PREMIER ROSS HAS A VERY CLOSE CALL

Toronto Globe Makes the Modest Claim of a Government Majority of Five in House of Ninety-Seven

Conservatives Made a Net Gain of Eight Seats but it was not Sufficient to Control the House

Toronto, May 29.—The elections throughout the province today were very close but it looks as if the Ross government will have a small majority. This it may be said is conceded by the Mail and Empire, which places the results as follows:

Liberals 50, Conservatives 47, whilst the Globe's figures are Liberals 51, and Conservatives 46, a switching of but one seat with Manitoulin to hear from in both cases.

Toronto, May 29.—The returns so far received indicate the return of 23 Conservatives and 11 Liberal. It is figured out that the Conservatives so far have a gain of six seats in those reported, while the Liberals have a gain of three seats. The returns are too meagre to make any prediction as to the result throughout the province as they do not affect more than one-third of the seats. The Conservatives were very much elated over the returns received from London, where Adam Beck is making the race in their interests against Colonel Leys, the Liberal representative in the last legislature. Leys had some difference with the Ross administration during the life of the last house and tendered his resignation as a protest against its policy. He stood again at a bye-election and received a majority of 1,653 votes. The very earliest returns received from London this evening showed that the Liberal stalwart was having a hard race of it with the Conservative nominee. The first returns gave small majorities for Leys, but by the time 34 out of 39 polling divisions were heard from Beck had a majority of 29. The Conservative managers assert that Leys will not be able to overcome even the small lead which Beck has upon him. The turn-over in London is one of the sensations of the campaign, as the seat was generally looked upon as the property of Colonel Leys.

SUPPORT NOT PROMISED

THE COAL COMPANY'S OFFICERS DENY THAT AID IS ARRANGED.

The statement which was conveyed in the Associated Press report, sent out from Toronto, to the effect that the directors of the Crow's Nest Pass Coal company would provide for the widows and orphans of the colliery victims, has been denied by the officers of the coal company at Fernie, and The Daily News has been asked to give the report a denial by the Fernie Relief committee. Immediately upon the receipt of the wire from the Fernie Relief committee the head offices of the coal company in Toronto were communicated with, and requested to either affirm or correct the Associated Press report sent out from Toronto, but owing to the bad state of the wires no reply has yet been received.

It is easy to appreciate the very harmful effect the circulation of such a report would have upon the contributions to the relief fund if it were incorrect, and The Daily News makes haste to lay the facts before its readers so that no further injustice may be done the sufferers by the disaster. The Associated Press report probably originated from the message sent by the president of the company, Senator Geo. A. Cox, to T. R. Stockett, the mine superintendent at Fernie, when the first report of the disaster reached Toronto, which read as follows:

"Thos. R. Stockett, Fernie:

"Have just learned with profound sorrow of the serious accident to the mine, resulting in so serious a loss of life. Please convey to the families of the dead and to all sorrowing friends the sincere sympathy of myself and co-directors. You are hereby authorized to make such expenditures as you deem necessary to alleviate suffering and to add to the comfort of any who may be ill, and to assist those who depended upon the dead for support, and such other expenditures in connection with this sad affair as you think best. Also convey our thanks to those who are so bravely doing rescue work. GEO. A. COX."

This is borne out by a statement made subsequently by one of the directors after the appeal for aid from the Fernie board of trade had been received at Toronto newspaper offices. Asked as to the meaning of the appeal in view of the company's instructions to the mine officials to make all necessary expenditures to alleviate suffering, this official said:

"The destitution referred to would apparently have reference to possible necessities of the future rather than to actual existing wants, as the company officials have been most positively instructed to prevent any such situation arising. He expressed further hope that any subscriptions that might be sent to Fernie by the public in response to this appeal would be carefully set apart as a portion of the provision which will be made for the families of the bereaved, and would not be expended in supplying such immediate necessities as the company officials are already more than anxious and fully able to attend to."

The late coast papers all continue appeals to the public to contribute to the relief fund established at Fernie to provide for the widows and orphans, and they have all opened subscription lists. The city councils and boards of trade have taken the matter up actively. Everywhere throughout the province it is realised that the needs will be great, and in most places commenable efforts are being made to raise money for the fund. The Daily News subscriptions list is still open. All monies sent in will be promptly acknowledged, and forwarded to the relief committee at Fernie.

DISCUSSING THE TERMS

GREAT BRITAIN HAS MADE NO SURRENDER TO THE BOERS TO SECURE PEACE.

London, May 29 —The Daily Chronicle declares that the negotiations which are now being conducted for the concluding of peace in South Africa, will terminate the war in South Africa within the present week. The paper professes to have some knowledge of the peace conference proceedings, and throws out some hints as to what the people of Great Britain may expect as the result. It says that the Boers asked for an unqualified amnesty for the Boers as well as the Cape rebels, but that to the latter portion of the demand the British authorities have given their unqualified refusal, nor will the British government at the present time fix a date for the establishment of self government as it obtains in Canada though every assurance was given that self government would not be delayed a day longer than the condition of the new colonies warranted. The question of the dual language was also a stumbling block at the peace conference but it is not likely that the British government will concede the continuance of the Boer language as official. These terms the Daily Chronicle affirms the Boers are now prepared to accept. The only circumstance which tends to indicate that a speedy settlement of the war is not in sight is that the government has found it necessary to further postpone the debate upon the budget, which is generally taken to mean that a greater period of time will be necessary to perfect a settlement of South African affairs. It is now regarded as certain that the Chamberlain party will be in the ascendancy as the peace terms as foreshadowed indicate a victory for the Chamberlain policy. The colonial secretary is again indisposed and cannot be seen, but there are those who are of the opinion that his indisposition is diplomatic.

