CRUSHED TO DEATH
Jap Caught Beneath Wheels of Moving Train.

A shocking fatality occurred three miles east of Albert Canyon on Thursday afternoon where a construction train is in operation. A bridge-man had asked the conductor to have the train moved about a distance of twelve cars down the track in order to clear the siding. At the moment the train was put in motion a Japanese had, unnoticed, evidently crept under the cars, possibly to cross the track and become caught under the wheels which literally doubled him up and crushed in his spine. He was found shortly afterwards alive, but expired almost immediately. The remains were brought to Revelstoke the same evening. A coroner's inquest was held yesterday morning, the verdict of the jury being that of accidental death, "no blame being attached to anyone. The remains, pending interment, are at Howson's undertaking parlors.

Horse Thieves are Captured—Asleep for Years—Robbery of $1,700—Conservatives meet at Nelson.

VERNON, B. C., Dec. 8.—The horse thieves who took two valuable horses, saddles, etc., from the Coldstream hotel stable here Tuesday morning, were caught yesterday afternoon, 84 miles from here on the trail on the west side of Okanagan lake. Their escape across the border was impossible as Chief Constable Simmons had specials out in all directions.

BERLIN, Dec. 8.—German specialists in nervous diseases are extremely puzzled by the case of a man who has been asleep for two years and four months.

VICTORIA, Dec. 8.—The paymaster's office at Esquimalt naval station was burglarized Wednesday night and $1700 stolen.

NELSON, Dec. 8.—Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works in the McBride government, Hon. Robert Francis Green, Thomas Taylor, M.P.P., Revelstoke, the conservative whip, and Harry Wright, M.P.P., Ymir, formed the center of an animated party of local conservatives in the lobby of the Strathcona last Thursday evening.

CHANNEL TUNNEL BILL.
Submitted at Next Parliamentary Session.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—The bill to be submitted to Parliament next session by the Channel Tunnel Company seeks power for the construction of a submarine railway, which, at Dover, is to be connected with the systems of the South-Eastern and Chatham companies, and on the other side of the Channel with the Northern, of France and other lines. It is provided that the works may be executed in conjunction with any government or other authority.

The tunnels will be lighted and the trains worked by electricity, and land is to be acquired near the Kent shore for the erection of a generation station space being likewise reserved in the same neighborhood for the deposit of excavated chalk. Power is taken to extend the existing shafts and boring, and to afford protection to the tunnels. The creation is contemplated of a new company, vested with authority to raise the necessary share capital, to which the South Eastern and Chatham Railway companies are to be entitled to contribute. Provision is also made for the due observance of all conventions, agreements, or arrangements concluded between His Majesty's Government and the Government of France.

NOTES ALONG THE TRACK.
From Our Own Correspondent. SALMON ARM

A most pathetic incident has taken place here this week, when C. P. R. station agent Graham became mentally deranged. Much sympathy is felt by all who knew the family.

Another portable mill is being added to the local industries by Messrs. Monteith and Thompson. The machinery has arrived and will be erected on Deep Creek.

Real estate has been active of late, many sales having taken place. Mr. Smith has relieved Mr. Booth as manager of the Bank of Hamilton branch here.

KAULT
The mill has closed down for the winter after a most successful season's cut. The C. P. R. Co. has added another camp this winter to its number. W. Greer being in charge.

NOTCH HILL
Foreman Michelson with his gang are busy putting in the Y from the new round house. This is another point in the C. P. R.'s favor for speedy service, as a "pusher" will remain at the hill to assist trains from both east and west. The round house is nearly ready to receive the engine and crew.

Smith & Sons fine new store is nearing completion, and will be opened on the 20th, the event being celebrated with a dance given in the building.

The handsome new gasoline launch built by L. T. Morris, is in commission and is now the finest craft on the lake.

OPERA HOUSE

On Monday evening, December 10th, Smith's Pastime Company, a genuine colored troupe of nine artists, will appear at the Opera House. This is the first trip on Canadian soil of this company, but they come well represented and will doubtless draw a big house. The show is strictly up-to-date, introducing many new songs and vaudeville pieces. A minstrel troupe such as this will receive a very favorable welcome in Revelstoke.

LUMBERING NOTES.

Work has been started on the big new mill of the Columbia River Lumber Co., at Golden, and it is expected to be ready to run early in the season of 1907. This company owns over 700 square miles of Dominion timber and about 100 square miles of Provincial timber, and is by far the largest holder of timber lands in this province.

BOARD OF TRADE

A meeting of the Revelstoke Board of Trade was held on Thursday night with the following members present: C. F. Lindmark, president; G. S. McCarter, Supt. T. Kilpatrick, F. B. Lewis, R. Howson, E. A. Hagen, W. Bews, H. Floyd, secretary.

The minutes of the last regular meeting and special meeting were adopted as read. On the introduction of members it was moved by C. F. Lindmark and seconded by E. A. Hagen that H. Cunningham Morris be admitted to membership on the board. Carried.

Several communications from other Boards of Trade in connection with the alteration of the eastern Canadian mail call ports and postal facilities, were read and filed.

In connection with the improvements of the postal service a resolution was passed to the effect that the Revelstoke Board of Trade endorse that part of resolution No. 19, of the Associated Boards of Trade of Western Canada, urging that, with a view to improving the postal service, a representative of the Postmaster General be located in the west with power to improve postal facilities as demanded by the public requirement and that copies of the resolution be forwarded to the Postmaster General and W. Gallihier, M.P.

The labor question was then discussed and the best methods of bringing in desirable labor to the province. It was resolved that the Board send a request to Hon. Mr. Templeman and Mr. Gallihier, asking that arrangements should be made for the immigrant rates to be extended to B. C.

C. F. Lindmark questioned as to whether a regular monthly service during the winter for mails up the Big Bend could be arranged; on further consideration it was resolved that the Postal Department be petitioned to maintain a regular monthly postal service up the Big Bend during the winter.

The all important question of the river bank protection was freely discussed and several strong resolutions made. G. S. McCarter moved that the attention of the Premier and the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works, and Mr. Taylor, M.P.P., be drawn to the urgent necessity that exists for the immediate matting of the river bank at Revelstoke in order to put a stop to the serious inroads made by the river at high water whereby valuable property that pays taxes to the Provincial Treasury is carried away, and that the opinion of this Board is that it is the duty of the Provincial Government to attend to this work at once and that the work should be commenced before Jan. 1st in order that the work may be completed before the water rises in the spring. Carried.

G. S. McCarter also moved that this Board represent to the proper Dominion authorities that the appropriations for the work on the Columbia River is totally inadequate for the proper diversion of the river at Revelstoke and that the Government be asked to provide sufficient funds to complete the work before high water, and that Mr. Templeman be asked by wire if Mr. Aylmer has been requested to report on the work as promised. Carried.

The new Columbia River bridge which has now been commenced by the C. P. R. was considered and the feeling of the Board was very strong towards urging that the Provincial Government collaborate with the C. P. R. in building a bridge for rail track, side walk and vehicular traffic roadway; that a road across the river was necessary for the settlement on the west side. E. A. Hagen moved that the Commissioner of Lands and Works be asked to place himself in communication with the C. P. R. with reference to the building of a traffic bridge in connection with the proposed new railway bridge of the C. P. R. across the river and that Mr. Taylor, M.P.P., be asked to co-operate. Carried.

Regarding the proposed opening of a public park and game preserve behind the city on Mt. Victoria, much interest was evinced and the proposition was very favorably considered. Owing to the absence of proper maps and plans it was decided that C. F. Lindmark and H. Floyd be appointed a committee to apply for the reserve of a parcel of land about 5 miles square or more if necessary. The meeting then adjourned.

BRIDGEMEN SWEEP TO DEATH

Three Men Drowned Through Break of Tackle.

