Lacrosse.

Today, weather permitting, the Maple Leafs will cross sticks with the Vancouver Seniors at Brockton Point. This is the last game the Maple Leafs are down for on the schedule, but it may be they will play exhibition matches before the winter weather sets in in earnest. The Maple Leafs have made a splendid record for a team which was only organized at the beginng of the season. Though repeatedly defeated, scores—with two exception—were never very large and the honors of the games have been principally with the Maple Leafs. The Maple Leaf boys have kept on like true sportsmen and were rewarded by gaining the greatest victory of the year, and that victory over the New Westminster Champion. Judging from the progress of the team dufing the present season, there is every reason to feel sure the Maple Leafs will be the Provincial Champions next season. That the Maple Leafs will win today is a foregone conclusion.

"Done some the bags? Thank you very much, Lady Lesborough," he said, cheerfully.

Nina started and colored.

"I—I— Oh, you call me that!" she said, half proudly, half doubtfully.

"Yes; it is your name, your title," he said, gravely. "But—but sometimes—often—I shall think of you as Decima."

She held out her hand, and he took it and pressed it.

"Lord Lesborough is busy with the boat," he said. "When you've finished the rest of the bags—if you're not tired of them already—"

"No, no!" she said, with unnecessary earnestness.

—"Perhaps you'd bring them down to the saloon, if you don't mind. Vivienne, I want your help for a while."

They went off, but when they had gone a little distance Vivienne paused, and, coming back, stooped and kissed Nina. There did not seem anything in the moment especially appropriate for the caress; but one woman is never surprised when another kisses her, and Nina took it gratefully, and returned it. After they had gone she worked until the last of the remaining bags were finished, then she arose, and, with an unconscious sigh of relief, went towards the saloon. As she did so she looked round a little fearfully, and yet a little wistfully; but there was no one in sight. Nor was there any one in the saloon; and, putting the bags on the table, she went towards the beach. As she reached it she looked seaward, and to her surprise saw a vessel in the offing. It was the Ariel, and she remembered that it was the day appointed for its return. She was gazing at it when she was startled by discovering that it was going from the island, instead of making towards it. She ran down the beach to the cove where one of the Ariel's boats had been anchored, and was more than startled to find that it had disappeared. What could it mean? She gazed at the receding vessel for a moment or two, then ran up the beach, calling for Vivienne.

Vivienne did not appear, but a stalwart figure came swiftly from the saloon. It was Vane. She stopped short, and, panting, looked from him to the Ariel.

"What is the matter? You were calling, dearest?" he said.

"Yes!" she responded, anxiously. "I was calling Lady Vivienne. I can't find her or Lord Sutcombe. And the Ariel—that is the Ariel sailing away from the island!"

He shaded his eyes with his hand and looked at it. Then he looked at her, a curious expression in his eyes, a dawning joy.

"I found this in the saloon," he said, holding out a note; "perhaps it will explain—"

She took the paper—it was folded in a lover's knot—and, opening it, read:

"Dear Nina,—Forgive me! It was my wicked plot! And mine alone. It occurred to me while we were talking last night. We have gone for a cruise—for a fortnight—when we will come back to see if you are still here. But Lord Lesborough has his boat, and you may both decide to spend the rest of your honeymoon elsewhere. If we do not find you, we will go to England and wait for you in the old rooms at Everleigh Court. Till then, and as long as I live, dear, I am Yours, VIVIENNE."

"They've—gone!" he said, in a low voice. "And—left us alone! Nina, my wife!" and the next moment his arms were round her and her face hidden on his breast.

One morning, a month later, the wintry sun stealing faintly through the blinds of the breakfast room at the Court fell upon the black garbed figure of Julian, as he sat at the table, looking distastefully at the good food set out for him. In his morning suit of black serge his thin figure looked thinner than of old, but just as graceful. His face was pale; indeed, looked almost as bloodless as the hands that broke the piece of toast on his plate. Beside it was the post-bag, and every now and then he took up a letter, opened it and eyed it listlessly, then dropped it as listlessly on the table.

"Shall I give you some fresh tea, my lord?" asked Prance, in a subdued voice—all the voices at the Court had become subdued of late, since, in fact, the fatal accident which had killed the late earl.

"Eh? Ah, yes, thanks," replied Julian. "Is Mr. Holland here?"

"Yes, my lord. He is in the library with Mr. Tressider."

Julian nodded. "You can go. I don't want anything more, Prance. Tell Dodson to have a carriage ready—a close carriage—at eleven."

"Yes, my lord," said Prance, in the same low tone.

When he had left the room Julian turned to the letters again, and suddenly the gloom in his eyes gave place to eagerness. He had found a letter that interested him. He tore it open and read it, with a red spot on his hollow cheeks:

"Do not come to see me. I am not well enough to see any one. I will write when I am stronger.

"JUDITH."

He twisted the note in his nervous fingers, staring reflectingly at the opposite wall meanwhile; then he tore the note into small fragments, and threw them on the fire. For some minutes afterward he sat, his eyes fixed on vacancy; then, with a start, he rose and went into the library. The steward and the lawyer were seated at the table, with some account books and papers before them. Both men were in mourning. They had been talking about the new earl.

"Just the same, Mr. Tressider," Holland had said. "He seems like a man in a dream, and half dazed and bewildered, as if he could not get over the shock of—of that night."

"Well, it's not so very long ago."

commented Mr. Tressider, with a grunt.

"Quite so, quite so, Mr. Tressider! I am not saying that it's unreasonable; but, well, after all, he has the title and the estates; and, if I may say so, his lordship doesn't strike me as the kind of man to be so overwhelmed as to lose sight of the advantages which his late lordship's death have bestowed on him."

"No," said Mr. Tressider. "I should not have credited Mr. Julian—pardon! I can never remember to give him his title!—his lordship—the man to forget that he is now the possessor of the title and estates. He doesn't sleep, you say?"

"Fenton told me yesterday that very often his lordship's bed had not been slept in, and that he hears him pacing up and down his room the whole night through."

The old lawyer shrugged his shoulders. "Well! I shouldn't have credited Mr. Julian—tut, tut, I mean Lord Lesborough!—with so much sensibility. But, there, Mr. Holland, the longer I live the more I am convinced that there is one subject you can never learn—your fellow men!"

"Just so!" assented Holland. "Now I should have said that Mr. Julian—there! I've caught it from you, Mr. Tressider!—would have got over his poor cousin's death in less than a month; and yet, you see, it preys upon him and haunts him as if it happened only yesterday. And talking of haunting, the whole house seems as if it were under a ban. Mrs. Field tells me that she can scarcely persuade a servant to stay, and that they who do consent to remain won't go near the ruins of the Wizard's Room— Hush! Here he is!"

They rose and bowed as Julian entered. He went to the table, and, sinking into a chair, looked not at them, but between them.

"You wanted to see me?" he said to Mr. Tressider.

The old lawyer nodded.

"Yes, Mr. Julian—ahem—Lord Lesborough, I want you, please, to sign some papers."

"Is—is everything done—complete?" asked Julian, his white hands fidgeting with a paper-knife.

"Er—well, not quite complete," replied Mr. Tressider. "There have been difficulties in the way, of which the greatest is the difficulty in proving the death"—his voice dropped—"of the late earl."

Julian turned his dark, sombre eyes upon him.

"What difficulty can there be?" he asked, in a toneless voice. "He—my poor cousin was in the room; and though the—the remains were unrecognizable, his coat was identified."

"Quite so, quite so, Mr.—Lord Lesborough," said Mr. Tressider, "but the Court needs rather more solid proof of death than that. At present, at any rate. Later, later they may accept it. Meanwhile, of course, as the next in succession, you will administer the estate. I shall make another application, which, if successful, will place your title beyond dispute. Will you sign this, and this, please?"