THE FIREMAN KILLED

St. John, N.B., May 29.—A train on the New Brunswick Central railway, while crossing a trestle near Washademk, this morning fell through. The engineer escaped, but the fireman, named Norton, was killed.

DON'T LIKE GROSE ISLAND

Montreal, May 29.—The second cabin passengers on the Allan line steamship which arrived at Grose island are quarantined, with a case of smallpox on board. The second cabin passengers were disembarked and taken on board again next day. CURTIS IS READY

Victoria, May 29.—Smith Curtis has introduced a bill in the legislature to amend the inspection of metalliferous mines act, by repealing sections 9 and 10.

The effect of the bill would be to do away entirely with the code of mine signals, which was adopted last year and approved by all the miners' unions in this province.

LARDO ROAD COMPLETED

IT WILL MAKE THE LARDEAU TRIBUTARY TO NELSON FOR SEVERAL MONTHS.

Kaslo, May 29.—[Special to The Daily News.]—Vernon Smith, accountant for the contracting firm of P. Welch and company, reports that the Arrowhead and Kootenay road, which has been under construction for many months, will be completed this week with the exception of the ballasting at the upper end. The completion of this road will give the mines of the Lardeau an outlet, and should result in a stimulous to the district. The line runs from Trout lake to Kootenay lake and will make the Lardeau district tributary to Nelson until such time as the upper portion of the road is constructed, giving the mines and the towns of Ferguson and Trout lake direct connection with the main line of the Canadian Pacific.

The lake has been rising rapidly and is now about as high as it is comfortable for Kaslo's inhabitants. So far no damage has been done, but should a wind come up, or a hot spell set in considerablee damage might be done.

PROCEEDING AGAINST STRATTON

Peterboro, May 29.—Proceedings have been entered to disqualify Hon. Mr. Stratton, Liberal candidate in West Peterboro, the grounds being that the ballots for use in the election were printed in his office, contrary to the statute. If Miller, Conservative candidate, is defeated, he will claim the election.

HIRSCH INSTITUTE OPENED

Montreal, May 29.—The new building of the Baron Hirsch institute was formally opened today by the governor-general. The building is a splendid structure erected at a cost of over a hundred thousand dollars and will be used as a Jewish school and immigrant home.

ARE FIGHTING FOR A SITE

RIVAL CLAIMS OF THE CITY AND POWER COMPANY WILL BE NOW HEARD.

A special meeting of the city council was held yesterday at noon to consider what steps should be taken in view of the telegram received from John Houston, M.P.P., the day previous, notifying them that the hearing in regard to the city's application for a power site on the Kootenay river at the upper falls would come up on Monday at Victoria. After some discussion it was decided that the mayor and the city engineer should attend the hearing, both being well acquainted with the points of the case at issue, and in a position to set forth the city's claims. While at Victoria the mayor will also interview the government regarding the foreshore, city park grant and other matters pertaining to city interests.

In 1901 a change was made in the Municipal clauses act by which cities were allowed to acquire waterpower for industrial purposes and not solely domestic uses, as had previously been the case. This was done upon the application of Nelson. An application was then put in for a water right on the Kootenay which was granted. Then, while the city engineer was making an exploratory survey of the land for a power site, the West Kootenay Power company staked it as a mill site. When the city first made application for the power site a decision was given against the company who thereupon staked 320 acres for the purpose of purchasing. Later they also staked a mineral claim, upon which work sufficient to obtain a crown grant has been done, and an application for a crown grant is now in. This site is on the south side of the river. On the north side the company own all the land from the upper falls down to below where their plant is situated.

The land claimed by the city is therefore covered by the application to purchase of the company and also by their mineral claim, but the city rely on the fact that their application for a power site was previous to either of these claims of the power company. Besides the city claim that the company has no way of showing that it intended to utilize the land in any way, as the holdings on the opposite side of the river give it all the privilege it could wish if the lower falls were ever found to be insufficient in supplying power. The city proved its intention of utilizing the land by putting forward a bylaw to build a plant, which was defeated because of the uncertainty as to obtaining the site.

ROBBERY UNDER ARMS.

