PARLIAMENT WILL DISSOLVE

SHERIFFS HAVE BUSY TIME IN EAST LONDON

Arrest Councillors Who Refuse to Levy Taxes; Unemployed Demonstrate.

LONDON, Sept. 1.—Sheriffs' officers in motor cars went to Poplar this evening and visited the residence of the members of the Poplar borough council who had refused to comply with an order of the high court requiring them to raise tax rates in accordance with a ruling of the London County Council. Many of the councillors were not at home, but several of them were arrested and conveyed to prison amid sympathetic cheers from the crowds which gathered.

George Lansbury, editor of the Daily Herald, Nationalist Labor organ, who is a member of the borough council, has not yet been arrested, nor have any of the women members of the council, of whom there are several, but it is expected that all will be imprisoned tomorrow as they are not attempting to evade arrest.

There were lively scenes in many parts of London today. Great demonstrations of unemployed were held, notably at Shoreditch, where a mass meeting rejected a compromise offer made by the board of guardians.

At Hackney the police were summoned to deal with a number of workless men who spent the night in the workhouse, but in the morning refused to work out their lodgings. Some of the men were arrested including the secretary of a local organization, and sentenced to seven days' imprisonment.

PROPHESIES RETURN TO PARTY LINES

British Conservative Candidate Eschews Designation "Coalition" to Government

LONDON, Sept. 1. — (Canadian Press Cable).—Perhaps the most significant feature of the by election campaign in West Lewisham, (one of the metropolitan boroughs in Southeastern London) is the fact that Sir Phillip Dawson official candidate of the Conservative party eschews the use of the word "Coalition" in reference to the government. He invariably speaks of the Lloyd George ministry as the present government, and describes Commander Windham, another Conservative candidate who is running on the anti-waste ticket, as a "political adventurer working a journalistic stunt." Sir Phillip in his campaigning has no long life before it and prophesies the early return to party politics along the old party lines.

Meanwhile, he offers to support the government on general policies holding himself free to criticize, its financial matters. This Sir Phillips probably consider as the best way of placating the thousands of middle class surbaban residents who form the great majority of the electorate of West Lewisham.

C., Sept. 1.—A resolution asking the provincial government to revise the Provincial Utilities act was passed by the Union of British Columbia Municipalities convention at today's session. The union will seek the support of the British Columbia's electric railways in the motion. A resolution suggesting that a supreme court judge be appointed commissioner was rejected by the convention. The question of public utilities occupied the whole day's session.

Premier Oliver, Hon. J. W. DeB. Farris and Hon. Dr. McLean attended the convention today. The premier spoke briefly.

WEST VIRGINIA TROOPS READY

Defer Decision on Intervention in Miners' Dispute Pending Report.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—Preliminary reports having indicated a breaking up of the bands operating in the West Virginia coal fields, officials of the federal government tonight deferred decision on the question of intervention in the state, pending a more complete and definite report from Brigadier General H. H. Bandholtz, the war department's representative in the disturbed area. The first reports from General Bandholtz, received late in the day, were said by Secretary Weeks to indicate a disposition by members of the armed bands to comply with President Harding's proclamation calling upon them to return to their homes.

While awaiting the final report and the subsequent decision of the president and Mr. Weeks, the war department was prepared to undertake the task of restoring order in West Virginia. Troops, increased by orders during the day to three regiments, were prepared to move from their stations at Camp Sherman, Ohio, and Camp Dix, New Jersey, at a moment's notice. The 88th light bombing squadron of the air service, consisting of 15 planes ,was at Charleston ready for any duty thta might be prescribed, having reached the West Virginia capital during the day from Langley Field, Va.

Deputies Driven Back.

LOGAN, W. Va., Sept. 1.—Logan county deputies on Crooked creek this evening were driven down the hillside in a skirmish with an armed force from the other side of Spruce Fork bridge, Captain Hollingsworth reported at 7 o'clock. The captain said he had just returned from that district. An emergency force held here subject to call immediately was dispatched eastward.

Demands Troops.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Sept. 2.—At midnight General Bandholtz announced that he had dispatched a telegram to the war department at Washington to send federal troops into West Virginia at once. In announcing his decision to recommend martial law General Bandholtz gave out the following:

"I am satisfied the miners will not obey the president's proclamation. A telegram has been sent to Washington requesting federal troops at once

FILE MOTION OF PREJUDICE

Brumfield Murder Trial Excites Public; Ask Change of Venue.

ROSEBURG, Ore., Sept. 1.—Dr. I. M. Brumfield, alleged slayer of Dennis Russell, pleaded not guilty to a charge of first degree murder in the circuit court here today His attorney filed a motion of prejudice against Judge J. W. Hamilton, who was sitting in the case. The judge was allowed the motion and announced that he would at once ask the Oregon supreme court to assign another judge to the case.

Brumfield's attorneys also filed a motion for change of venue, alleging, that in the present state of public opinion here, their client could not obtain a fair trial. This motion, Judge Hamilton announced, would be argued before the judge to be assigned to the case.

Brumfield appeared entirely at ease in court today and made his plea in a firm, clear voice. The court room was thronged with auditors a majority of whom were women.

ATTACK BRITISH TROOPS.

CALICUT, Sept. 1.—British troops who were proceeding in motor cars last Saturday in the direction of Malapuram were attacked by 4000 Moplahs near Mongarn. Assistant Police Chief Lancaster and two soldiers were killed and several wounded. The Moplahs suffered serious casualties.

IRISH REPLY NOT ARGUMENTATIVE

Understood to Express Willingness to Discuss Further Basis of Negotiations

LONDON, Sept. 1. — Mr. Lloyd George, is at Bairloch, Scotland, and probably by now the couriers bearing Eamonn De Valera's reply have reached him there, though at a late hour no word of its arrival had been received by the waiting Sinn Fein leaders at the Mansion House, Dublin.

It will be necessary to submit the reply to the British Cabinet in London, so that there is likely to be considerable delay before the text is published. It is understood that it is not of an argumentative character, but simply an announcement of willingness to meet the prime minister in London to discuss a basis for further negotiations. It is expected that the Dail Eireann will be asked formally to approve the names of the men who will be nominated as plenipotenaries so as to avoid any suggestion that they do not represnt the views of the United body. It is considered almost certain that Arthur Griffiths, who was recently appointed Sinn Fein "foreign minister" will be among the plenpoteniaries and his influence is regarded as highly important to the smooth progress of the negotiations.

DISCOVER DERELICT STEAMER

Locate Canadian Importer Drifting Helplessly After Nearly Two Week's Search

VANCOUVER, Sept. 1.—The disabled steamship Canadian Importer of the Canadian government merchant marine, located late last night by the steamship Canadian Observer, after drifting helplessly at sea for nearly two weeks, was taken in tow by the Canadian Observer this morning and is now heading for Esquimalt, according to the latest message received from Captain Cooper of the Observer by B. C. Keeley, agent here of the Canadian merchant marine, this morning. The Observer with her tow will have the assistance of the salvage vessel Algerine and possibly the Canadian Winner, both ships standing by ready to give assistance if needed.

Before leaving San Francisco to engage in the search for the Importer, the Observer shipped aboard powerful pumps and these have been placed aboard the Importers and used to pump her out and thus lighten her for the 600-mile tow to port.

Boat Crew Still Missing.

While the Importer, with her crew of 34 officers and men are being brought to Esquimalt, the search for the missing boatload of two officers and nine men, which left the disabled steamer thirteen days ago to seek relief, will be continued, local officials state, and every effort will be made to locate the boat.

Captains Will Confer.

The question of whether the Canadian Importer will be towed to port or whether an attempt will be made to effect repairs to the leaking freighter at sea, will be decided at a conference of captains of the Importer, the Canadian Observer, the Canadian Winner and the wrecking ship Algerine tomorrow morning. The two latter are speeding tonight to the spot where the Importers was found drifting water-logged last night. The Observer, who found her, is standing by.

The Importer, whose engines and wireless have been out of commission for over a fortnight, is now at a spot approximately 600 miles from the nearest shore. It is 970 miles from Esquimalt, the nearest Canadian port. For this reason, the derelict may be taken to Seattle or San Francisco for repairs. B. C. Keeley, Vancouver superintendent of Canadian government merchant marine, stated this evening that no instructions on this point have been sent out. The decision will be left to the discretion of the four captains tomorrow.

Tow Too Heavy.

VANCOUVER, Sept. 1.—Wireless messages from the Canadian Observer received here at midnight state that the tow line to the Canadian Importer parted at 9:30 p. m. today. The Observer reported that the two was much too heavy for her and that she requires assistance. The Importer is not apparently in any danger.

RECOMMENDS IMPERIAL SHIPPING COMMITTEE

LONDON, Sept. 1.—(By Canadian Press cable.)—The report of the Imperial shipping committee, which was made public today, recommends the substitution of an imperial shipping board for the present constituted committee. According to the report, the shipping board would inquire into complaints regarding ocean freight rates and conditions of interimperial trade which, from time to time, would be referred to the board by the various governments of the Empire for a decision. The board would also exercise its powers of conciliation between interimperial shipping interests to promote coordination in regard to harbors and other facilities necessary for the development of interimperial shipping. The committee recommends that the chairman of the board should be paid and that there should be six representatives on the board who would act for the shipping and commercial interests of the whole Empire.

