1960/1961

On Becoming a Research Library... The shape of things to come for the University of British Columbia Library is easily foreseen. Its record of growth and its continuing responsibilities assure its eventual development into a large research library. In 1960/61 the University Library took two long steps into its future; the collections passed the half-million mark, and the creation of the subject divisions provided the organizational basis for service in depth.

Collections

The fine, round number of 500,000 (achieved this summer) gives an unaccustomed visibility to the state of the book stock. Normally collections grow up all but imperceptibly and only the cataloguer's statistics mark the cumulative effects of daily acquisitions. In 1960/61 the University Library came 37,556 volumes closer to its goal of excellence; the size of the collection at the end of the fiscal year was 489,926 volumes.

These figures compare favorably to the preceding year's 32,951 volumes added and total of 452,370, but the increase warrants no smugness. The gain is almost wholly attributable to the growth of the College Library (11,093 volumes). The net increment of new titles, as distinguished from volumes added, proceeded, in fact, at a somewhat lesser rate than before. New periodical subscriptions, to cite a telling example,,came to only 193 this year, as contrasted with 272 in the preceding period.

This slackening pace directly reflects the effects of a fiscal setback which saw the Library's book funds from all sources held pretty well static ($236,884 as against $221,534). In a period of constantly rising book prices, more input is regularly needed to produce the same output. The devaluation of the Canadian dollar aggravated the problem.

Fortunately, the Library's acquisitions do not derive solely from purchases or University appropriations. Notable contributions of funds were again received from such regular friends of scholarship as Mr. Walter C. Koerner (Slavonic studies, humanities); Dr. H. R. MacMillan (forestry, history); the Leon and Thea Koerner Foundation (Asian studies, literature, history, and law); the Otto Koerner Memorial Fund (fine arts); the Men's Canadian Club of Vancouver (Canadiana); the Institute of Chartered Accountants of B. C. (accounting); the B. C. Association of Broadcasters (communications); and Frank W. Horner Ltd. (pharmacology).

To this roll of honour are to be added this past year's new and welcome names: the Anne S. Campbell Estate (the Osler Collection); the Pacific Division of the Canadian Jewish Congress (Judaica); the Frederick Townsend Estate (international relations); the Wellcome Fund (history of science and medicine); the Canadian Physiotherapy Association (physiotherapy); the Canada Council (Slavonic studies).

For a library, books make common currency with dollars, and in 1960/61 the collections were substantially enriched by the following donations of impartant research materials: Mrs. Leonard R. Andrews (the Tolmie papers); Mrs. Henry F. Angus (first editions of Christina Rossetti); Mrs. Henry Bulwer (English literature and history); the late Henry Doyle (Canadiana); Mrs. H. A. Dyde (the Alan B. Plaunt papers); Mr. Neal Harlow (Californiana); the late Robert Allison Hood (personal papers); the Japan-Canada Society (fine arts and gardening); Mr. Walter C. Koerner (rare Bibles); Dr. H. R. MacMillan (history and Canadiana); Mr. Justice Norris (military trials); the Honourable Frank Ross (periodical files); Dr. W. N. Sage (history); the late T. L. Thacker (biological sciences); the Ukrainian Book Society (Ukrainian literature and history). Through the good offices of Professor W. Holland, the University Library also acquired the collection formed by the Institute of Pacific Relations, a fine working library of some 5,200 volumes on Asian studies.

An acquisition of international interest was neither purchase nor gift. The four Shakespeare Folios, a collector's dream, came to the University as a permanent loan from the famous Folger Library of Washington.

When friends and benefactors bring such good tidings, it is only fair to let joy break in. The University Library can now boast of a substantial and youthful collection, strong at the points of greatest need (periodical files, standard works, reference sets) and with little of the deadwood that encumbers the shelves of older libraries. It is certainly a far better library than its size alone would indicate.

But these reports, by tradition and design, stress needs more than accomplishments. The University Library will be truly adequate only when it provides in large measure the materials needed for advanced study by its own faculty; it will be distinguished only when its resources attract scholars from other institutions. Even the lesser goal is not yet in sight, and the next half-million volumes must come quickly on the heels of the first.