There was a saving grave of some kind about the hero of Bolderwood's stirring story "Robbery Under Arms" that made one very much inclined to judge charitably of his crimes. Somehow, although we knew he was in the wrong, he seemed to be in the right, and we always wished he would escape the clutches of the police. Can as much be said for the men who today are holding up the provincial government for railway subsidies in cash and land? There is something very cowardly about the conduct of members of the legislature who, having the government in a tight corner, indulge in the highway robbers' practice of demanding "Money or your life." One feels that the poor government is not given a fighting chance, it is such a forlorn, weak trembling aggregation that the robbery loses all flavor of romance, and disgusts one as does the snatching of a purse from a little child by some hulking hobo. These political bushrangers are not content with a moderate haul, the usual cash subsidy will not satisfy them, they have their victims entirely at their mercy and they insist upon more than the full pound of flesh, "$5000 per mile or loss of office" is their demand. What can the government do? They must hand over the cash or suffer political death, and to give up office when, after all, it is only the other fellow's cash you are parting with is too much to expect from politicians of the Dunsmuir calibre.

Price Ellison and Clifford are not the only men engaged in this "skin" game. We see that a bill has been introduced to authorize the gift of several thousand acres of land to the Columbia & Western Railway Company. We say "gift" because the railway company have no just claim to the land. It may be remembered that in 1896 a bill was passed providing a land subsidy for the construction of a line of railway from Trail to Penticton, to be known as the Columbia & Western. It was particularly provided that the land grant for the fourth section, from Christina lake to Midway, should not be granted until the completion of the fifth section, from Midway to a point half way to Penticton. As everyone knows this section has not yet been completed, yet the government now ask that the legislature authorize a grant of twenty thousand acres per mile for the fourth section. The bargain made with the railway company was clear and distinct. There is no justification for this attempted alienation of another huge block of public lands, save on the same ground that Messrs. Ellison and Clifford have succeeded in obtaining from the government promise of cash subsidies for their special railway schemes.

TAXING FRANCHISES.

In giving consideration to the various sources whence revenue may be raised for the conducting of the machinery of government and the carrying on of necessary public works in this province, no attention appears to have been given to the possibility of getting something out of franchises that have been and are being given to corporations and promoters of enterprises. The rule is, so far as British Columbia is concerned, for all railway and other similar companies to be exempt from taxation of any sort, and although the plan is a bad one from every point of view, it is nevertheless the present rule. There is no reason why the example of some of the eastern states should not be followed and the franchises themselves made revenue producers. In the state of Massachusetts for instance railway, telephone, telegraph and insurance companies are taxed on the value of their franchise, which is arrived at by ascertaining the market value of the stock, and deducting from it the worth of the real property lying within the state. By this means a considerable amount is added to the revenue from an intangible property. A franchise is a revenue producer to its owners just as much so as is a farm, a mine, or a store, yet while each of these must contribute to the public treasury, the franchise escapes taxation. The provincial surveyor of taxes called attention to the not unknown fact that the railways did not contribute as fully as they should to the provincial revenue, and so long as their real property is relieved from taxation it is not possible to conceive how it could be otherwise, but with the adoption of the system of taxing franchises there would be some likelihood of making them yield at least a portion of the country's income

The question is being taken up by our friends across the line, Ohio being one of the latest to take in hand the task of making corporations owning franchises pay up. The governor of that state recommends that the taxes so levied be of such an amount as will suffice to meet all expenses of the state government. The question is a comparatively new one, and as our ministers of finance seem at a loss how to make both ends meet, the suggestion that the possibility of turning franchises to some account is one that might with advantage receive their attention.

ONLY HEARSE IN CITY

Abigail Again.

I SEE by the papers, says a writer in "Pick-Me-Up," that some worthy people in high places are getting a little tired of the servant girl question, and now there is a proposal to bring boys up to the job. What will become of the balance of the girls willing but not henceforward able to take to service, is not stated. Perhaps the English language is too abrupt and practical to permit of any reliable statement of the kind. But, of course, it's the old trouble. When mistress and maid fall out the fault is always the maid's. We never hear of any society for proving mistresses in the wrong. And poor old Abigail is down again!

I think before people lay the blame too heavily on Abigail they should search their own hearts and see if there is no fault in themselves. Just because the family thinks it would like to have breakfast at eight o'clock in the morning, Abigail's night's rest is practically broken from seven a.m. onwards. First there is the alarm clock, which rattles like the Day of Judgment; and just as she has turned over and gone to sleep again, the electric bell over her head starts its infernal clatter, interrupting her in a most lovely dream just where she and the milkman's young man had arranged to get married as soon as he could get trusted for a suite of kitchen furniture and a regulation four-poster. And as a final blow she has to sit up in bed and hear the master downstairs offering to run up and drag her out of bed, while the missis is declining the offer with some energy. No thanks.

How much nicer it would be to treat Abigail like one of the family. Now and again it would show a very good feeling if the head of the family went off to the city without his breakfast rather than disturb Abigail in her second go of beauty sleep. When employers meet together and talk of Abigail's sins, it never seems to occur to them that they might win her over by a timely display of generosity. Nobody seems to think anything of it if missis comes down to breakfast in a dressing-gown. She chooses to do it, and that is enough. But if Abigail waits at the breakfast-table in a red flannel petticoat, fastened over her shoulders with a safety-pin, the harsh remarks that are heaped upon a poor orphan girl are positively brutal.

What Abigail objects to so much is the perpetual fault-finding. Suppose she does drop a plate on the ground and break it? A plate must be broken sooner or later in the ordinary course of nature, and, as Horatius said when he called for volunteers to defend the narrow pass, we may as well pick it off as wait for it to drop on us.