Julian drew the papers towards him and signed in his neat hand, "Lesborough," then he glanced at Mr. Holland.

"Do you want me? I am going for a drive."

"No, Mr.—Lord Lesborough. There is a lease or two, but they can wait; there is no hurry."

Julian rose slowly, with the heaviness, the slowness of a man of twice his weight.

"You are having the Wizard's Room bricked up, as I ordered?" he said, with his hand on the door.

"Yes, Lord Lesborough. The men are working steadily at it."

Julian nodded, held the door for a moment or two, then went out. The two men exchanged glances.

"Queer," said Mr. Tressider, pursing his lips.

"He is always like that—like a man in a dream!" said Mr. Holland, with a shake of the head.

Mr. Tressider shrugged his shoulders. "It is to be hoped that he will wake up," he said, resentfully, "or it will be a bad thing for Lesborough. Ah, poor Vane Mannering! He was the man!"

"And yet he didn't seem particularly happy, Mr. Tressider," remarked Holland.

The old lawyer grunted. "Seems as if there was a curse on the place—and the race," he said.

Julian went into the hall, and a footman brought his hat and overcoat. But when he had got them on Julian stood looking round him vaguely It was down those stairs Judith Orme had come with white face and horror-stricken eyes the night—

"The carriage, my lord," said Prance.

Attended by a couple of footmen, Julian got in; but as the carriage turned the corner of the lawn he pulled the cord; and as the horses came to a stop, got out and slowly, with bent head, went round to where the masons were at work bricking up the Wizard's Room. He stood and gazed at them for some minutes, then he re-entered the carriage and it drove on.

Just as it was passing through the lodge gates, with the lodge keeper's wife curtsying obsequiously, an open carriage entered. It pulled up, and Julian, looking from his window, saw Lord and Lady Fanworthy.

His thin face drew into a scowl for a moment, then he forced it into a smile, and, stopping the brougham, he alighted.

"How do you do?" he said, suavely. "Were you going up to the Court? I'll turn back."

"No, no! Don't Lesborough," said Lord Fanworthy. "I was only coming to ask you if you'd made up your mind about the hounds. Poor Vane, you know, was very interested in them—"

Julian stood beside the carriage, with his hat in his hands, "like a foreigner," as Lady Fanworthy would have said.

"I'm considering the matter," he said. "You are sure you won't let me turn back?"

—addressed Lord Fanworthy, but he was conscious of her ladyship's notoriously keen eyes. They seemed to pierce his brain.

"No; no, thanks."

Julian waved his hat and backed towards his brougham; but Lady Fanworthy's voice arrested him.

"Oh, I wanted to ask you—you won't think me guilty of vulgar curiosity, Mr.—Lord Lesborough—" It was strange that she should share Mr. Tressider's difficulty in addressing his lordship by his title—"but have you heard anything of that strange servant of yours, Deborah? The woman who disappeared the night—the night—"

Julian lifted his pale face, his dark eyes veiled by their heavy lids.

"Deborah?" he said.

"Yes; you know she left the Court the day of the—the accident," said the terrible old lady.

"I know," replied Julian. "Oh, yes! She went to attend the sick-bed of a sister. I expect her back every day So good of you to ask for her! Are you sure you won't let me turn back with you?"

"Quite sure!" said her ladyship, as suavely.

As the Fanworthy carriage turned Lord Fanworthy remonstrated with her ladyship.

"'Pon my soul, don't you know! Rather unfeelin', eh, dear? What on earth made you drag up that awful business?"

Lady Fanworthy smiled for a moment, then became suddenly grave.

"My dear, I did it with an object. I want to find that deaf and dumb woman."

"Want to find her! Good heavens! What for?"

"Simple curiosity. I liked the woman," said Lady Fanworthy, after a pause.

Late Sir Chas. Tennant Added to Works His Father Created.

Sir Charles Tennant is dead. The end occurred at Broadstairs, the seat of Lady Tennant. Sir Charles became ill at Biarritz about three months ago, and the King then manifested much kindly interest in his condition, and sent his own physician to visit him. His health so far improved that he was able to come home, and since then his friends believed that he was making a good recovery. Sir Charles had indeed made arrangements to visit Scotland, but hemorrhage set in, and he died somewhat suddenly at 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

Sir Charles Tennant was head of the great chemical works at St. Rollox, Glasgow. He was also chairman of the Union Bank of Scotland and director of some twenty other companies.

Sketch of His Life.

Sir Charles, who was of the third generations of the Tennants of St. Rollox, was born on Nov. 4, 1823. His ancestors were tenant farmers in Ayrshire. Of them, in the latter half of the eighteenth century, was John Tennant, factor on Lady Glencairn's estate of Ochiltree, and tenant of the farm of Glenconner, who became the close friend of the father of Robert Burns—so close a friend that he was one of the witnesses to the poet's baptism, and when William Burns died one of the horses that, walking tandem, bore the bier from Lochlea to Alloway, was from Glenconner.

In 1797, while still a bleacher at Darnley, near Barrhead, Charles patented the process for using calcareous earth instead of alkaline substances for neutralizing the chlorine used in bleaching. Two years later he took out a patent for the famous bleaching powder, which completely changed the industry. To make this bleaching powder works were started at St. Rollox by Mr. Tennant in partnership with four others under the firm name of Tennant, Knox & Co. His eldest son, John (father of Sir Charles), was associated through his long life with the family business, and he had also interests in many other directions. He was a partner in great chemical works at Jarrow and Newcastle; an extensive owner of West Indian sugar estates; a member of the Underwriters' Association, Glasgow, and of Lloyds'; and one of the promoters of the Tharsis Copper Co. and of the Steel Co. of Scotland.

Born Heir to Fortunes.

Sir Charles Tennant, therefore, was born heir to ample fortunes and wide interests, and by his own unrelaxing perseverance and dauntless enterprise he developed and added immensely to his resources. After his early education he served an apprenticeship with a firm in Liverpool; that probation ended, he returned to Glasgow and joined the St. Rollox Works, and at his father's death in April, 1878, in West George street, Glasgow, he succeeded to his vast interests. It was in July, 1885, that he was created by Mr. Gladstone a baronet. He took his designation from "The Glenn," in Traquair parish—an estate among the Peebleshire hills, with a mansion house in the Scottish baronial style of architecture, which he purchased in 1854, and which became Sir Charles' favorite residence. It was partly destroyed by fire, it may be remembered, in the beginning of 1905, and it is at present in process of being rebuilt.

In 1900 St. Rollox Works, along with most of the other principal chemical works throughout the United Kingdom, became amalgamated under the name of the United Alkali Co., of which Sir Charles was made chairman. At the same time he gave up his business in Glasgow as a chemical merchant, and transferred it to his two sons, and Mr. Thomas Alexander, who had been long associated with him in St. Rollox Works, and Mr. Alexander's son.

His Domestic Life.

Sir Charles married, on Aug. 1, 1849, Emma, daughter of Richard Winsloe of Mount Nebo, Taunton, Somerset, and by her had a family of six sons and six daughters. The three eldest sons died in infancy, and it is the fourth son, Edward Priaulx, born May 31, 1859, who is the heir to the title and estate. His wife is the youngest daughter of the Hon. Percy Wyndham. The sixth son, Harold, has been member of Parliament for Berwickshire since 1894. Of the surviving daughters, one is Lady Ribblesdale, and another the wife of Mr. Asquith, Chancellor of the Exchequer in the present Government. Another daughter, who died in 1886, was the wife of the Hon. Arthur Lyttelton, late Secretary for the Colonies. The first Lady Tennant died in January, 1895, and was interred at Traquair Churchyard. In November, 1898, Sir Charles married Marguerite, youngest daughter of the late Col. Charles W. Miles of Barton Hill, Malmesbury, and his second family consists of four daughters, the eldest now seven years of age, and the youn[illegible] two years.