Services and Facilities

In matters library, demand apparently follows supply. When the new Walter C. Koerner wing made available attractive accomodation for another thousand students, seemingly double that number came to take advantage of it. The College Library expanded its book stock and circulation mounted at a proportionate rate. The subject divisions offered a more extensive reference service and the demands for assistance grew in scope and depth.

The heavy use of the Library was visible and audible; visitors from other universities have invariably described it as unusually high. No formal count of attendance was made, but the staff's impression is that 90% of the seats were occupied right up until 5 o'clock.

With some 1,500 students in the building during most hours of the day and several hundred coming and going at the end of every class period, noise inevitably continued to be a problem. However, the employment of a commissionaire did much to reduce distractions and decibels, while the removal of the public catalogue to the concourse area alleviated the congestion outside the Ridington Room. Interestingly enough, some of the reading rooms (Humanities, Science, and Special Collections), by a self-induced policing on the part of the students who used them, established a pattern of customary quiet. All in all, the noise problem has been, could be, worse.

Statistics of circulation confirm the influence of augmented collections and improved facilities. Total issues through the Circulation Division rose by 19% over 1959/60 (391,355 vs. 328,142); of these, the College Library accounted for about one fifth. It is perhaps more significant to note that issues of "reserve books" declined by 26% as students, particularly in the College Library, were provided with enough copies to obviate the necessity for restricting loans to two-hour periods. When it is considered that in this past year, for the first time, all students had access to the shelves and needed not charge out materials merely to examine them, the extent of effective reading may be fairly judged to have gone up appreciably, certainly by a factor well exceeding the rise in enrollment.

The lengthening files of call slips attest to the work of the lending services, but how to mark the dimensions of the Library's teaching functions? How much information did the Social Sciences Division convey in answering some 17,000 reference questions? What bibliographical guidance did the Biomedical Librarian bring by her fifteen lectures to eight classes? When 1,500 students voluntarily attended illustrated talks on the use of the Library, what effect did these have on their studies? How much reading did the Library's displays promote? What gain or saving did librarians' searches bring to scholars' researches?

No certain answers can be given, but queues at the desks and the testimony of satisfied inquirers suggest that the Library's informational services operated at greater range and depth than ever before. Advanced students and faculty members gravitated to the subject divisions for the assistance that specialized bibliographical knowledge could furnish. Individual conferences with the College librarians helped freshmen get their bearings in the choice and use of books. Two new services met up with old needs: the Science Division assembled translations, and the "information desk" staff made a complex catalogue seem less formidable.

The realignment into subject divisions brought its share of difficulties too, notably in the retraining of staff and the relocation of materials. In the Chinese manner, 1960/61 could certainly have been called "the year of the guinea pig". But the problems of reorganization were basically temporary and managerial, and the gains are likely to be permanent and solidly academic. Working within a more restricted field than traditional reference librarians, the divisional staff should come to have a much closer knowledge of their materials and the needs of their clientele. Given opportunity for additional training, the "subject librarians" should be able to provide specialized bibliographical knowledge for the support of advanced study and research.

Staff

It is the Library staff that translates books and building into an effective educational force. In its own interest the University must therefore seek to assure for its librarians the salaries and working conditions that make for high morale and professional growth.

A vexingly high rate of turnover, particularly among the library assistants, continued to be a serious problem. For example, the Circulation Division had to contend with eight resignations from five such positions, the Acquisitions Division with five resignations from three positions, and so on. In one topsy-turvy period of four months, over 45 vacancies had to be filled in all!

With a constantly changing non-professional staff plus a wholesale realignment of duties to effect in the subject divisions, the division heads had to carry exceptional responsibilities. Their importance to the Library and to the University has never been adequately recognized. The present range in salary between beginning professional librarians and division heads is only $2600. The resultant squeeze seriously hinders staff development.

The beginning professional salaries at the Library, once as good as any in Canada, have fallen behind those at Toronto and Alberta, and the same is true of the intermediate ranks. The University Library has never been able to fill its complement of professional positions (four were vacant last year). It must seek to bring its whole salary scale up to a fully competitive level.