In many households it is quite a usual thing to keep a common, irresponsible cat of indifferent moral character, and to let it have the free run of the place. If the cat does anything wrong, the missis at once blames—Abigail. Is it any wonder that the servant girl has turned at last after centuries of injustice? If the cat should get the key of the beer cask and go down and draw off a modest quencher, it's as likely as not that Abigail is charged with having taken the beer for her favorite policeman, when it is well known that he is a teetotaller and only eats cloves to improve his complexion. As every naturalist is well aware, it is quite a common thing for a cat to run round to the pawnbroker's with a couple of the best tablecloths till the end of the month; but as sure as anything Abigail will be charged with the offence, just because the ticket happened to fall out of her petticoat pocket. Most unreasonable.

The way to solve the problem is not for the mistresses to entrench themselves on one side and the maids on the other, and speak in harsh and inconsiderate language of the opposition. As Lord Rosebery says, the way to make peace is for two travelers to arrive at an inn and have a drink or something of that sort, and drop hints of mutual concessions in between the sips. The mistresses should meet the maids casually and get some idea of the basic principles of domestic service as governed by the natural aspirations of both sides. As I make it out, the point of view of the mistresses will be that they want a girl who will always get up at six in the morning, who will always look neat and tidy, and who will be talked at in a loud, rasping voice from the attic to the cellar without once answering back in the dreamy, picturesque language of Bermondsey. A girl who can do the work of three men, and who has a small appetite, will be preferred.

From the maids' point of view, I understand it is considered essential that a bicycle should be kept on the premises exclusively for kitchen use, and that the offensive habit of locking up the piano and hiding the key will be discontinued. It will also be necessary that the objectionable practice of counting the bottles of sherry in the cellar, and the mince pies in the larder, should at once cease, as this sort of thing is calculated to imply distrust and want of confidence. The question as to the privilege of wearing the missis's sealskin jacket or her new hat is not definitely settled; but it is understood that a concession of this sort would go far to remove the bad blood that has been stirred up in this unfortunate controversy.

Sweetness Long Drawn Out.

A business man of whom the "Youth's Companion" tells declares that the average stenographer will not learn to spell correctly until the millennium comes. In support of his opinion he relates his experience with a young woman whose spelling, as he describes it, had an "engaging originality," but who was so amiable and even-tempered that he seldom found heart to rebuke her.

One day she appeared before him with a neatly written letter for a Southern correspondent. He hastily looked it over.

"See here," he said, "you've spelled sugar s-u-g-g-a-r."

The young woman looked at it a moment critically, and then her face brightened as she replied:

"So I have. How careless of me! I don't see how I came to leave out the 'h.'"

Supply Limited.

"This is tough luck," said Ham, mournfully, as he leaned out over the side of the ark. "What's wrong now?" queried Shem. "Why, all this water to fish in," replied Ham, "and only two fishin' worms on board."—Ohio "State Journal."

The Lament of the Adult.

IN one of Dickens's novels—those novels which we are tearfully assured nowadays are not in the least funny—an ungrateful brickmaker rejects the little volume which has been brought him, because "it's a book fit for a babby, and I'm not a babby. If you was to leave me a doll, I shouldn't nuss it."

Something of this unchastened spirit stirs within our middle-aged hearts when we read a modern story, or see a modern play. It is probably the nicest kind of a story, and the nicest kind of a play, and if we were only fourteen instead of forty, or fifteen instead of fifty, we should thoroughly enjoy them both. Nothing is better calculated to make us regret our lost youth than fiction and the drama as they exist today. With what glorious emotions we should have dilated in childhood over Mr. Crockett's desperate brigands, or Miss Johnston's dauntless heroes. How we should have steeped ourselves—figuratively speaking—in gore, and revelled in romance. Sicilian outlaws, noble Indians, cruel half-breeds, courtly villains and heroines of wild, unearthly beauty—time was when these things made our pulses jump. But now seventeen murders excite us less than one, and duels are no longer the thrilling episodes they were in the happy past. It is hard to grow old, and it is made harder by the fact that nobody, save one's family doctor, has anything to offer to age. We should still like, even at forty or fifty, to be amused, but nobody caters to our amusement. When a veteran actor like Mr. Drew—who ought to sympathize with adults—entertains us with a drama that calls to mind the school plays of happy infancy, and the last act of which must certainly have been written by Miss Edgeworth, we feel that we are indeed friendless in the evening of our lives.

It is cold comfort to be told that the drama is intended for the debutante, and the novel for her younger brothers and sisters. It is even less agreeable to hear it hinted that if we do not like these pure and wholesome performances, it is because we want something evil. Does nothing, then, interest the adult save sin? Are bankers and brewers, anxious mothers and hard-working spinsters indifferent to all but vice? Must we either frolic like lambs—being lambs no longer—or devote ourselves seriously to the meretricious? Life has issues, not wholly unimportant, yet disconnected with love-making of any kind. Men—middle-aged men—desire many things besides their neighbors' wives. Women—middle-aged women—are sometimes strangely indifferent to their neighbors' husbands. We may be pure of heart, yet unable to take pleasure in "The Old Homestead" or "Ben Hur." We may be virtuous and intelligent adults. Will no one write novels and plays for us?—Agnes Repplier in "Life."