ASHCROFT, Dec. 6.—At the government bridge now under construction here across the Thompson river, three men were drowned yesterday. The men were working on a scow in the centre of the river. This was held in place by a rope connecting with a cable which spanned the current. The accident happened through the breaking of the cable. Seven men were thrown into the water. Two managed to crawl quickly to safety. Two others were rescued by the heroic action of their fellow workmen, after they had been in the water for some time, but the three who were drowned were carried into the heaviest current and soon sank, numbed and rigid in the icy waters of the Thompson.

The victims are E. A. Eldridge, Hugh McMillan and Arthur McMillan.

—SKATING TONIGHT.—

IMPORTANT QUESTION

Western Mines May Be Operated By Government.

OTTAWA, Dec. 7.—An important question is to be brought before Parliament at an early date by John Herron, member for Macleod, Alta. He will move that, in the opinion of this House, coal lands owned by the Government of Canada, should only be alienated under such conditions and subject to such control and regulation as will provide for an immediate supply of coal, adequate at all times to the requirements of the people and at a reasonable price to the consumer, and that in respect of coal lands already alienated, Legislative provision should be made for such control and regulation in case of emergency as will, in future, prevent loss and suffering to the people of the western provinces through lack of fuel supply.

NEW APPOINTMENTS

Grand Forks Man to go to B. C. Supreme Court Bench.

OTTAWA, Dec. 7.—Hon. G. W. Ross has an offer of one of the two vacant senatorships for Ontario and will, it is understood take his place at an early date in the area of federal politics. It is understood that W. H. P. Clement, of Grand Forks, is to be appointed to the Supreme court of British Columbia, in the place of Mr. Duff, promoted. Mr. Clement was formerly of Toronto and afterward legal adviser of the Yukon council at Dawson.

Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, the minister of justice in the House, declared it undesirable that a statement like that attributed to Rufus Pope about the vacancy of the Supreme court of British Columbia being for sale, should go uncontradicted, because of the effect it might have in taking from the public, respect for the administration of justice in Canada.

CITY COUNCIL.

A special meeting of the city council was held last night with Mayor McLeod and all the aldermen present. Communications were read, from G. Lembeke stating that the wiring in Mr. Henderson's house on First Street had been covered up before an inspection could be obtained.—A resolution was made to take steps to prevent further contingencies of a like nature. From Col. Tracey, stating that his report on the sewerage scheme would not be ready before Monday.

The petition signed by a large number of ratepayers requesting that a rebate should be made on taxes and light on the Y. M. C. A. was again brought up and fully discussed. The feeling of the council was that the institution deserved the city's support in the same way as other institutions have been supported by them and since the Y. M. C. A. was $5000 in debt it was up to the city to help it out. In that it was not really legal to rebate taxes in such a case, and seeing that several members of the council were themselves members of the Y. M. C. A. it was resolved by those who were not members that a donation of $200 be given to the Y. M. C. A. to help it out.

The Fire, Water & Light committee reported on the advisability of connecting up both fire halls to the telephone central office and a resolution was passed to that effect.

The application of J. Kane, operator at the power house, for an increase of salary to $80 per month, was again discussed, and it was resolved to grant the request to date from Nov. 1.

The preliminaries for a by-law regulating the wiring of houses for electric light inspection by the city electrician and permits for the same was discussed but laid over for further consideration, a resolution being passed that an advertisement be put in the MAIL-HERALD that no connection will be made with the electric wires until the city electrician is fully satisfied as to the wiring of the house.

Regarding the traffic bridge over the Columbia, it was moved by Ald. Abrahamson that Mr. Gallihier, M.P., be asked to interview the Railway Commissioners to make arrangements with the C. P. R. to construct a traffic bridge in connection with the proposed C. P. R. railway bridge over the Columbia at Revelstoke. Carried.

It was further moved by Ald. Trimble that Mr. T. Taylor, M.P.P., be asked to use his influence on the Provincial Government to support the erection of a traffic bridge across the Columbia at Revelstoke in connection with the proposed new bridge about to be constructed by the C.P.R. Carried.

A question as to why police court fines should go to the government treasury instead of to the city was discussed, and it was proved that if the magistrate was appointed by and paid by the city, the municipal treasury could claim the fines.

A resolution was passed to hold a court of revision, consisting of Mayor McLeod and Ald. Howson and Caly, on Dec. 21st, to adjust the voters' list. The meeting then adjourned.

FACTION LEADS TO FRICTION.

There should be no faction in our city. There should be a mutual interest in the prosperity of our people. When we see indifference to the well being of its citizens, we see a city which all wise men shun.

THE EVERLASTING TOPIC.

Appropos of the agreement made between the Provincial Government and the commissioners of the Salvation Army for the bringing in of immigrants, this seems one step towards the solution of the labor problem.

THE COLUMBIA BRIDGE.

It will be noted with satisfaction that the C. P. R. have commenced operations for the construction of a new bridge over the Columbia River.

HOW TO HANG A SKIRT

side out again for a "real" trying on. Fit the belt into place while the skirt is on. Somehow it takes on the very set you've been trying for much better that way.

As for the hem, one of those little instruments, with its bit of chalk held firmly at whatever height you set it, is a convenience mightily worth having. Evenness of length is attained without the weary work of bending and trying to let your eye gauge it.

Probably what most usually betrays the amateur is the direction in which the lines of seams, or of the tucks about the hips, run. They should round up easily into the belt, neither turning toward the back nor the front. And yet that is what the amateur (and even some professional) rarely looks to. The usual thing is to see tucks and seams bent back, making a curve that exaggerates the size of the hips and utterly robs the skirt of any grace.

If you are making a skirt to wear over a slip, and intend letting a silk petticoat do duty as that slip, by all means fit the petticoat into a hand before attempting to hang the outside skirt. And be as particular about that fit as you are about the fit of the outside skirt.

For that matter, every petticoat—be it silk, mohair, or lingerie—should be made to fit smoothly over the hips and back; and the absurd, bunched drawing strings, done away with as a relic of an age of barbarism in clothes.

Hand up a Circular Skirt to Do its Stretching

An Easy Way to Mark the Hem

Literally Fitting the Belt

OH, FOR the days when skirts were nothing but straight breadths, gathered around into a bunch, hideos enough, it is true, but at least the sort of thing over which a woman could work in as tranquil a frame of mind as over monotonous darning!

There's just one reason why the whole feminine world doesn't stand up and boldly defy Dame Fashion, and that is because the skirts of the last year (and those promised for the year to come) have a trick of being becoming that is as irresistible as they make 'em.

Even with a good pattern, a circular skirt requires coaxing to make it just so over the hips. But the most troublesome part about it is the way the hem will sag and sag, be you experienced tailor or veriest novice in the art of handling needle and shears.

One clever dressmaker, whose skirts seem to sag less than anybody else's in town, has revealed the secret of her success. She hangs the skirt on a form and lets it hang until "it has stretched itself out" as she graphically puts it. Then, and only then, she puts the hem in, (it has only been basted before), and finishes it off, fairly secure in her work.

That idea is well worth following—anything that prevents endlessly talking up the sides is to be hailed with grateful enthusiasm.

If your hips are fair, even, try doing your first fitting of a skirt wrong side out—it's a lot easier to mark where the seams should be taken in. Then baste them in and turn it right

The Compensations of Poverty; a Study in Contrasts

"THERE aren't any," said the woman who works for her living, positively. "It sounds well to say you made your last party gown out of chesecotte, and pointed your last summer's hat with shibboleth, but you were merely accepting the inevitable—there wasn't any compensation at all."

"But there ought to be," persisted the woman who is always thinking of matters of more or less importance. "I've considered the thing a good deal lately, and though, of course, it isn't nice to be poor—could you tell them how?"

"I should think not," interpolated the other.

"Still, there are advantages. I met a girl I know on the street the other day, and though she has everything money can buy, she looked positively ill and haggard. I thought she must be troubled with typhoid, or at least had a circulation, have contracted with her lover—but nothing of the sort. She and her mother had tired of the mountain resort where they had been summering for the last five years, and were staying in a small old building, and were in the many other places that had been recommended to them by their long-suffering friends—could you tell them how?"

