"BIG BILL" THOMPSON, CHICAGO'S MAYOR, WHO YESTERDAY ANNOUNCED HIMSELF AS REPUBLICAN PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

Mayor William Hale Thompson, mayor of Chicago, after some days at Washington, where he was working in the interests of "flood control," has come out as a possible candidate for the Republican nomination for president. He is said to be a compromise candidate. Mayor Thompson had gained wide publicity by his anti-British action and in accordance with his pre-election pledge is determined to rid Chicago of all books on history that he claims are "pro-British," or that put the men of the Revolution in an unfavorable light, and the good people of Chicago may soon be treated to a sight reminiscent of the eighteenth century. Mayor Thompson proposes to have all "pro-British" books taken from the shelves of the Chicago public libraries, piled on the lake front, and burned by the public hangman.

TIMES DECLARES MACLEAN POLICY INCONSISTENT

Victoria Liberal Paper in Editorial Issues Sharp Warning to Government

VICTORIA, Nov. 9.—The Victoria Times (Liberal) takes a direct issue with Premier MacLean's policy at the interprovincial conference at Ottawa.

British Columbia claims, it states, are inconsistent. In a remarkably frank utterance the Times demands that federal authorities reject Premier MacLean's request for increased subsidies. The paper declares that this province has no right to ask at the same time that the Dominion government abolish the income tax. The editorial is evidently intended as a sharp warning to the government, which the Times has consistently supported.

Bar U and Willow Creek Ranches Are Sold at High Price

CALGARY, Nov. 9.—One of the largest deals in the history of Alberta ranch property—involving more than $750,000—was put through today when the George Lane company sanctioned the sale of the Bar U and Willow Creek ranches, together with all live stock and equipment, to the P. Burns company.

Schooner Found After Drifting Twenty-One Days

Crew Lived on Herring While Waves Tossed Helpless Craft

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 9. — After drifting disabled for three weeks, the Brtish two-masted schooner Helen G. McLean, owned in Sydney, C.B., was towed into Boston harbor today by the fishing steam trawler Ocean, which picked her up 90 miles southeast of Highland Light last Monday. The schooner had lost her rudder in heavy weather.

Captain Adam Power and his crew of six men told they had eaten nothing but "salt herring" for the past week. The schooner contained no larder.

WIDOW IS GROSSLY MISTREATED BY GANG

BELFAST, Nov. 9. — Because a farmer neighbor visited her home on Hallowe'en, Mrs. Mary McGintry, a poor widow who lives near Carrickmacross on the Ulster border, has had her hair hacked off by a masked gang that stripped off her clothes, and forced her, while nude and shivering, to kneel down at midnight in a nearby field during a heavy frost.

The woman's children were left in the house, crying with fear. The gang menaced Mrs. McGintry with pistols, and did not permit her to return to her house until she promised not to let the neighbor call at her house again.

Britain Will Meet Russia on Good Terms When Russia 'Observes Ordinary Decencies International Discourse'

LONDON, Nov. 9.—Fulfilling the traditional role of principal speaker at the Lord Mayor's banquet at Guild hall, where once a year the big business men of London get a review of governmental affairs, straight from Downing street, Premier Stanley Baldwin tonight declared himself an optimist about Europe, because he is a realist.

"Great Britain, France, Germany and Italy, protagonists in the struggles of the day," he said, "now meet as equals and partners to advance the cause of peace, and they look forward to the convalescence of our common civilization."

Mr. Baldwin paid graceful tribute to Aristide Briand, the French foreign minister, and Gustav Stresemann, the German foreign minister, as far-seeing leaders, who rendered a rapproachment possible.

The prime minister wished he could speak equally hopefully about Russia. There were circumstances which led Great Britain to cease diplomatic relations with Russia, he said. There were similar circumstances which prevented the United States from ever admitting such relations.

"Whenever the Russians are prepared to observe the ordinary decencies of international intercourse and abstain from interference in our domestic affairs and from a policy of intrigue and hostility," he continued, "they shall find us ready to meet them in the spirit of liberality and goodwill which inspires our whole foreign policy."

COOK'S ARMY IS AT BRISTOL FOR NIGHT'S REST

Unemployed in Good Spirits; Bristol Maidens Extend Helping Hand

BRISTOL, England, Nov. 9.—A little army of 400 unemployed, en route to London to storm the halls of parliament with oratory, arrived here late this afternoon and found tea waiting them in true English fashion.

The marchers were also greeted by pretty bob-haired Bristol girls, who expressed their readiness to dance with the youngsters of the expedition. Some of the older members, to whom the trip to London is a serious, even a tragic pilgrimmage, were already weary and footsore from the first day's hike of the 200-mile journey, which included a 10-minute train ride through the Severn tunnel to cut off a 60-mile walk around the Bristol channel.

