They have been considering the matter, and asking that the taxes be now accepted at the reduced scale. Referred to the finance committee to act.

(2) That a 4 foot sidewalk be laid on the south side of St. George street from Fourth to Sixth street out of the 1889 appropriation.

(3) That the report of the city engineer re tramway company be adopted, and that the council pass a formal resolution giving the tramway company the necessary permission to operate their line along the streets of the city as required by sec. 9, of the agreement between the city and the New Westminster & Vancouver Tramway Company. The first and second sections were adopted and the third ruled out of order.

A discussion about two hours in length took place on the tramway matter, Ald. Scoullar championing the company and Ald. Walker the council. The debate was quite personal at times and some amusing references were made.

The water and sewerage committee reported recommending payment of the following accounts: D. Anderson, $103.97; Gilley Bros., $13.50; C. P. R. Telegraph Company, $2.85; Campbell & Anderson, $132.05; Brunnette Sawmill Company, $32.28; R. Marshall, $81.35, Cunningham Bros., $2; The Glenfield Company, $213.27; R. R. Kelly, $30.50; Reid & Currie, $21.79. Report adopted.

BYLAWS.

The district telegraph bylaws were read a first time.

The electric light loan bylaw was read a first time and Ald. Curtis contended for a second reading, the rest of the council opposing. He said it was important to pass the bylaw if the plant was to be used this winter. The motion to read the bylaw a second time was lost.

RESOLUTIONS.

Moved by Ald. Scoullar, seconded by Ald. Gifford, That the New Westminster & Vancouver Tramway Company be granted temporary permission, for the space of 90 days, to operate their line of railway through and upon the streets of the city, to be then finished to the satisfaction of the city engineer and approved by this council. Ald. Walker moved, seconded by Ald. Kennedy, that the following words be added: "Provided that the company sign the agreement for temporary permission as read to the council." The amendment was lost, and the original motion carried on the following division: For the motion, Ald. Scoullar, Keary, Gifford, Smither, Ovens; against, Ald. Curtis, Walker, Kennedy, Sinclair.

Ald. Scoullar said he had moved the resolution in order to get the tramway started. A large amount of capital was lying idle and it was in the best interest of the city and in justice to the company that he had brought up the matter.

The mayor could not see how a resolution like this could be passed. There was no time limit, and it gave the company unlimited license to put the road in proper condition at any time they choose. Only one person of the tramway company had objected to sign the agreement and he did not state his reasons.

Ald. Scoullar was willing to put in a time limit, 90 days, and the mayor could nickel plate the road if he wanted to.

Ald. Kennedy asked that the temporary agreement be read, which was done.

Ald. Smither said it was evident the line was not constructed according to the provisions of the agreement.

Ald. Kennedy could not understand why the company should not sign the agreement.

Ald. Scoullar said it looked as if there was an attempt to burst up the whole affair.

The mayor said the city's interests would have to be protected.

Ald. Scoullar said he himself had never cost the city a dollar; the mayor had cost it a good many. [Laughter.]

Ald. Curtis said the tramway company knew he was not prejudiced, but he saw great danger in a loose resolution like this. The president and vice-president of the company had signed the engineer's report, but he had been informed by the vice-president that the company did not intend to carry out the suggestions of the engineer. The only proper course for the city to pursue was to get the company to sign the agreement drawn up by the city solicitor. He did not want to hamper the company; everyone wanted to see the tramway running.

Ald. Scoullar said the agreement did not say what kind of material the track was to be ballasted with, and it would be unreasonable to expect the company to macadamize ten feet of the streets where there was no macadam. This was not like a horse car line; the only part used was the two rails. The company could force the council to carry out the agreement.

Ald. Curtis said the company only said there were some things not done. His reason for not supporting the resolution was the danger of it, as resolutions generally have several different interpretations.

Ald. Kennedy again said he could not see why the tramway company refused to sign the agreement.

Ald. Walker moved in amendment that the words "providing the company sign the agreement" be added to the resolution. He had no other motive in this matter than a desire to do his duty to the taxpayers whom he represented. By passing the resolution without the amendment it deprived the council of the advice of the city solicitor. He did not think that the company would wish the council to do an unbusiness-like action; the matter should be thoroughly debated in committee before it came to the council.

Ald. Scoullar asked the city engineer if there was anything in the agreement that called for macadamizing the road.

Mr. Noot said that the suggestions he had made respecting the ballasting of the track were necessary to properly complete the track.

Amendment lost, resolution carried.