"I should think not," interpolated the other.

IN these days when individuality is emphasized in every subtle way imaginable, the initialing of lingerie occupies a great deal of attention, both from the woman who buys every piece of the flimsy things she wears, and from her who sets every stitch herself.

After all, it's only a matter of a little extra work, yet it makes a great difference, and when you are making a chemise or corset cover as a gift the initials is eloquent of thought.

The little initials that come already embroidered in tiny motifs of sheer white stuff are easily set in, the cut edges rolled and whipped deftly upon the wrong side. But the handmade ones are, of course, much prettier.

Often the three initials are separately set, each in its tiny wreath of flowers, or in a much more simply executed ring of braid-stitching; and as often the monogram— even a single letter is used.

The design shown is built especially for initialing, the motif of scrolls directly in the center making place for a very pretty arrangement of the letters, which may be made to cascade down, spreading out into the largest—the initial of the last name—in the wider space at the bottom.

Either shadow or solid work may be used. But pad the design heavily if you do it solid.

To apply the design, lay the sheer material over it and trace off with a soft pencil.

The neck may be scalloped or trimmed with narrow lace insertion, beading and ribbon, or a narrow casing of the material may be hemmed on underneath (through which ribbon can run), with a narrow hemstitched ruffle to edge the chemise.

Bone Protectors

SLIPPERY porcelain, like slippery hardwood, is responsible for many broken bones. It has become painfully common of late to read, as items of news, "Mrs. X— fell while stepping into her bath tub and injured her spine." "The Honorable So and So cracked three ribs while bathing in a porcelain-lined tub." "Baby Smith slipped during her bath yesterday and sprained her arm."

Now, as the white enamel tub is entirely too cleanly and attractive in appearance to be done in the interest of breakable joints is to safeguard bathing to such an extent that danger is reduced to a minimum, even for the tottery feet of the very old or the very young.

Fortunately the ingenious American is again to the rescue, and we have specially constructed bath mats warranted to prevent slipping. These are made wholly of rubber, or in cheaper grades they have rubber on each side filled with a fabric filling. They come in a number of different lengths and several widths, so they are easily adjusted to any sized tub. Such mats can also be ordered to entirely cover a tub, only leaving a hole for the drain pipe. This, however, is really unnecessary.

Being made of a fine, smooth rubber, rough enough, however, not to be as treacherous as the porcelain, these mats are perfectly sanitary and as easily kept clean as the tub itself. They should always be laid in the tub before the water is turned on, so as not to cover the drain pipe, and at the close of each bath should be thoroughly rinsed and hung to dry over a heavily nickel-plated hanger, one of which usually comes with each mat.

The hangers are provided with a special screw to fasten into the wall back of the tub, so the mats may drain into them.

Besides the danger of the feet slipping on the bottom of a tub, the rim often proves treacherous to hands, resulting in a bad fall. This also has been guarded against in the shape of rim protectors. These are nothing more nor less than a small piece of rubber fastened to the edge of the tub with nickel-plated grips, and that no matter how soapy the hand, it can get a firm hold on it without danger of slipping.

These two simple contrivances are a great boon to old people, especially, for to them the porcelain tub has a double menace, since they not only slip, but really, through the brittleness of age are much more easily broken.

The Quality of Having Good Times

THE girl who goes through life with a great capacity for enjoyment may congratulate herself upon having received in her cradle one of the brightest of the particular blessings that the fairies are said to bestow upon favored babies.

She is the type who goes downtown for a day's shopping and comes back with a dozen different amusing happenings to relate. There may have been disappointments or occasional snags to encounter, but she has forgotten them.

It was such a joy to get a glimpse of all the new hats and bouffants! She has some delightful hints for stocks cleaned by the way, and she always does enjoy a day in the shops, anyhow.

That same girl comes home from a dance with eyes and cheeks glowing, and murmurs: "Tired? Yes, tired as a dog; but, oh! I've had such a good time!"

Later you may learn from other sources that the floor was in bad condition, the music not up to the standard, the men stupid and the supper disappointing; but little Miss Bright Eyes was not disturbed by these things.

She went to dance, not talk, and so long as a man kept off your toes and "look you around" successfully, she didn't expect him to discuss (Ibsen. No, she didn't remember that the toes ran short, and she hoped that the next dance would be as nice.

The girl with this quality can go on an all-day excursion and enjoy every minute of it. She finds something amusing in the fat, staring progeny of the German woman who sat next to her on the deck of the boat. She enjoys the spray dashing in her face, and she doesn't worry about the glare, because she expected it.

She knows what sort of clothes to wear, and so her spirits are undaunted by the fear of torn blouse or limp frills. If she is apt to be a sunburn victim, she doctors her complexion with the ounce of prevention and goes on her way rejoicing.

When a rainy day comes, she accepts it with a chance to catch up with the many things she never can make up her mind to do when the weather is fine.

She is never bored, this much-blessed young person, for her interests are too diversified; never lonely, for she makes such a cheering companion that she's sought far and wide; never blue, for she hasn't time.

It is a heaven-sent gift, the quality for having good times, but it can be cultivated, and it's worth the trouble.

Fruit Jar Holders

SINCE the sterilizing of fruit and the preserving of it in jars set in boiling water has come to enjoy such popularity, it is necessary to provide jar holders, or bad scalds are likely to ensue.

When this process was first invented, an inch plank was set in the bottom of the boiler and the jars set on that. Naturally, the scalding glass was hard to lift out, especially as the lids could not be screwed on very tightly.

One ingenious housekeeper had her tinner concoct a frame for her, made of narrow strips of tin, curving at the top for a handle, and fastened to a circular piece set seven inches above the bottom of the strips which served as legs. Into this the jar was set before going into the water, and it could easily be removed when the fruit was cooked.

These frames proved so popular that they became great travelers during the preserving season, being loaned to one friend after another, and many were the orders the tinner received for similar sets.

The chief objection to these improvised jar holders was that they took up so much room in a closet during nine months of a year. Now, however, a holder has been put on the market that, while on the same general lines as the other, is collapsible.

It is made of two rather heavy twisted wires curved at the top like a U upside down. These are held together by two rings of wire, one several inches from the top, the other from the bottom. The parts are so loosely constructed that when the jars are removed the entire holder flattens out completely, the rings sliding up to one side.

Radical Views on the Feeding of Dogs

TRADITION and popular opinion to the contrary, my own observation leads me to believe that more dogs are unhealthily from under than from over feeding, and that within certain limitations the question of diet should be regulated by individual peculiarities among canines as well as among humans.

Strict vegetarians insist that meat is not only unnecessary but injurious to every one; yet actual experience does not bear out the truth of this theory. Nobody will deny that eggs are a valuable and nutritious article of food, but there are certain people to whom an egg is little short of poison.

I knew a young girl who owned a tiny fox terrier, to which she was devoted, but she was imbued with the notion that the dog must not have meat; and though the little creature refused the tempting saucers of milk and bits of biscuit she offered him, and whined pitifully for the bones that his doggyish stomach craved, she held firm.

The mistress indignantly replied, "I have always thought it was bad for him."

"So I see," said the man, dryly. "However, it's the only chance for your dog, and, I am sorry to say, a pretty slim one now." The dog was too weak to eat the liver when it was brought to him, and died within a few hours, but the lesson was not lost. The girl is bringing up another pet alone different lines, and she is meeting with success.

Liver can hardly be overrated in its place on the dog's diet list, and is particularly valuable in the case of older animals, whose teeth are no longer up to skilful bone-crunching. Two dogs of my acquaintance, who have retained their puppyish looks and manners to a ripe old age, and are entirely free from that objectional "dog smell" have been fed upon it—judiciously, of course—for years.