Olive Trees in Tuscany.

The olive tree forms one of the chief agricultural resources of Tuscany. It is estimated that about 270,000 acres are devoted to its cultivation and that an average crop of olives yields about 6,700,000 gallons of oil.

AN HISTORIC FIGHT.

House of Lords at Last Consents to Bill to Legalize Marriage With a Deceased Wife's Sister.

After an opposition extended through many years to the principle involved, the British House of Lords has consented to the passage of the bill legalizing marriage with a deceased wife's sister in the British possessions. It is not likely that the House of Commons will throw out the measure, and as a result such marriages where legal in the colonies will be valid in Great Britain. Lord Strathcona has been the chief advocate of the bill, and the arguments used in its favor were those with which he must have been familiar twenty years ago in the Dominion Parliament.

A Law of Henry VIII.

A history of the subject dates back to the reign of Henry VIII., who was peculiarly qualified as an authority on all subjects relating to marriage and who forbade a man to marry the sister of his deceased wife. The law then passed was later construed to mean that such a marriage might be invalidated; but in 1835 such a union was made not only voidable, but void in fact. This was Lord Lyndhurst's Act, under which previous marriages of the kind were declared legal, but later ones illegal. At the time, the understanding was that the prohibition should be removed at the next session of Parliament. Nevertheless expectations in this respect were not realized, and time after time the Commons or Lords refused to interfere.

Introduced by Prince of Wales.

In 1841 Lord Thorncliffe endeavored to have the Lords repeal the act, and the next year the Commons defeated a similar bill by a narrow margin. In 1847 a Royal Commission was appointed to examine the marriage laws, and the result was another bill, introduced in the Commons in 1849 by Mr. Stuart Wortley. This bill passed its second reading, but did not reach its final stages. Next year it was passed. In 1851 Lord St. Germans introduced the bill in the Lords, but it was again defeated. In 1855 the Commons again assented to the bill, but the Lords remained obdurate. Since then the measure has been pressed, in varied form, a score of times, but always the Lords has thrown it out. Sometimes, too, the Commons dissented, but usually approved. There was no change in the Lords, even in 1879, when King Edward, then Prince of Wales, introduced the bill. On that historic occasion the vote was 101 against to 81.

The Law in Canada.

Until 1882 the law in Canada was as the law in England previous to the Act of 1835, but in 1880 Mr. Desire Girouard (now Mr. Justice, and father of Sir Percy Girouard) introduced a measure to make marriage legal with the deceased wife's sister. It was seconded by Mr. Cameron, of North Victoria and, eloquently argued by them both. The opposition to the measure was based primarily on Scriptural grounds, it being held that Leviticus xviii, 18, and xx, 21, forbade the marriage. The very best authority, however, declared the interpretation put upon these passages to be far fetched and unreasonable. The fact that the Church of England prayer book forbade the marriage was held to be due to an imperfect translation from the original Hebrew. It was shown that the Jews never construed the verses to prohibit the marriages. In short, the case was made conclusive on the grounds of Scriptural interpretation.

Objections Raised.

The objections founded on social grounds appear to have been more formidable if less concrete. Nobody was able to arise and plainly state them, but there were many vague and mournful allusions to the deplorable social conditions that would result in families where a man's sister-in-law was domiciled and his wife living. After all, the chief difficulty was found in the fact that the Roman Catholic Church disapproved of the marriages, and that the Church of England forbade them. The House hesitated to take a step that might be construed as an affront to either of these bodies. Difficulty was also encountered in the marriage laws of Nova Scotia which existed by an Imperial Act, and which it was not in the power of the Dominion Government to amend. Finally, after great tribulation, the bill worked its way through the House and into the statutes of the country in 1882. That there has been any harm done as a result there is no evidence to show. With the passage of the law in Great Britain, the principle that marriage with a deceased's wife sister is right will be recognized in England as regards such unions effected in British possessions which have removed the prohibition.

PREMATURE BURIAL.

Startling Figures Supplied by English Doctor on Ticklish Subject.

Some very disconcerting figures were supplied to the meeting of the London Society for the Prevention of Premature Burial at Bloomsbury town hall by Dr. Hadwen, of Gloucester, as arguments in favor of speedy legislation in burial reform. The following cases, he said, had been certified by medical men:

Persons buried alive, 149.

Narrow escapes from burial alive, 219.

Dissected alive, 10.

Narrow escapes from dissection alive, 3.

Embalmed alive, 2.

Cremated alive, 1.

He urged that there should be waiting mortuaries, as in Munich and other German towns, where bodies could remain under strict sanitary conditions until the first signs of putrefaction—the only reliable sign of death.

The Ven. Archdeacon Colley, who was nearly buried alive in his infancy, stated that he had prepared plans whereby part of his house at Stockton, near Rugby, was to be turned into a "parish parlor," where poor people, living in one or two rooms with a large family, could bring their dead and pay them loving attention. The rooms would be pleasantly furnished and filled with flowers, and the bodies could remain there until signs of decomposition had set in.

Cost of Coal For Fleets.

Ancients Wore False Teeth.

The Talmud allowed Jewish women "to go abroad on the Sabbath with their false golden or silver teeth."

Fat Monarchs.

Alfonso II. of Portugal was somewhat irreverently designated "the fat." It is a tradition in that country that he was so stout that the services of sixteen men were required to bear the pall and casket at his funeral. The same somewhat disrespectful title was bestowed upon Charles III. of France and Louis VI. of the same country; also to Olaus II. of Norway.

A RARE FIRST FOLIO.

What It Cost and What Its Present Value Should Be.

Seven years after the death of Shakespeare his collected works were published in a large folio volume, now known as "the first folio Shakespeare." This was in the year 1623. The price at which the volume was originally sold was £1, but perhaps we ought to take into consideration the fact that at that time money had a value or purchasing power at least eight times that which it has at present. Halliweli-Phillips estimates it at from twelve to twenty times its present value. For this circumstance, however, full allowance may be made by multiplying the ultimate result by the proper number.

This folio is regarded as the most valuable printed book in the English language, the last copy that was offered for sale in good condition having brought the record price of nearly $9,000, so that it is safe to assume that a perfect copy in the condition in which it left the publisher's hands would readily command $10,000, and the question now arises, What would be the comparative value of the present price, $10,000, and of the original price, £1, placed at interest and compounded every year since 1623?

Over and over again I have heard it said that the purchasers of the "first folio" had made a splendid investment, and the remark is frequently used in reference to the purchase of books in general irrespective of the present intellectual use that may be made of them. Let us make the comparison.

Money placed at compound interest at 6 per cent a little more than doubles itself in twelve years. At the present time and for a few years back 6 per cent is a high rate, but it is a very low rate for the average. During a large part of the time money brought 8, 10 and 12 per cent per annum, and even within the half century just past it brought 7 per cent during a large portion of the time. Now, between 1623 and 1899 there are twenty-three periods of twelve years each, and at double progression the twenty-third term, beginning with unity, would be 8,388,608. This, therefore, would be the amount in pounds which the volume had cost up to 1899. In dollars it would be $40,794,878.88. An article which costs $40,000,000 and sells for $10,000 cannot be called a very good financial investment.

From a literary or intellectual standpoint, however, the subject presents an entirely different aspect.