No Tariff Secure Without Popular Mandate, Says Premier; Either Liberal or Farmers' Platform Means Overthrow of Historic Policy; Straight Tariff Issue Before Country; Government Policy Had Brought Prosperity; Liberal Opposiiton Negligible, Real Challenge Is From Farmers' Party, Whose Proven Strength Showed Set Purpose to Reverse Set Fiscal Policy of Country; Points Danger of United States "Barrage" Against Canada; Unemployment and Industries Vitally Involved.

LONDON, Ont., Sept. 1.—Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, prime minister of Canada, will recommend early dissolution of the Canadian house and a general election before the New Year. This was his message to the people of London and to the people of Canada, delivered before an audience of some 3000 people in the Grand opera house tonight.

The announcement, which had been awaited with anxiety by all sections of the Dominion, came as a surprise to all but a few fo the prime minister's hearers. But when the premier announced that he considered it the proper thing to recommend early dissolution and a general election, applause rang through the theater.

Redistribution would not be carried out within a reasonable time, the prime minister stated. The census returns would not be complete, it was announced, until December, and that would mean another twenty months or so of indecision with regard to tariff matters. Canada could not get settled down to business unless the tariff problem was settled.

Free Trade Is Challenge.

The real challenge to the government, he said, came from the Farmer's party, which demanded free trade. That their policy was wrong he was certain, and he was equally certain that it would be proven wrong by developments.

A revision of the tariff in Canada was due and overdue. To decide the principle of the tariff was the big, imperative question before the people of Canada today. "Until they do decide it," declared the prime minister, "we cannot have tariff stability, we cannot have business stability, we cannot have confidence and we cannot have full enjoyment. We cannot have health and growth and virility.

"Until we know whether the people want a protective tariff or whether they don't, no traiff is secure. Either the opposition platform adopted in convention and set down in black and white, either it or the Farmers' platform means beyond all dispute the overthrow of the historic policy of this country."

Must Take Up Gauntlet.

Referring to the growth of the Farmer movement, the premier said that they had proved in the decisiveness of recent victories that no policy could have the least security until the gauntlet they had thrown down, was taken up and an answer given by the whole people of Canada.

The question arose of when the contest should come. A regular session of parliament for the purpose of passing a redistribution will, meant another 20 months of uncertainty, waiting and unemployment.

The premier said he did not want to be responsible for that. The extraordinary result of Medicine Hat and Alberta had brought him to the belief that there should not be a regular session. If the voice of Medicine Hat was to be the voice of Canada, somebody else besides himself would have to carry it out.

The premier said he had never pledged himself to rediestribution. If a redistribution bill could have been passed without long delay, he would have urged holding out for it and had sincerely intended to submit such a measure. Both the Farmer and Liberal parties, however, attached less importance to the need of redistribution than did the government, and had voted last February to dissolve without it.

Redistribution Means Delay.

A special fall session for redistribution to be followed by an appeal to the country was unthinkable because it would cause a midwinter election campaign, which, in the great northern and western provinces was out of the question.

There was no doubt as to what the issue would be. It was a straight tariff issue laid down before the country. The government's policy, Mr. Meighen declared, had brought prosperity and today Canada was in a better condition than were any of the other nations of the world. The Liberal platform had been laid before the people in the 1919 convention. Hon. MacKenzie King, seeking election, must asnwer either yes or no to the challenge of whether or not he intended to bring that platform into effect if he were elected.

The real challenge came from the Farmer party, said Mr. Meighen. By class appeal, misinformation and prejudicets, this party had gathered strength until it was a strong political party, whose set purpose was to reverse the fiscal policy of the country.

The platform of the Farmers' party was free trade and the adoption of either that or the Liberal platform meant the overthrow of the historic policy of this country. In the meantime, the farmers in Canada had not been unfairly treated at the hands of the government.

The facts placed before the farmers and working men by the government were of more importance than politics and promises. His appeal, he said, was to the whole people and not to any class; it was to "get together and engage in battle to show that Canada was once more resolved upon her course, that she would not be daunted nor turned aside and that she was steadfast, strong and true."

The premier was cheered to the echo as he concluded his address.

LONDON, Ont., Sept. 1.—Dealing with the outlay for defense purposes, Premier Meighen said that was not an issue and no man could make it so. Canada was spending less per capita for this than any other nation. It cost Canada $2.15 per head, against the bill of $13.13 in the United States. Australia's bill was $6.13 and New Zealand's $5.82.

Defense by land, sea and air cost Great Britain $22.36 and other countries higher still. For naval and militia defense, Canada paid less than other countries of her size. The nucleus of a militia was essential if Canada was not to be helpless in the face of aggression until it was too late

Tariff Policy Real Issue.

The tariff policy of Canada was a real issue today, however. For 43 years Canada had enjoyed protective tariff. That protective tariff had been maintained through the throes of depression. It was required to raise the necessary revenue. Today it was necessary for both protection and revenue. Canada had progressed by this plan. In the face of difficulties, there had been unretarded progress. The

RAIN AND SNOW CHECKS FOREST FIRES IN CROW

Fear Loss of Lumber Camps; Cache of Dynamite Explodes.

LETHBRIDGE, Sept. 1.—Rain and snow which fell in the zone of the Crows Nest mountains on Wednesday night served to check the forest fire raging there for some time, but reports late this afternoon indicate that the advantage gained had all been lost.

Camp 5 of the McLaren Lumber company, has been burned to the ground, and it is feared Camp Seven has been destroyed also, with a large cache of dynamite. Loud explosions issuing from that direction indicate its destruction, though the fire prevents an investigation. During Thursday forenoon the fire jumped a two-mile strip of standing timber without damaging it to any extent. High winds since early this morning have caused outbreaks in many places and though ever available man is being rushed to the scene by both the ranger service and the lumber companies, there seems to be no way of bringing the fire under control for the present. No towns are now threatened and no ranches have been reported destroyed.

RELATES PERSONAL EXPERIENCES IN WARTIME BOLSHEVIST RUSSIA

Speaking before a large audience in Eagle hall yesterday afternoon, Mrs. Emmaline Pankhurst, the noted woman suffragist and lecturer, brought many facts to light regarding the Russian *situation and the working out of Bol*shevistic principles as she related some of her experiences in Russia dur*ing the war. The meeting was held* under the auspices of the Nelson Women's institute and the People's Forum, and was presided over by Rev. J. P. Westman. After the lecture Mrs. Pankhurst was the guest of the two bodies at a reception held in the Hume hotel.

Mrs. Pankhurst opened her address by eulogizing the work of Women's institutes, stating that although their motto consisted of only three words, "For Home and Country," it covered the entire range of women's work.

When she, with others, was working for the vote, she went on, members of other parties told them their place was in the home. "It would perhaps come as a surprise," she said, "when I tell you that much of my time has been spent in the home."

She referred to her address at Crawford Bay and spoke of the pleasure it gave her to discuss with women their problems. She foresaw for the Women's institutes a great work in moulding the future of Canada.

Going into the work of women in England for "Home and Country" during the war, she gave a sketch of her Russian experiences in 1917, and wished she could tell of them as thrillingly as she had experienced them.

At that time, she said, the attitude of many societies in Great Britain was that of upholding the Russian revolutionists. Many felt they should give the revolutionists support, and many resolutions were sent congratulating Russians on their stand.

Situation Not Realized in Britain.

The situation was not realized in Great Britain at that time. A party of sympathizers with the revolutionists set out to a conference with their colleagues in Russia. About the same time, Mrs. Pankhurst said, she had addressed an open letter to Premier Lloyd George asking him to permit the women of her party to show patriotism for their country by obtaining first hand information about the Russian situation. Conditions were such that only a small party was permitted to go, Mrs. Pankhurst and one other. They were told to hold themselves in readiness to leave for Russia at short notice.

Traveling at that time was most difficult. One day the party was notified to start from Euston station at noon without being given any knowledge of the route to be taken. They left London and what was their surprise to find the British peace party on the same train.

They anticipated difficulties and laughingly said "the enemy is with us." When they arrived at the port of embarkation the entire crew of the transport, from officers to stewards, refused to sail if the peace party was on board, and further stated that D. O. R. A. (Defence of the Realm act) could put them in prison, but they would not sail.

Jonah Is Not Aboard.

The altercation was still proceeding when Mrs. Pankhurst retired for the night, and said to her colleague the peace party will probably have their way because men get their way. "I did the men an injustice, because we sailed without the peace party, and in the morning I was awakened by a stewardess who, kneeling beside my berth, said, 'Mrs. Pankhurst, Jonah is not on board.'"

The women's party entered Russia through Norway, which seemed proally, and Sweden, which appeared hostile. Their baggage was examined and they were treated to rude stares, consequently judged it best to say nothing.

At Petrograd they were met by the now famous head of the Czech-Slovaks, M. Masaryak, then a professor in the University of Petrograd. Mrs. Pankhurst's acquaintance with Czecho-Slovaks had its inception early in the war when a group of Czech-Slovak students, wishing to serve with the British army, sought the support of the Women's Suffrage party. They were referred to the war office and were advised that they were considered enemy aliens, although faithful to the cause of the allies. The matter was taken up by the Women's party and through their efforts these students were allowed to serve. To this affair Mrs. Pankhurst and her colleague owed introduction to M. Masaryak.

They made it their business to study all sides of the Russian question, their mission being particularly to see Russian women and to appeal to them to continue war work. On the evening of their arrival they were met by a delegation of Russian women who wished to honor them with a reception.

At this time Kerensky was in charge of the Russian government. The Czar was detained at the summer palace, and Kerensky had taken possession of the winter palace in Petrograd and was occupying the czar's suite.