Another requisite is greater opportunity for librarians to enhance their professional qualifications. A research library calls for staff with specialized knowledge. Librarians at U.B.C. should be given time and funds for observational studies of other libraries and for courses in university departments.

In a year when changes were almost too numerous to note, three resignations still call for special mention. Neal Harlow, the University Librarian, resigned in June after ten years of truly outstanding leadership. Mrs. Anne Brearley, the organizer and first head of the Science Division, resigned in August, having made signal contributions in the inception and improvement of services. Miss Anna Leith is her capable successor.

Miss Mabel Lanning, head of the Circulation Division, retired after the end of the period under review, but her thirty-five years of unstinting work cannot wait another year for the telling. Always visible and seldom sufficiently recognized, Miss Lanning never gave less than her best. She has come to constitute a large part of the University's small stock of legend, and the Library will simply not look the same without her. Mr. Inglis Bell, a seasoned administrator, takes over her responsibilities and tradition of service.

Recommendations

1. Collections. Teaching departments have rung year-long changes on a common theme: more funds for books and periodicals. Last year's report recommended an increase of $50,000 (none was forthcoming). No less is needed now and much more would be quite in order.

2. Staff. Beginning professional salaries should be as good as the best in Canada. It is recommended that the base rate be raised from $4600 to $5000.

Serving scholarship, university librarians should be encouraged to improve their own scholarship. It is recommended that provision be made for study and travel leave and that staff members be allowed to take university courses at no charge.

If the Library is important to the University, then so are the Library's chief officers. Division heads with long experience are now paid less than many high school teachers. Salaries for this key group of Library personnel should be reviewed and brought into line with their responsibilities.

The Library's service load grows inexorably as collections, enrollment, teaching programmes and graduate studies expand annually. The need for more staff on all levels is easily projected, and it is recommended that additions be made to obviate crises rather than palliate them.

3. Facilities. Many faculty members miss having a reading room of their own in the Library. An area in the stacks, conveniently close to the books themselves, could be remodeled to this end. The proposal warrants serious consideration for a special grant.

"Photocopies while you wait" represents an old dream of librarians and scholars. Recently developed equipment makes the provision of such service quite feasible. A number of university libraries now furnish photocopies to faculty members at nominal charges and consider the convenience well worth the cost. The argument is equally valid here, and it is recommended that budgetary provision be made for the operation of a freely available photocopying service.

With Thanks

If annual reports could bear dedications, Neal Harlow would have incontestable claim to this one. The accomplishments described herein have been chiefly of his doing, as will future progress stem largely from his planning. He has relinquished his office but not his place in the Library.

In a year of so many beginnings and "interim" direction, the division heads and senior librarians have had to take on added burdens and unusually heavy responsibilities. Invariably they were cheerfully borne and ably carried out; the rest of the story is told in the reports that follow. The writer owes all these friends and colleagues personal as well as official thanks.

The Library touches the university community at many points and commensurably claims the help of many people without its walls: the President, Board of Governors, and members of the University administration; the Senate Library Committee and the Senate itself; its own "loyal order of Friends of the Library"; the faculty members who acted as representatives of their departments to and from the Library; the many other faculty members who had no such duties but gave similar assistance. They more often hear of the Library's claims than its thanks. Let this statement of sincere appreciation be some redress.

The School of Librarianship, for so long a regular topic of discussion in these pages, is now a reality which must account for itself. But as the Librarian's annual report carried the School's story up to the present, so should it record the thanks of the School for all that is past.

Finally on a personal note. As Acting University Librarian I have been peculiarly dependent upon others and particularly upon the Assistant Librarian and the Chairman of the Library Committee. May I acknowledge here my indebtedness to Miss Anne Smith and Dr. Ian Cowan for the advice I solicited from them and for the encouragement they freely gave. Most of all, thanks to Hilda Maclean and Basil Stuart-Stubbs for daily help that was never measured out in office hours.