Some time ago I asked one of the foremost Shakespearean scholars in the world if he had a copy of the "first folio." His reply was that he could not afford it, that it would not be wise for him to lose $400 to $500 per year for the mere sake of ownership when for a very slight expenditure for time and railway fare he could consult any one of half a dozen copies whenever he required to do so.—Follies of Science.

The Growing Pigs.

At weaning time there is not so much danger of losing the pigs as of checking their growth, says R. L. Dean in National Stockman. The pig is not yet a hog, and he can hardly subsist as the hog does. A good deal of nourishment in liquid form is needed and also some tender grass. Pigs do not take much grain, but they like a bit of oats, wheat or corn. Their teeth cannot handle much that is hard; hence softening it by soaking will be beneficial. Sweet milk and middlings warmed with hot water will appeal to their appetites at weaning time, and it need not be made as strong as when fed later. It is generally known that sour milk should not be given.

It Pays to Caponize.

A gain of four pounds per head in weight and of 10 cents per pound in price is quite worth while when you remember that it can be done on about the same amount of feed. It is wise to caponize every cockerel not wanted for breeding. There is very little pain caused by the operation if done skillfully and at the right time—less pain than is often endured by cockerels in their fights with one another.—American Cultivator.

"THE GALLEY OF LORNE."

Flag of the Campbells Once More Flutters in the Breeze on the Tower of Inverary Castle.

Greatly to the satisfaction of all good Scotchmen, the flag of the house of Campbell, known up in the north as "The Galley of Lorne," once more flutters in the breeze on the tower of Inverary Castle, showing that the strangers have departed from the ancestral abode of the Dukes of Argyll, and that the Campbells have come to their own again, writes the Marquise de Fontenoy. True, it is not the Duke of Argyll himself who is in residence there but his youngber brother, Lord George Campbell, who has taken over the lease of the place from Mr. Cresswell, its recent tenant, for the remainder of the four years that it has to run. Mr. Cresswell was only too anxious to get rid of the place. For there is an old superstition in Scotland, and especially in the County of Argyll, to the effect that the occupancy of Inverary Castle brings misfortune to any one who is not a Campbell. Certainly the experiences of the tenants of the place, since the present duke decided to let it after the death of his father, would seem to lend color to the story. For during the six years that have elapsed since then, several lessees have succeeded one another, two of them dying suddenly, while a third was overtaken by financial disaster. No wonder, therefore, that Mr. Cresswell has been glad to give up the place.

Inverary Castle as it now stands is one of the works of the famous architect Adam, who began it in the year 1744 for the third Duke of Argyll. The banks of the River Aray have, however, been the home of the chiefs of the great clan of Campbell for more than 500 years, and the ruins of the old baronial hall, built by the first Earl of Argyll, are still to be seen close to the present castle. The latter is constructed of a sort of slate colored stone in the castellated style, with round towers at the angles, and surmounted by a great square tower in the centre. The great hall of the castle, which is beneath this central tower, is filled with ancient armor and weapons, comprising 100 muskets which were used in 1745 by the Campbells, when "Prince Charlie," as pretender, had all Scotland up in arms. One side of the castle slopes down towards Loch Fyne, one of the most famous and beautiful of the lochs of the western Highlands.

The history of the Campbells is the history of Scotland. No family has borne a larger share in the trials and triumphs of that northern kingdom than the clan of which MacCallum More is the chief. It is owing to this that the name of Inverary figures so frequently both in Scottish history and Scottish literature, and it will be familiar to every reader of the novels of Walter Scott. Burns, too, has been eloquent about the castle in his poems, though in an unfriendly strain. For failing to receive proper hospitality on the part of the duke of his days, when he visited the castle, he revenged himself by the following well-known lines:

Whoe'er he be that sojourns here,
I pity much his case,
Unless he come to wait upon
The lord, their god, his grace.
There's naething here but Highland pride
And Highland cauld and hunger;
If Providence has sent me here,
'Twas surely in his anger.

Inasmuch as the union of the present Duke of Argyll and of Princess Louise has remained childless, the next heir to the dukedom and to the many other dignities and estates is his brother, Lord Archibald Campbell, who, being a rich man and an enthusiastic Highlander, devoted to the maintenance of all the old customs and traditions of the land of the north, may be relied upon not only to establish his headquarters at Inverary, when he succeeds to the dukedom, but likewise to revive all of its former glories and grandeur.

Lord Archibald, to whom the Scotch regiments of the British army are indebted for the retention of their distinctive kilts and tartans which the War Department was bent upon abolishing in 1881, is to-day the senior partner and most active manager of Coutts' bank, where both the King and Queen keep private accounts, and which he entered on the nomination of Lady Burdett-Coutts five and thirty years ago. Previous to that he had held a clerkship in a firm of wine merchants at Bordeaux, and had afterwards spent four years in a samilar capacity with a firm of tea brokers in Mincing lane, London.

Lord Archibald's cult for everything Scottish has led him to organize the so-called "Highland Association," which does for old Highland music much of the same work as the Eisteddfod does for the Welsh folk songs, and the movement has accomplished a great deal towards reviving the old Highland spirit by encouraging the children to sing the purely national airs to the music of the clarsach, as the ancient Highland harp is called. Lord and Lady Archibald are talented people, and the open air performances of Shakespearean plays at Coombe hill, their place at Kingston-on-Thames, were, at one time, famous.

Lord Archibald is a wonderfully clever artist with his brush, and was an intimate friend and close associate of Whistler. His only daughter, Miss Elspeth Campbell, an extremely handsome girl, possesses the queer accomplishment for a woman of being able to play the bagpipes. Her only brother, Niall Campbell, who has shown strong leanings towards Roman Catholicism, has so far shown no sign of wishing to marry

Irving's Carefulness.

Sir Henry Irving was accustomed to visit at the home of Miss Friswell, author of "In the Sixties and Seventies," in which volume appears the following anecdote: "My mother often used to point out little details that had been overlooked. I remember one in 'The Bells,' which my mother told Mr. Irving on the first night, when he returned to our house to supper. People who have seen the play may remember that the first scene is a small inn, and that there is supposed to have been a deep fall of snow. The innkeeper, Matthias (Irving), walked in on that first night in ordinary black boots, with no snow upon them. My mother spoke of it, and afterwards Matthias wore high black boots, and stood on the mat while the snow was brushed off them. Remarks were made as to Mr. Irving's attention to the minutest details, and this was cited as an instance."

Skin Troubles of Babyhood

And How Promptly They are Overcome by the Use of

Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Your family doctor will explain to you, if you ask him, the mission of the pores of the skin, and will tell you of the dangers of using pore-clogging powders for the chafings and irritations to which babies are subject.

Any mother who has used Dr. Chase's Ointment for this purpose will tell you of how beautifully soft and smooth it has kept the skin, and of how quickly it cured the chafing and irritation.

Especially during the teething period children are likely to suffer from eczema, and unless it is properly checked there is danger of it spreading to other parts of the body and becoming chronic.

There is no rival to Dr. Chase's Ointment as a cure for baby eczema, as it is usually called, and it can be used with positive assurance that it will not injure the most delicate skin, but, on the contrary, keep it soft and smooth.

Mr. Chas. K. Moss, Berlin, Ont., states: "My child, six months old, was a terrible sufferer from itching sores on her body. The doctors called it salt rheum, but could not cure it. We also tried remedies recommended by the people, but they had no beneficial effect. Having read of Dr. Chase's Ointment, I decided to try it and am glad to say that it completely cured her before half the box was used."

Mr. F. Brooke, High River, Alberta, writes:—"For two years I was troubled with eruptions on the face and neck and tried various ointments and blood mixtures with no benefit. Soon after beginning the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment the eruptions began to disappear and my face is now completely better. I have recommended this ointment to a friend who suffers from a similar complaint."