Although Kerensky was dressed in the uniform of a Russian officer and tried to appear very democratic, he evidently felt the importance of his position and signed papers of state with an imperial flourish.

Sidelights on Kerensky.

Mrs. Pankhurst stated that, from reports of Kerensky's character, she expected to see an idealist of the noblest type, for it was continually said that although Kerensky had his head in the clouds, his feet were firmly planted on solid ground. It was probable that the party in power did not realize what Kerensky had been doing when he had first donned a Russian uniform and talked with Russian soldiers. In effect, what he said to them at that time was: "You are the leaders. You may fight or not, as you wish. You do not need to obey your officers. My suggestion is to form committees to handle your problems." As a matter of fact, continued Mrs. Pankhurst, this advice was acted on, and on occasion when the regiments were at the front committees sat on the edge of the trenches and debated their questions. You can of course realize where this doctrine put the Russian army," she continued.

Interviews Kerensky

Mrs. Pankhurst's own impression of Kerensky was that he was a materialist of the most pronounced type. At her interview with him she had taken the precaution to take a Russian lady interpreter with her. When she was introduced to Kerensky she said "Do you speak English?" He replied in the negative and she then addressed him in French. All through the interview he sat apparently inattentive, so she said to the interpreter. "Perhaps M. Kerensky does not understand my poor French. Will you interpret for me." Kerensky turned at once and said, "Madam, we Russians understand French and English, and we understand you English and your spychology. But you don't understand us. You consider us rude peasants."

Saw Battalion of Death.

This practically ended the interview, although Kerensky later said to the Russian woman, "Why do you listen to these women from another country? You are better educated than they."

While in Russia Mrs. Pankhurst met the peasant woman, Botich Kereva, who formed the Battalion of Death, whom she considered a Russian Joan of Arc. It is not so impossible in an oriental or semi-oriental country for a woman to serve in the army. This woman had served with distinction in the Russian army, was decorated for bravery, and was given the rank of a sergeant. When the revolution broke out, with the instincts of a soldier she realized something must be done to maintain the morale of the army.

She appealed to her fellow countrywomen and raised the Battalion of Death. Such were the peculiar social conditions in Russia that this woman's best friend was a Russian duchess, who lived near the barracks.

In this battalion were enrolled women from all ranks of Russian society. Mrs. Pankhurst actually saw this battalion under training, and so intense was the training and so earnest were the women to become a unit that Kerensky was able to send them to the front within five weeks.

Mrs. Pankhurst related how one of these women, whom she afterward met in a hospital, treasured a Prussian helmet as a souvenir. The owner was a wounded officer whom this girl was taking prisoner. As she stooped to help him up he shot her in the leg and she dispatched him.

Threatens Kerensky's Exposure.

All these women who returned wounded were determined to return to the front. They had the highest ideals and took the noblest vows. In spite of this fact, when recalled from the front, Kerensky sent them to guard the Winter palace. The conditions under which they were put to live were so dreadful and so much at variance with their ideals that the head of the British mission in Russia went to Kerensky and said that if the women were not released he would would expose Kerensky to the whole civilized world.

Horrors of Bolshevism.

Mrs. Pankhurst expressed her horror of Bolshevism, or the practical working out of Bolshevistic schemes. Their idea was to do away with all existing social conditions. They had socialized all women and had destroyed works of art and broken up the beautiful banners of precious stones that decorated their churches to use the proceeds for propaganda in other countries.

At the present time the population of Petrograd is one-fourth of what it was in 1917, and yet H. G. Wells passes lightly over the conditions in Russia. The most awful thing of all the awful things she saw and heard during the war she considered was a statement made by a man familiar with the situation, who said that the children in sense by their experiences. To women Russia were absolutely bereft of moral whose ideals were "For Home and Country" the actual conditions of Russia and the awful fact that it will take generations for this new race to become civilized must appear appalling.

When Mrs. Pankhurst returned to England in 1917, at a conference in Queens hall, London, she stated to Lloyd George in cabinet that if something was not done to put down Bolshevism it would encircle the world. She said present conditions proved she was correct.

Of all people, the French had shown the most wonderful ability to return to normal conditions. When in France she had visited the districts of Alsace-Lorraine that were taken from Germany in 1914. She had expressed her wonder that after 40 years this people had maintained their French allegiance. She had been told by a Frenchman that this would not have been possible had not the French women cultivated the French spirit.

At the close of the address the chairman stated Mrs. Pankhurst would be pleased to answer any questions. One of the few men ventured to ask Mrs. Pankhurst if she had observed that it was a common trait of Frenchwomen to support the undertakings of their men. In reply Mrs. Pankhurst said tht she was glad of an opportunity to pay a tribute to the innate patriotism of the French mothers. It was to that she attributed the greatness of the French nation. She had visited a little store in Paris during the war and the Frenchwoman serving her had attracted her attention. Entering into conversation with her she learned that the woman's husband was at the front and that she had that morning parted with her son, who had that morning left with his regiment for Serbia. Mrs. Pankhurst said: "It must be very hard for you to have your husband absent in the service and your son serving in another country." The woman seemed surprised that she required any sympathy. "We must," said she, "fight for our allies as well as ourselves." Such a spirit would make any country great, said Mrs. Pankhurst.

Mrs. Ruddick, Mrs. George Hunter and Mrs. H. P. Stirling took part in the discussion. A vote of thanks to Mrs. Pankhurst was moved by Mrs. Garland Foster and seconded by Mrs. H. H. Pitts. Mrs. Foster expressed the hope that Mrs. Pankhurst would in the near future return to Nelson for an evening meeting so that all would have the chance of hearing her.

WILL DEVELOP ARK GROUP AT DUCK CREEK

Active development work will be commenced on the Ark group at Duck creek in about two weeks' time, according to James A. Tiyo of this city, who owns the largest interest in the property. Mr. Tiyo was in the city yesterday making arrangements to put a small force of men to work on the property.

The Ark group consists of three claims on a true fissure vein carrying an average value of $61.70 in gold, silver and gray copper ores. Development work on a smaller scale has been carried on since June. A crosscut has been driven from the foot wall to the hanging wall, revealing a perpendicular vein 30 feet wide and widening out in places to 100 feet. The property has been given a very promising report by several mining engineers, including J. Hyde of Seattle, who once sought to bond it for $30,000.

WOMEN'S INSTITUTES OF KOOTENAY— BOUNDARY END HISTORIC SESSION

Ask Financial Aid for Operative Clinics in Schools; Urge Mrs. Foster as Child Welfare Organizer; Mrs. Pankhurst Speaks on Women of the Land; Community Homes for Girl Workers; Mrs. Lyne of Creston Is Now Advisory Board Member; Next Annual Gathering in Nelson.

CRAWFORD BAY, Sept. 1.—After taking discussions on many subjects of vital importance, the Kootenay and Boundary district women's institute, which crowded six business sessions into two days, wound up its business last night. Owing to the pressure, the proposed lawn party at the home of Mrs. M. M. Fraser, president of the local institute, had to be abandoned, and its place was taken by a luncheon at the Hotel Crawford Bay. The delegates universally expressed admiration at the scenic charms of this sheet of water and the progress evident in the district, and left by this morning's boat with obvious regret.

Child welfare, educational matters, immigration, home industries, home economics, public health, and legislation, were some of the departments of community life that were covered by papers and discussions, and made the basis of resolutions.

Next year's conference will be held at Nelson, which has given way for two years to other places, Rock Creek, the other institute inviting the gathering, being accorded a special vote of thanks.

Mrs. Lyne for Advisory Board

Mrs. F. E. Lyne, of Creston, was elected advisory board member, others nominated for the honor of heading the district being Mrs. W. Rutherford, Mrs. Hugh Ross, and Mrs. H. H. Pitts, all of Nelson. Mrs. R. W. Chalmers, occupant of this office for the past four years, who is retiring from institute work for the present for reasons of health, at Mrs. Lyne's request presided over the sessions to their conclusion. The scrutineers were Mrs. W. Carruthers of Nakusp, and Dr. Isabel Arthur, of Nelson.

Committees nominated by the advisory board, were elected by the gathering as follows:

Home economics—Mrs. F. L. Constantine, Cranbrook; Mrs. Gerald Ashby, Bonnington.

Public health and child welfare—Mrs. W. Garland Foster, Nelson; Mrs. J. C. Hamilton, Creston.

Education and better schools — Mrs. G. Mitchell, Robson; Mrs. C. D. Ogilvie, Harrop.

Legislation—Mrs. M. E. Lyne, Creston; Mrs. John Keen, Kaslo.

Immigration—Mrs. T. P. Wallis, Fruitvale; Mrs. R. B. Kirk, New Denver.

Publicity—Mrs. E. H. S. McLean, Nakusp; Mrs. W. Rutherford, Nelson.

Agriculture for women—Mrs. S. E. Kidman, Crawford Bay; Mrs. William Pratt, Thrums.

Home industries—Mrs. H. H. Pitts, Nelson; Mrs. R. W. Chalmers, Thrums.

Institute work and method—Mrs. James Johnstone, Nelson; Mrs. A. D. McLennan, Rock Creek.

Five directors, to assist with the program for next year's gathering, were named, Mrs. H. MacKenzie, Nelson; Mrs. W. J. Mohr, Willow Point; Mrs. C. D. Ogilvie, Harrop; Mrs. Gerald Ashby, Bonnington; Mrs. Thomas W. Dodd, Thrums.