As the marchers straggled into Bristol they were met by a local committee of welcome carrying red flags. The procession passed through crowded streets to the Labor party's headquarters where they went to sleep tonight.

CARRIES HIS BOOTS

One of the marchers arrived barefooted with his heavy boots slung over his shoulders.

"It is more comfortable this way," he shouted to a man who asked why he was carrying his boots.

The marchers were taken to a theater as the guests of Colonel Harry Day, a member of the Labor party.

Sleeping accommodations were arranged here by the miners' district council of the County of Rhonda, which is supporting J. A. Cook, secretary of the miners' federation, who organized the march, despite disapproval of the federation on the grounds that it is of Communist origin. In addition to the rolling kitchen, the marchers have a motor truck loaded with general supplies and an ambulance with well-trained male nurses to care for casualties and attend to sore feet.

Six Persons Face Charge Conspiracy Smuggle Diamonds

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—Five men and a woman, alleged members of a band of diamond smugglers whose operations, federal investgiators declared, ran into millions of dollars, were brought before Commissioner O'Neill on charges of conspiracy to smuggle diamonds into the United States.

Four of the men were held in bail totalling $210,000 and the fifth man and the woman were released in the custody of a customs agent. Federal officers told O'Neill that a search disclosed $100,000 worth of diamonds concealed in the heels and toes of one of the men's shoes.

BUNK HOUSE AT GREAT NORTHERN STATION BURNS

Engineers' Night Quarters and Storehouses Destroyed in Conflagration

OVERHEATED STOVE IS SUGGESTED AS CAUSE

Gasoline Saved; Explosions in Fire; George Knox Last Occupant

Flaming on the mountain side, the bunkhouse at the mountain station occupied at nights by engineers of the Great Northern railway, was completely destroyed last night. The fire department fought the fire, although it was out of the city limits. There was no water near enough to which hose could be attached, but the chemical tanks of No. 1 truck were exhausted in the battle to save the nearby buildings, one of which was the section gang's bunkhouse and the other a toolhouse.

Last occupant of the destroyed bunkhouse was George Knox, who came in with the gas-electric car last night. The theory of an overheated stove was advanced as the probable cause of the fire.

EXPLOSIONS FEARED

The building, which was the upper structure of a box car, was divided in two sections. The engineers' room was one end, and the other was used as a storehouse. The fire broke out in the engineers' quarters, and before it spread to the other section, gasoline stored there was removed. During the fire several small explosions in the engineers' quarters suggested gasoline might also have been in there. The nature of the flames, leaping and roaring, supported this idea.

The fire broke out about 10 o'clock, and in spite of the lateness of the hour and the distance of the fire from the business section, a big crowd witnessed it.

LIFE SENTENCES MAY BE REDUCED

Fate of Two Youths Appealing Rests With Court Judge Now

VANCOUVER, Nov. 9.—While judgment was reserved by the court of appeal on the appeal of Russell Stonehouse and William Pasquale, youths sentenced to life imprisonment for criminal assault, there appeared a strong indication at the close of the hearing Wednesday that the sentence might be reduced.

Appeal on facts heard Tuesday was dismissed by the court while the pleading Wednesday was based on law and claimed misdirection of the jury, and for mitigation of the sentence. Decision was reserved on those points.

"Does the crown ask that the sentences be sustained?" Chief Justice J. A. MacDonald asked W. C. Cowan, K.C., crown counsel, when Cecil Killam and Frank Lyons had presented the appeal for the convicted youths.

"While I have no suggestion to make, speaking for the crown, I believe a shorter sentence with lashes would have served the interests of justice," Mr. Brown replied.

GERMANS MAY BAR AUTO INDUSTRIES

Proposed Tariff Changes Would Hurt American, French and British Plants

BERLIN, Nov. 9.—Impending tariff legislation threatened to force United States automobile manufacturers to close down their branches in Germany, it was said today, in connection with a report that the German government is contemplating a heavy upward revision of import duties on automobile parts shipped here for assembling.

Heretofore, automobile parts have been subject to an average rate of from two to 2 marks (the mark is quoted at approximately 24 cents), which it is now proposed to raise to 150 marks.

About five United States automobile firms, employing 2500 German workmen, will be affected if the new duty is put into effect. Two French and one British firm also would be affected.

Assaulted for Paying Attention to Two Girls; Assaulters Heavily Fined

CORNWALL, Ont., Nov. 9.—Declaring that "this thing will not be tolerated under any circumstances," Judge O'Reilly today fined eight prominent local men fines totaling $1180 for assaulting Harold Finnerty, aged 30, in Mountain township on the evening of August 19. The eight men are William Carlisle, a member of Mountain township council for four years; his brothers, Lorne, Welland, Robert, Hamilton and Charles Carlisle, Malvin Campbell and Oliver Poulson.