Dr. Chase's Ointment is a necessity in every home where its merits are known, and is indespensable in the nursery; 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

MILITARY TRAINING.

Trustee Simpson of Toronto Tells Why Socialists Object To It.

Mr. James Simpson, a prominent Socialist and a member of the Toronto Board of Education, freely expressed his opinion on Sir Frederick Borden's recent speech, in which he advocated teaching school children how to handle the rifle.

"The Socialist has no objection to the development of marksmanship or physical development," said Mr. Simpson. "What the Socialist objects to is the development of the military spirit amongst the Public school pupils which of necessity involves national animosities and prejudices. If Sir Frederick Borden seeks to make the Public schools a kindergarten for the regiments of Canada, Socialists will oppose it to the bitter end. The development of the military spirit in the Public schools is of necessity involved in a method of military training advocated and endorsed by military men.

"The general assumption is that peace is best preserved when nations are armed to the teeth, but the careful student of economic conditions realizes more and more that the military forces of the nations are being utilized to perpetuate the sovereignty of a ruling plutocracy. In the great conflicts between the capitalist class and the working class, as instanced in Toronto, Winnipeg and the State of Colorado, the military powers are ostensibly used to preserve law and order, but are actually utilized to maintain conditions against which the working class are fighting.

"The burdens of militarism are to-day weighing down the wage-earners in all the so-called civilized nations of the world, and there is an ever-growing conviction that these burdens must be removed. The military forces of Germany would to-day be utilized to limit the franchise rights of the working class of that country were it not for the strength and virility of the Socialist party, and events of recent years in Hungary and Russia demonstrate beyond doubt that the Socialists are the only political organization to which the oppressed classes can look for their emancipation.

"These being the facts of history, no sophistry or appeals of the jingo can influence the Socialist to change his attitude towards the growing spirit of militarism in Canada, and there never was a time in the history of our country when the voice of the working class was so much needed to attract the attention of the people to the evils resultant upon the adoption of the policy so strongly promoted by the Minister of Militia."

Had to Be Waked Up For Sentence.

Chief Justice Murray of British New Guinea had an uncanny experience. "Yes, but, father, I don't want to ask any silly questions. This is a most important one. Please, do you think when a stout man is self contained he has more room inside of himself to contain himself in than a thin man has or is himself so big that he is just as tightly crowded inside of himself as the thin man is and how much of himself is it that is self contained and how much is on the outside doing the containing, and"—

DISEASED KIDNEYS.

Made Sound and Strong Through Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

"Two doctors told me that I was incurable, but thanks to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I am a well woman today.' This strong statement was made by Mrs. Ed. Rose, of St. Catherines, to a reporter, who hearing of her remarkable cure called to see her. "A few years ago whie living in Hamilton," continued Mrs. Rose, "I was attacked with kidney trouble. The doctor lulled me into a state of false security, while the disease continued to make inroads. Finding that I was not getting better I consulted a specialist, who told me that the trouble had developed into Bright's disease and that I was incurable. I had dwindled to a mere shadow, and suffered with pain in the back, and often a difficulty in breathing. Insomnia next came to add to my tortures and I passed dreary nights, and felt that I had not long to live. In this despairing condition my husband urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and to please him I began to take them. After using several boxes I fet the pills were helping me and I continued taking them until I had used some twenty boxes, when I was again restored to perfect health, and every symptom of the trouble had disapeared. Dr. Williams Pink Pills certainly brought me back from the shadow of the grave, and I have since enjoyed the best of health."

Every drop of blood in the body is filtered by the kidneys. If the blood is weak or watery the kidneys have no strength for their work and leave the blood unfiltered and foul. Then the kidneys got clogged with painful poisonous impurities, which brings aching backs and deadly Bright's disease. The only hope is to strike without delay at the root of the trouble in the blood with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They make new bood. They flush the kidneys clean, heal their inflammation and give them strength for their work. Common kidney pills only touch the symptoms—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure the cause. That is why they cure for good, and at the same time improve the health in every other way. But you must get the genuine pills with the full name, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, on the wrapper around each box. Sold by all medicine dealers or direct from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

Hurdle For Hogs.

A portable hurdle fence used in the hog pasture at the Tennessee experiment station is represented in the cut. It is made of 1 by 6 inch boards in panels twelve or sixteen feet long. Commencing at the bottom, the first two are placed six inches apart, while the third and top one are seven inches apart. The pieces are held in place by three 1 by 4 inch strips, one placed six inches from either end and the other placed in the centre. The bottom piece of the triangle which forms the support of the hurdle is three and a half feet long, made of 1 by 6 inch stuff. In the centre of this piece a notch is cut three inches deep and two inches wide. The triangular uprights are made of 1 by 4 inch stuff and four feet long, with a notch corresponding to the one in the base board cut in the top, as shown in the illustration.

BOY ROVER'S FUTURE.

Lad Who Went Through Canada on 10,000 Mile Trip to Be a Sailor.

Young Stanley Condor, the adventurous boy traveler, whose latest exploit was a stowaway voyage from New York to Liverpool, had his future decided for him by the deputy-stipendiary of Liverpool.

Recently Stanley was remanded to the workhouse, the suggestion being that he should be placed in a reformatory. Mr. Kinghorn, however, has fallen in with the view expressed by The Weekly Dispatch that a lad of such qualities as Condor should not be placed in the restrictive confines of a reformatory. The other day the deputy-stipendiary said that he was reluctant to send the boy to such an institution. There was nothing criminal in his roving propensities and he had the making of a good man in him. He had, therefore, decided to send him to the training ship Clio, stationed at Bangor, until he was sixteen years of age.

The Clio is a vessel on which only unconvicted boys can be received. Young Stanley Condor will there be trained for the merchant service.

Stanley Condor was taken to Winnipey by his father early this year, and was twice detected by the railway authorities concealed on trains for Montreal. His third attempt succeeded and from Montreal he traveled in the same way free to New York, where he stayed three days, doing odd jobs. Tired of American life, he secreted himself on the liner Victorian for Liverpool.

There was a pleased expression on his face when he knew he was to be sent to the Clio. It was somewhat amusing to notice how closely he was watched by the police officials in court. He has a reputation for slipperiness, and those who had charge of him seemed possessed with a haunting fear that he might vanish before their eyes.

Costly Old Chairs.

There seems to be no limit to the prices people pay nowadays for old furniture, prints, paintings, or china. More than £28,000 was realized at Christie's, London, recently by the sale of exceptionally interesting and valuable art objects.

One of the principal features of the sale was the disposal of a set of eight Chippendale mahogany chairs, which, after exceedingly brisk bidding, were knocked down for the record price of 1,260 guineas.

The chairs have rectangular seats and backs covered with old English petit-point needlework, with compositions of figures, trees, and views of buildings in colored silks. The borders and legs are pierced and carved with trellis work, foliage, and rosettes under Chinese influence.

Enormous interest was taken in the chairs, and when the bidding closed at 1,260 guineas, or the record price of nearly 160 guineas a chair, there was an outburst of applause.

A set of seven old Worcester vases fetched 2,500 guineas—the highest price ever given for specimens of English porcelain.

The vases have a mottled dark blue ground, the necks being pierced with a band of diamond-shape panels. Each vase is finely painted with exotic birds and branches in colors in heart-shaped panels, with gilt scroll-pattern borders.

Another group of fine Worcester vases brought only 620 guineas.

Raindrops.

A meteorologist has undertaken the laborious task of measuring the dimensions of raindrops. He finds that the largest are about one-sixth of an inch and the smallest one seven-hundreth of an inch in diameter. They are larger in summer than in winter and larger in hot than in cold climates. The size of the drop when it reaches the earth depends on the height from which it has fallen.