Turning Smoke Into Gold.

QUEEN ELIZABETH of England was not a thoroughgoing spinster, for she had so little prejudice against the practice of smoking that she permitted Sir Walter Raleigh his pipe in the royal presence. She was sufficiently a woman, however, to twit him openly on his devotion to the weed, and it was on one of these occasions—or so the author of "The Soverane Herbe" shrewdly surmises—that the knight replied:

"I can assure Your Majesty that I have so well experienced the nature of it that I can tell even the weight of the smoke in any quantity I consume."

"I doubt it much, Sir Walter," replied Elizabeth, holding it was impossible to weigh smoke, and mayhap scenting a joke, "and I will wager you twenty gold angels that you do not solve my doubt."

Gallantly accepting the wager, Raleigh filled his pipe with a weighed quantity of tobacco, smoked it out, and then, weighing the resultant ashes, announced the weight he had smoked away.

"Your Majesty cannot deny that the difference has disappeared in smoke."

"Truly, I cannot," answered the Queen. Ordering the wager to be paid, she turned to the courtiers around her and said: "Many alchemists have I heard of who turned gold into smoke, but Raleigh is the first who has turned smoke into gold."

Musical M.D.'s of the Future.

A PATIENT having been cured of smallpox by the witching strains of a violin, a contemporary thinks it not at all unlikely that it may ere long be discovered that music has a therapeutic value heretofore undreamed of. Music may in time become a most important branch of medical science, and the doctor of the future may, after diagnosing his case, take a violin or a cornet from his bag, as the case may demand, and render the wedding march from "Lohengrin," or Schubert's "Serenade," according to the progress the malady has made. Different tunes rendered on different instruments, in various tempos, may become necessary at critical moments, and this will naturally develop a new science—that of writing musical prescriptions. Musical boxes and orchestrions may yet be used in hospital-wards, and the shops in which sheet music and musical instruments are now dispensed are likely to be the drug stores of the future. Patent music is a possible successor of patent medicine, and we may yet take a five-minute dose of "Lanigan's Ball" adagio, or a seven-minute-and-a-half dose of Mendelssohn's "Songs Without Words" andante, for our neuritis or necrosis. Medical music and medical science will be one, and the scalpel will be supplanted by the mandolin, and the clinical thermometer by the piccolo.

Little Mothers in Japan.

Although the Empire of Japan is said to be a "paradise of children," where they are allowed to do very much as they please, and where they seldom, if ever, cry, their life is not all play. The little boys and girls have their work to do, but in many skilful ways they turn work into play. Take, for instance, the little girls who have baby sisters or brothers to care for. They tuck the youngsters into their queer garments and go on with their games of ball. If the baby grows tired and begins to fret the "little mother" jonces it up and down over her shoulder with a peculiar humping motion of her back, without stopping the game. All the time she sings some pretty song.

The Cockade.

THE adoption of the cockade by President Roosevelt for his coachman and footmen has resuscitated the old question: Whose servants are entitled to wear a cockade? As a matter of fact, there is no right nor title to the cockade, but usage has, in England, where the cockade is more common than in any other country, confined it to the servants of the royal household, of the diplomatic corps, of officers of the Army and Navy—including the militia and volunteers—and to servants of justices and deputy lieutenants of counties. According to this unwritten law of custom, neither peers nor other persons of title, except they be royal, can confer the cockade on their servants unless they themselves hold one of the commissions already named. And here comes a strange anomaly: If they occupy a Government position, they can wear a cockade, although their servants cannot.

"Cockade," or, rather, the French equivalent of it, made its first appearance in the phrase "bonnet a la coquarde" of Rabelais. About sixty years after Rabelais's death, Randle Cotgrave, author of the first Anglo-French dictionary, defined "coquarde," now "cocarde," as "a Spanish cappe or fashion of bonnet, used by the most substantial men of yore—also any bonnet or cappe worn proudly or peartly on the side." But the most plausible origin given of the cockade of to-day is that it was derived from the tuft of cock's plumes worn by the Croatian soldiers, who in the seventeenth century served under France, and introduced the cravat to the world of fashion. At any rate, in 1688, men ambitious to become soldiers of France received cockades of paper; hence the expression, "prendrel a cocarde," meaning "to enlist." Cockades appear to have fallen into innocuous desuetude, so far as France was concerned, until the Revolution, when the "cocarde tricolor" must have become obligatory, for, just before the fall of Robespierre, arrests were made for not wearing it.

The black cockade, now worn in England, was originally the distinctive badge of the House of Hanover, as the white cockade was that of the House of Stuart. It is said white was adopted by the adherents of the Stuarts because it was the emblem of the kings of France, who supported the Stuarts against the Hanoverians. The cockade worn by servants of the British royal household is a large half-disk which projects above the hat. Servants of naval officers wear a disk not projecting above the hat; those of army officers and other persons considering themselves entitled to carry cockades are fan-shaped, with a button, and they reach above the hat. The cockades of the servants of diplomats are in the colors of the country their masters represent, and many noble houses on the continent of Europe make their servants wear cockades matching their livery in color. When, many years ago, the war as to whose servants were entitled to a cockade was raging in England, the facts discovered were that no orders regulating their use were known to exist, but it was recorded that servants of officers of the London City Light Horse, a volunteer regiment, did not wear them. The conclusion arrived at was that the cockade was originally purely a military distinction; that the reason it was worn by servants of field officers was that, in former days, these servants had served in the army, that it was later adopted by servants who had never been in the army, and afterward by servants of naval officers.