According to evidence submitted, Finnerty, while engaged to another girl, was paying attention to William Carlisle's niece. On this occasion as Finnerty was leaving the Carlisle home he was kidnaped by a band of men, taken to a graveled road, stripped and there beaten and kicked. While a tin of tar was in evidence, it was not used.

Hon. R. B. Bennett Will Leave Calgary for Ottawa, Short Time

CALGARY, Nov. 9.—Hon. R. B. Bennett, leader of the Conservative party, is planning to leave shortly for Ottawa and the east when asked Wednesday evening, he said he could give no definite date.

"I do not expect to be able to leave this week," he said. Asked if there was anything to announce about his future plans, he replied: "Not a thing in the world. What I really am trying to do is to answer the enormous mass of congratulatory letters, telegrams and cablegrams. There are more than 1500 of them."

Marked Money Lands Pair in Jail on a Conspiracy Charge

TORONTO, Nov. 9.—By the time-worn ruse of marked money, Toronto police this afternoon trapped three men who, they assert, conspired to sell brass shaving as gold. The complainant was Harry Skup, jeweler. Detectives made the arrests after they had witnessed what they said was a sale to Skup.

The suspects are John Tarabas, Nick Selapack and John Tyminski. Skup declared the menhad posed as miners from Timmins and had offered him a fine powder like gold, which was really brass shavings and a few particles of gold.

EULER STATES LEGISLATION IS TO BE ENACTED

Will Assist Provinces to Fight Bootleggers, Curtail Bonded Export Houses

SUBSIDIES DISCUSSION TO BE TODAY'S FEATURE

Premiers Favor More Pay for Judges; Robb and Dunning Speakers

OTTAWA, Nov. 9.—Federal legislation to strengthen the liquor laws of the provinces in certain respects will be introduced at the session of parliament, Hon. W. D. Euler, minister of national revenue, announced to the conference of premiers toight. Mr. Euler expressed his willingness to strengthen the hands of the provinces wherever it is possible to do so.

Reduction of excise duty on liquor as a means of combating the bootlegger, curtailment of bonded warehouses and the right of individuals to import, were among the points discussed in regard to the liquor question.

Rapid progress was made at this evening's conference which rose at midnight. Uniformity of laws in regard to the retirement of judges and the taxations of soldier settlement lands were also reviewed.

The question of federal subsidies, it was announced, was let stand over until tomorrow afternoon when Hon. J. A. Robb, minister of finance, will make a statement.

MAJORITY FAVOR MORE PAY FOR THE JUDGES

The majority of speakers favored an increase in the salaries of judges; but did not favor an age limit. On the matter of taxation of soldiers' lands, Hon. Robert Forke announced that supervisors had been instructed that where the occupants of these lands were in arrears for taxation, payment of such taxes were to be made a prior claim.

With respect to the question of soldiers' lands which had reverted to the crown and were thereby exempt from municipal taxation, Hon. Robert Forke, minister of immigration, declared that it was the policy of his department to dispose of such lands as quickly as possible and thereby place them in the taxable category.

Mr. Euler declared that the government had every desire to cooperate with all the provinces respecting liquor legislation and was sympathetic with the suggestions made. With regard to export houses he stated that not a single bond had been issued during the past year and that if any province objected to bonds being granted, they would be refused.

He would be glad to consider the question of notifying the provinces where liquor was released.

With respect to distilleries and breweries, he declared that when a new application came in, the province in which such an institution was to be established, was notified. He did not recall a single instance where a protest had been made. The minister hoped to introduce legislation at the next session of parliament to give the government power to cancel at any time the licences of breweries or distilleries.

LAPOINTE ASSURES THAT GOVERNMENT WILL HELP

Hon. Ernest Lapointe, minister of justice, declared that the government was desirous of implementing the hands of the provinces. He was not prepared to take any definite decision at the present moment with respect to the proposed repeal of the Canada Temperance act.

Hon. James Robb, minister of finance, declared that the presentation of this case did not make it easier for him to make up his mind with respect to the demand for increased subsidies. The government did not want to lose at both ends. This was not the first time that the question of reducing the excise duty on liquor had been brought up. He declared that he had not a closed mind on the subject and that he was awaiting the report of the royal commission.

In opening the discussion on liquor legislation, Attorney-General Major of Manitoba, stated that while his province had adopted liquor control, the question arose as to the right of individuals to import. This question should be settled at once and he suggested that federal legislation should be passed for this purpose.

The Manitoba representative dealt with the illicit manufacture of liquor, and stated that his government could not cope with this because of the high excise duty of $9.50 a gallon imposed by the Dominion. This high duty, he declared, was the greatest possible encouragement for the bootleggers. He advocated a reduction in the taxation. He further argued in favor of a registration of the fees to informers. Premier Baxter of New Brunswick, was in favor of legislation making it illegal to import liquor excepting through the legitimate channels by which it could be sold.

MANSON URGES CLOSING OF BONDED HOUSES.