Besides the liver, they have had carefully selected scraps from the table—no heterogeneous mass of bits that is sure to deject in them an abiding interest in every garbage can—and a goodly supply of fresh, clean drinking water. Fed in this way, regularly exercised and properly bathed, the owners need have little fear of mange or distemper.

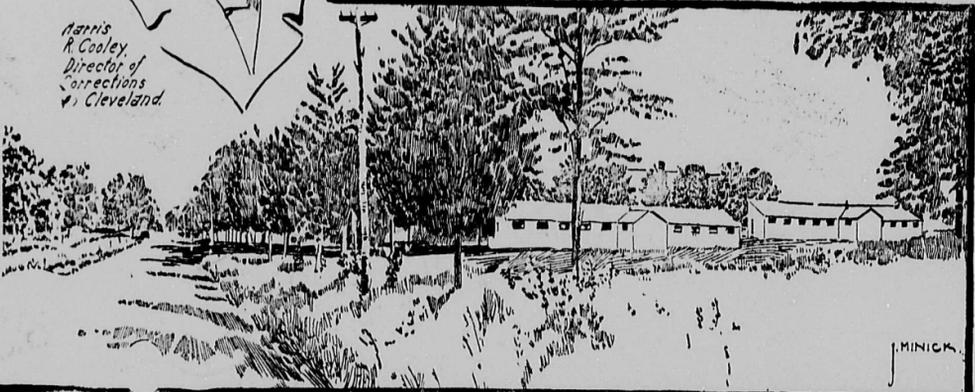

The hospital on Cleveland's City Farm

Harris R. Cooley, Director of Corrections in Cleveland.

But there is no law to hold him there. Usually the victim is so grateful for the treatment that he remains, voluntarily, until the last traces of his curse have been destroyed. But the drink disease and the drug habit are remorseless and insistent in their hold on their victim, and often the patient seeks liberty, only to get back to his old haunts and his old vices.

A concession has been made to the doctors by the peaceable Mr. Cooley, however. He has agreed that no fixed system of treatment shall be adopted that the profession does not indorse as ethical. The doctors have conceded the establishment of a cure. Just which kind still remains to be determined.

J. MINICK.

VICTIMS of alcohol and drugs are not so plentiful in Cleveland, Ohio, as they were. The city is curing them. When it appears to a Cleveland Judge that a prisoner has committed a lesser crime through the influence of liquor, morphine, laudanum or other narcotic, he sends the culprit to a sanitarium conducted by the Department of Charities and Correction for treatment.

Usually the patient, when he sees what is being done for him, is glad to stay, but not always. If he is not, the department is not empowered to keep him in the institution. It is now proposed to make the system still more effective through a law compelling such unfortunate to submit to the cure until discharged. This plan has the approval of Mayor Johnson and leading physicians and officials of the city.

When, until recently, a poor, broken, hopelessly drug-ridden unfortunate stood before the bar in the police court, on a charge of vagrancy, or of pocket-picking, or of petit larceny, or of any one of the minor mean acts that a fend will commit when craving for drugs, or when his moral senses have been temporarily atrophied by the action of them or of liquor, the details of the whole miserable transaction were related prosaically by the hard-headed policeman. The Judge yawned and gave the usual sentence, "to keep him away from the dope for awhile and get it out of his system"—a fine, some days in the workhouse and the costs.

into shape for presentation to the Legislature. If they are adopted, the drunkard or drug victim will be sentenced to the sanitarium by the police Judges, and he will be obliged to remain there until he is cured. Just as a murderer who commits a crime through the hallucinations of insanity is not held criminally responsible to the State for his acts, the new law will provide for the drunkard or the drug fend. Instead of his being answerable to the State for a crime, the State will be charged with his reformation and return to society.

Upon the urgent invitation of the British Medical Congress he has agreed to prepare a paper giving the details of his treatment. In advance of the presentation of that statement the details were given to this newspaper. Back in 1894 Dr. Brown had a patient suffering from tuberculosis of the ankle joint. Having devoted much study to the subject, the doctor decided to make a test of dolo-rin, containing iodine, that he had invented. This solution he injected into the joint. To his delight he saw an improvement, and at the end of four injections recovery was so complete that the patient was able to walk.

CURIOS FACTS AND FIGURES ABOUT OUR WORLD

THE experiment of paving the roads with snow has been tried with success by the farmers in western America. Every autumn the roads are covered with dust, which, after the heavy rains, becomes thick mud, making travel hard for man and beast. After straw had been laid on the main thoroughfares to a depth of a foot or more, traveling became easy. The wood used in the best pianos has been seasoned forty years. Beards are liable to taxation in some Japanese villages. The origin of this curious custom is unknown.

Canadian farmer. Wheat which was in the sheaf at 3 o'clock in the afternoon was made into scones before 6. When operations began a wagon stood in the barn with about half a load of grain in the sheaf. Beside it was a thrasher, connected with this was a gasoline engine. The engine was started, the sheaves were fed to the thrasher and the grain was deposited in a bin. The power was then transferred to the cleaner, and the work of changing the newly thrashed wheat into flour was quickly carried through. The rest of the task was easy.

A falcon has flown from Tenerife to Andalusia, 750 miles in sixteen hours. India rubber cushions first fitted to billiard tables just seventy years ago. Parliamentary Bluebooks were first issued in 1681, but not sold, until the year 1836. There are about 400 howling clubs in Scotland, twenty-three of which are in Glasgow. The famous Alabama was afloat twenty-two months. In that time she destroyed fifty-one vessels.

on stationary objects for steering guides. One submerged rock is so charged with magnetism that the compass on a vessel passing over it dips perpendicularly downward. In some parts of France walnuts form a regular article of diet. The peasants eat them with bread that has oftentimes been rubbed with garlic. The hygienic effects are considered good, replacing meat to a large extent. These nuts are also used to make oil. It is much cheaper and similar in taste to that pressed from olives, and is employed to adulterate the latter. The prisoners in certain prisons are engaged in cracking walnuts and picking out the kernels, which are pressed into oil.

DECLARES THE EARTH SOLID AS STEEL

FOR a long time eminent geologists have held that liquid currents exist in the interior of the earth, and astronomers have assumed that fluid currents in the sun extend almost to the centre of that body. As a result of careful investigation and calculations, Professor T. J. J. See, of the United States Navy, denies the possibility of currents in the earth. He also declares that currents in the sun and great planets must be quite shallow, and they cannot descend to any great depth because of the great pressure and the rigidity of the structural bodies.

Professor See goes even further than his two eminent predecessors in this line of research. Even if it were fluid, by his calculations the globe would have a rigidity greater than that of wrought iron. But he finds that the average rigidity of the whole mass is nearly equal to that of nickel steel, such as is used in the armor of a battleship. Rigidity of the earth's crust is about that of granite, or one-sixth that of steel; toward the centre, however, this rigidity increases rapidly, due to the enormously high pressure to which the imprisoned matter is subjected.

ble the calculation of currents at any depth below the surface. DEACON'S HARD LUCK. Elder Matthews was popular among the sick of his congregation. He had an unswerving belief in the medicinal value of whiskey, and boldly pulled the bottle from his pocket whenever he called to see some sick parishioner who had passed well into the middle stages of life. Deacon Sercum had been sick for some time, and gladly welcomed the frequent visits of the concerned elder. But, one morning, Matthews produced the welcome bottle, and in it poor Sercum saw only a sufficient quantity to give his tongue a single coat. He looked inquiringly at the elder. "Couldn't help it," protested the embarrassed visitor, "our pastor was taken sick this morning, and, of course, I had to visit him first."

REPUTATION

Conserve Revelstoke's Upward Growth—A Warning to Aspirants for Civic Honors.