The following is a synopsis of the city engineer's report on the street railway: He went over the road on August 22nd with the railway engineer and pointed out certain changes and additions required, such as changes in curves, crossings, culverts and ballasting road up to street grade. On September 10th he again inspected the road and found that these things had been done, the ballasting having been done with local material. With respect to the line generally the engineer reports that he has no objection to the pattern of the rails, provided the road material is kept up to them, so as not to interfere with vehicle traffic. During the recent rains there had been considerable wash on each side of the rails. This, he thought, should be provided against, and he suggested that macadam or other good road material be well tamped in between the rails and eighteen inches outside, and that the space inside rails be planked in the meantime at the intersection of streets, so as to allow vehicles to cross with ease. Appended to this report were the following words: "We agree with the above," signed by the vice-president and secretary of the tramway company.

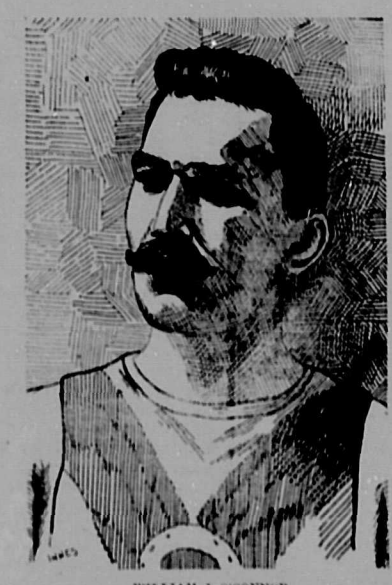
Moved by Ald. Smither and Ovens: That Mr. D. McGillivray, having completed the works on Lulu Island and the bridge connecting Lulu Island with this city, as required by the provincial government, that a conveyance of the parcel of land as mentioned in the agreement between this city corporation and D. McGillivray be executed by this corporation upon D. McGillivray furnishing good and sufficient security for maintaining the works according to the agreement under which the work was done.

Ald. Curtis made a long speech condemning Ald. Ovens and Smither for bringing forward the resolution they had. They absolutely knew nothing about the matter and it was too bad to see two men who called themselves aldermen attempting to cram reports of this kind through the council.

Ald. Smither indignantly repudiated the assertions of Ald. Curtis.

Ald. Ovens said he had forgotten more

CONCLUDED ON FOURTH PAGE



WILLIAM J. O'CONNOR.

William J. O'Connor, the champion sculler of America, was just beginning to show his form in boating circles at the time Ned Hanlan relinquished the world's championship, after having held it for eight years, from 1876 to 1884, the longest period of championship honors in the aquatic annals. O'Connor is 27 years of age, having first seen the light of day at Toronto in 1864. For two or three years to 1885 he was looked upon in Toronto as a most promising amateur, having won several notable local events. His professional career began in 1885, and for two years he competed in many of the great regattas in Canada and the United States, usually winning his share of the prizes. In 1887 he was matched against Peterson of San Francisco (who recently defeated McLean on the Fraser at this city). He defeated Peterson with apparent ease. His next race was with the veteran George W. Lee, on Toronto Bay, three miles with a turn. The Canadian was again successful and the race was rowed in such fine style that O'Connor was looked upon by Torontonians as the man who was to restore to Canada the honor of the world's championship. A week after the race with Lee, he won first money at the famous Sturgeon Point regatta, defeating Gaudaur, Lee and Wise, the distance, three miles, being covered by O'Connor in the marvellously fast time of 19 minutes 43 seconds, a record which so far has never been excelled, if even equalled. O'Connor determined at once to enter the lists for the very highest sculling honors. He challenged John Teemer, who at that time held the championship of America, having wrested it from Jake Gaudaur on May 30th of the same year. The race was arranged to take place on the Potomac river, on November 30th, the distance was three miles, and the stake $2,000 a side. O'Connor won handsomely, his time being 20 minutes 33 seconds. He was then the undisputed champion of American oarsmen, and he has maintained that distinction ever since. In March, 1889, Gaudaur started in a race with O'Connor for the championship, but stopped rowing before he had gone half a mile, leaving a "walk-over" for O'Connor. At an aquatic council held at Toronto in May, 1889, he won the all-comers sculling race, over a two miles course, defeating Teemer, Hamm and Lee.

O'Connor's next move was a challenge to the late Henry Searle, the Australian world's champion. The race was arranged to take place on the Thames course from Putney to Mortlake, the antipodean journeying there to meet his Canadian opponent. The event took place on September 9, 1889, the stakes being £1,000 a side. O'Connor was the favorite in the betting before the race, five to four being laid against Searle. The latter, however, won by about three boatlengths.

O'Connor was not satisfied, and in the early part of the following year he took passage for Australia in expectation of another race with Searle, but death in the meantime had ended the career of the great Australian oarsman, and it was decided that O'Connor and Stansbury should be pitted against one another for the world's championship, Stansbury being considered the fittest among the Australians to defend the honors won by the late Henry Searle. The race took place on the Parramatta championship course, at Sydney, on June 23. Stansbury finished first, but O'Connor claimed the race on a foul. After much wordy contention it was decided to row the race over again. This time Stansbury won on his merits. O'Connor, like Hanlan, believes that a Canadian is badly handicapped by the Australian climate, and he thinks that honors would be easy between the representative oarsmen of the two colonies if the Antipodeans would consent to come to Canada to row.