Attorney-General Manson of British Columbia expressed the hope that an independent piece of legislation would be introduced and that the bonded warehouses be got rid of as soon as possible. He believed that a reduction of the excise duties on liquor would assist in putting down the liquor traffic, but on the other hand, he regarded liquor as luxury and as a legitimate source of revenue. Should the duty be reduced his province, however, would at once pass the reduction on to the consumer.

Although his government had control of liquor, Premier Taschereau of Quebec, declared that they called it a temperance act designed to encourage people to drink wines instead of ardent spirits. With spirits at a high price and wines at a low price, he believed that this aim was gradually being attained. He was not, therefore, so strongly in favor of decreasing the excise duty on spirits as some of the other speakers had been. So far as the Scott act was concerned, he believed it should be wiped out.

"The Dominion government is prepared to help the provinces, insofar as it can justify its position before parliament." This was the declaration of Hon. J. A. Robb, minister of finance, in the consideration of federal subsidies before the provincial premiers' conference this afternoon. The discussion will be continued tomorrow.

Hon. C. A. Dunning, minister of railways and canals, dealt with the question of provincial railways, which their owners desired to have taken over by the Canadian National railways.

It was the duty of the federal government to give a lead to others in the matter of economy, and since 1923 the Dominion's debt had been reduced by one hundred and five million dollars, Mr. Robb declared. Mr. Robb emphasized the large obligations growing out of the war and the maturities which the Dominion was compelled to meet from time to time.

MUST CONTINUE POLICY

"This year," continued Mr. Robb, "the Dominion is in the happy position that out of one hundred millions of maturities, she was able to meet more than half, to reduce the war debt and the interest to that extent." He believed that Canada must continue to pursue that policy. He declared it was desirable that Canada should have a good reputation, so that capital should come in for development. The government, he said, was doing its best to restore the confidence and credit of Canada, to reduce its taxation and to meet its obligations.

The minister of finance observed two classes in the conference, those who asked for a revision and increase of subsidies and those who asked for nothing. He was prepared to say that the federal government would carefully consider the demands of the former and accede to those of the latter.

Mr. Dunning declared that the federal government would gladly confer with the provincial governments in respect to their railway difficulties, but "having consideration for the existing load which the government has to bear," it was not possible for the Dominion government to assume responsibility for the 12 provincial railways.

SAYS C. N. R. LOADED UP

During his address, Mr. Dunning dealt with the Peace River railway situation. With respect to the Peace River district and the Alberta railways, the question, he said, was as to whether the Dominion should assume the obligation or whether the provinces should hold on.

It was not a question of asking the Dominion parliament for leave to acquire one, but 12 railroads, and to assume an obligation of approximately $200,000,000.

The provinces, said Mr. Dunning, insisted upon the rights of projecting railways and of guaranteeing their bonds. If they proved to be a success, they wanted to keep them, if not, they wanted to turn them over to the Dominion. It must be remembered that there were 12 roads which it was proposed should become part of the Canadian National system, but which would not become a contributing factor toward its success, but would rather constitute in the main, a load. Last year the Canadian National had earned enough to meet the debt due to the public, but not a cent to meet interest. The Dominion still had to pay the interest on outstanding bonds in case the railway did not earn it.

There was another side to the question, the minister said. It could not be hoped to maintain the esprit de corps, if the system were to be loaded down with nonpaying branches. Men liked to have the encouragement of success.

Railway earnings were largely from freight rates and yet there were general demands from the provinces and elsewhere for a freight rate reduction, for the adding of new branch lines, and for the increase in the wages of the men. Branches might be necessary but they could not be put out to the extent where the railway system could not pay its way.

ROBB TALKS ON DEBTS

During his address, Mr. Robb took the conference into his confidence with respect to the war debt which today amounts to $1,694,621,687 with an annual cost of carrying included fixed charges of $162,799,000. The special taxes imposed for the purpose of carrying this burden failed to meet it by the sum of over $6,000,000. The minister stated that out of the total cost of administering Canada, its railways, its canals, subsidies, etc., paid out since confederation 36 per cent represented the cost of Canada in the war. There had been nothing to do but to impose new taxes or to repudiate the debt.

Mr. Robb stated that Canada was faced with the following maturities: 1928, 53,000,000 dollars; 1929, 60,000,000 dollars; 1930, 20,000,000 dollars; 1931, 77,000,000 dollars; and 1932, 73,000,000 dollars. He hoped that if revenues were maintained and the country continued to grow, to materially reduce, if not retire all these obligations. The great difficulty came in 1933, when the sum of $446,00,000 came due and in 1934, when the sum of $535,000,000 came due.

CANADA'S TAXES NOT HIGH

It was obvious that while nuisance and other taxes had been abolished, certain other imposts must under the circumstances be maintained. He denied that the people of Canada were taxed more highly than other countries. The per capita taxation on production in Canada was 19.7 per cent in Australia 21.6 per cent and in Great Britain 29.8 per cent.