Revelstoke was created a city by statute on March 1st, 1899, and a month later the first election for mayor and city council took place. Our city has reached a turning point and in its career similar to that which has come to all cities on this continent. We have today, however, the advantage of being able to copy what they have done well and avoid the mistakes for which they are paying dearly today. Looking backward over our own history from the very beginning, we see a pioneer town groping towards a goal then so far distant that few of its citizens expected to be present at the birth of a large city and a future metropolis of the interior. It required an optimist indeed, in those days to realize that the trail of the pack horse train was the fore runner of the railway of our day, or to hear in advance the hum of industry in the land where the virgin forests reigned alone. Looking forward we see around us acres and acres of fertile land, producing more wealth than was ever dreamed of; we see thousands of square miles of rich mineral land that our predecessors had no knowledge of and furthermore we see the resources in the forests which in days gone by were practically useless as assets to the pioneers with their crude method of working and limited knowledge of putting to commercial use. Our city is advancing by leaps and bounds. Its population has doubled in only a few years and will double still even more rapidly. Much as we have spent on city improvements and conveniences, we must be prepared to spend more, on general work that will benefit our people and attract the new comer, if we are to honor the place into which our commercial prominence is thrusting us.

The city money must be spent judiciously and with the best advantage to the bettering of our financial position and to the ends which our central position in the province demands. The condition of our water system is not such that it will not stand improvement, and the dire necessity for a new and thorough sewerage system is now felt. Revelstoke has increased in population so rapidly that this great improvement is absolutely necessary for the health of the city. We must have municipal power to a far greater extent than is at present in use if we ever hope to have factories. Let us demonstrate that we are determined not to rest a moment until the force that the Creator has placed at our door is harnessed and controlled to its full extent for the use of the people and let us aid nature by supplementing her with the force of machinery and thereby insuring the constant supply of power and light.

Although our civic debt is large, so also is our ability to pay. We must borrow if we are to keep pace with the times and maintain the position that destiny has assigned us. If our credit is impaired it is due to bad management. With the resources at our command and the prosperity ahead of us, coupled with careful management, no necessary enterprise need be deferred for want of funds. The new council should invite the co-operation of various commercial and labor organizations in an effort to establish a means of fully considering every proposition for the mutual advantage of all.

The town of yesterday is the city of today and those men who have fully weighed the issue at stake when holding themselves ready for municipal honors, will recognize that they hold the prestige of Revelstoke in their hands and that they have the marrying or the making of a city which is now in its ascendent.

CHRISTMAS POINTERS

A few Suggestions for our Merchants.

This is the fattest season of all the glad year 1906. You are coming into the holiday season with a rush and there will be much good money spent in buying presents for one and all. If you are in the grocery line, wouldn't it be well to start out early and make arrangements for the Christmas trade. If in dry goods, push linens, napery, and table cloths, sell knives and forks. Get busy with your pencils planning for the things you are going to do. The nights are getting mighty frosty and the coming of that chilly feeling in the midnight hour suggests to mother something in the nature of warmer blankets, more of them, warmer clothing for father and the boys and heavy winter shoes. Push these things. When you do you are doing the bat, it counts. These are not small space days. The retailer should do more advertising from now until the Christmas toll has been garnered than at any time this year. It is the big money spending and the live ones will win the trade. There is just one thing that you cannot afford to neglect. Of course this is not special for this season's advertising, but for all times. It is the cardinal principle that we want to rap home to you once again. The priceless ad is wasted money. Therefore you must use prices freely to bring people who know the value of goods and the value of money to your store. Your stocks should be the most appetizing if you are in the food line, complete and nicely assorted if in the clothing or dry goods lines. Talk about these things. Talk about the fine opportunity for selections. Advance the purity of your groceries. Dwell on the excellence of your shoes, the foot form and the ability to fit. Speak of the excellent opportunities for securing the winter's supply of clothing. And if you advertise generously, properly and with plenty of prices, your harvest will be a fat one.

THE PASSING YEAR.

The March of Progress—Revelstoke in the Ascendent.

Revelstoke has witnessed many changes since Christmas of 1905. The wave of prosperity has gradually been increasing in volume and rolling west leaving behind it a vast field of riches and prospering humanity. Revelstoke has been carried into the onward and upward rush and the westward trend of population and tangible wealth has left many traces in our midst.

Situated as we are, and happily so, on the great highway of transcontinental communication, a very great deal of that which passes to, and from is deposited here. As the gateway to the rich and bountiful regions of the interior, Revelstoke derives considerable benefit from her position and while the industries of which she is the centre continue to pour their fruits into her coffers, she will never allow another city to usurp her position. The rise of Revelstoke has been gradual, but the last twelve months has seen many changes, and changes for the better. Our movement has been forever onward and upward, there has been no going back and this Christmas will see the instances of that forward march in the increase of business, the large additions to our buildings and the augmented population. The signs of the times are no more strongly evinced than in our stores and business houses where, as has been stated in another column, the display this year far exceeds that of any previous time.

In casting ones eye round the city, new buildings can be seen on all sides both commercial and residential. The latest additions to the business portion of Revelstoke are the new P. Burns & Co's fine brick building, the new offices of the MAIL-HERALD, Kincaid & Anderson's office, W. B. Robertson's office and the addition to the Revelstoke Club. J. Henderson has constructed a fine new livery stable and many handsome residences have gone up, the local contractors having had a busy season. All this goes to show the popularity of our city and the extent of her increase.

Tourists from all over the world gather here, capitalists congregate and draw a host of smaller fry behind them. Industries have had a great incentive and the value of timber and lands has risen by leaps and bounds. Our future indeed looks prosperous, if what has taken place in the last twelve months is an average for the city, the time will be but short before we can claim the title of the metropolis of the interior. Railroads will reach us and make Revelstoke a great distributing centre and we shall be in close touch with the financial, commercial and touring world. Let us then this Christmas endeavor to pass the remaining days of the old year in active preparation for the opening of the new with fresh and resolute endeavors to uphold the name of our fair city and act as good citizens should, with reciprocity and content. Let us all pull together and act in harmony for the good of the community and for our own peace, always bearing in mind the ever true principle, that a "city divided against itself cannot stand."

Now is your opportunity! Subscribe for the MAIL-HERALD and the NEW IDEA $2.50, for a whole year for the same.

IT WAS the Tuesday before Thanksgiving Day.

"Tis goin' out ye are, Kitty!"

There was nothing in the weak old voice to make Kitty start as she did. She hesitated in her task of pinning her rusty shawl around her thin shoulders.

"I was that same," she admitted cheerfully. "Tis a beautifully day entirely. The walk 'ud do me good," she supplemented hastily.

"Faith, no doubt of that. Ye've been kep' in the house pretty close with that long pneumonia of mine. Will ye be gone long, alanna?"

There was apprehension in the look Mrs. Malone bent on the white head stooping toward the little sheet-iron stove. When she spoke it was in a manner at once airy and reassuring.

"Sure, 'tis quite a step to market. Dennis, I think I'll be goin' to the farthest wan. They do be havin' things there more reasonable-like. It's," she paused, the thought of a sin to be confessed at her Christmas "duty" flashing across her mind.

"It's our Thanksgiving dinner I'm goin' to—got!" she concluded.

"I wouldn't be ather buyin' extravagant, Kitty," counseled Dennis Malone. He sat huddled forward in the pitiful inertia of age and physical lassitude.

"The doctor an' medicines must have took a heap of our savin's. I wouldn't buy what might be called luxuriant, so to spake."

"I won't, Dennis!" promised Kitty. She was tying her plain little bonnet on her sleek old head. "You can trust me for that!" she added with what seemed unnecessary fervor.

"I won't!" she declared, speaking hurriedly, as though the possibility had just occurred to her.

"That I mayn't be back for a—for a rare good bit, Dennis. 'Tis thinkin' I am of goin' over to see Nora, if 'twould be safe to have you that long. Then, as she felt his eyes turn slowly in her direction with a sort of questioning surprise, "I'm ather hearin' Mary Ellen ain't as well as she might be, an'—"

"Eh—Mary Ellen!" His tone was vibrant with anxiety. "Is Mary Ellen sick?"