MENACE TO MITYLENE

REPORTED SEIZURE OF PORT SIGRI BY BRITISH SAILORS.

No Official Information Yet Received—Immense Strategic Importance of the Place—Great Political Significance of the Act—Britain's Navy Could Quickly Clear the Dardanelles.

LONDON, September 14.—A warlike report came today to disturb the equanimity of the public. It was that an armed force from a British ironclad had seized in the Queen's name the port of Sigri, on the Island of Mitylene, a very convenient place for England to have a coaling station and naval rendezvous in case of hostilities with Turkey or Russia. The report had a depressing effect upon financial dealings until it was learned that the officials of the foreign office were ignorant of any such momentous transaction as described in the rumor. The prevailing dulness in the newspaper word made the story a boon to the journals, and it was worked up in every form and with every inflection of dire significance. At the Government offices everything was found in a somolent condition, and when the officials were roused by inquiries as to the truth of the reported seizure they expressed utter ignorance of any such move, and seemed amused at the importance placed upon such a wild canard, for that it was a bourse canard there is no longer any doubt. Lord Salisbury would hardly choose a time when he is sojourning abroad for such an important act as a practical challenge of war to Turkey. The under foreign secretary, Sir J. Ferguson, is also absent from England, as are most of the chiefs of departments. Everything that might be reasonably looked to for indications of the condition of England's foreign relations point to peacefulness.

OFFICIAL STATEMENTS.

A dispatch from Portsmouth said that the naval authorities there had not heard officially of any seizure of a Turkish port or island, but one official who was interviewed said he would not be surprised at any time to hear of some critical action. Not that he had heard from his superiors on the subject, but the whole situation as publicly known was highly threatening. The recent visit of the French fleet to Portsmouth, and the fraternal greetings and enthusiasm add great interest to the subject of a possible war.

A Popular Concert.

Tomorrow evening a real treat in the form of a high class miscellaneous concert will be presented to the public at the Y. M. C. A. concert hall. THE LEDGER is pleased to state that the splendid programme published some days ago in these columns will be carried through without change. On the list is a pleasing intermixture of classical and popular musical selections. And it is a fact that classical music when well played is always popular. In the hands of the musicians who will give the selections mentioned no fears need be entertained that they will not render them in a manner to please everyone present and win applause. In particular may be mentioned the beautiful Pathetic Sonata, by Beethoven. Mr. Burnett was very dubious at first about giving music of such a caste to a Westminster audience, from prudential motives. The piece is inexpressibly beautiful, and deep beyond the common understanding. It is one of Beethoven's greatest pieces, and in its way is matchless. Mr. Burnette, however, with some persuasion has consented to try the experiment on Wednesday evening, and no doubt the audience will appreciate fully the intricacies and difficulties of interpretation with which this highly artistic composition abounds. The number by Mrs. Cunningham and Miss Rand, a selection from Meyerbeer, is a piece that gives great scope for the exhibition of expression and technique. These ladies will charm their audience tomorrow evening as they always have done before. Westminster's own soprano, Mrs. C. H. Watson will touch every heart in the glorious old Scotch song, "The Land o' the Leal." It is in such gems of vocal music that Mrs. Watson's rich, sympathetic voice is heard at its best. It has a thrilling quality that throws a deep hush over the audience and holds them spellbound until the last echo of the melody dies away. The sweet old song that tells of Scottish love and affection and faithfulness is sure to strongly appeal to the audience in Mrs. Watson's singing of it. No one who enjoys the sweet things of music should miss hearing this gem among them. Mrs. Watson's other song will be Pinsuti's "Three Wishes." Mr. and Miss Lennie will call up memories of the sunny south on the banjo, on which instrument they are accomplished performers. Messrs. Henderson and Graham will contribute carefully chosen recitations from standard authors. Messrs. Crichton Smith, Gibson, Patterson and White are down for their favorite songs, and they will undoubtedly make them favorites with the audience.

Great praise is due Mr. Crichton Smith, the energetic and enterprising manager of these delightful concerts. Their sterling success is mainly due to his untiring and devoted work, and Westminster and the Y. M. C. A. are fortunate in possessing in Mr. Smith a gentleman whose wide experience and fertile mind are of such invaluable service in getting up that somewhat difficult thing, an enjoyable and successful amateur concert. A crowded house is looked for tomorrow evening.

County Court.

There was a special sitting of the County Court yesterday, his honor Judge Bole presiding. A number of chamber applications were heard and one suit, which stood over from the regular sitting on the 7th ult., viz., McLennon vs. Terhune, in which a jury had been summoned, but were discharged by consent, the amount involved being only $25. The next sitting of the court will be held on October 5th. The long vacation is now on, of which the bench and bar will likely take advantage.