Mr. Robb dealt with the contention the spirit of the British North Ameri- that the income tax was opposed to can act. The income tax last year had brought in $48,000,000 of which $29,000,000 or 69 per cent came from the corporations.

While everybody might be regarded as paying something toward income tax, under the present exemptions it did not bear heavily on the average person.

Vice-presidents elected were J. P. Hogg, Charles Borden, J. B. Hughes and James Bell. Arthur S. Thompson was elected secretary and R. H. Baxter was reelected treasurer.

TADANAC LOSES TO HOCKEY CLUB IN HOOP CONTEST

Score Is 22-10 in Fast Opening Basketball Meeting; Bulls Beat Excelsiors

TRAIL, B.C., Nov. 9.—Having a slight edge in speed and more versatile defence players enabled the hockey club's team to win its first league basketball match tonight against the Tadanac boys, by a score of 22-10.

The game was featured by lots of good combination and determined checking. Both teams battled scoreless for 11 minutes when Bfennan found the hoop for the hockey club with a standing shot. Jackson, making a quick recovery, shot, and Lefevre, with a long wing try, added two before Eckhart, big alternate center, opened with the only goal of the period for Tadanac. danac.

In the second period the hockey boys continued to lead, with Jackson (3), Brennan (3), and Mackie (2), doing the scoring, closely supported by Lefevre, while Gustason intercepted the returns to Anderson, prowling under the hockey club basket. Anderson accounted for three goals and Perkins one in this period.

SHOOTING WILD

A Distinguished Ingrate

Captain Robert Pamphlet, who commanded a rum-running ship, went into American territorial waters to save the lives of American sailors who were in distress.

He, his crew, and his ship were seized.

Affronting the opinion of the world, the United States government proceeded to prosecute this humane rum-runner.

After two years of vain appeals, he is now to serve the two-year sentence that an American court imposed upon him.

The Veneer Plant

Hundreds of Nelson citizens attended the opening of the just completed plant of the British Columbia Veneer Works, saw every process of veneer making, from the barking of the cottonwood logs after they came up the jackladder, to the finished three-ply product ready for shipment, and came away proud of this entirely local institution.

An abundant Kootenay wood once regarded as having no commercial value is the basis of this new Nelson industry.

Nelson's industries almost without exception represent utilization of resources that had long been available but that no one had thought about.

What will be the next opening that will be found and availed of?

Heroic Nuns Save Situation

Heroism of nuns carrying sleeping children from a burning orphanage is the bright side of the New Jersey orphanage fire of Tuesday, in which 76 boys, apparently all of tender years, were rescued, and three little fellows were burned to death.

That one sister was able to personally carry 68 children, one at a time, each from his crib, to a place of safety going back repeatedly to her task after collapsing from the exertion, is notable, and puts her in a special niche.

But the institution, of which the building burned was a part, had no fire fighting installation, a situation with possibilities.

The government of New Jersey owes an explanation to its people, and particularly to its Catholic citizens, as to why it let such a situation arise.

SHAKEUP WILL OCCUR IN B. C.'S JUDICIAL BODY

Difference Between Judges Will Be Discussed With Minister of Justice, Ottawa

VANCOUVER, Nov. 9.—A special dispatch from Ottawa to the Sun says:

"A shake-up in British Columbia's judicial system is believed imminent. Premier J. D. MacLean and Hon. A. M. Manson, attorney-general, will have a conference before they leave Ottawa with Hon. Ernest Lapointe, minister of justice, and Hon. Lucien Cannon, solicitor-general, regarding the present situation arising out of the differences between the judges in British Columbia.

"As a result, it is expected the federal authorities will take a hand and clean that difficulty. The plan, it is believed, will be to abolish the appellate division and transfer the judges of that division to the other high courts.

"A short time ago, it is believed that the disposition of Ottawa was to let British Columbia settle this matter, but as there has been no prospect of an amicable ending to the trouble, Ottawa has been persuaded that only the federal government can cure the evil.

"To permit the difficulties existing would seriously injure the good name amongst the British Columbia judiciary of that province, which has already, in the minds of many in the east, suffered considerably from the trouble, which was recently given an airing."

To be sure, nowadays we can buy card tables with waterproof, dull finished moire silk tops which are firmly attached to the wood rim of the table—and these excellent tops can not only be played on without having a removable cloth thrown over them, but may also be used when serving refreshments, if desired.

Nevertheless, many women use the leather topped card table, and such a style of table needs a cover. So today I am going to chat about the choice of such a cover. What shall it be made of? How decorated?

Never use cretonnes, printed linens or anything else with a pattern for this purpose, because playing at a table covered with a patterned cloth tires the eyes. Cards require solid colors for their background. Save for some design in one corner—or in all four corners—they should be absolutely plain.