"Not to mention," Mrs. Malone hastened to assert. She was wishing she had not chosen his favorite grandchild to afflict. "Only a little—a weeny bit quare-like. She picked up a basket near, and edged toward the door. There she paused, gripping the basket until her knuckles showed white, a slow, distressed flush staining the pale saffron of her cheek.

"So—you won't mind if I don't get home for a couple of hours—eh, Dennis?" She broke off. She was swallowing hard. Dennis looked up—met full the eager, penetrating intensity of her gaze. He forced a valiant smile to his bloodless lips. His eyes narrowed into an expression of quizzical leniency. The unflinching courage of his race rang in the kind old voice.

"Tis fine I'll be goin' on, plaze God. Do be steupin' along now, Kitty woman! Don't be ather givin' me airy a thought. Sure, the strength's comin' back in me to bate anythin' ye ever dreamed of. An' what with this illigant lurch—the bit of bacon, an' the cheese, an' the crackers—no't to talk of the tay on the stove fermin' me—why, it's good enough for the President. Kitty, with the ould blanket on me shoulders, an' all an' all, it's live I'll throw asleep after I've said my decade. I won't be lookin' for ye till 'tis past noon. Now don't stand thrivin' woman, dear. Gwan! But," his pipping voice followed her out of the door. "I wouldn't be gettin' a—luxuriant dinner, so to spake, Kitty!"

Mrs. Malone, skurrying along one of the poor streets that lie south of Van Buren and east of Blue Island avenue, almost fell over the tattooed figure of a boy who seemed to have sprung from the ground at her very feet.

"Wisha, where are ye hurryin' to, Mrs. Malone? Is it worse himsel' is?"

"No—no, Patsy Heffernan. 'Tis 'tis goin' to my juty I am—"

"An' lavin' the church behind ye!" he cried incredulously. "Father Flynn ain't a-hearin' on the river. I'm thinkin'!" Patsy was a merciless inquisitor. Mrs. Malone withered under his frank doubt of her veracity.

"Patsy," she entreated, "you run to the house—do now! I wouldn't inconvenience ye, but it's ye's the most accommodatin' by in the parish. If ye'd but be waitin' around kind of distracted like to see if himsel' wants anythin' afore I get back—"

Patsy's freckled hatchet face looked out from its furze-bush of straight bleached hair with suddenly awakened interest. "Whos'll ye give me if I do?" he demanded.

"Glory be!" ejaculated Mrs. Malone. She stood staring helplessly at the snabby young Celtic Shylock, who with his overgrown frame bent forward, his feet in the broken boots turned toes inward, his hands thrust in his pockets, and his ragged arms akimbo, awaited her answer with ravenous expectancy. "Why—Patsy, ye—"

She was fumbling at the waist of her gown. Suddenly she desisted. If she had money at the bank—or anywhere else, for the matter of that—would she be tramping these many weary blocks? "Glory be!" she said again.

There really was nothing more to say. Patsy's rapacious expression became merged in a bored frown. "Mebbe it's goin' to the the-ayter ye are. Hope ye won't be late." He cast a sharp glance at the basket. Involuntarily Mrs. Malone jerked it behind her back, but it was too big to escape notice. "I won't kape ye any longer, ma'am!" With which Parthian shot young Mr. Heffernan took himself away.

Trembling, little Mrs. Malone looked after him. "Musha now, the gossoon hasn't got the heart of a heron!" And the way he looked at the basket. Whether now, I wonder did he suspicion anythin'?" She bent her spare little body against the ramorous east wind and hastened on.

"Sure, if I cud make up me mind to go to Thomas—but he hasn't only all his own to kape, but his wife's ould aunt as well. Then there's Nora. But she don't know the last cent of her to think of us nadin'—she's he'd be free with his money—if he cud hold in his pocket no matter how much he adn't. An' Day—"

She walked on the North Side Dennis, I think I'll be goin' to the farthest wan. They do be havin' things there more reasonable-like. It's," she paused, the thought of a sin to be confessed at her Christmas "duty" flashing across her mind.

There really was nothing more to say. Patsy's rapacious expression became merged in a bored frown. "Mebbe it's goin' to the the-ayter ye are. Hope ye won't be late." He cast a sharp glance at the basket. Involuntarily Mrs. Malone jerked it behind her back, but it was too big to escape notice. "I won't kape ye any longer, ma'am!" With to whom she had whispered her street and number, she crept to the foot of one of the waiting lines of applicants. There were three of these lines of depressed, patient people—men, women and children. Restricting and dividing each line into stalls of the universal dingy shade that emphasized the melancholy atmosphere of the place.

"Name?" asked the voice in a strong foreign accent.

She found herself looking up at a thin, middle-aged man with penetrating eyes, a brownish mustache, and an expression of keen intelligence. Her name! She cast a terrified look around. The applicants to the rear were paying no attention to her. The greater number carried yellow cards, more or less crumpled and dirty. The man behind the window spoke again.

"Catherine," she answered nuzzily. "Catherine Malone."

"Ever received aid from the County before?"

"No—oh, no, sir!"

"Go help from—" He rattled on the names of half a dozen philanthropic and benevolent societies.

"Never, sir."

"Married—widow—single—divorced?"

"Married this forty-nine year to Dennis Malone, sir."

She staggered—fell forward. He managed to crawl over to the bed. He was still sleeping when the man sent from the County Agent's made his appearance. He looked sharply around the bare, orderly room, opened drawers and bins, scrutinized the small blacks heap in the coal box, asked a lot more questions, all of which Kitty insisted on answering outside the little ramshackle house lest "himsel'" should hear, and finally gave Kitty a yellow ticket which she was to present for "single rations."

It is the first step that counts. Kitty found her second deception less difficult than her first. She had stayed with Nora the previous day. She had not gone to market. Yes, Mary Ellen was quite recovered. And now sure she must be off if they were to have a bite of Thanksgiving dinner at all, at all!

"Ye won't be extravagan, Kitty," he again implored. "We can't have over much left in the bank. A bit of bacon now—"

"Twas meself was thinkin' a bit of bacon 'ud be rare tasty!" she agreed eagerly. "Turkey's that ondiggible!"

"Tis now, an' it's never meself cud get to likin' them sour cranberries. A bil'd potaty an' a bit of cabbage—"

"Sure, what more cud the Prince of Wales ask?" demanded Kitty Malone.

That day she duly presented her yellow ticket at the window marked "Southwest." She, too, received her coal check, and the "single rations" which were her due. Could she carry them all home? The flour was unwieldy. She had made a public demand—she had asked for and received charity for the first time in all her cheerful, uncomplaining, hard-working, heroic old life. And the knowledge stung her. Her thin cheek was crimson. Her faded eyes had a strange glitter. She had begged—she!—And she knew if it were to save Dennis from suffering she would do it again. What would her children say if they knew? Thomas, who was mail carrier; Nora of the seat possessions and tender heart; Della, who was a credit to the family when she came to see them, wearing her best clothes; Malachi, who would give if he had it to any one, for the matter of that; and Rody—the baby of the family, "the best of the bunch!" as Dennis put it. She—their mother—had disgraced them all! A rush of tears blinded her.

"Look out!" "Get out of there!" "Hi!" "You'll be—" "There—she's down!"

She was crossing the street when the shrill Babel of cries assailed her. Startled, confused, the stool still. The delay was fatal. The next instant the speeding street car had caught the skirt of her gown. She fell—rolled over—over. A dense crowd gathered instantly. An angry shocked, quivering with nervous fright, was not so seriously hurt.

"Don't say anythin' to the man, gentlemen!" she pleaded. "Twas me own fault. I got romanic" when I'm alone. I plannin' how I'd stuff the turkey for Thanksgiving. I was when I got in the way. Sure—" as some one expressed regret for her loss, "what's the vally of a few trifles like that same!"