Wrongly Located.

A few days ago THE LEDGER reported that a serious fight had taken place between two men in the Glasgow House, Vancouver. Our attention has since been drawn to the fact that the fight did not take place at the Glasgow House, but at the Pacific Hotel, the participants in the fight having gone thither from the Glasgow House. THE LEDGER had been threatened with a libel suit in this matter. We have no feelings of malice against the Glasgow House people and the error that has been made in ascribing the scene of the fight to one public place when it really took place in another, is such as newspapers do not always succeed in avoiding.

MORE SETTLERS FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Our prospect of receiving a large early influx of new settlers who will nowise interfere with the present workers of this Province, but on the contrary aid in developing industries as yet little advanced among us, seems to be decidedly improving. We heard some time since of the scheme, now being matured, for settling a large community of Scots crofters or fisher-farmers on the coast of Vancouver Island, and now it seems that our Province is likely to receive an accession of Irish immigrants, some of them small farmers, and others of a similar dual occupation to that of the expected Scots fisher-farmer settlers. The Irish Land Purchase Act recently passed contained, amongst other provisions, clauses enabling the British Government to make money advances in aid of emigration from congested districts of Ireland. There is no doubt that under the changed condition of affairs resulting from land law and other social reforms, Ireland is likely ere long to attain to much greater prosperity than heretofore; and of this indeed signs are already multiplying, if one may judge by recent Irish social statistics. It is, however, equally certain that there districts, chiefly on the isles and off the coast of the south and west of Ireland, where the population is unduly congested, and life ever resolves itself into a hard and even desperate struggle. Large families there attempt the almost impossible task of earning a tolerable livelihood off two or three acres of land, held practically in common by a father, a mother and several children. These people are it is true in some cases aided by the results of fishing; but good markets are distant, and catches often uncertain, so that thousands of members of Irish farmers' and fisher-farmers' families of the south and west of Ireland live "year in year out," on poor and meagre fare. The only chance for many of them is emigration to more fertile lands and seaboards. Their case is no matter of rent, for their yearly rents as statutorily reduced by court decisions, amount at most to a few shillings per acre. Indeed if they paid no rents at all, they would still be practically as poor as ever. Many of these poor folk have in years past been helped to emigrate and settle elsewhere, chiefly in the United States, and very generally inland, by the aid of private benevolence. The time has however come, for a more organized effort, and this the British Government is about to make. British Columbia has naturally been selected as a likely future home for these Irish state-aided emigrants, our coasts affording as we have already remarked in the case of the Scots crofters, splendid opportunities for men like many of these intended settlers, half fishers, half farmers. The Hon. JOHN W. PLUNKETT, M. P. for the Thornbury division of Gloucestershire is accordingly now on his way to this Province, as a representative of the Irish department of Her Majesty's Government, for the purpose of making all necessary enquiries and prospective arrangements in the case of these expected Irish immigrants. He will at the same time confer with our Premier, as to the fitting location of the Scots crofters, who are shortly coming hither. We may therefore expect at an early date next year, the arrival of a considerable number of Irish as well as Scots settlers of a sturdy type, ready to take to fishing and farming, and thus add their quota to the industrial production of British Columbia. This immigration should be an unmixed gain if carefully selected and properly placed, as it will be at once attracted to and absorbed in occupations at present very imperfectly developed. None need therefore cavil at such state-aided immigration, resulting, as it certainly should do, in general benefit to our Province.

Careful investigation recently made by the New York Associated Press reveals the fact that the operation of the McKINLEY tariff has injured German more than British industry. The Germans produce very cheap goods but the quality is as a rule unequal to that of British manufacturers. The St. James' Gazette a leading English paper, commenting on the results of the enquiry says: "There is some satisfaction to "learn that German industries are "more injured than English. Even "under a vigorous protection tariff, "workmanship and quality will tell at "times."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Colonist, indignant at the local results of the census, has opened its columns to the names and addresses of Victorian citizens unenumerated. Thirteen persons have already responded, claiming that in their houses no less than 67 persons have in all been missed by the census officers. The local census commissioner has, however, yet to reply in explanation, and may be able to explain the large apparent default.

A long prominent need of this port of ours has been a Fraser river chart, revised to date. This is at last to hand. It should suffice to assure navigators, wishful to make for these waters, that we have here in New Westminster a river port, quite as easy and safe of access as some of the greatest in "the old country." Our river waters are deep enough for very large vessels, and these a competent pilot can easily steer right up to and beyond our city.