Black sateen is still as much in favor as it ever was, for this purpose. I have recently seen some decorated in one corner with an insert in colored filet crochet. Others had gay motifs in colored sateen appliqued upon them at the corners.

Natural color linen is also extremely popular with some design worked in the corners. If the hostess' living room is done in blue, the linen card table cover may be a matching blue. The advantage of a fairly light colored cloth is that it need not be removed at refreshments time, but is suitable for having plates and cups placed upon it—being washable, it is like any other table cover.

Glass topped card tables cost somewhere around $15 in many shops — so few of us possess them! Yet, even though one may play right upon the heavy glass and serve refreshments upon it, too, there are times when one wishes to cover it for reasons of daintiness. Immaculate napery has a charm all its own!

Whatever sort of cover we choose to play upon, let us at least dispense with tapes at the corners. Instead, let us use silk or mercerized cotton elastic, to loop over each corner underneath, and hold the cover snugly in place.

Tomorrow—Requested Games.

That Body of Yours

By JAMES W. BARTON, M.D.

The Brain, Your Steering Equipment

Some years ago I compared the body to an automobile, the stomach being the gas tank, the heart and lugs the engine, the bones and muscles the tires and body, and so forth.

The brain was the starting, steering or driving equipment, because although all other parts must be present, these parts do their work under the general direction of the brain.

It is not difficult to realize, then, that if the parts, even normal parts of a car are in order, if the electrical and sterring departments are not right, then the car is going to misbehave itself.

Similarly with any little trouble going on in the brain. It renders the individual unsafe as far as his own life is concerned, and also the lives of others.

It is only natural, then, that everything pertaining to the brain, the directing force of the body, is being studied as never before by research men throughout the world.

One investigator studies the tissues and elements of the body, another the secretions of the ductless glands, another the habits of the many organisms that inhabit the body.

Anything wrong with the brake of the car may do damage by causing a collision. If the timing device is wrong, the car does poor work on the road or hills. In fact, anything wrong with any of the parts means poor work by the car itself.

This is, of course, the same with that body of yours; poor digestion, sluggish liver, weak arches, overweight and so forth, will all prevent it doing its work properly. However, with a motor car, deficient or worn out parts do not affect the electrical or guiding equipment.

In that body of yours, however, research men have been able to show that everything that affects the blood can affect the brain, because the brain cells are made up from the materials brought to them by the blood. Thus, one form of paralysis due to a certain infection, has been cured in some cases by the organisms of another type of infection being put into the blood.

Infections from teeth, tonsils, gall bladder and intestine, can so poison the blood that the delicate brain cells using blood so infected, are bound to be damaged. The amount of sugar, of albumen or acid substances, too much or too little secretion from the thyroid, adrenal or other glands, all enter into the problem of the brain that isn't just right.

Something of help to the directing force of life, that is the brain, is bound to result from all this patient investigation.

They met several hunting parties and not a credible head was reported.

A STORY OF LOVE, TRIAL, TEMPTATIONS AND TRIUMPHS

SYNOPSIS

Spunky Joyce Daring faces the world alone when her parents separate. Joyce gets a job in a telephone exchange, shares a room with a hotel check girl, and through her is put on the telephone switchboard at the hotel. She has just met Carter Deland, the Juan of the town, at a night club to which Henry Deacon, wealthy young admirer, had taken her. She has also learned that the driver of a liquor wagon looked like "Butch" Seltzer, a gang leader, whose attentions she had tolerated at her mother's request.

CHAPTER XIII.

POLISH

Brr. Brr. Ting-lin-ling!

Joyce opened a sleepy eye.

"Get up, kid!" said Gladys from her bed.

Joyce shut her eyes again and turned over.

Brr. Brr. Ting-lin-ling!

"No you don't+" said Gladys. snatching the clock from the small table that stood between their two beds. Joyce sat up in bed. "This getting up at 6 o'clock is fierce," she said. "Only an hour earlier than I've been getting up, but it seems like I just went to sleep."

"Glad I'm on late duty this week. Hate to get up early when it's raining," yawned Gladys, watching Joyce stretch her slim body, and gather her kimona about her. Gladys went back to sleep.

Half an hour later she opened her eyes to see Joyce, hat, raincoat, dark silk dress, standing before the mirror doing things to her face with the aid of Deke's vanity case.

"Not too much," she warned. "Better start in modestly. Time to thicken the war paint after you've been there awhile."

"Shall I wear this?" asked Joyce, holding up a thin silver chain at the end of which dangled a clear purple amethyst, set in a ring of silver. It was a gift from Deke.

"Don't see why not," said Gladys. "I'll say this for that swell beau of yours, he's got grand taste."

Arriving at the hotel Miss Scanlon took her to the locker room. "You'll keep your hat and coat and other personal belongings here," she said. "Always keep them locked up. I leave my purse in my locker, too. I think it's a little safer, less of a temptation to anyone who is light fingered."