She would not give her name and address. She permitted herself, however, to be helped on the car she mentioned. She rode home in penniless, coffeeless, homeless state. And all the time, quite unconsciously, she gripped the bit of yellow pasteboard in her fingers.

The sight of a crowd gathered before her little shanty sent her reel' ing onward with a cry—faint, feeble, quavering.

Dennis! Something had happened to Dennis! Dennis had learned of the deception, and the truth had killed him!

It was Patsy Heffernan who reassured her—Patsy capping around and yelling like an Indian. "There's a sober—a sober—a rare sojer in there!" he screamed.

A path was made for the tottering old figure. She got to the door. It was opened. The lackness which had descended the day previous again came before her. This time it was lit by dancing decks of flame.

A MAN'S FACE BENT OVER HER—A BRAVE, GOOD FACE, BROWN AND RIGGED.

"How many children? Sex—married—employed—live at home?"

"Seven—live livin' here—two above, sir. Three married, that has all they can do to care for their own. Wan workin' to kape herself. Wan in the Philippines, sir."

Would the questions never cease? A queer blackness came in fragmentary clouds before her. She had eaten no breakfast. There had been a very enough to leave for Dennis, involuntarily she put out her hand—clutched at the ledge to steady herself. Suppose she were to be taken sick here, and it was put in the paper. It would kill Dennis. It would break Nora's heart. Della could never hold up her head again! She must keep her dreadful secret! Still questions—questions! She answered them as best she could. Her age, her husband's, their nationality, the cause of their distress.

"That's all. The man looked up from his writing. "A visitor will call to investigate. That's all now."

Then Kitty found herself outside the wooden paling. A stream of people were surging across the room to another window on the opposite side—a window behind which barrels and boxes, sacks and bundles, all containing necessities of life, rose in a mighty pile straight up to the ceiling. The portly policeman took pity on her bewilderment.

"You'll be around to-morrow," he assured her cheerfully. "A visitor will give to your place to-day. He'll give you a ticket. Come in to-morrow."

She did not know how she got out on Clinton street. She was buffeting her way back, her empty basket dangling on her arm, and in her heart deep disappointment—a bitter despair. She did not know that, had she stated how immediate was their necessity for relief, she need not have waited for help until after the formal investigation. Now her only wild desire was to get away before the visitor arrived—to make sure Dennis would not grasp the import of that humiliating visitation. Surely, surely folks were prosperous this year! Surely this was to be a grand Thanksgiving! She could not remember ever having dodged so many dangling turkeys before the doors of the butcher shops. She had walked the whole way back—she was near their poor dwelling before she remembered that tightly clenched in her hand she held the fifty cents Mrs. Comisky had given her for the black ken of elusive money.

"Glory be!" she cried, "an' me to be complain'! Me—that's got a han'ful of silver. But suddenly she knit her brows craftily—walked more slowly. It was with much deliberation that she made some purchases. Meat was one. She knew that except to the families of the old soldiers no meat was furnished to the poor by the County. She took with her only two ounces of tea and a loaf of bread. She would come for the fire out and Dennis asleep. He had managed to crawl over to the bed. He was still sleeping when the man sent from the County Agent's made his appearance. He looked sharply around the bare, orderly room, opened drawers and bins, scrutinized the small blacks heap in the coal box, asked a lot more questions, all of which Kitty insisted on answering outside the little ramshackle house lest "himsel'" should hear, and finally gave Kitty a yellow ticket which she was to present for "single rations."

A path was made for the tottering old figure. She got to the door. It was opened. The lackness which had descended the day previous again came before her. This time it was lit by dancing decks of flame.

When, after the carnage was over and the place had surrendered, the victorious troops of Massena, with colors flying and the bands playing, marched into the doomed town, Colonel Lagardere, of the Twelfth Infantry, the heroic regiment which took such a conspicuous part in the battle, lodged his fatigued soldiers in the half-demolished castle of Ferrara, the huge mediaeval dwelling of the noble family of the princes of Colliard.

Nothing so gratifying to the victors to plant his tent upon the spot which has cost him more blood to conquer.

This castle of Ferrara had been, during the whole day, the main objective point of attack of Lagardere's veterans, and its capture had been dearly bought.

The Austrians, with that undaunted courage and dogged determination characteristic of their race, had defended the ancient walls of the formidable palace-fortress for seven hours and had only been driven from their ramparts after the most desperate assaults.

At length the brave defenders had been forced to yield and now, toward sunset, the tricolor of France waved triumphantly over the parapets.

Colonel Lagardere, standing in the courtyard of the castle, was interrogating a few prisoners which his troops had made, when several of his men, who had been searching for refugees, emerged from the basement of the castle, bringing in their arms a child.

"Colonel," said an old sergeant, "here's a very interesting prisoner we have just captured."

"It is a girl," cried a soldier, "and a beautiful girl, too. Look at her, comrades, a typical little Piedmontess, with black coal hair and blue eyes."

The Colonel took the child in his arms. She threw her little arms around his neck, looked at him and smiled.

She was scarcely five years old, yet her plump little form shook with fear and her wild, frightened looks told eloquently of the terrors she had suffered during the long hours she had remained in that dark, cold basement, seated near the inanimate body of her nurse, who had been killed early in the morning by a stray bullet which pierced her heart.

When the victorious French soldiers plundered her she was not intimidated.

Strange as it may appear, the sight of all those men armed with swords and bayonets did not frighten her.

Victor Hugo has said that children feel joy and fear without knowing why. "They have a monitor within."

"What is your name, little girl?" asked Colonel Lagardere, with deep emotion.

"Rose," she answered, "and nurse's name is Nanette, but she's asleep now."

"Out. She went out with Papa and Joe."

Investigations were begun at once to find out who the child's parents were, but without result.

Night had fallen, and the village had been deserted by its frightened inhabitants.

Little Rose, no doubt, belonged there, but no one could be found that could identify her.

Search was postponed until the next day.

But something unexpected happened. At midnight the village was attacked by the Austrians. A frightful battle took place.

Lagardere's troops were dislodged from the castle, and on the morrow a retreat was ordered.

The Colonel took the child along with him.

Two years have passed. The Twelfth Infantry has continued its glorious career, greatly distinguishing itself at Lodi, Dego, Montebello and Arcob. Bonaparte has commended it on several occasions in his famous orders of the day of the Army of Italy.

The regiment has a flag of honor and a daughter.

Little Rose has been adopted and she marches, camps and lives among her soldier friends. She only leaves them on the days of battle, when Colonel Lagardere sends her with a scout to a place of safety far from the firing line.

She is the idol of these stern warriors, and all through the army of Italy she is known as the Daughter of the Twelfth.

THE PARTY.

Both and Molly were neighbors, and there was a high wall between their fathers' gardens. Molly had her play house on one side of the wall, and both had hers on the other side. Molly's house was full of pretty pink dishes, and both had a little stove, with kettles and saucepans.

"It'll be Bridget, and cook," said both, "and you be Mrs. Spradecagle, and give a party."

"And you must call through the dumb waiter," went on both, "and say Bridget, make some too-trooty cream and a charlotte russe immediately."

"It'll be the dumb waiter and pass over your things," said Jack, seating himself on the wall.

"All right," said Molly. "Oh, Bridget," she shouted, "make some two-footed cream."

"Yes, mum," answered Bridget, putting a cake in her little basket. She handed the basket to Jack, and Jack handed it to Molly.

"Little Rose," and she would not answer them if they called her by another name.

On several occasions Colonel Lagardere has thought of sending her to his home that she may stay with his own family, but she has always refused, and besides the soldiers have never consented to part from her.

She knows no other parents, no other brothers, no other friends than these stern warriors, she lives among them, and no family was ever more devoted, respectful and loving to a young girl than these soldiers are to their adopted daughter.

She is their pride and their glory, and thus love—they worship her.