All these elections took place yesterday afternoon, when also the institute put through its resolutions. The report of the resolutions committee was presented by Mrs. Ashby and the resolutions individually adopted after discussion were to the following effect:

Asking the board of health to set aside a sum for operative clinics for cases where parents for financial reasons are unable to have defects in their children remedied—proposed by Dr. Isabel Arthur, Nelson.

Memorializing the Associated Boards Trade to urge the C. P. R. to provide a tug service between Nakusp and Arrowhead as a link between the Kaslo and Nakusp line and Vancouver—proposed by Mrs. Keen, Kaslo.

Suggesting the posting at points of departure on the water, of charts and instructions in poster form, on resuscitation of the apparently drown—proposed by Mrs. Mohr.

Protesting against the Nelson fair board eliminating fruit and vegetables from the Women's institute competitions, to the disadvantage the rural institutes.

Requesting the board of health to secure the services of Mrs. Foster as organizer of the child welfare council in the Kootenay district—proposed by Mrs. Pitts.

The Nelson fair resolution drew from Mrs. Ross, a member of that fair board, an assurance that the board would meet the views of the rural institutes in every possible way.

Mrs. Foster suggested asking the board of health for dental inspectors for rural school districts, but withdrew the proposal.

Col. Lister on Good Cooks.

On Tuesday afternoon the gathering was briefly addressed by Lieut.-Col. Fred Lister, M.P.P., for Kaslo, who dealt pungently with a number of topics of interest to women, ranging from the exercise of culinary skill as a means of keeping a man contented, and the physical strength of the nation on a proper basis, to matters of legislation of a social nature.

The series of interesting and valuable papers read before the gathering also dated from Tuesday, when reports on "Child Welfare and Public Health" were presented by Dr. Arthur and Mrs. Foster.

Children Can Be Built.

Dr. Arthur, in her paper, emphasized the fact that children were imitative to a degree, copying the parents' ways from oddities of gait up to moral standards. By the observance of right principles, she said, parents could mould the life habits of their children and assure them healthy lives. Heredity was the other great factor, and she laid down the principle that every child had a right to be born healthy. The home atmosphere, she said should back up the teaching of the school, and parents should beware of the materialism of the age. She suggested dancing came too much into the lives of the present-day school children, and showed that compulsory medical inspection of schools should be a great lever to raise the race.

Pedigreed Hogs and Men.

Mrs. Foster read a much longer paper than Dr. Arthur, professing to give the newest information gained in four months recent study of child welfare work in the east. Kansas farmers, she said, knew the lineage of their hogs, and California citrus growers could trace the development of their varieties of fruit, but no such exact information was thought to be desirable in connection of the mating of mankind. However, scientific study was now beginning and man's existence was being examined from the chronological, physiological, mental, social and numerous other angles.

Canada, she said, had 265,000 expectant mothers annually, 15,000 of these dying in childbirth, while 11,500 lost their infants one month after birth. During the war the deaths of Canadian babies outstripped the country's war losses.

Present mothers, Mrs. Foster said, raised a large proportion of substandard men. A few necessary precautions during the past 100 years, she said, would have given a different race, and added 15 years to the average life. A chimpanzee would soon die on food Americans and Canadians ate. (Laughter.)

Mrs. Foster's Recommendations

Her recommendations included:

Maternity insurance and other protection for motherhood.

Training for both prospective parents.

Perfect physical health as insurance against disease.

Eradication of possible venereal disease from systems of both parents by use of Wassermann test.

Instruction in hygiene and diet.

Toothbrush drill and circulating air for children.

Explaining to the young the laws of generation.

These papers, both of which were applauded, led to a discussion of public health nursing. Mrs. V. S. viewing the position in the different MacLachlan, provincial secretary, reprovinces. In this province advisory letters were sent to expectant mothers, and graded diet folders for children of all ages were issued. She stated the department of education was willing to contribute to the support of school nurses, who at the same time were public health nurses.

She suggested small communities could group themselves to take advantage of this aid.

Dr. Arthur stated many families could not afford the expense of remedying defects found by the school health inspector, and suggested this should be provided for by the government.

Mrs. J. J. Walker of Nelson thought this was incumbent on the municipality, and suggested this duty would be summed if the institutes demanded it.

Mrs. MacLachlan said the federal department of health was willing to give provincial assistance to child welfare work as soon as child welfare councils were generally organized.

Report on Institute Method

On Tuesday evening reports on "Women's Institute Work and Methods," prepared by Mrs. James Johnstone, of Nelson, and Mrs. A. D. McLennan, of Rock Creek, were read by the chair.

Mrs. Johnstone laid emphasis on making surroundings beautiful, and in seeking to express the higher things, both in school life, and in other relations, to combat the materialism that led the young on a constant search for pleasure.

Mrs. McLennan advised discussions on the topics of the day, drill for every member in parliamentary usage and in keeping of minutes and study of domestic science and all branches of special knowledge that had a relatio nto better homes.

School Ideals.

Wednesday morning's session witnessed an extended discussion of school problems, following the report on "Education and Better Schools," submitted by Mrs. Ogilvie for herself and Mrs. Mitchell. After reviewing the reports of the different institutes on school matters, Mrs. Ogilvie asked whether it could be claimed that the modern cramming system was producing good, practical citizens. She was afraid the system was radically at fault, though there was a possibility that part of the fault lay at the door of mothers who were ambitious for their children in a wrong direction. She suggested the schools soared too high, and were not practical enough and proposed experimental stations and good gymnasiums.

The discussion was chiefly on how to improve the lot of the girl teacher in a small community.

Home Economics.

Mrs. Constantine and Mrs. Ashby presented reports on "Home Economics," which drew out a notable contribution from Mrs. Pankhurst.

Mrs. Constantine suggested the aversion to domestic service could be removed by setting a higher standard of efficiency. She advised short winter courses in domestic science, gardening, dairying, poultry keeping, home nursing, millinery, drawing of plans of farm buildings and other subjects that would train girls adn young women for farm life.

The part the local institute played in securing electric light for the communities adjacent to the Bonnington power plant was given by Mrs. Ashby as a sample of practical work.

Mrs. Pankhurst's Community Home.

Mrs. Pankhurst said she had unintentionally Tuesday evening failed to mention one phase of the possibilities of the land girl. Undoubtedly there was a domestic service question in this province, whatever some institutes might report, and there were cases of young wives limiting their families because they know the strain of doing their home work and bearing children would combined be too great. Mrs. MacLachlan had a plan worked out for this province that should be tried out. There should be a cooperative community home, in which a number of competent girls or women could live, while hiring out for domestic service.

There was such a young woman in a certain community on Vancouver Island, and Mrs. Pankhurst said she was proud of the record of this English Waac. This girl asked for casual work, refused to be considered less fit for hard work than men, and hired with a farmer. Then she nursed a woman. She was next heard of taking care of a maternity case. She was not at the speaker's meeting because she stayed home nursing a group of babies while their mothers heard her.

The community home could take care of the land girl and the teacher as well.

Land Girls Did Not Arrive.

Mrs. Chalmers referred to the disappointment when land girls did not arrive in the Kootenay after they had been promised and places had been found for them. The committee of English ladies was understood to have reported unfavorably.

Mrs. Ogilvie told of successfully employing women teachers as fruit pickers at Harrop and said she was going to build a house to house them in future.

Mrs. Foster declared domestic servants must be regarded as professional women, having certain wages and certain hours.

A demonstration community home in some section of the Kootenay was advocated by Mrs. MacLachlan. Several members of the legislature, she said, had endorsed her plan and she thought the institutes ought to take the matter up.

Provision of a tea room in Nelson was also discussed.

Report on Legislation.

The report on "Legislation", was submitted by Mrs. Keen, and it was a striking review of provincial and federal social advance in the last three years. Among the matters for congratulation enumerated by Mrs. Keen were:

Provision for equal guardianship of children.

Provincial Minimum Wage act for women and minimum wage board.

Juvenile court act.

Reduction of minimum attendance at school.

Correspondence courses for miners.

Night school for those desiring technical education.

Schools established or prospective for deaf and dumb, blind, and defective.

Development of the work of the federal health department at Ottawa.

Broadening scope of Red Cross work.

A health center at Saanich.

Clinics at Vancouver and Victoria for social disease.

The transferring of Tranquille sanatorium to provincial control.

Adoption act.

Testators' Family Maintenance act.

An act concerning employing women by night.

Mrs. Keen gave a long report on the provincial university, saying she was amazed at its inadequate housing. Her report was received with applause.

Publicity for Institutes.

A report on "Publicity" was submitted by Mrs. McLean, her colleague, Mrs. Rutherford being temporarily ill. Mrs. McLean's plan proposed a publicity secretary for each institute, who should report for the newspapers, and also to the committee, which should select from the material thus secured matter for publication further afield.

Mrs. Pollough Pogue, business manager of the Western Woman's Weekly, addressed the institute in connection with her journal.

The committee's report was approved, and resolutions were adopted accepting offers of space from the journal named and from The Daily News.

At the evening session Mrs. R. B. Kirk presented a brief but striking statistical report on "Immigration," showing the numbers of Chinese and Japanese in the various industries, particularly the land industries.

Women in Agriculture.

The report on "Agriculture for Women" was presented by Mrs. Kidman and Mrs. Pratt, and led to an active discussion, more particularly on cattle problems.

