries, an organization of all major North American Research Libraries, reported that its members spend an average of $2.84 on personnel for each dollar they spend on books. In 1963/64, this library's ratio was $1.45 to $1.00. Hopefully, efficient operation accounts for part of this difference, but it should be noted that work arrearages have developed in many critical areas. The library is understaffed for its work load, and as book funds increase, similarly dramatic increases must be made in staff. An inaccessible collection, no matter how eminent, is of little value to its users.

A list of all resignations and retirements is to be found in Appendix D. Two departures merit special notice.

Dr. Jim Ranz, University Librarian, resigned in December. His period of service was brief but critical to the university. Under his guidance a number of innovations in policy and service were introduced. Incorporated in the plans for the main building, now under construction, are many features the benefits of which will not be realized until almost a year after his departure. His resignation was much regretted by the library staff and university community.

Miss Anne M. Smith, Assistant Librarian, retired in June, leaving as her monument a superlative collection of reference works, bibliographies, and government documents, created over a period of thirty-three years. Anticipating the growth of the university, she has left the library well-prepared for research at a graduate level. The university will wait many years before it sees her equal in devotion to service and the welfare of scholarship.

Acknowledgements

In taking giant steps forward the library has long relied on donations of books and money. In the past year, as in previous years, we have been generously treated by such persons and organizations as: Dr. H.R. MacMillan, Mr. L.W. McLennan, Dr. N.A.M. MacKenzie, Mr. and Mrs. Stan Arkley, Mr. Walter Koerner, Mr. W. Heriot, Mr. J.F. Brommell, The Canada Council, Leon and Thea Koerner Foundation, Alliance Française of Vancouver, High Commissioner for India, Consulate of the Federal Republic of Germany, Italian Consulate and the Japanese Consulate.

Scores of persons assisted us by earmarking their donations made through the Alumni Association.

Within the university the library received generous support and guidance from the Board of Governors, the Senate, the President, and administrative staff and faculty at all levels. The Librarian personally owes countless debts of gratitude to friends and associates, and most particularly to the library staff, whose tolerance and cooperation in a time of physical and administrative upheaval has been appreciated and admired.

Prospects

Traditionally the librarian's report looks both forward and backward, dealing with hopes and predictions as well as hard realities.

The realities of the coming library environment have been made obvious by the events which followed upon the publication of President Macdonald's Higher Education in British Columbia and a Plan for the Future. All parties to the educational process must come to grips with the problems inherent in a rapidly increasing student population. In British Columbia in 1963 over 20,000 students were enrolled at universities, and in ten years that number will double. In 1973 U.B.C. will enroll 22,000 students, of whom over 16,000 will be undergraduates, and yet this may not be the end of growth. To contend with these numbers this library and libraries at other provincial universities must grow swiftly both in respect to collections and physical facilities.

It is difficult to set an upper limit to the useful size of any university library, for even the largest libraries are met with requests for materials not in their collections. However, it can be stated that academic libraries in this province should be able to meet independently the demands of their individual undergraduate programs. Following upon this, they should be able to satisfy the majority of demands placed upon them by their own graduate programs.

From the province-wide point of view, this would imply, desirably, a number of self-sustaining undergraduate libraries with graduate collections which would complement rather than duplicate one another. To avoid unnecessary duplication there are two basic requirements. First, graduate academic policy should be established on a provincial not local basis. Since libraries tend to follow the direction of academic interests, it is necessary that academics be clear in their directions. Second, communications between libraries should be improved, both in respect to the transfer of information and of printed materials.

Development on this campus inevitably will follow on a course that has already been set. Decentralization of collections and services, on the pattern established by the Woodward Library, is proceeding, with individual libraries for music, forestry and agriculture next on the schedule. Further decentralization, which will improve services without impairing the logic of collections, must proceed apace or the Main Library will become an obstacle to the use of books. To guide the library during this period of development, a policy on branch libraries and reading rooms will be drafted by the Senate Library Committee for Senate approval.

Expenditures on books have increased dramatically in the last few years, and the prospect is for an accelerated rate of increase. The problem of book selection grows with the size of the book fund, and with the expanding interests of the university. In this connection the library has relied for all of its years on the expert knowledge of individual members of faculty. The creation of our present collection has required the cooperation of hundreds of persons. Eventually it may devolve upon the library to engage in more book selection, by adding to its staff on a full or part-time basis literature specialists with graduate degrees. In-print buying programmes for other major languages could be instituted to acquire important scholarly publications.

It is commonly said that we are living in a computer age, and the library is often asked when will it enter that age. In fact, many libraries have been experimenting with automatic data processing equipment, and it is being demonstrated that such equipment can perform routines involving the purchasing, cataloguing and loaning of library materials. Two considerations should determine where and when conversion to computers is desirable. First, the end result should be increased usefulness and efficiency to users and to staff. Second, costs of operation should not vastly exceed those of conventional methods. The benefits of automation are undoubted, the costs suspect.

The future of this library, and others in the province, is bright but full of complexities. A vast increase in academic collections must come, and with it the creation of many new libraries. The operations of these libraries will be performed to an increasing degree by electronic equipment. One can forsee a network of largely self-sufficient academic libraries, interdependent for less frequently consulted research materials, sharing a central computerized catalogue for swift location of specific titles and information concerning them. But whatever revolutions take place, the aims of all libraries must remain unchanged: to provide the individual user with whatever material he needs as quickly and conveniently as possible.