On the whole the chances of war seem favorable to the party of the "Grand Old Man," in expressing which view, by the bye, Lord RANDOLPH CHURCHILL has lately reappeared in the part of "the candid friend" of his former colleagues. Recently interviewed at Johannesburg, he declared his opinion on the British political situation as follows:

"Mr. GLADSTONE will come in, of "course." Of Lord SALISBURY and his understanding of elections, the ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer seems to entertain a poor opinion: "Lord SALIS-"BURY is a recluse and his knowledge of "the British elector is about on a par "with mine of the electors in the planet "Saturn." Concerning Mr. GLADSTONE he said: "Sir Andrew Clarke lately gave "some friends of mine a cold shudder "when he assured them that their arch "enemy was physically as sound as a "bell, and that there was no organic "reason, so far as he could discover, "why the venerable statesman should "not be taking an active part in politics "—yes, in this sublunary sphere!—at "the middle of the next century." Lord RANDOLPH thinks Mr. CHAMBERLAIN made the huge mistake of leaving his party. He himself had been implored to leave the Conservative party, but he had always replied, Oh, dear no! You "are my party, and it is my duty to "remain with you and see if I cannot "make you perceive the error of your "ways. I have not the slightest intention of allowing you, the misguided "leaders of my party, to shake me off."

Lord RANDOLPH's former colleagues, reading this, have no doubt wished him at Jericho" or rather some other place nowadays more inaccessible than either it or far away Johannesburg.

The recent census taking will probably result in the early annexation to Montreal of a number of populous adjoining suburbs, which should, as the citizens claim, rightly belong to the town. These counted in would increase Montreal's record of 216,000 people to one of 250,000. The Montrealers, pleading for this suburban annexation, remind Canadians generally that the present city limits are far too narrow, being less than half those of Toronto, and by no means including every real district of the town. Some of the townships in question are now ready and willing to join Montreal on terms; and it is thought that the others will, ere long, likewise favor the movement.

Our own city limits, which are on the north very narrow, do not now include a considerable and rapidly growing urban population. Our city boundaries should, therefore, ere long be extended to a distance at least a mile beyond the Chinese cemetery. This district will soon be connected with the city at every point by occupied houses, and become altogether indistinguishable from the municipality, excepting only as regards absence of sidewalk, electric lighting and town's water supply. It is likely that the suburban area in question will within a twelvemonth include a population of at least a thousand, there being already some fifty houses in the district all occupied.

The British Liberal Unionists and Conservatives are already forming in line with a view to the coming battle, as a general election is certain to ensue in the United Kingdom, either before or at the latest during next autumn, and there is much preliminary skirmishing to be done. The Chief Secretary for Ireland recently significantly stated, though as to this he only asserted what has long been matter of general opinion, that the Liberal Unionists and Conservatives of the United Kingdom are really no longer two parties, but one. As Mr. BALFOUR puts it:

"The Liberal Unionists act together because they think together on all vital things. They find no difficulty in shaping a common policy because that policy is the natural outcome of their common principles."

The Liberal party, under Mr. GLADSTONE's capable lead, is on the other hand full of sanguine hope as to the result of the coming fray, recent bye elections having resulted so favorably. The only obstacles seeming to them likely to impede in anywise their victorious onrush are to be looked for in Mr. PARNELL's defection from his Home Rule comrades, and in possible undue demands of certain extremists of the Labor party. Mr. PARNELL's power is, however, rapidly declining, and Mr. GLADSTONE and his colleagues have hitherto succeeded in working in union with the majority of the Labor party. The old designations now no longer accurately denote the English political parties, both being now "in combination." The one represents what may, for want of a better name, by styled Liberal Conservatism, the other now stands for what may be termed Radical Liberalism. Whig-Liberal influences have on the one hand laid effective hold on modern Conservatism, whilst sturdy Radicalism has gained an equal influence over modern Liberalism.

The Pug Nose.

I sing the nose that seeks the skies,
In wild and mad endeavor,
To leave its place between the eyes
And mount above the earth forever,
As if it had quarreled with the chin,
And up the face had lifted,
To where the bridge had caved in,
To sit and look tip-tilted.

Let other poets rave about
The red or Roman-nosed ones,
I maintain there's no'er a doubt
Their virtues are supposed ones,
And that the turned-up nose has cause
For all its seeming scorning
Of any nose that takes the laws
Of simple face-adorning.

I celebrate the piquant nose,
That ever is aspiring,
Yet neighbors with a mouth that shows
A tongue can be untiring.
The flirting nose so debonair,
All grave affairs a spurning;
Long may it seek the upper air,
And persevere upturning.

THE REPRIEVE.

For 20 years Hamilton Duke was my client. In fact, it was to him that I owed not only a competent fortune but my position in society.

But for this I should never have undertaken his defence in this last case, my best feelings were so against him—not that I was an ingrate, but because I believed that he had murdered his wife.

Many things compelled my drawing such a conclusion.