Mrs. Kidman gave a graphic description of the development of Crawford Bay as a commercial ranching community, mentioning it as a cherry, cattle and poultry district. Better boat service and systematic irrigation were needed.

Mrs. Pratt laid stress on the cattle industry in the Thrums district, which went in for silos to afford winter feed. Where silos were absent she advocated mangles for succulence. When a cow was far advanced in lactation, she said, the butter would not come. If the cream was pasteurized as it came to hand the butter would come readily.

To this Mrs. Chalmers added that merely heating the cream would make it amenable to the dasher.

Dr. Arthur and Mrs. Ross laid emphasis on testing cows for tuberculosis.

The last paper of the convention was read by S. E. Kidman, on "Beekeeping." It was extremely informative and interesting and provoked many questions.

Great Range of Work.

Reception of the reports from institutes was scattered all through the sessions of both days, there being a report from each secretary, and usually also one from each president or other delegate. These disclosed a wonderful range of activity among the institutes and a wonderful work being done. The range of work included sending the institute Mrs. Pankhurst, buying and beautifying cemetery plots, equipping halls and buying pianos, maintaining libraries, supporting night schools, having lecture courses, staging flower shows, having displays at fairs, giving donations to worthy objects innumerable, promoting consolidation of schools, and countless other activities of a similar nature. Lecture courses included everything that could be of use to the home. In some cases families in distress were relieved, and nearly all rural institutes provided hot lunches for the school children.

All delegates agreed that these local reports furnished the most interesting matter before the convention.

Votes of Thanks.

Votes of thanks adopted at various stages of the final day's sessions were tendered to the Crawford Bay Women's institute, the individual hostesses, the entertainers and the owners of conveyances who assisted the delegates back and forth; also to Mrs. Pankhurst, Colonel Lister, Dr. Arthur, Mrs. Foster, Mrs. Keen and Rev. J. S. Mahood for their addresses; also to Mrs. Chalmers as presiding officer, as well as for her work of the past year; Mrs. MacLachlan as provincial secretary, and The Daily News.

A special vote of thanks was extended to the department of agriculture for sending the institute Mrs. Pankhurst.

The closing words of the historic institute, pronounced by Mrs. Chalmers, paid one closing tribute to the "wonderful hospitality" of the people of Crawford Bay.

Adjournment being taken, the sessions came to a close late last night with the national anthem.

Patti, the singer, was born an hour after her mother left the stage.

More chinaware is made in Japan than any country in the world.

SINGING RUSSIANS CAUSE EXCITEMENT

No little stir and excitement was caused on Wednesday afternoon on Baker street by the appearance of four Russians from Grand Forks, dressed in white, who to the manifest delight of numerous small boys paraded in the direction of the C. P. R. station about 5 o'clock, singing in Russian. The men were unshaved and all of the party wore long hair hanging down over their shoulders.

Some light was thrown on the apparition by M. Baskin of this city yesterday, who stated the party, two men and two women, left Grand Forks a few days ago, intending to cross the line to reside in the United States. They took tickets and traveled by train as far as Columbia Gardens. From there they walked to Northport.

At that point their further progress was barred by police and immigration officials, the interference arousing the deepest religious feelings of the quartet. The hand of the law was no sooner laid on them that all four slipped out of their clothing despite the remonstrances of the astonished officials, and ambled in all their naked glory for two miles in the direction of Marcus singing Russian hymns.

After the officials of law and order had somewhat recovered their grip they followed and overtook the back-to-nature apostles and beseught them to resume the garb of civilization and return to Northport. This they absolutely refused to do unless an automobile for them to ride in was provided.

A car was hurriedly procured and the party driven to Northport, where the United States officials promptly bought railway tickets and shipped the quartet, still singing, to Nelson.

It was thought that the party were Doukhobors, but John Sherbinin and Sam Riebin, officials in the Doukhobor settlement at Brilliant, last night denied that the party had any connection with the community whatever. Mr. Riebin stated that no Russian living outside a community could possibly be a Doukhobor. Doukhobor was given to a religious sect whose religious principles closely followed those of the Canadian Baptist. He further stated that much misunderstanding exists in that regard, and Russians of other religious beliefs, such as the four who appeared in Nelson on Wednesday, were frequently confounded with Doukhobors.

Good Roads Develop Business for All, Including Railroads

While automobiles are cutting more and more into the business of the railways, by competing for short-haul freight and lessening the movement of passengers, there is a compensating aspect.

It is obvious, for example, that a considerable volume of traffic is brought to the railways in motor trucks operating in rural districts, which could not very well be hauled by horses, and the freight bill on autos shipped to all parts of the country turns millions of dollars annually into the treasuries of the transportation companies.

The production of motor vehicles of all classes has assumed huge proportions, and while this has created a certain measure of competition with the railways, it has not been a one-sided matter. Whatever promotes the industrial activities of the country is at once reflected in freight traffic.

In the long run, the general scheme of distribution reaches a state of adjustment which provides employment for both autos and railways.

Britain Has Fostered, Not Handicapped, Growth of Dominion Influence.

The statement in the London Nation that "as the years roll on Dominion influence in foreign affairs will steadily increase" will be accepted as axiomatic on this side of the Atlantic. With the sentiment of the corollary which this independent weekly proceeds to formulate that "some happy day the Dominion parliament will set up their own foreign affairs committee and demand that all the arcana of the foreign relations and diplomacy of the commonwealth be submitted to its scrutiny.," they may not meet such ready acceptance.

Canada was willing during her nursling days and in the early years of her adolescence following the confederation of the provinces to accept "such foreign policies as Downing Street in its wisdom was pleased to distil." This does not imply that there was no independence of thought in those early years. The records of the public acts and speeches of some of Canada's foremost statesmen belie such a statement. Yet it was only natural that with her hands full of the domestic problems that demanded the most careful scrutiny and at times sudden and decisive action matters of international concern were left largely in the hands of that part of the machinery of our government that by tradition and training was most capable of conducting them.

The Nation in its desire to secure political advantage over its antagonists paints Downing Street as a tyrannical master, dictating its will to dominions bound in fetters and straining to be loosed from her chains. The Montreal Star points out that such a view misrepresents the opinion of the vast majority of Canadians. That some of the decisions reached by the British foreign office have been unwise and may have involved material loss to Canada will be admitted, but Downing Street has been accepted as a part of the machinery of the government which the fathers of confederation, reflecting opinion in Canada may agree or perhaps suggest amendment to any proposals which may emanate from London, but she submits to no orders, save of her own free will. No government in Britain would take the mad course of attempting to force upon Canada a line of action to which the Dominion was not overwhelmingly disposed, neither has any British government given evidence of harboring such a desire.

The talk of the "monopolistic supremacy" of the foreign office is irritating and absurd. The "regime of mystery and jugglery of Downing Street," so far as Canadian problems are concerned, is a Frankenstein of journalistic imagination.

The influence of the Dominion in foreign affairs is increasing rapidly and it has been fostered by the action of the British government, and not by its hostility. The prime ministers in the report of the proceedings of their recent conference declare that their discussions "reveal a unanimous opinion as to the main lines to be followed by British policy and a deep conviction that the whole weight of the Empire should be concentrated behind a united understanding and common action in foreign affairs."

The prime ministers evidently believe that the conference which has recently closed was something more than a continuance of the imperial conferences of pre-war days, for they say that the "precedent created by the imperial war cabinet was revived with valuable results" and that they were "invited to meetings with the British cabinet to deal with imperial and foreign questions of immediate urgency."

Yet perhaps the most important finding in the report of the conference is that which deals with the holding of the constitutional conference which was proposed in 1917 at the imperial war conference.

"Having regard to the constitutional development since 1917, no advantage is to be gained by holding a constitutional conference" they declare. Instead of any formal declaration or attempt to define the bonds of Empire there is the proposal that the "prime ministers of the United Kingdom and the dominions should aim at meeting annually," and they approve of the existing practice of direct communication between the prime ministers of the dominions and the United Kingdom.

These recommendations of the prime ministers open up a new era in world government—common action under one sovereign of a group of equal states knit together by ties of blood and a joint heritage in racial traditio rather than by a formal constitution. They involve frequent meetings, sympathetic cooperation, mutual trust and broad statesmanship.

KING ATTACKS GOVERNMENT

SEAFORTH, Ont, Aug. 31.—At this afternoon's Liberal rally Hon. Mr. King launched an attack on the Meighen administration, enumerating the great sums expended by the Union government, particularly since the termination of the war. He compared unfavorably the present national debt with that under the Laurier regime and urged all Progressives, whether Farmer, returned soldier or the women's societies to rally under the Liberal principle. Dr. Beland dwelt at length on the different military undertakings since 1918 and assailed Hon. Hugh Guthrie and others of the Meighen cabinet.

Efficient Housekeeping

BY Laura A. Kirkman

SOME RECIPES FROM READERS

The following excellent recipes were sent to me from Reader Friends:

Mrs. J. D. C.: Rolled Oats Cookies: 1 1-2 cups granulated sugar, ½ cup butter and lard mixed, ¼ teaspoon salt, 1 level teaspoon soda dissolved in ½ cup of sour milk or buttermilk, 1 beaten egg, 1 teaspoon each of mace, nutmeg and cloves, 3 tea-cups rolled oats, 1 large cup raisins and enough flour to make a dough just stiff enough to handle. Flour the board well, roll out and cut; place in greased pans and bake in a quick oven about 15 minutes. Cinnamon may be used instead of the mace if desired. These are fine.