There being no set rule in any country from which we have been in the habit of adopting social customs, it remains for us to follow the law that usage and good form has laid down. They have prescribed that the servants of ambassadors and foreign ministers of the United States abroad shall wear cockades, like the servants of foreign diplomats accredited to this country, the cockades of the coachman and footman giving the carriages a certain right of way. Ambassadors and ministers are entitled to the cockade after they have retired from the diplomatic service. But consuls are not members of the diplomatic service; they are merely commercial agents. Neither our consuls abroad nor consular representatives to this country have the right to the cockade, as consuls. Its adoption by an American citizen who represented a foreign country as consular agent in this city was authorized neither by usage nor good taste. That his family should continue to use it after his death is ridiculous vulgarity. Servants of officers of the United States army and navy, both regular and volunteer, are also entitled to wear the cockade.—Town Topics.

Eggs for The British Museum.

A notice of the collections recently bequeathed by the late Mr. Philip Crowley to the natural history branch of the British Museum appeared a few days ago in the "Times." A very important portion of the bequest is the collection of eggs, from which 15,200 specimens have been added to the series previously possessed by the museum. Among the gems in the Crowley cabinet are an egg of the great auk and one of the extinct pied Labrador duck. Both these specimens were acquired by Mr. Crowley from Canon Tristram. The great auk's egg is one of the last "batch" despatched in 1814 from Iceland to Denmark. The two specimens in the museum previous to this addition were both cracked and in otherwise poor condition. An interesting item in the collection is the number of clutches of eggs of various species of birds with a cuckoo's egg among them. The Crowley collection has added about 15 per cent. to the species of birds represented by their eggs in the museum, the increase being especially marked in Australian forms, in which the national collection was previously weak.

The Conscience Fund.

"I found eighteen umbrellas in the church yesterday," said the sexton to the minister the day after a rainy Sunday. "Oh, well," said the dominie, "take them to my study; they are probably intended as contributions to the conscience fund."—Yonkers "Statesman."

Mrs. or Miss?

JUST as a sort of New Year's card, the Woman's Suffrage Society of Paris have issued a manifesto contending that, as woman in her maiden name accomplishes all the duties of a citizen, she does prejudice to her interests by sinking her identity and losing her individuality in adopting the name of her husband when she marries. Consequently, it seems on the tapis that in future, when Miss Smith marries Mr. Brown, she will still retain her maiden patronymic of Smith. Being married, she must of necessity be Mrs.; therefore, if she retains her maiden name of Smith, we shall have the weird anomaly of Mr. Brown and Mrs. Smith as man and wife. Now, supposing Mrs. Smith, otherwise Mrs. Brown, should, by any unforeseen event, meet with a Mr. Smith in the absence of her husband, and it should go forth to the world—in a hotel visitors' book, for instance—that they were actually Mr. and Mrs. Smith, where the dickens, in the event of trouble, would Mr. Brown come in? Mr. Brown might swear by all that was holy that Mrs. Smith was Mrs. Brown, but if Mr. Smith swore that she was Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Smith did not stoop to deny it, what jury outside a lunatic asylum could convict Mrs. Smith of playing fast and loose with Mr. Brown? It is a complex problem, to say the least of it; but if the Woman's Suffrage Society of gay Paree are not content to let well alone, I suppose they must put up with the consequences.

A Girl's Daring Feat.

IT seems hardly possible that a girl of sixteen should save nearly fifty people from a terrible death. Yet that is what Grace Bassell did, who may well be called the Grace Darling of Australia. It happened one day in December that a vessel was wrecked off the coast of Australia, a few miles from the Bassell home. The lifeboat on board the steamer was lowered, but it capsized and the eight people in it were drowned. So the rest of the crew clung to the sinking steamer. The surf ran so wildly that no one could dare swim through it, and there was not a house or person in sight. The girl, who was a splendid horsewoman, was riding along with a native servant. She caught sight of the vessel in distress; turning her horse's head toward the coast, she started him on a quick gallop. When she reached the sea she urged her horse into the angry surf. She rode boldly on till she reached the vessel. With great difficulty she took some of the children in her arms and put them before her on the saddle; then, with bigger children and women clinging to her dress, she started for the shore, gave those she had rescued to the care of her servant, and returned again to the wreck. So she went backward and forward for four hours, till all were safe on land, the servant having ridden to bring out the last man.—"Leslie's Weekly."

Imperial Weather.