Back at the board she was introduced to the other girls, six of them, all well dressed, marcelled, manicured.

"The management requires us to look our best at all times," Miss Scanlon explained. "You won't need any marcelling with those natural waves of yours, but you'll want a manicure once a week. We get a special rate in the beauty parlor at slack hours. Now you just sit here and observe until the early morning rush is over, then we'll put you at room switching, that's transferring in-coming calls to guests' rooms, the easiest thing to start on for today."

Joyce found the work very simple and by afternoon she was wearing a head piece and working along with the rest. Three o'clock came with surprising swiftness. And she was amazed, too, at her weariness.

"It's the nervous strain the first day or two," said Marian, the girl who sat next to Joyce at the switch board and who had come into the rest room with her. "After a day or two you'll get over that. It's nice here, don't you think?"

Full of the day's experience, Joyce walked out to Euclid avenue with Marian and eastward toward her mother's place of employment.

She smiled at Joyce from her little cashier's cage.

"How did it go today?" she asked.

"Just fine. I watched for awhile, then they let me in on the regular work. I like it a lot better than the main exchange. The girls are nice, too."

"What are you going to do now?" Mrs. Daring asked.

"I don't know," said Joyce. "I feel lonesome and tired. I don't know what to do in fact. What time will you have supper?"

"About six," answered her mother. "Want to come in and eat with me?"

Joyce nodded. "I'll be in then," she said.

Back on Euclid avenue she window shopped for an hour, turning over her problems in her mind.

Suppose she married Deke some day. He would be a college graduate in another year. Was that too much difference in education? She recalled her visit to Deke's house on Sunday afternoon two weeks before.

Mrs. Deacon had been charming and kind and interested. Mr. Deacon had refused to drink tea, eaten three chicken sandwiches, smoked a very black cigar and grunted at her from time to time. She had felt perfectly at ease, especially when three of the Deacon dogs had dashed in, stopped perfectly still for a few minutes to inspect her, and then had presented respectful paws to be shaken while they wagged their tails, friendly wise.

"Love dogs," grunted Mr. Deacon, making one of his few understandable remarks.

"So do I," cried Joyce, fondling a shaggy head. "I never had one because we always lived in an apartment. I had a cat, though, and I couldn't bear to have another one after she died."

"It's like losing one of the family," agreed Mrs. Deacon, with a smile.

"You made a hit, all right," said Deke. "Liking dogs and not smoking, is a sure road to the old man's heart."

Later Joyce asked her father about the Deacons. "Deke said they were poor once, that is his father and mother were," she said.

"They'd call it poor, I suppose," Mr. Daring had answered a little bitterly. "She was a judge's daughter. His father owned a drug store. They weren't rich as they are now, but they had plenty. Old man Deacon, this fellow's father, used to tinker around in his dad's drug store and invented some kind of chemical mixture that he patented. That's where he got his start. He married Judge Hawkin's girl and they came to Cleveland. I guess they had a hard time for a while. But after he got started he made a lot of money. They're nice enough for rich people, I guess. But it's 'like keep to like,' as I see it. Lass, and I don't think this young Deacon means any good by you, even if he does take you out to his house. They're sly where a pretty face is concerned."

Joyce had flushed and resolved never to mention Deke's name to her father again. Now she turned her steps toward the library. She paused before a case of new books.

"Etiquette," by Emily Post.

She turned its pages idly. Here was something that might help her. She had it charged and then wandered about, wearied, somehow, by the great piles of books.

She sat down by a great window in the reading room. The light fell on her hair and made a little nimbus around her face. She opened Emily Post and began to read the preface.

Her attention was attracted by a party of people on a tour of inspection. Who was that tall, distinguished man with the monocle and the bored look!

Now he was looking at her. He was coming to speak to her. She closed her book hastily.

"Miss Daring—is it not?"

"Oh—it's, it's"—she was searching for his name.

"Mr. Deland. Your memory of me is not very flattering, Miss Daring," he bantered.

"Oh, yes; now I remember. You were at the night club when Deke took me out there to dance." She wished she could control the furious blushing that was bringing the amused look into his eyes.

"I haven't forgotten you, or that dance, either," he said. "We must have another some day. And what is she reading?" He took the book before she could stop him.

"Etiquette—Emily Post. Ah, quite ambitious, aren't you?" He restored the book with a meaning smile, which made Joyce hate him momentarily. Then he bowed himself off and rejoined his party.

"Just a little girl I'm interested in," he explained to Mrs. Fitz-Simons, who was chairman of this committee of which he formed a part.

"Quite a disinterested interest I trust," said Mrs. Fitz-Simons.

"Oh, quite. I want to see her improve her mind," and he flicked a bit of dust from the cuff of his coat, with a broad gesture.

Joyce sat quite still, afraid to rise and go for fear of attracting more attention. Carter Deland was still the handsomest and most polished man she had ever seen. "Like a real movie villain," she thought seriously. She smiled as she caught a dim realization of Deland's horror if he were to hear this comparison.