Chocolate Cookies: 1 cup granulated sugar, ½ cup butter, 1 beaten egg, 1 teaspoon soda dissolved in ¼ cup sour milk (or take ½ cup sweet milk and 2 teaspoons baking powder), 5 tablespoons cocoa, 2 teaspoons cocoa, 2 teaspoons vanilla extract; pinch of salt and 3½ cups of flour sifted together. Mix in the order given and set in a cool place till stiff, then roll out and cut. Bake in a quick oven and cover with white icing.

White Icing for Cookies: 1 cup confectioners sugar, 1 tablespoon butter, 1 egg-white with ½ teaspoon vanilla extract stirred into it. Beat all well together and spread.

Fort Wayne Cookies: 2 cups sugar (white), 1 cup butter, 1 cup lard, 1 beaten egg, 1-3 teaspoon salt, 1 cup sweet milk, 1 whole nutmeg (grated) 3 teaspoons baking powder and enough flour to make a soft dough. Roll out rather thick (about ¼ inch) and sprinkle with sugar. Cut in round shapes, press a raisin in the center of each cookie, place them in a greased pan and bake about 20 minutes in a good oven.

Mrs. G. E. S.: 'I wonder if you would like my recipe for ice cream, which everyone says is good? We have a quart freezer and so that is the amount I make, but of course a larger amount could be made by doubling this recipe: I take 1¼ cups of milk, ¾ cup of sugar, and the yolks of 2 eggs; cook this in a double boiler till thick and creamy, then set it away in the freezer can to cool. When ready to freeze, I add 1 cup of cream (not whipped), 1 teaspoon vanilla and the whites of the eggs stiffly whipped. When I make coffee cream I add about ¼ cup of strong coffee (I use at least a good tablespoon of coffee to make that amount). And sometimes I crush 8 maroons and add those, using 1 teaspoon of vanilla with them. When I wish to make Maple Ice Cream I use ¾ cup of maple sirup and no sugar, and use only 1 cup of milk when making the custard. I also make strawberry and chocolate flavor too, from this recipe—simply changing the flavorings."

Miss E.: "Thank you for the fine recipes you sent me. I appreciate them so much that I am sending you this recipe, to print in the column for other women:

Plum Olives: Gather green plums before they begin to change color, wash them, and put them in a weak brine for 24 hours. In the morning drain and put in another brine, adding 1 teaspoon of baking soda to each gallon of water, bring this to the boiling point and the plums will turn to an olive green color like the regular olives. Pack at once in hot, sterilized jars and seal airtight while hot. Let stand 8 weeks before serving. This is an old family recipe."

Tomorrow—Two Good Lunches.

All inquiries addressed to Miss Kirkman in care of the "Efficient Housekeeping" department will be answered in these columns in their turn. This requires considerable time, however, owing to the great number received. So if a personal or quicker reply is desired, a stamped and self-addressed envelope must be enclosed with the question.—The Editor.

Styles

BY LENORE

It takes no more than a first glance to tell that this model is something new in the realm of tailored suits. It is of the Russian blouse type referred to a few days ago, and features the low waistline which is usually so becoming to the slim youthful figure.

The material used is dark blue duvetyn with taupe caracul banding, and when worn open there is a facing of plum colored silk which blends beautifully with the blue and taupe and is emphasized in the purple quills of the gray felt hat.

As for the skirt, just as one is about to decide that all suit skirts are to be of the straight and narrow variety, comes this tricky idea, namely, a circular skirt on a yoke foundation, with about six inches of the width at each side seamed up from the hem to the base of the yoke. In reality, it is less eccentric than it sounds.

PATTERN NO. 248

A pattern for the above model (No. 248) can be obtained in sizes 34, 36 or 38, by sending to The Daily News, your name, address, and 50 cents in postage stamps. PARLIAMENT TO DISSOLVE foundations of a great country had been well and truly laid.

This had not all been accomplished by insistence on a high protective tariff. For years back, Canada's tariff had ranged around 16 per cent of the total goods imported; today it was less than 15 per cent. Our tariff on dutiable goods alone averaged under 22 per cent, the lowest since 1876. The prime minister doubted if this was even higher than that of Great Britain under the tariff which had just passed the house of commons. The man who talked of the tariff of Canada as a high tariff, especially if he had maintained a higher tariff himself, was a humbug. The world was reeling from the shock of war; nations were struggling to adjust themselves to new conditions. Every competing country was defending itself by higher tariff, striving to hold its own population and establish its own industries by surer markets at home and thus enable them to battle for wider world markets Production on a large scale and at a low price was their aim.

States Put Up Barrage.

That was the competition Canada faced. The United States had sold goods to Canada at the rate of $773,136,975 annually for five years and only bought half as much in return. And the United States had just erected a new tariff wall to keep out Canadian and other products. That tariff wall imperilled our export business. A few years ago Canada had accepted the United States offer of free wheat and flour, but a war embargo had interfered and the reciprocal arrangements had been effective only a few months when the new "barrage" was directed against Canadian products in the American market.

A tax of 35 cents against wheat and 20 cents against flour had been placed against Canada. Barriers had been placed against the export of potatoes. Three years ago an agreement regarding fisheries had been reached and six weeks ago it had been canceled and all the old barriers renewed. The prime minister said he spoke these words in no spirit of hostility. The United States had every right to pursue this course of it saw fit, but Canada had every right also to safeguard her industrial systems, and that safeguard lay in a tariff system made by the Canadian people and for the Canadian people. That system must not rest on the issue of arrangements with the United States, declared the prime minister.

"The language I use interprets the conduct of great leaders of both parties through almost all of our history.

"I believe it is the overwhelming sentiment of Canadians today," he declared.

Dissects Liberal Challenge

A challenge to this policy, said Mr. Meighen, came from the official opposition under Hon. MacKenzie King. It came "with muffled drums and an uncertain chorus," and none knew what was their song or what they intended to do. The prime minister quoted from the Liberal platform, adopted at the 1917 national convention, and said he put on record the question: "Does Mr. MacKenzie King stand pledged to put that platform in effect if returned to power?" That question admitted of only two answers.

"Put that convention platform (of placing on the free list 19 classes of articles, including foodstuffs, farm implements and machinery, lumber of every kind and increasing the British preference at once to 50 per cent and substantially reducing the tariff which they themselves had placed on all clothing, boots and shoes and articles of general consumption) in effect, and you add enormously to unemployment. As it is, we have far more than enough but we have the least for our population of any country that went through the war."

That platform, declared Mr. Meighen, would cripple Canadian industries. The wiping away of the small barriers at present effective would open Canadian markets to American goods. If Mr. King answered "yes," his platform was unsound and un-Canadian. If he answered "no" he convicted himself of bad faith and, therefore, was unfit for power. If he refused any answer then he was unfit for high office because he was lacking in frankness and candor. The challenge of the Liberals was not a serious challenge, however, said the prime minister. He doubted if that party would have a single candidate between Lake Superior and the mountains.

The real challenge came from the Farmers' party, born in western Canada, whose set purpose was to reverse the fiscal policy of this country.

Manly Thing to Face Farmers.

That party had grown to unexpected strength, and in Alberta it had registered a triumph by almost 10,000 majority. The facts could not be ignored. The manly thing was to accept their challenge and get up and face them. The breath of life of that party, Mr. Meighen said, was free trade. It could mean nothing else.

"All these men were protectionists," the premier said, "but they all had to listen to silly chatter of demagogues telling them they were the creatures of privileges and the allies of the rich."

A Farmer movement, Mr. Meighen declared, had grown to full maturity. It had demonstrated its strength, but these men of the Farmers' party were wrong and time would prove them so.

"There are those who refuse to be alarmed," said Mr. Meighen. "They say 'Look at Mr. Crerar; he is already hedging on the doctrine that he has preached for years—free trade. He says it is a fiscal paradise, but he does not want paradise too soon.' Very true, I know he is talking nonsense of that kind. But the movement is bigger than its leader and their organization won't be betrayed."

The prime minister said he supposed that every Farmer elected would be pledged to their platform and his resignation would be in hand as security. The Alberta Liberals in January, 1919, had adopted the whole Farmer platform and declared that Canada should strike for free trade with both England and the United States. Prominent figures in the Liberal opposition had just got through declaring that the Farmer platform and their own (on tariff matters) were the same.

"A revision of our tariff policy is due and overdue," said Mr. Meighen. "We must decide our tariff policy. That is the big imperative thing facing the people of Canada today and until they decide, and we get tariff stability, we cannot have business stability. Until we know whether the people want a protective tariff or whether they don't, no tariff is secure."

Must Fact Contest

"When should the contest come?" asked Mr. Meighen, adding that it must be faced. "He did not want to be responsible for another year and a half without dependable revision. If the voice of Medicine Hat was to be the voice of Canada, somebody else besides himself would have to give it effect."

"What about redistribution?" he asked his audience. "If a redistribution bill could be passed at a special session without involving a long delay, then a special session ought to be called to try to pass such a bill. Though I have never pledged myself to redistribution, I have sincerely intended to submit such a measure and have argued that the need of redistribution was an important reason why the present parliament should not be prematurely dissolved."

Redistribution First Impracticable

But he added he could see no reasonable possibility of having such a task accomplished. Complete census returns, as required by law, could not be assembled before December 1. Even could the census be completed and parliament called by Nov. 1 there would be no possibility of being through with the session by December and as the new parliament would have to meet early in the spring, that would mean a midwinter campaign.