SOMEBODY is about to publish a vindication of the character of English weather. It appears that it has been most unfairly misrepresented. What we stupidly call its fickleness is really nothing in the world but a perfectly laudable effort to reproduce in our midst the imperial nature of our climate, remarks "Outlook." When it presents us with primroses in November, that is to remind us of the pleasant picnic weather they are having on the veldt; the same laudable intention accounts for June snowstorms. Nor do we have to wait for complete reversals of the seasons. A week of imperial weather—sometimes, like a cheap trip, it is all crammed into one day—runs somewhat as follows: Monday, fog (home produce); Tuesday, cricketing weather (Australia); Wednesday, skating (Canada); Thursday, waterspouts (various ocean territories); Friday, steaming (West Coast); Saturday, general imperial representation; Sunday—but the British Sunday has a climate of its own.

Edison's Prophecy.

Mr. Edison's latest theory is that by and by we shall be able to do without sleep altogether, as by the more perfect processes of electric lighting it will be difficult to tell night from day, and we shall forget when bedtime comes round. The man of the future is evidently going to live pretty rapidly. It was only the other day that we were told that square meals would be a thing of the past in the good time that's coming. Instead of laboriously working your way through seven or eight courses, all you'll have to do will be to go to the nearest chemist and buy a few pills with the nourishment of a city dinner concentrated into each. In the face of these conditions one feels disposed to urge the races unborn to stay where they are for their own sakes.

A Smart Salesman.

Jeweler (to new boy)—Did you sell anything while I was out, Johnny?

"Yes, sir. I sold six plain gold rings."

"Good, my boy," said the jeweler, highly pleased. "We'll make a first-class salesman of you one of these days. You got the regular price, of course?"

"Oh, yes, sir. The price was marked on the inside, 18c., and the gentleman took all that was left, sir."—N.Y "Life."

He Was Better Off Without It.

Hewitt—Gruet is a very polite fellow. I asked him if he would have a cigar and he said he would. I found I didn't have one, but he thanked me just the same. Jewett—He ought to have thanked you more.—"Judge."

A Classification.

Henry Thomas Buckle's thoughts and conversation were always on a high level. Once he remarked: "Men and women range themselves into three classes, or orders, of intelligence; you can tell the lowest class by their habit of always talking about persons; the next by the fact that their habit is always to converse about things; the highest by their preference for the discussion of ideas."

Lost Opportunity.

EVERY time a package goes out of your store which does not contain some advertising matter, you are losing an opportunity to make your store the store of the town.

Each package you send out is proof that a sale has been made. Every sale is supposedly of goods that are going to give the customer full value, and are going to give satisfaction. This will create a favorable impression. Every sale proves that some person has shown a disposition to trade with you.

Now this disposition is either great or small. In either case it can be made greater. And one of the most effective methods to bring about this desired effect is to place the advertising matter in the packages you send out.

THE CITY

The entrance to the city offices is now from Victoria street instead of Josephine street.

The lake is now up almost to the danger mark and has already flooded some of the land under cultivation between here and Balfour.

The steamer International yesterday brought in one car of Whitewater ore for the Hall Mines smelter and one car of Slocan Star ore for the Everett.

A. W. Nagle on Wednesday secured a seven pound trout, and H. M. Vincent and J. Weir took a number of trout and an eight pound char near Kokanee creek,

A handsome altar for the Roman Catholic Church at Kaslo was finished this week by H. Leveque and shipped from Nelson to its destination on Wednesday.

On Monday proceedings will be commenced against all delinquents in the payment of the dog tax and the same day the chief of police will start on the war path to collect the road tax.

The tugs Hercules, Valhalla and Ymir have all during the past week had to come in to the Nelson shipyards for new propellers, the blades of those in use having been broken by coming in contact with floating logs with which the surface of the lake near Kootenay Landing is literally covered.

Wholesalers report that the fruit business at present is dull, it now being between seasons. The strawberries from California are now finished and the shipments from Washington and Oregon not fairly started to come in yet. Apples are practically ended, and California cherries are just commencing to arrive. Bananas are at their best but owing to the long distance they have to travel before reaching the market here are high in price.

About four o'clock yesterday morning Police Sergeant Hardy saw what appeared to be a shack floating down river, and which had just passed the C.P.R. wharf. Thinking one of the floating cabins along the shore had drifted off with possibly the occupants asleep, he put out after the shack. When he came close it proved to be a boat house belonging to C. E. Miller which had chafed through its mooring ropes. All that was in it was a row boat, and as Hardy found that to tow the boathouse back against the current was more than a one man job he took the boat out and brought it back, giving notice as to the whereabouts of the boathouse, which was later recovered by a tug.

DUHAMEL'S RICH STRIKE

Uncovered a Gold Ledge on Eagle Creek By Ground Sluicing.

J. Duhamel is reported to have uncovered a rich lead of free-milling gold ore on the Eagle creek valley, about four miles from the city.

The story of the find is interesting. Twelve years ago, while supplies for Nelson were still being brought in over the trail from Forty-Nine creek that crossed Toad mountain, prospectors were exploring Eagle creek trying to find the lead from which rich float to be seen all along the creek had originated. None of them were successful, although a large number of claims were staked in the hope that the very slight indications to be seen would prove to cover the mother lode. Practically the whole area of the valley was staked and a number of shafts were sunk, but nothing of any consequence was found. As time went on a lot of the claims were abandoned and new ones staked, many prospectors who had abandoned the region coming back from time to time to have another try, the rich float giving golden promises.