He was well-bred, refined and cultured, while she was of common stock, the personification of ignorance and low breeding. For ten years he was all of chivalry and tenderness to her that a lofty nature could be, while she was always sullen, morose, dissatisfied.

It was claimed by their closest friends that he loved her the first few years of their united life, though I never believed this—it was such a manifest impossibility.

Anyway, he hated her cordially when her life came to its tragic close, and so he had for a considerable period prior to that event.

Being entirely in his confidence, he often came to my office, pallid and trembling, to tell me of some new vulgar violence of hers which had driven him nearly to the last extremity of desperation.

And so, one morning, when Mrs. Duke was found dead with an ugly stab through her heart, her husband standing over her with a reeking knife in hand, I naturally believed that he had killed her.

Later on, when I saw him, my suspicions seemed confirmed.

He was in a state of wild excitement when I entered the sheriff's office, in answer to his summons.

Until that moment, no one had succeeded in getting a word out of him about the murder.

"What does it all mean?" I asked, when we were alone.

"I don't know," he gasped. "I don't know whether it was I who killed her or not. But I don't want to die. I mustn't be allowed to die. You must defend me—you must save me."

Though I pitied him, I believed him guilty deserved death.

But my efforts were vain ones. The evidence against him was too conclusive.

An unusual noise in Mrs. Duke's room had attracted the butler's attention, the morning of the murder. On entering, he saw Mr. Duke rising up, knife in hand, from the prostrate body of his wife, as if he had just stabbed her.

That, and the fact that the Dukes had indulged in many bitter quarrels of late, was enough to win a disastrous verdict from any jury.

Mr. Duke was found guilty and sentenced to death. He was to be hanged in 45 days.

Re-opening a case at that time was not the easy thing it is now, and I found it impossible to get him a new trial.

On and on those grace days swept, seemingly with lightning swiftness, until the time set for the execution was but 50 hours off.

I was desperate, Duke was frantic.

"You must go to the Governor," he cried at length. "You must get a pardon for me."

"Impossible," I answered. "There isn't enough time."

"Yes, there is. This is Wednesday morning, and I'm not to hang until Friday noon. The train goes in an hour. If you leave here at once you can make the trip and get back here in time."

"But on what pretext? Simply seeing the Governor will do no good. I——"

"You must think of a pretext on the way. Don't stay here and talk. You are wasting time and my life must be saved. Do go at once."

He was in such a wrought-up state that there was no use arguing with him, and so I went away, walking about the streets in sheer bewilderment.

By blind chance I went to the railway station, arriving just as the train rolled in. Dejected and reckless, scarcely knowing what I was about, I clambered on board at the last moment, and went whirling away toward the Governor's, bent on a wild, mad purpose, which I well knew could only prove entirely fruitless.

When the station next to my destination was reached, a woman came on board who instantly pounced on me and kissed me.

It was my niece.

"What under the sun is the matter with you?" she demanded.

When I told her of poor Duke's predicament, her face became very grave, but the moment she discovered my business with the Governor, it brightened.

"How very fortunate!" she exclaimed, clapping her hands gleefully.

"What!" I demanded, nearly stupified with amazement.

"Leave it all to me," she said, "and I will save your friend. No—I'm not crazy. Listen: Last night the governor proposed to me. Of course I love him dearly, but I didn't want to be too cheaply won, and so I refused to give him an answer. He dines with us to-night. After dinner, when his stomach is full and his heart easy to get at, I'll promise to marry him on the condition that he pardons poor old Duke."

Then and there, on a public train though we were, I both hugged and kissed her.

She was as good as her word, and six hours later I was on board another train, homeward bound, and in my pocket was a reprieve for Duke—the case against him being so strong that the governor deemed a full pardon impolitic then.

The reprieve granted him another three months, though, and by that time popular sentiment was likely to cool down sufficiently to make a pardon feasible.

On the way home, I was fairly happy, and tried to picture to myself Duke's face when [illegible] me so comfortable that I fell asleep.

Nothing disturbed my slumbers until the trainman called out the name of the junction where I had to change cars for the branch road which ran through my town.

And there, to my consternation, I found myself unable to move. Mentally I was awake. Physically I was a sleep. I was fully conscious of the stir and bustle made by those who were getting on and off the train; but I could not move a muscle.

With all my might I endeavored to throw off the trance-like spell which held me, but all to no purpose. The train moved on and took me with it.

Cold perspiration oozed out through every pore, and I think I would have gone mad, then and there, had not utter unconsciousness mercifully come to my rescue.

It was more than an hour before I regained possession of my senses.

By that time it was impossible to get back to the junction in time to catch the home-bound train on the branch line.

Springing up, the moment I was conscious, I explained things to the conductor, offering him any price he chose to demand if he would run his train back to the junction and take me home.