Samuel Rothstein
Acting University Librarian

Report Upon Library Divisions

Acquisitions Division. (Miss Eleanor Mercer)

Buying books is the main business of the Acquisitions Division. In the past year 32,493 volumes were received (compared with 28,515 in 1959/60), of which 4,637 (2,931) came by gift or exchange. Expenditures increased by $15,353.11 to attain a new high of $229,884.20; even so, lack of funds made it necessary to hold back some 3,000 requisitions. Increases were also noted in incoming and outgoing mail, and the Faculty Delivery Service handled 14,691 books and magazines (14,240). Against a background of increased work load, the Division suffered an unfortunate turnover of staff, with nineteen changes in thirteen positions.

Serials Division (Mr. Roland Lanning)

With the reorganization of the Library, the Serials Division no longer served the public directly and became almost wholly a purchasing, preparations and recording centre. As such, it now shares the technical services area with the Acquisitions and Cataloguing Divisions. The grouping of related activities has brought a real gain in convenience, but the bindery preparations section is still handicapped by inadequate quarters. Like the subscription list, the Division's work load grows steadily larger, and this pressure may account for the high rate of turnover in staff. Statistics record a modest increase in bound volumes delivered to the stacks (10,423 vs. 10,286), but it is only proper to note that the number of missing and mutilated issues seems to have gone up as well.

Bindery (Mr. Percy Fryer)

The Bindery's notable record of producing annual increases in output with the same size of staff was maintained this year; 12,356 volumes in full binding were processed (11,797). It is also clear that existing facilities have probably reached their maximum. A second shift will soon be required to deal with the impending backlog of journals, paperbacks, and rebinds.

Cataloguing Division (Mr. G. G. Turner)

In its task of organizing and describing the Library Collections, the Cataloguing Division catalogued and classified

41,147 volumes (33,485 last year), of which 10,423 were bound serials (10,286). Including volumes withdrawn, recatalogued, rebound and replaced, the Division's total production reached 49,529 volumes handled during the year. In addition to its usual duties, the Division was heavily involved in recataloguing and record-changing as a result of library reorganization, and in preparing some 16,000 volumes for the College Library. For the first time the cataloguing of materials in Chinese and Japanese has been undertaken. Even with one professional position vacant most of the year, the backlog of unprocessed material (2,982 volumes) increased by only 336 volumes. Additional staff will be needed to reduce this backlog and to commence the cataloguing of the extensive and important collection of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Circulation Division (Miss Mabel Lanning)

At the main Loan Desk a record 220,125 (201,833 the previous year) volumes were loaned, despite the existence of a new College Library as the primary lending agency for first and second year students. The Reserve Book Collection was reduced to less than half of its 1959/60 size, yet circulation decreased by only 26% to 92,470. Total book circulation, including College Library books, was 391,355 volumes, a 19% increase over last year's total. With growing use of the collections, wear and losses have become serious problems. A partial inventory revealed that 1,049 books were missing, and rebinding on a large scale is a pressing need.

College Library (Miss Eleanor Cock)

In the College Library first and second year students find an open stack collection of books adjacent to two reading rooms furnished with individual study desks. The combination is designed to induce wider and more effective use of library materials. Students are encouraged to browse as well as study; the collection includes many books of general interest, with paperbacks and current magazines as added enticements to reading. The formula has seemingly worked, for attendance and circulation have both been high. The 8,000 volumes of September grew to 16,000 by August, but until the optimum stock of 40,000 volumes is attained, faculty members and librarians will have to give high priority to the work of book selection.

Science Division (Miss Anna Leith)

The raison d'etre of the Science Division is better and more specialized service to members of faculty and students in the fields of chemistry, mathematics, physics, engineering, agriculture, botany and home economics. The arrangement of materials places abstracts, indexes and reference books conveniently close to current journals and to the collection of bound scientific journals and books. This arrangement not only brought books and readers closer together, but also brought the staff into closer contact with faculty and students. The staff has tried to make its patrons aware of library resources outside the science departments' own laboratory collections and to have its services give maximum support to research.

Social Sciences Division (Miss Joan O'Rourke)

The Social Sciences Divison provides specialized reference service to students and faculty in anthropology, sociology, geography, political science, economics, commerce and education. In large addition, the Division also acquires, records, and gives reference service with the Library's collections of maps, microfilms and government documents. During the year 5,871 of the Division's collection of unbound periodicals were circulated, 36,927 government documents were added to the collection, and 17,177 questions were answered. It is probably the busiest of the subject divisions and the need for additional staff is a paramount concern.