There is, therefore, he declared, no means of redistribution except at the price of holding the country in suspense through very difficult times, for 18 to 20 months, on an issue formidably challenged, an issue that goes to the heart of our industrial and national life.

Recommends Early Dissolution

"For these reasons I think the right thing to do is to recommend a dissolution of parliament at an early date to provide time for full discussion and an election before the new year. That course I intend to pursue. There is this fact to be noted—not so much by way of argument as by way of interest—the rural portion of Canada would gain in the prairie west, but they would lose beyond all question, more in the east than they could possibly gain in the west. The advantage is with them."

The contest to be faced, said the premier, the blind and evil doctrine that the government consisted of merely balancing advantages between different classes and occupations, must be got rid of. There must be equitable laws. The burden of taxation should be borne by those best able to bear it and that rule could not be pressed further than it had been by this government of Canada, without making the poor suffer.

The great responsibility of government was to hold the country in its vision as a national living unit and to follow such a policy as would give that national unit a chance with our competitors of the world. That was the great essential, and failure to carry it out was the unredeemable sin; it meant failure for all classes alike.

There were those, he said, who had spent their time for years back—not without remuneration—in prejudicing the farmers against the other classes of Canada and planting in their minds the seed of oppression.

Propaganda False Throughout.

This propaganda had been false in its premises and pecunious in its consequences; it had provoked unhappiness and discontent where there was no cause. Agriculturists in this country had difficulties in contending against nature's forces, but those who preached that a protective tariff was the enemy of the farmer of this country had not read history. The farmer in England resisted free trade. The farmer of the United States was the father of the Fordney bill. The time would come when the farmer of Canada would resist free trade. Meantime there had been no unfair treatment. The farmer had not been asked to pay more than his share of taxation in any form whatever.

Lowest Schedule in Tariff.

Up to the end of last month, said Mr. Meighen, we collected $35,337,981 in customs taxation and $57,979,050 in direct taxation. The customs tax on articles used by the farmer alone—machinery and implements—was the lowest schedule in the tariff. It averaged now 14.6 per cent lower than it was 10 years ago. But of the $57,979,050 in direct taxation, the farmers, who are two-thirds of the whole population, paid approximately two-thirds of 1 per cent of the whole.

Ten years ago, he said, the customs revenue of Canada had been almost the whole of our national income. Today it was less than half.

The proportion of Canada's rural population to the rest of her people had not kept up, but farm production had multiplied many times over through the last 40 years. "And in the rate of our progress and in the improvement of our conditions, we certainly do not suffer by comparison with any other land. I ask you if more than that could be done?"

Three Different Interpretations.

These facts, he said, were of more importance to the farmers of Canada than mere professions, platitudes and promises. These facts were heavier than the imaginings of theorists or the protestations of opposition leaders, three of whom had interpreted their platform differently on the same day; one of whom had said it was only made to get in on, and any one of whom could change his color between the town hall and the country school.

Better Here Than Elsewhere.

Speaking to the workingmen, the premier said he would not "prate like the demagogue and pretend that every one else was their foe." This was a time of unemployment. The war pendulum had swung back and the shattered world had not steadied yet. It had not developed the markets, but was struggling to readjust itself to the era of peace. "Look over civilization where you like," said Mr. Meighen, "and you will find that conditions here are better than anywhere else. This is the country that will recover first. But it is work and all classes of work that we want."

To provide this work, he said, our industries must stay here. They must expand and the unemployed must be given jobs. This could not be brought about by washing out the tariff. "You can't get industries unless you establish conditions that give them a chance to get on against the industries of other countries with which they must compete," Mr. Meighen declared. Any other policy makes the working man an exile from Canada.

Any march which Canada had been away from that policy had been followed by a march back toward it. Canada must never drift into a position where she was dependent on the fiscal decisions of another nation—and that the most aggressive commercial nation on earth. "The moment we forget that truth we begin to lose the battle," he said.

"But my appeal," said the premier, "is not to any one class; my appeal is to the whole people, to every man and woman who wants to do right by this country, who wants to preserve and expand our field of endeavor. My appeal is to every one who breathes the spirit of the dominions; who sound the name Canadian with pride and hope and love. Come, let us get together and engage in battle and show once more that Canada is resolved on her course, that she won't be turned or bent or dented, that she is steadfast, strong and true."

The premier was cheered again and again as he resumed his seat after his address.

Pique Kills Research.

Hume Cronyn, M. P. for London, referred particularly to his work in the house of commons on the soldiers' civil reestablishment and research committees. The work of the research committee, said Mr. Cronyn, has been killed by the senate. Ignorance, pique and intrigue were responsible for killing the research bureau legislation in the senate, after the commons had passed the bill. Jealousy on the part of one or two of the senators because of the abolition of the conservation committee had led to misstatements as to expenditures necessary and the benefits that would be received.

S. F. Glass, M. P., also spoke briefly, referring to the need of a tariff policy which would keep to the Canadian people the fruits of Canadian labor.

COMING HOLIDAYS CONTROL MARKET

Rails Fall Off Disappointingly; Foreign Oils Dominate Constructive Side.

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—The approaching trade holiday exerted a pronounced influence over today's stock market. Dealings fell far below recent averages and consisted largely of the closing of short contracts.

Continued firmness of money rates, with call loans holding at 5½ per cent and comparatively few extensions of September maturities except for the shorter maturities, also figured in the irregular operations.

Declaration of regular common and preferred dividends by the American Car and Foundry and American Steel Foundries company was noteworthy because it suggested that better conditions are expected in the steel and equipment industries. Rails were a source of disappointment, however, notably the Hill group. Losses of 1 to 3 points ranged throughout the division. On the constructive side the situation was dominated by foreign oils. Mexican Petroleum and kindred stocks scored extreme gains of 1 to 5 points. Steels, motors, coppers, shippings, sugars and chemicals closed at irregular declines.

Sales were 365,000 shares.

British and other European exchanges moved more favorably to home centers, sterling gaining almost 2 cents at the best. Improvement extended to Far Eastern points, including China.

Mexican government 4s and 5s were active and strongest of the foreign bonds. French and the new Brazilian issues also were in demand.

Total sales, $10,250,000.

TORONTO BOARD

TORONTO, Sept. 1.—Divided weakness in Brompton and softness in some of the other papers characterized today's trading. There was no local explanation of the weakness in the papers.

Toronto Railway showed little result of the transfer of company's affairs to the hands of the city. After opening at 68½, the stock sold up to 69 and then closed at the opening figure, with a loss of ½.

The balance of the industrial list was spotty, with an inclination to strength. Ames Holden preferred sold up to 29, a gain of 12 points since the last on this market. Similarly, Rogers preferred, after three weeks' inactivity, showed a gain of 7 points to 80.

Victory bonds were stronger and banks soft.

BARRISTERS FRATERNIZE.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 31.—Britons and Americans joined tonight in expressions of friendliness and brotherhood between the bar of the mother country and that of the United States, when Sir John A. Simon, president of the British Bar association, and John W. Davis, former United States ambassador to Great Britain, spoke before the American Bar association in annual convention here.

Love of liberty, a joint literature, the same language and the common law were declared by Sir John to be the four evangelists of the gospel of Anglo-American friendship.

Law, the handmaid of order, the instrument of justice, the arbiter of dispute, is the cement which binds together the fabric of human institutions, Sir John declared, in urging pride in the profession and belief in its contribution to the future advancement of the world.

The session, which drew a large audience, was presided over by Elihu Root, former secretary of state.

BRINGING UP FATHER

By George McManus

MERCHANT TELLS A REMARKABLE STORY

Really Sounds Incredible But Well Known Man Testifies to Truth of It.

Writing from Maxeys, Ga., A. J. Gillen, proprietor of a large department store at that place, says:

"I have a customers here who was in bed for three years and did not go to a meal at any time. She had five physicians and they gave her up. One bottle of Tanlac got her up, on the second bottle she commenced keeping house and on the third she did all the cooking and housework for a family of eight."

This sounds really incredible, but it come unsolicited from a highly creditable source and is copied verbatim from the letter.

Tanlac is sold in Nelson by The Canada Drug & Book Co., and by leading druggists everywhere.

IN THE SPOTLIGHT OF SPORT — By Wood Cowan

Babe Adams is an old pitcher with a new record.

He has won nine straight victories at this writing. And that's the season's record for pitchers!

Adams might rightly be entitled to all the praises that are heaped upon him for "Babe" is past 38 years of age.

It was Babe who helped the Pirates back in 1909, to win the pennant and a world series. Five years previous he began his professional baseball career with St. Louis. The Cardinals sent his back to Louisville for more seasoning. He came to Pittsburg in 1908.

This old "vet" knows every batter and his weakness.

Control, a good fade-away, a fast ball and an ability to make his brain an esset is Adams' forte.

Babe's presence on the team has, no doubt, put the Pirates where they are, for superior pitching has turned the trick. Pitching knowledge and batter's weaknesses imparted to the younger twirlers on the staff by Adams must have helped to a great exjent in obtaining the high brand of pitching the Pirates have been getting all season.

Babe Adams, the hero of the world series of 1909, may have a chance to repeat this fall, the way the Pirates are going.

Beginning at the top and setting a season's record after 17 years of professional baseball is some feat, say we.