That was out of the question. He could only do such a thing on the order of the general superintendent, and that personage could not be reached, because a storm, the day before, had blown so many wires down that all telegraphic communication was cut off.

All I could do, then, was to remain on board the train seven hours more, when by tramping 12 or 15 miles over a craggy, roadless mountain, I could probably get home by noon.

Though the "probably" discouraged me, I thanked the conductor for his advice, shut my teeth on my misery and tried to make the best of it.

That was the longest night of my life. It seemed to me that it would never end.

Day was just breaking when we reached the station where I was to leave the train and begin my foot journey over the mountain.

Hard as was the ascent of that trackless, precipitous mountain-side, it was a vast improvement on the train. I was in motion, myself, now—doing something, whether it would avail me anything or not.

Soon the sun was up. Altogether too soon it had accomplished half its journey from horizon to zenith.

It was then that I reached the mountain-top with a good seven miles of rough walking still before me.

Duke was to be hanged at noon, unless I was on time.

At ten o'clock I was but two miles away from him; and with all of the horrors of my journey presumably behind me, I smiled self-gratulatively at the thought of how easy the rest would be, and of how I would disappoint those who were even then gathering to see my client hanged.

A vine caught my foot, and threw me. Falling, I sprained my ankle, and the pain was so intense that I had to exert every atom of my will to keep me from going into a dead faint.

Breaking a forked stick from a sapling, presently, I extemporized it into a crutch, and hobbled on, as best I could.

At the end of an hour I had made but half a mile, and was so exhausted that I knew another fifteen minutes would bring my locomotive powers to a full stop.

Poor old Duke must die, after all. There was no help for it, and with an outcry of utter despair, I settled on the ground in a heap.

The mental anguish I suffered in the half hour which followed was enough to unseat a man's reason.

Watch in hand, I counted the fleeting seconds.

In 25 minutes more, my client would hang, for want of the reprieve in my pocket.

And then, joyful sound, I heard approaching feet!

A moment later, a negro appeared. He was old, dirty and stupid—entirely unable to understand me until I mentioned money. When I said: "I will give you $100 if you get this paper in the hands of the sheriff before twelve o'clock," with a yell like a fiend he snatched the reprieve out of my hand and darted away.

Again I sought my watch.

My messenger had 22 minutes in which to cover a mile and a half, a portion of his route being through thick underbrush. It was doubtful if he would make it.

The hour which passed before he returned, with help, seemed a hundred years to me.

"I done got dar," he gasped, nearly out of breath, "an' de gemman am all safe."

Probably it was unmanly, but I wept for joy.

They tried to make a hero of me for that exploit, but I am too commonplace and stolid for that. I had simply done my duty. I had saved my client. That was all.

However, I was rewarded more gloriously yet.

TIPPO TIB'S ROMANCE.

TIPPO TIB.

About sixty years ago, Tippo Tib, who has been brought into prominence in English-speaking countries through Gordon and Stanley, fell in love with a young girl who had been refused to him by the father on account of his poverty. The young people, however, were much attached to each other, and one fine evening the girl ran away with her lover.

The distance being considerable between the two douars, (villages), and the road extremely perilous, Tippo had armed himself from head to foot. Already the most dangerous part of the road had been cleared, and they were beginning to hear the dogs of the douar towards which they were rapidly advancing, when all at once a young lion, who till that moment had lain concealed behind the bushes, rose and walked straight towards them.

The young girl shrieked so fearfully that her cries were heard by the people in the tents, and several of the men immediately seized their arms and rushed out to the rescue. When they reached the spot to which they were directed by the screams of the young maiden, they saw the lion walking slowly a few paces in front of Tippo, with his eyes steadfastly fixed upon him, and leading him thus towards the forest. The young girl did all she could to prevent her lover following the lion, or induce him to let go herself, but in vain; he kept dragging her on in spite of all her efforts, saying:

"Come, my beloved, come; our master will have it so; we must go!"

"But your weapons," she cried; "what are they good for if not to save me?"

"Weapons? I have none!" answered the fascinated wretch. Then addressing the lion, he said: "Great lord, believe her not; I am perfectly unarmed, and will follow you wherever you will."

At this moment the Arabs, eight or ten in number, who had come to the rescue of the unfortunate couple, perceiving that the lion would very soon have them in the forest, fired, every one of them, upon him; but on finding that he did not fall, they took to their heels. The lion sprang upon Tippo's love, and with one bound crushed her to the earth, smashing her head at a bite; after which he lay down by the side of the young man, placing his huge paws upon his knees.