Fought the Whole Class.

Many a year ago a "plebe" at the Naval academy astonished an upper class man by going to him and announcing, "See here, I don't like the way my class is being treated." The upper class man was nearly surprised out of his wits, but, recovering from his stupor (and only one who knows the full meaning of "rate" among the midshipmen can have a correct appreciation of what that announcement from a "plebe" to an upper class man carried), the "rating" demanded, "Midshipman, do you want to fight?" "That's what I am looking for." The fight was arranged and the "plebe" whipped his man, says the New York Herald. Then another youngster was supplied, and he went the way of the first, and so on until a half dozen had been discomfited. Sometimes several fights would follow in succession, when the "plebe" would say: "Gentlemen, I am tired now. I'll see you again another day." The academy authorities found out what was in progress and sent for the "plebe," and then, before official authority, he announced, "I can whip the whole class." It turned out that the "plebe" had been a prize fighter before entering the academy.

A PECULIAR FISH.

The Turbot's Ball and Socket Eye of Black and Gold.

Lying limp and slimy on a fishmonger's slab, or dry and sandy in the fishwives' baskets, the turbot is, perhaps, the least interesting of fish. When swimming in an artificial sea or lying on the sandy bottom it is the most attractive of all of the denizens of this mock ocean and whether at rest or in motion has an air of vigilance, vivacity and intelligence greater than that of any of the normally shaped fish. This is in part due to its habits and in part to the expression of the flat fish's eye. This, which is sunk and invisible in the dead fish, is raised on a kind of turret in the living turbot, or sole, and set there in a half revolving apparatus, working almost as independently as the "ball and socket" eyes of the chameleon. There is this difference, however, in the eye of the lizard and of the fish—the iris of the chameleon is a mere pinhole at the top of the eyeball, which is thus absolutely without expression. The turbot's, or "butt's," eyes are black and gold and intensely bright, with none of the fixed, staring stupid appearance of ordinary fishes' eyes. It lies upon the sand and jerks its eyes independently into position to survey any part of the ground surface, the water above, or that on either side at any angle.

If it had light rays to project from its eyes instead of to receive, the effect would be precisely that made by the sudden shifting of the jointed apparatus which casts the electric light from a warship at any angle on to sea, sky or horizon. The turbots, though ready, graceful swimmers, moving in wavelike undulations across the water or dashing off like a flash when so disposed, usually lie perfectly still upon the bottom. They do not, like the dabs and the flounders, cover themselves with sand, for they mimic the color of the ground with such absolute fidelity that except for the shining eye it is almost impossible to distinguish them. It would appear that volition plays some part in this subtle conformity to environment, for one turbot, which is blind, has changed to a tint too light and not at all in harmony with that of the sand.—London Spectator.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

No man is as dangerous as his threats.

When some men have nothing to do they become reformers.

If a man asks a candid opinion from a friend and gets it, it makes him mad.

Some people invariably get the worst of it, because they are always demanding the best of it.

As soon as a man gets a notion that his employer can't get along without him he is getting ready to lose his job.

There is always the danger that every man will become the hired man and every mother the hired girl to their family.

When a young man begins to make regular visits to a girl, how it would knock out the romance if it were said that he was calling on her to make arrangements for hiring a cook.

Where Kit Marlowe Was Buried.

St. Nicholas, Deptford, possesses richer literary, artistic and naval associations than most churches of the river side. It was the parish church of John Evelyn and his tenant, Peter the Great, who delighted to make the parson drunk, as well as of a long line of naval heroes. One of the many historic monuments quaintly commemorates Peter Pett, "the Noah of his age," who invented the frigate. A weird wood carving, representing the prophet Ezekiel in the valley of dry bones, is by Grinling Gibbons, who was "discovered" here by Evelyn. The parish register records the burial of Christopher Marlowe, "slaine by ffrancis Archer" on June 1, 1693.—Westminster Gazette.

Winning a Verdict.

Sir James Scarlett, the famous English lawyer, held that verdicts could be won without eloquence, and he proved it many a time in his own career. His skill in turning a failure into a success was wonderful. In a breach of promise case the defendant, Scarlett's client, was alleged to have been cajoled into an engagement by the plaintiff's mother. She was a witness in behalf of her daughter and completely baffled Scarlett, who cross examined her. But in his argument he exhibited his tact by this happy stroke of advocacy: "You saw, gentlemen of the jury, that I was but a child in her hands. What must my client have been?"

PROPER FEEDING.

A Prominent Breeder Gives His Views On An Important Matter.

E. B. Thompson, the noted Barred Rock breeder, says in the Reliable Poultry Journal:

"I have found the best way to get the most eggs from laying hens is to have plenty of litter in the pens (either straw or leaves) and to scatter the dry feed into it to make them work. Wheat, cracked corn and clipped oats, the same that we feed horses, are the best dry grains for me. These grains I feed in this way every day, morning and night. At noon it is a good plan to throw a handful or two of scratching food to keep the hens exercising more.

"Every day or every alternate day I substitute a mash for the morning dry feed. This is made of hominy or cornmeal, wheat bran, ground oats, white wheat middlings and beef scrap, all scalded with milk or water and mixed so the mash will crumble. Twice a week a little powdered charcoal is put in the mash. This charcoal is and has been for twenty-five years a favorite conditioner with me. I value the white flour middlings, as they keep the bowels in fine condition. Laying hens must be well fed, but must be made to work, so as not to get too fat.

"I feed cockerels wheat, whole corn instead of cracked corn, and the same mash does for them once every day or two. In each of my breeding pens is a pint cup fastened high enough up so the cockerel can eat at any time, but at the right distance from the floor so the hens cannot reach it."

Wheat and Climate.

Schindler has shown that the size and weight of the berry of wheats of different localities depend upon the length of the vegetation period, and more especially upon the length of the interval between blossoming and ripening. This, as he explains, is in accordance with the development of the grain as it matures, which is as follows: The glumes of chaff of the berry are first in order of growth; following these, the outer fruit coating and then the inner true seed coats develop, then follows the endosperm, which is the richest in gluten, and later still the storage tissues in the interior of the berry are formed. In regions with a moist, warm climate the fruiting period is prolonged and abundant quantities of starch are formed in the large leaf surfaces which such a climate produces on the wheats. The starch thus formed is all transferred to the berry, which is thus filled up as is shown externally by the broadly expanded form. Such a wheat is relatively rich in carbohydrates and poor in protein. On the other hand a hot, dry climate shortens the time for starch transference, and the native wheats of such a climate are in general richer in protein and lower in carbohydrates. As illustrations of this, he shows that the climate, and especially proximity to the sea, closely affects the amount of gluten in the wheat. The insular climate of England produces a robust wheat having large ears, with numerous kernels, but with less gluten than the wheats of Eastern Europe. According to this author, the wheats of England and other countries having a similar climate seldom contain more than 10 per cent. of gluten; while in the warm temperate zone, in eastern Europe, as well as in the western United States, in southern Russia, Roumania, and Turkey, and in subtropical zone, the gluten contest may even exceed 20 per cent.—American Miller.

SEA GULLS' EGGS.

They Are Good to Eat and Taste Like Plovers' Eggs.

"I'd like to have a mess of gulls' eggs now," said the epicure. "They beat a hen's egg all to pieces, and nine people out of ten eat gull eggs for plover eggs and don't know the difference.

"In England from March to May there are hundreds of men who make a living by gathering gulls' eggs and foisting them on the public for plovers' eggs. The fens and salt marshes of the English coast are as valuable on account of the gulls' nests as vineyards or orchards. These fens rent at a high rate, and keepers protect the eggs from thieves the same as keepers on noblemen's estates keep out poachers.