GOLF CLUB TEA ON MONDAY WINDS UP GOLF AND TENNIS TOURNAMENTS

Mrs. James O'Shea led the flight in yesterday's golf qualifying rounds with a card of 54, with Mrs. G. A. Potter hard on her heels at 56. Mrs. Cartmel was next with 57 and then the field tailed off; Mrs. McCulloch scoring 62, Miss Cameron 69, Mrs. Dr. Smyth 70, and three in a bunch at 71, Miss Gigogt, Miss Charlotte Armstrong and Mrs. Bunyan. Mrs. T. R. Jones turned in a card of 73 and Mrs. C. I. Archibald 76. And that's the sum total of the twelve try-outs yesterday.

There are some other lady competitors to traverse the house today and then the tournament flights will be arranged.

Things are now fined down pretty much and the play-offs should prove exciting. Mrs. O'Shea, Mrs. Potter and Mrs. Cartmel are separated in the trials so closely that any golf hazard may change the order.

As to the tournament proper, due for Sept. 3, 4 and 5, play to date gives no clue to the probable winners. All events are wide open and will be interesting to watch by the general public no less than golf fiends.

All matches finish Monday, Sept. 5, when there will be a glorious finale of both golf and tennis events. This is the great day for golff and the house committee of the club have arranged a tea at the club house at which ice creams and other refreshments will be served.

Nelson Golf and Country club has besides golf links and tennis courts an asset in scenic beauty worth a visit to anyone. When in addition one can enjoy tea in comfort and even phone for a taxi, then the acme of convenience is reached.

Monday, Sept. 5, is the culmination point of a double tournament, where rivals in golf and tennis will meet and for that day the ladies' house committee has fixed their annual tea which promises to be one of the social events of the year.

These same ladies, without detracting from the importance of the golf festival, are taking a most active part in the joint dance to be given jointly by the Golf and Tennis clubs to visitors on Saturday, Sept. 3.

Their kindly advice is dance on Saturday, take tea with us Monday and take back nice thoughts of Nelson.

ANDREW KIRKALDY EXPOUNDS ON GOLF

Veteran Professional Tells Many Amusing Reminiscences of Golf Celebrities

LONDON, Sept. 2.—(By Canadian Press)—One of the outstanding personalities in golf is Andrew Kirkaldy, the professional attached to the Royal and Ancient club. "Andra," as he is affectionately known to thousands of intimate golfing friends, has told his story in a properly illsurated volume entitled "My Fifty Years at St. Andrews." It is a book crammed full of amusing reminiscenes of a life spent on the classic links in the company of distinguished amateurs and famous professionals.

He has had many encounters with Vardon, but never once did he beat him. Those were in the gutta ball days when Vardon could putt. In later years "Andra" often reproached Vardon about his execrable putting, declaring that he could not putt a ball into his (Kirkaldy's(mother's wash tub. Even Vardon admits that "Andra" is not very far wrong. Twenty years ago Vardon was invincible, and it was Kirkaldy who was forever warning Taylor, Braid and Herd, the great contemporaries, to "watch the greyhound." They certainly watched him, but, as Taylor sorrowfully explained, "none of us can catch him. Kirkaldy regards Vardon as the greatest of all golfers because he clearly demonstrates that the game is an art. "The game is a pure joy for him, for he makes every shot in such an effortless way, always with a faint smile flickering over his features." Kirkaldy aptly describes it as the "Vardonic smile."

Could Not Beat Vardon.

Although he could never defeat Vardon, Kirkaldy has beaten Braid, Taylor and Herd more than once. He regards Braid as a "prince of sportsmen," who when he lost a match would say, "I deserved to lose and you deserved to win."

Sandy Herd has perhaps entered more into Kirkaldy's life than any of the rest of the "Great Four." As boys they began their golf with shintie-sticks in the narrow streets about the old cathedral. Kirkaldy says that Herd has no equal in playing in a gale. He brings over his right hand at the moment of striking, and hugs the ball well to the wind. Herd is a master at half-feeling the ball, and making the wind fight for him, instead of fighting against him. Kirkaldy's stories are illimitable. He tells of "Wee Bennie' '(Sayers), his lifelong friend and keen rival, playing in a match at Wemyss, where from the third tee he drove his ball onto the roof of the castle. The ball struck among the ivy forty yards up. Sayers, always very nimble, ran up the castle wall like a squirrel, taking a club with him. He managed to secure a foothold among the stones and the ivy and played the ball almost to the green. Everyone cheered the "wee devil," as Sayers is known among his friends.

Tales of Hell Bunker.

Many stories have been told of the famous "Hell Bunker" at the fourteenth hole at St. Andrews. Kirkaldy tells of a match he once had with a clergyman who was extremely anxious to beat "Andra," and promised Willie Brown, his seventy-two year old caddie, an extra half crown if he succeeded.

At the fourteenth the clergyman hit his ball into "hell," and the caddie, seeing his ball lying tucked up against the face of the steep bunker, muttered—thinking disconsolately of the half crown—"That's a hell of a lie, sir. Ye'll never get it out unless ye take a spake."

"Willie Brown," said the clergyman, severely, "don't you ever read your Bible? Don't you know that sinners go to hell, where there is a lake of fire and brimstone?"

Brown's reply was as follows: "Hold your tongue, minister. We're both in hell now, an' it's no such a bad place after all; more sand than brimstone anyway."

Take Niblick to Hell.

Even the bishop of London has been in "hell"—and got well out. His lordship was playing with Kirkaldy, and had the misfortune to put his ball into an almost unplayable place in the hazard. He despaired of getting it out, but to his astonishment he made a miraculous recovery. The bishop was so surprised that he climbed out of the bunker and, pleased as a boy, shouted, "That was a good shot, Andrew?" "Yes," said Kirkaldy, "you got out of hell very well. When he die," he added, naively, "mind and take your niblick with ye." The story is made more piquant by the fact that the crowd that was following the match was composed mostly of ministers.

CRAWFORD BAY IS MOST HOSPITABLE

Returning Delegates Sing Its Praises; Entertained at Luncheon.

Crawford Bay's hospitality knows no limits, Nelson delegates returning from the annual convention of the Kootenay and Boundary District Women's institute declared yesterday. The large majority of the delegates returned through or to Nelson, and all told the same story.

The large-hearted community had hoped to hold its visitors for the third day, and had arranged a steamer trip on the Moyie for yesterday afternoon. That, as well as the proposed lawn party, had to be abandoned owing to the contraction of the program that was necessary, and the hospitable residents had to be content with entertaining their guests at two luncheons, each of which seated nearly 50 in the dining room of Hotel Crawford Bay. The second of these luncheons, held at noon on Wednesday, had a brief but enjoyable toast list, over which Rev. J. S. Mahood of Queens Bay presided.

After the toast to "The King" had been honored in the customary way, Mrs. James Lytle of the Crawford Bay institute proposed the toast to "Our Guests," in cordial phrase, and Mrs. E. H. S. McLean of Nakusp replied for the delegates, expressing their appreciation of the community's hospitality.

The toastmaster declared the meeting of the institute an historical one, for the institute had as its guest of honor a historical person, one who had made history. An admirer of Mrs. Pankhurst who had formerly seen her sent her a message through him, to the effect that he was pleased to hear that she, like a famous brand of refreshment, was "still going strong." (Laughter.) After coming under the sway of the eloquence of this irresistible woman, all had been willing captives to her line of argument. He also conveyed to Mrs. Pankhurst the thanks of Colonel Lister, who was unable to be present at the luncheon, for enjoyment of her address the previous evening.

Mr. Mahood declared the Women's institutes were going to wield a powerful influence on the community life of the country.

Mrs. Pankhurst Replies.

In replying to the toast heartily drunk in her honor, Mrs. Pankhurst said she really believed that if the institution represented by Mr. Mahood—that was to say, the church—and the women's organizations, and the healing profession, should get together, they could make this wonderful country one fit for children to be born in, to be reared in, and to grow up to be good citizens in a—— (Hear! Hear!)

Her own work, to which allusion had been made, was only preliminary, the forging, as it were, of a weapon that could be used to accomplish women's work. That work was still to be done, but women were now in a position where they could fitly take up their responsibility, and had the power to accomplish their just objects. (Applause.)

Mrs. R. W. Chalmers, Thrums, presiding officer of the district institute, proposed a toast to "Our Entertainers," which was most enthusiastically drunk.

In acknowledging it, Mrs. M. M. Fraser, president of the Crawford Bay institute, expressed pleasure that the institutes guests had enjoyed their visit and hoped it would be repeated.

The function ended with the national anthem.

At the various sessions, and at the luncheons, there were musical numbers, Miss Jean Baird always being accompanist, and in one case principal in a piano solo. At different times Mrs. M. M. Fraser of Crawford Bay and Mrs. J. Milroy of Nelson sang solos, while Mrs. E. E. Kidman of Crawford Bay gave humorous recitations.

Pigeon Flies 2000 Miles With Message for Aid.

Photo shows the pigeon which dropped wet and exhausted in New York City street after a flight of 2000 miles. On the leg was a message to Daniel J. Singer, which said that Dr. Edmund Heller, famous naturalist, was lost in the Hoodoo mountains of Yellowstone National Park. Provisions and pack horses have been sent up to find him. Dr. Heller is a famous naturalist and ornithologist and joint author with Theodore Roosevelt of Life Histories of American Game Animals. He was on a trip taking photographs of wild animals when he became lost. The expedition was under the auspices of the Roosevelt Wild Life Station of Syracuse. He has hunted with rifle and camera in the wilds of Africa and China and accompanied both Roosevelt and Roy Chapman Andrews on expeditions.