The Arabs now finding that the lion did not condescend to pursue them, took courage and returned, and having reloaded their guns, prepared again to fire; but being afraid of killing the man, they told him to try to get a little way from the lion, which he allowed him to do, without ever losing sight of him. The moment the guns of the Arabs were levelled at him, the lion sprang into the midst of them, seized one with his teeth and two others with his claws dragging them together, so as to make, as it were, one bundle, then, placing under him that mass of palpitating flesh, he instantly smashed the three heads, as he had done that of the girl. Those who escaped ran to the douar and told the story, but no one was bold enough to return for another attack. The lion then carried the man into the forest. What occurred there the hero of the adventure has never revealed; but from that day to this a settled melancholy has found a resting place in Tippo's eyes.

It is true that the lion has the power of fascination over some organizations? All I can say is, that the Arabs answer in the affirmative, and give numerous examples.—H. M. S.

INTERESTING PARAGRAPHS CULLED FROM VARIOUS FIELDS.

The brilliant blue color brought out by heat on highly polished steel is very beautiful, and many must at times have speculated as to the cause of the phenomenon. It is the natural property of iron to acquire colors by heat, and the blue color which has no doubt often attracted attention is due to a certain amount of oxidation corresponding with a definite degree of heat. Different temperature produces various colors, and tool makers and armorers accept the color as an in[illegible] of temperature in tempering to [illegible]es.

At [illegible]hett iron takes on a pale yellow [illegible] straw, 473° orange, 500° brow[illegible], 555° violet, 590° blue, 610° [illegible]° red. The blue color is purpo[illegible] metals chiefly for ornaments [illegible]nd various means are employed [illegible]is tint. Mr. B. F. Spalding, in the [illegible]achinist, explains many of the pe[illegible] commonly followed for this purpo[illegible]'een quite new. If polished steel i[illegible]here it does not come in contac[illegible]air it does not oxidize, and therefore[illegible]not color. In hot charcoal, the common air is kept out by other gases, and the work does not change color while it is buried, but immediately upon its being withdrawn from the charcoal and exposed to the air the colors flash upon it with great rapidity, running the full regular gamut of the steel spectrum, for although it may turn blue almost immediately, it becomes pale yellow first and exhibits the other colors in regular succession. One of the most approved methods of bluing iron and steel on a wholesale scale is by making a bath of black oxide of manganese and nitrate of potassium, in the proportion of one to nine. A fire being lighted under the tank containing this mixture, the saltpetre melts the manganese, which sinks to the bottom in a thick muddy sediment, is stirred up and mixed with it. When heated to a proper temperature the metal is immersed and allowed to remain until it is heated to the same temperature, and when removed and cooled it is of a beautiful dark blue color, of greater depth and permanence than that obtained by other processes, or simply in the natural way of heating.

Great progress is being made on the Douglas-Elliott block. The massive granite pillars and trimmings are being put in at a fine rate. No building in the city will excell it for solidity. It is an architectural Moldoon.

Mr. Norval Butchart of Port Moody has been exhibiting some apples that are a surprise to most people. The measurements cannot be given as they sound too incredible. Mr. Butchart's fruit will probably be heard from at the exhibition.

A large number of the members of the Washington State Press Association now in session at Seattle, spent Sunday in Victoria, where they held an interesting meeting, the debate of the day being "Patent insides and outsides."

Two book agents met in a barber shop yesterday, and some of the patients in the chairs were rather mystified when one said to the other, "Hallo, what are you handling?" "Oh, I'm handling Sir John, what's your lay?" "I'm handling footprints." Footprints is the title of a book.

All members are requested to turn up each day for practice and get in good form. Owing to the absence of some of the committee the business done was not so large as was hoped.

Port Moody was not overrrowded with summer visitors on Sunday. Most of the "born" remained in town to greet the great carnamen. Those who went over, however, enjoyed a swim of the best kind. The water had lost the sickening tepidity which has distinguished it all summer, and instead was full of the invigorating qualities that find birth around the pole, or at least inside the arctic circle. Those who jumped in suddenly also jumped out suddenly, or at all events as suddenly as circumstances would permit, and in a gasping condition.

A Pointer to the Public.

District Lot No. 28 lies immediately adjoining the city limits. The continuation of Mary Street goes directly through it, and the Electric Tramway will in a couple of months be running its cars every hour of the day through the centre of this property. The lot (No. 28) is composed of 128 acres of land as level as a table. Contracts have been let to clear and grub the ground, and leave it in perfect condition for building purposes. Already six citizens have decided to erect handsome residences there, ragging in price from $4,000 to $7,000 each. The whole of this splendid piece of property (except some limited portions already disposed of) will be put on the market in a few weeks. One great advantage in buying a lot and erecting a residence on this property is that the owner will avoid heavy municipal taxation. Make a note of it, and wait till the property is put on the market before buying • about roads and roadmaking in five minutes than Ald. Curtis ever knew in his life.

After discussing the Annual Crusade it was decided that the exact date for its observance be left for decision at the next meeting, which takes place Monday, September 28th, instead of the regular time, owing to the fair beginning on that day.