Humanities Division (Mrs. Joan Selby)

The Humanities Division gives reference service in the subject areas of philosophy, religion, history, literature and language. During the year the Division answered 6,979 personal and telephone inquiries. The Division is also responsible for interlibrary loans; these amounted to 848 items secured and 2,220 volumes lent in the course of the year. Bibliographical services arebeing expanded to include the publication of subject guides to the Division's reference collections.

Fine Arts Room (Miss Melva Dwyer)

The Fine Arts Room provides reference service for and circulates the Library's materials on fine arts, architecture, music and the dance. Remodelling greatly increased reading space, and with the addition of a new staircase its stack area was doubled. To keep abreast of growing demands, the Division extended hours of service from 54½ to 65½ per week. Increased enrollment in music and fine arts courses made itself felt in book use: 13,435 volumes were loaned, and thousands of others were used within the study area of the Division.

Biomedical Library (Miss Doreen Fraser)

The Biomedical Library, the prototype of the subject divisions, celebrated its tenth anniversary by the formal transfer of the biological sciences, excepting botany, to its sphere of operations. The holdings in medicine alone now total 43,342 volumes, the Cunha Osler Collection being the most notable acquisition of the year. The use of the Library, particularly at the Branch maintained in the Vancouver General Hospital, has gone up sharply, with attendance nearly one-third higher and other statistics on a similar pattern. Commensurate increases in staff must soon follow. The establishment of the B. C. Medical Library Service by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of British Columbia is worthy of special note, for the new Service promises to have a close working relationship with the Biomedical Library.

Asian Studies (Miss Tung King Ng)

In mid-December 1960 the Asian Studies department was established to order, receive, catalogue and give public service for all materials in Asian languages. Operations and services are now well under way; 676 titles have been catalogued, 1480 have been ordered, 741 have been received and 497 loaned. The collection, now approximating 80,000 volumes, is dominated by the P'u Pan Chinese library, which includes 309 titles of extreme rarity. Modern works, both in Chinese and Japanese. cover a comprehensive range of subjects, with chief emphasis on history and social science. But development raises new problems: space is limited, and book funds fall short of needs.

Special Collections Division (Mr. Basil Stuart-Stubbs)

The Special Collections Division provides facilities for the preservation and use of rare, valuable and beautiful books, manuscripts, special subject collections and university archives. The book collection is dominated by the libraries of the late F. W. Howay, R. L. Reid, A. J. T. Taylor and Thomas Murray; in combination they provide one of Canada's most notable collections of Canadiana. The collections also contain many books notable for their beauty, rarity or provenance, such as the four Shakespeare folios deposited here by the Folger Library in October, 1960. Almost two hundred volumes have been purchased this year to supplement the collections; 2,237 volumes were consulted, of which 925 were University of British Columbia theses.

Curriculum Laboratory (Mrs. Emily Woodward)

The Curriculum Laboratory, operated by the Library with the support of the Faculty of Education, supplies student teachers with text-books, course outlines, pictures and other materials needed in the preparation of lesson plans. Now located in the old Faculty Club, it will eventually move to a central position in the new Education Building. In keeping with the general pattern of expanding library use, circulation of all materials rose from 42,169 items to 60,337. At the end of the year the collection stood at 13,859 volumes, an increase of 3,730. Losses are a source of growing concern, as is the well evident shortage of staff.

Extension Library (Miss Edith Stewart)

The Extension Library provides direct and mail service in four areas: general reading to residents of British Columbia who do not have access to public libraries; plays for theatre groups; assigned reading for Correspondence Course students; supplementary reading to those taking non-credit extension courses. The services of the library are not widely advertised, so that the number of registered borrowers changes little from year to year. This year a total of 626 borrowers used 21,228 books. But numbers cannot express the degree of appreciation expressed every year by the province-wide membership, composed of persons who would otherwise find it difficult or impossible to read as widely and as well as they do.