Then as discoveries were made in other parts, the valley was gradually abandoned, except for an odd prospector working at the old tunnels. Duhamel was one of the earliest to investigate this part of the country, and although among the unsuccessful ones as to finding a lead never gave up hope that in time he would strike something rich. A few weeks ago he dammed up the creek at a convenient place and then letting it go, after enough water had accumulated, ground-sluiced the mountain side so thoroughly that the thin covering of earth and float was stripped off for some hundreds of yards. Along this he investigated and struck a lead several feet in width, the appearance of which showed that the ore was rich. He took a number of selected samples and brought them to the city for assaying, the average result being $700.

This will be pleasing news to a number who are interested along Eagle creek and will probably lead to renewed endeavors to thoroughly prospect the region. Duhamel is going ahead to trace the lead across the claim, the markings across the section sluiced indicating that this will not be difficult. The place is easy of access, the wagon road from Nelson crossing the creek about half a mile from the Kootenay river, there also being several trails leading up the valley from different places. A number of other prospectors are in there now, but as to whether any more discoveries will be made it is hard to say as the ground was considered by most of the experienced ones to have been thoroughly explored. The values in the ore are almost entirely in free gold, although there is a small quantity of copper. The samples taken, although picked, were taken far apart along the course of the lead. Duhamel is one of the best know prospectors of Nelson and his many friends will hope that the lead proves as good with depth as on the surface. Duhamel purchased the claim on which the discovery was made about a year ago, it not being one of those that he had staked himself.

CITY LOCAL NEWS

The J. M. Harris and the Byron N. White interests in the Slocan appear fated to clash. They came together recently in a somwhat celebrated mining case, which involved title to the most valued of the mining property in the Slocan, and now they are at it again over the water in Carpenter creek. Harris has the water and light systems in his townsite of Sandon, and he evidently does not wish for anything in the way of competition. The White company a short time ago applied for a water record on Carpenter creek with a view to installing a power plant for the operation of the company's plant near Sandon and also for the purpose of suplying the Slocan towns with light, but Harris put in an adverse, and the two interests must fight the matter out.

D S. Hardie was the winner of the inlaid cabinet which was raffled off at The Palm last evening. The box was made in a state prison and was sent to this city to be disposed of. It is said there are 3,000 pieces of wood in it, of which there are 30 different varieties. The winning throw was 45. The walking stick, which was made of paper, was won by Miss Otway.

A meeting of the committee of the Nelson Tourist association was held last evening when the secretary was instructed to proceed with the collection of the several amounts subscribed. The copy for the association's pamphlet has now been received and a meeting will be held on Tuesday evening with a view to having the same published as soon as possible.

J. R. McPherson has purchased the interest of Joe Harwood in the Imperial hotel, and has assumed the management. A grand opening under the new management has been announced for this evening.

The committee of the Ymir celebration has passed a vote of thanks to a number of those who contributed to the success of the celebration. The list includes the names of J. A. Armstrong, H. D. Ascroft and Jacob Dover of this city and D. S. Stanley and William Coffee, of Ymir.

C. C. Brown, C.P.R. locomotive engineer at Revelstoke, passed through the city yesterday on his way home from Fernie where he had been called by news of the death of his son in the Coal creek disaster. Young Brown had been working day shift but on the day of the explosion he was putting in an extra shift, and was in the mine when the accident occurred. He was 24 years old, single.

MINING RECORDS

Two locations were recorded at the Nelson record office yesterday: Fisher Boy, by T J Lancaster, on Kootenay river, at the mouth of Rover creek; Beatrice, by G L Gilchrist, on Bear creek, 7 1-2 miles from Nelson and 1 1-2 miles from the C and K railway.

A certificate of work was issued to Charles Schoenberger on the Carbonate.

Two bills of sale were recorded. In one William Davis transfers to Gilbert Poene a half interest in the Tugalla mineral claim, and in the second Poene transfers to William Davis, in consideration of $150, one-third of the Lucky Jim, one-half in the Silver Bullion, and one-half in the Tugalla, said properties being on the divide between Hidden and Porcupine creeks in the Ymir district.

MARTIN'S TRADE UNION BILL

Victoria, May 29.—Martin's trades union bill has passed second reading. It provides that unions are not liable for act of officers, committes, etc., in strikes unless it is shown the acts were authorized or the union privy to them. It applies only to unions registered in Canada. Smith Curtis thinks it does not go far enough, while Eberts says it seeks to put unions above the law. He opposed it Curtis says there is only one union in British Columbia under Canadian register.

He says: "I recently treated a case of sycosis (similar to 'barber's itch') of the lower lip, with Newbro's Herpicide There was an extensive loss of beard with inflammation extending well down on the chin The result of the application of Herpicide was most gratifying. The loss of beard ceased and a new growth of hair is now taking place over the once inflamed area. "Signed) Melville E. O'Neill M.D.

An Affair of PURE BUSINESS

Advertising is not an affair of sentiment and favoritism. It is an affair of pure business, of dollars and cents—as much so as buying or selling goods. Advertisers are after results. They want the worth of their money. They aim to reach not only the greatest number, but also the best class of readers. They advertise where they find it pays to make known their wants and their wares.