Rose was fifteen years old when her regiment was ordered to cross the Alps and enter Italy.

She marched with it as vivandiere and shared with her beloved comrades dangers and joys.

One day, in the morning, Lagardere's soldiers occupied once more the village of Ferrara, and once more entered the ancient castle of the Molliards.

But it was different now. The town had opened its doors to the French without resistance; there had been no bloodshed.

The Mollard family now lived in their palace, and, anti-French as they were, they nevertheless offered their hospitality to Lagardere and his officers.

They took their lodgings in the palace, and, of course, brought Rose with them.

Mme. de Mollard, the proud chateleine, felt from the first moment the deepest interest for the young girl.

She questioned her about her life, about her parents, her ambitions and hopes.

Suddenly she uttered a cry. Rose had spoken about her childhood. She told Mme. de Mollard the history, so often repeated to her by the soldiers of the Twelfth, of the assault of Castle Ferrara, and how she had been discovered in the cellar, taken out in the arms of the soldiers and afterward adopted daughter of the regiment.

"You are my long-lost daughter," cried Mme. de Mollard.

What took place then needs no description. The tears of mother and daughter mingled and their hearts melted with joy.

Next morning Mme. Mollard summoned Colonel Lagardere, explained to him the situation, and asked him to leave Rose with her.

"Madame," replied the veteran, "God forgive that I should deprive you of the love of your daughter. But remember that we, too, love her. To lose her would be very hard for us. Nevertheless, your request, being a just one, I would suggest that we abide by Rose's own decision. Let us consult her and I promise that if she chooses to remain with you she will remain, but, at the same time, if she prefers to come with us—"

"Oh!" cried the mother, "she will remain with me. I know she will."

The Duchess and the Colonel both spoke to her, and let it be said in honor of the latter, although he loved the girl with all the affection of a father, he did not hesitate to point out to her the advantages of remaining at home.

"What can your future be if you follow us?" he said. "On the other hand, by staying with your mother you will find love (the only thing we can give you) and fortune, which we cannot offer you."

Rose threw herself into the arms of the noble soldier and wept.

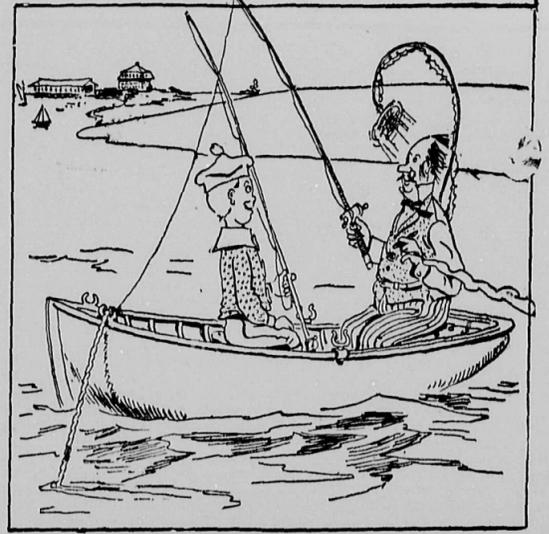

"This is a very serious matter," she said at length. "Give me twenty-four hours to decide."

Dear Tommy—The bass fishing is very good now, but the September sun and the gnats make it very disagreeable.

So I made a portable fan for Papa like this diagram.

The next time we went out was on a hot, sultry day, but the fan made it all right.

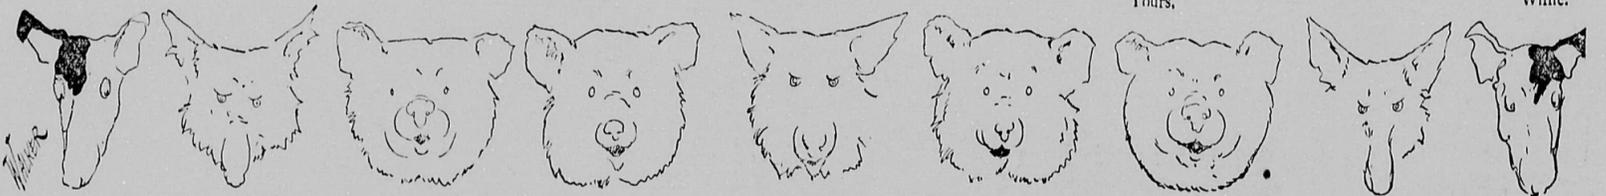

Papa enjoyed it so much that he arranged the cushions for a nap.

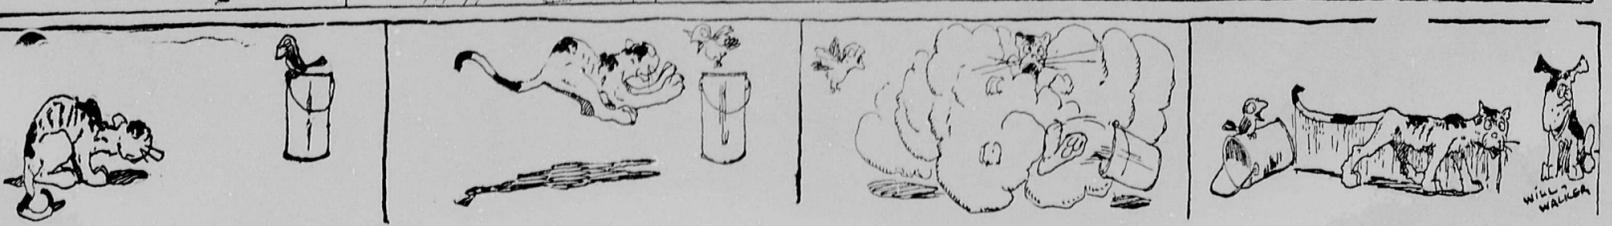

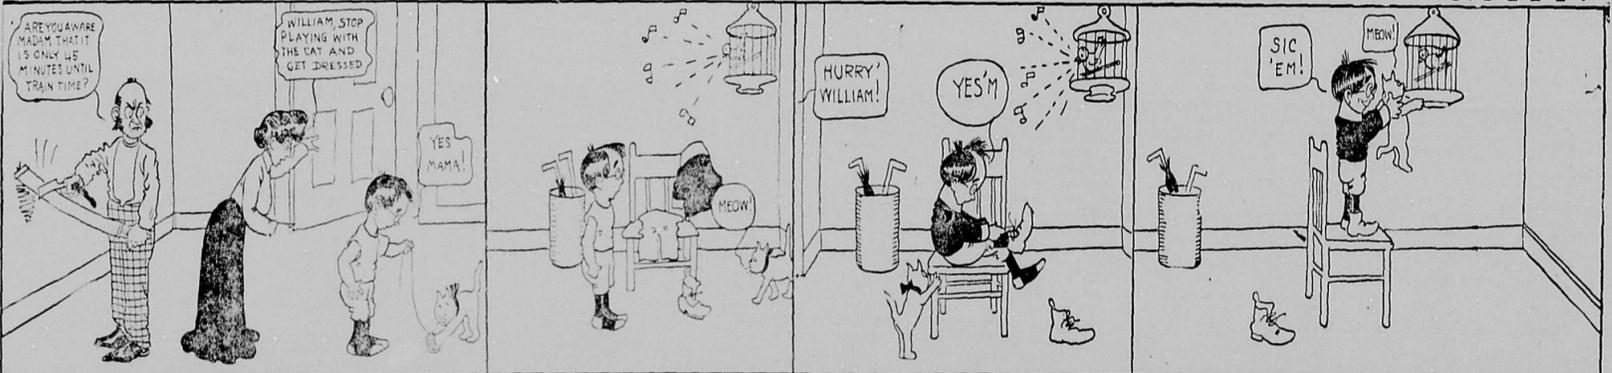

He moved in his nap and the blades of the fan got caught in his hair.

Then he rolled overboard, and, gracious! but didn't I catch it!
Yours, Willie.