"Early in March the gulls pair. They lay their eggs in the salt marshes in a hollow or a tuft of grass. The nests in the best marshes touch. You can't take a step without crushing eggs under foot. These eggs, olive colored, plashed with green and gray, sell at wholesale for 7 cents apiece. They are called plovers' eggs.

"Each nest has, as a rule, three eggs. When the first set is taken from her the female bird lays another set, and if this one is taken too she lays a third set, which is always left to her to hatch, or otherwise she and her kind would never return to the marsh again.

"Many of the owners of these marshes make $2,500 apiece in the spring by selling for plovers' eggs their gulls' egg harvest."

Chinese coffins are made of timber eight inches to ten inches thick. It is calculated, therefore, that over 8,000,000 feet of lumber is utilized yearly for coffins in China.

SAINT OF THE COOKS.

A Queen of the Culinary Art Who Lived In Genoa.

Santa Zita, as the patron saint of the cooks is named, lived, it appears, at Genoa and was there canonized. She could, so runs the legend, cook better than any chef within 300 miles of the town, which, we all know, is noted for its wonderful soups and dumplings, though of course in the latter indigestible article of food outrivaled by Vienna, since it is one of the chief articles in the religion of gastronomy that it is only in the kaiserstadt that the "glose" is in perfection. Santa Zita was, it seems, not less famous for her piety than for cooking and was a constant attendant at the cathedral during high mass.

One day, however, she fell into a trance, so called—though, in plain English, a good, sound sleep—and quite forgot that she had to produce an exceptionally fine dinner for a large company. On awakening she hurried forth from the sacred edifice in a way which was far indeed from her wont, but on reaching the kitchen what was her surprise and delight to find a party of cherub celestials busy cooking the required dinner. She did not interfere, but was at first not unwilling to accept the praise which was lavished on her culinary success. She soon repented, however, and told the world the truth about the spiritual and miraculous help she had received, and it was agreed on all sides that she deserved to be canonized. Accordingly she became Santa Zita.—London Queen.

Too Lazy to Live.

Tim Wooden was literally "too lazy to live," as the anecdotes of him told in an old "History of Milwaukee" go to prove. It may be that the doctors of today would pronounce him a victim of the insidious germ which works to uncontrollable languor, but the diagnosis of the good old times of Tim's career reads simply, "plumb laziness."

A party of Indians, knowing Tim's peculiarities, once captured him for fun and made him believe that they were going to burn him at the stake. They took him to some distance from the village, tied him to a tree and heaped wood about him. Just as the pile was ready to light the chief approached and whispered in Tim's ear that if he would never tell who had captured him he would release him and let him return to Milwaukee.

"What, walk twenty miles!" exclaimed Tim. "If you'll lend me a horse I'll agree to it."

One time when Tim was lumbering a loose log made a perilous descent down the side of the hill. The shouts of the other men warned him that the danger was coming his way, but rather than expend vital force in jumping he let the log strike him and break his leg.

Pulled the Court's Leg.

The following remarkable judgment was delivered some years ago by a magistrate in one of the English colonies:

"Pachua is hereby charged with having on the 11th of January followed the court on its rising and while said court was in the act of mounting into its buggy came from behind and, seizing the court's dangling leg, the other foot being on the step, forcibly pulled back the court, frightened the horse and nearly caused an accident. The reason alleged for this by accused is that he wanted to hear the result of an application of his. The practice by petitioners of pulling the courts by the legs is one that should be discouraged. Accused only says he is a poor man, admitting the truth of the complaint. He is sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment."

Strange to relate, the lieutenant governor of the province on reading this sentence felt it necessary to intimate to the magistrate that neither the sentence itself nor the peculiar phraseology in which it was couched was calculated to meet with approval from minds running in legal grooves.

A Cub.

Infant lions and bears are now generally spoken of as "cubs," but in former times the word "whelps" would have been used. Every edition of the English Bible from Wyclif's time to 1611 gives "whelp" for the young of the lion or bear. A "cub" meant originally in English only a young fox. But by Shakespeare's time it was possible to talk of the "young suckling cubs" of a she bear, and Waller even applied "cub" to a young whale, now known as a "calf." The origin of "cub" is not really known, though the conjecture connecting it with the old Irish "cuib," a dog, would make it akin to the Latin "canis" and English "hound."

Roots For Sheep Feed.

Roots are exceedingly productive and doubtless yield under favorable culture more succulent food than can be grown upon the same given area of any other crop. Some of our prominent investigators have compared the dry matter of roots with that of silage and other farm crops. In their computation they have found that roots fall short in dry matter as compared with other crops and thus have advocated the growing of other feeds. It is not a fair proposition to the root crop to compare its dry matter with other crops because of the fact that the value of roots for sheep feed does not lie wholly in this.

Roots for sheep feed have two distinct values—first, value as a flesh forming material, and, second, influence upon assimilation of other foods. Of the two values the latter is of the greater importance.—National Stockman.

A Strange Custom.

A strange custom prevails in Kamchatka, where a man who wishes to entertain a guest invites him into a cabin which is heated to an excessive temperature and then presses him with food until he is in a state of torpor. Instances of men dying at these orgies have been known.

Happiness is so fragile that one risks the loss of it by talking of it.—Lemaitre.

SUNLIGHT SOAP

is better than other Soaps but is best when used in the Sunlight way. Follow directions.

SUNLIGHT WAY OF WASHING

FIRST.—Dip the article to be washed in a tub of lukewarm water, draw it out on a washboard and rub the soap lightly over it. Be particular not to miss soaping all over. THEN roll it in a tight roll, lay in the tub under the water, and go on the same way until all the pieces have the soap rubbed on, and are rolled up.

Then go away for thirty minutes to one hour and let the "Sunlight" Soap do its work.

NEXT.—After soaking the full time rub the clothes lightly out on a wash board, and the dirt will drop out; turn the garment inside out to get at the seams, but don't use any more soap; don't scald or boil a single piece, and don't wash through two suds. If the water gets too dirty, pour a little out and add fresh. If a streak is hard to wash, rub some more soap on it, and throw the piece back into the suds for a few minutes.

LASTLY COMES THE RINSING, which is to be done in lukewarm water, taking special care to get all the dirty suds away, then wring out and hang up to dry.

For Woolens and Flannels proceed as follows:—Shake the articles free from dust. Cut a tablet of SUNLIGHT SOAP into shavings, pour into a gallon of boiling water and whisk into a lather. When just lukewarm, work articles in the lather without rubbing. Squeeze out dirty water without twisting and rinse thoroughly in two relays of lukewarm water. Squeeze out water without twisting and hang in the open air.

The most delicate colors may be safely washed in the "Sunlight" way.

SAVE THIS IT IS A VALUABLE COUPON FOR SUNLIGHT SOAP PREMIUMS

$5,000 REWARD will be paid to any person who proves that Sunlight Soap contains any injurious chemicals or any form of adulteration.

B. C.'s Farewell to Sir Henri Joly.

Never has British Columbia regretted the departure of a Lieutenant-Governor so keenly as in the case of Sir Henri Joly de Lotbiniere, the Chevalier Bayard of Quebec. The courtly old gentleman, who has given three sons to the Imperial service, was thus bidden farewell by Capt. Clive Phillips-Wolley, the Victoria poet:

Good-bye, that word rings hollow when we part,
The prayer has vanished from the threadbare phrase.
Clipped by the hurry of discourteous days,
Born of the lips, unfathered by the heart.

Our "God be with you" is a people's prayer,
A people loth to let a loved one go,
A people conscious of the debt they owe,
A people losing one they would not spare.

You taught us all the lesson of your race,
That strength may dwell in utter gentleness,
That courtesy is born of kindliness,
And perfect courage sheathed in perfect grace.

Two nations warring till the time grew ripe,
Alternately the whetstone and the blade,
A nation in our Canada have made
Of which, Hope whispers, you may be the type.

God grant it, and for work in His name done,
A mellow autumn and a people's thanks,
Till dreaming on your mighty river's banks,
Long hence you pass to rest that you have won.

Two Cents For an Ounce.

Beginning on New Year's Day, 1907, letters weighing an ounce will be carried throughout the British Empire for two cents, which will be double the weight now allowed, half an ounce. This increase in weight also applies to all foreign countries, the rate for which is three cents. At the instance of the British delegates to the Postal Union convention at Rome, just closed, this regulation was adopted. Another postal reform which was adopted on motion of the British delegates is the introduction of a reply coupon, a little postal order to bearer, exchangeable in any country for a union postage stamp.

Alexandra Hive No 7, are arranging for a Social and Card Party to be given in the near future. Watch for the announcement of the date.

The Ladies of Fairview Hive invite all Lady Maccabees and friends to visit them in their New Hall, corner of Seventh avenue and Granville street, Tuesday next, from 3:30 to 5:30, or from 8 p. m., to midnight. A pleasant program is being prepared and a cordial invitation is extended to all.

Mrs. W. A. Kemp D. S. C., will represent the L. O. T. M., at the next session of the National Council of Women which will be held in October at Hamilton, Ont.

I. O. F.

Court Vancouver, Independent Order of Foresters, met in Oddfellows' Hall on Monday evening, Chief Ranger A. Pengelly presiding. The meeting was well attended and interesting throughout. The next meeting will be held on Monday Sept. 24th, and large attendance is looked for by the Officers.

Fraternal Insurance today is the cheapest, safest and most honestly conducted. Among the Fraternal Orders there is not a safer or better managed Order than the I. O. F. On August 1st, the I.O.F. had a surplus of $10,270,055.27 and in 1905 it paid out $2,191'413.48. Nearly all the Courts give several forms of benefits.

L. O. L.

Mt. Pleasant Lodge No. 1842, will meet Thursday evening next, the 20th. It is expected there will be candidates for the Purple, Blue and Royal Arch degrees. At the last meeting No. 1842 advanced several members to the Blue degree. A large committee was appointed at the last meeting to arrange for an entertainment, and this committee will report on Thursday evening next.

That our American forests abound in plants which possess the most valuable medicinal virtues is abundantly attested by scores of the most eminent medical writers and teachers. Even the untutored Indians had discovered the usefulness of many native plants before the advent of the white race. This information, imparted freely to the whites, led the latter to continue investigations until to-day we have a rich assortment of most valuable American medicinal roots.

Dr. Pierce believes that our American forests abound in most valuable medicinal roots for the cure of most obstinate and fatal diseases, if we would properly investigate them; and, in confirmation of this conviction, he points with pride to the almost marvelous cures effected by his "Golden Medical Discovery," which has proven itself to be the most efficient stomach tonic, liver invigorator, heart tonic and regulator, and blood cleanser known to medical science. Dyspepsia, or indigestion, torpid liver, functional and even valvular and other affections of the heart yield to its curative action. The reason why it cures these and many other affections, is clearly shown in a little book of extracts from the standard medical works which is mailed free to any address by Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., to all sending request for the same.

Not less marvelous, in the unparalleled cures it is constantly making of woman's many peculiar affections, weaknesses and distressing derangements, is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, as is amply attested by thousands of unsolicited testimonials contributed by grateful patients who have been cured by it of catarrhal pelvic drains, painful periods, irregularities, prolapsus and other displacements caused by weakness, ulceration of uterus and kindred affections, often after many other advertised medicines, and physicians had failed.

Both the above mentioned medicines are wholly made up from the glyceric extracts of native, medicinal roots. The processes employed in their manufacture were original with Dr. Pierce, and they are carried on by skilled chemists and pharmacists with the aid of apparatus and appliances specially designed and built for this purpose. Both medicines are entirely free from alcohol and all other harmful, habit-forming drugs. A full list of their ingredients is printed on each bottle-wrapper.

Perseverance Lodge No. 11, and Century Lodge are now one. The officers and name of Perseverance are retained. There is a membership of about 80, and more coming in.

There has been but two deaths in the Order in B. C. this year, each holding a $2.000 certificate, Bros. Church and Warne Butchart—these claims were paid within five days from death.

At the meeting to be held on the 3d of Oct., in K. of P. Hall, Mt. Pleasant, business will be before the lodge that will be of interest to all of the members, and they are requested not to fail to be present.

Under the new Supreme Lodge law, British Columbia retains and handles all of its cash, which is invested in this province.

the following extract from an article by Allan L. Benson, in July number of Tom Watson's Magazine, will be found of interest on the question of insurance. The article shows how the old line life insurance charge exorbitant premiums on participating, endowment policies, etc.,—in every case the policy holder getting the worst of the deal. The following quotation shows how they get ahead of the policy holder on premiums.

"The American Table was as good as it could be when it was made. Sheppard Homans compiled it thirty years ago from the experience of a single company—the Mutual Life of New York. Having the experience of only one company to guide him, it was doubtless inaccurate from the first. But science has increased the average of human life since then. Officially the life insurance companies do not know it, though everybody else does. They still base their premium rates on the old table, although a better table has since been compiled from the experience of thirty American companies, and the National Fraternal Congress has compiled another that is perhaps the best of all.....The extent of the inaccuracy of of the American Table may be judged by comparing it with the National Fraternal Congress Table. The American Table declares that, of 100,000 men forty years old, 979 will die before they become forty-one. The National Fraternal Congress Table shows that only 640 will die. The discrepancies at other ages are as great. And the accuracy of the Fraternal Congress Table has been confirmed by every fraternal association that has not had an abnormal mortality rate thrust upon it by the withdrawal of its good risks....But the life insurance companies nevertheless stick to the old American Experience Table of Mortality, with its inaccurate, ancient figures. It is always well to be 'conservate' you know—especially when conservatism means a shadow of excuse to keep up premium rates."

Everyone knows that for anything to become known, it must be talked about. For an article to become popular its virtue must be made the subject of a public announcement. That is advertising! Consequently if the survival of the fittest applies to business principles as well as it does to other walks of life, the better the advertising—the better the publicity—the better the results. Good results mean good business, and good business is what every merchant advertises for. If he did not wish to excel in his particular line, he would not take the trouble to write an advertisement, much more pay for the costly newspaper and magazine space.—British Advertiser.

THE CHEAPEST PLACE IN THE CITY.

Woman's Realm.

The sheer embroidered lingerie stock is much in evidence.

Striped flannel waists are meeting with a fair measure of success.

Kersey is still used in the manufacture of coats for the little folks.

Ruffs of malines in black and white and colors, are growing stronger every day.

Indications are that the small furs will be strong sellers during the coming season.

Chantilly lace veils are shown in all of the new colorings, as well as in black and white.

Silk belts are expected to be a strong factor this fall, princess girdle and tailored effects being favored.

The use of chiffon taffeta for the fall and winter waists, in both the tailored and fancy styles is a certainty.

Black laces will be the new strong feature in in the fall lace lines. Both the net and heavy effects will sell well.

After a season of elaboration in waists, authorities predict a plain season for the coming fall and winter.

The use of Cluny lace has to a considerable extent charatized the later models in lingerie waists and gowns.

Many of the new models in princess empire have taken on the effect of the redingote, with the slightly shortened waist line.

Concerning colors, black has overshadowed everything. Blue ranks second, followed by greens, reds, browns, grays and rose.