When the coast was clear and Deland's party had passed murmuring on she left the building and walked back to Clark's.

She was hungry and the plates of roast beef and gravy and mashed potatoes, the apple pie with ice cream, and the long, cool glass of iced tea set her at peace iwth the world again.

"See what I got?" she said, showing her mother the thick blue Emily Post.

Mrs. Daring nodded. "That's all right," she said, "only don't get self conscious over your manners. That's the poorest kind of manner in the world. If you'll always be your natural, kind hearted self you won't need to worry about form."

"That sounds a good deal like Deke's mother," said Joy, "though I think she knows just what to do on every occasion."

"You can learn the forms," said Mrs. Daring, "but you have to be born a lady—and I've always been proud to think you have that gift."

"Why, Motherdear, how sweet of you!" cried Joyce. "That's the very nicest thing I ever had anybody say to me—anybody at all."

Mrs. Daring patted her arm. "Read your book of etiquette. It won't hurt you any. Deke will kid you about it if he finds it out."

"I don't care," said Joyce, tossing her head.

"Yes, you do," said her mother. "It is Deke you like best, isn't it, Joy?" she asked more seriously.

The girl nodded. "I like him fine. He always makes me feel like something is going to happen, but I like Davey, too. He's like a good long sleep."

A man who had been watching Joyce and her mother now came around from the other side of the counter.

"What's the number now?" he asked Mrs. Daring.

"Twenty-seven—" she answered. Joyce hardly caught the last two digits.

"Euclid?" he asked.

"Yes," and she turned back to her supper as he walked away.

Mrs. Daring offered no explanation to Joy's look of inquiry. Later when Joyce was walking home she watched the number she had overheard.

It was a soft drink parlor.

"That looks like Butch's car parked in front," she thought, "but he's at work by this time."

TOMORROW—Two shadows deepen for our heroine. She finds that she interests the Don Juan she met casually at a dance, and her mother's connection with a gangster becomes more inexplicable. Read tomorrow about the mystery in "Joy," the love story of an American girl.

The effect of getting work is told by Mrs. Wilcox in a letter to Pacific Milk. Shortly after the family came here one son got employment in a factory that depended for its market entirely upon local demand. The business grew because its Vancouver orders grew, and out of this Mrs. Wilcox says she got the idea of buying British Columbia products in whatever line they are to be had.

SEES BRIGHT FUTURE FOR CANADA

A bright future for Canadian poetry and belief that it is free on the whole from the "fads and eccentricities" of old world verse, is voiced by Alfred Noyes, distinguished British bard, who is in Canada now. The poet is shown with his wife, the former Mrs. Weld-Blundell.

First a Joke...

Now a Necessity

NO period in history has seen such development as the last fifty years . . . and in the forefront of that development no improvement is more marked than in the transmission of speech by electricity.

In 1876 the idea of transmitting sound by electricity was treated as a joke. Skeptics despaired of its future; the less charitable laughed.

Today it has become a necessity. The social and business life of the civilized world depends to a great extent on its use. The increasing number of daily calls is the barometer of the growth which this service has earned.

Canada's million telephones in homes, offices and factories throughout the Dominion have added much to the industrial growth of the country and to the happiness and well-being of its people.

The Northern Electric Company is proud of the privilege of manufacturing and distributing most of the telephone equipment which serves an ever-increasing number of Canadians every hour of the day.

Canada has 2,459 telephone companies operating 1,009,203 telephones.

Bullfighting is truly a Spanish institution. Even the most isolated villages have their bull rings. One of the largest arenas in the world is in Madrid. Known as the "Plaza de Toros," it is modeled after the coliseum of ancient Rome and seats some 14,000 people. It is estimated that over 5000 horses and nearly 1500 bulls are slain in Spain annually in connection with bullfights. And frequently toreros, picadores, banderilleros and even matadors are gored to death.

SOCCERITES HAD 'PEACH OF A TIME' AT KIMBERLEY

Seniors Royally Entertained at Center; See Mine and Concentrator

"It was almost a pleasure to be beaten." This was Jack Morris' impression of the Nelson senior soccer squad's invasion of Kimberley over the week-end, when the Kimberley team beat them 3-1 in the Kootenay soccer finals. Jack is president of the Nelson league, and the city team's star left half.

The boys were entertained at a banquet and dance, were conducted through the famous Sullivan mine and concentrator, and altogether had "a peach of a time."

"Absolutely the cleanest game of football I ever engaged in," said Jack last night. "There was not a single foul and very few off sides. We had them scared for a long time with that 1-0 lead.

FOOT OF SNOW

About a foot of snow had fallen in Kimberley when the boys arrived, and on the morning of the big day it was still falling. The Consolidated Mining & Smelting company made a big snowplow and kept four horses dragging it up and down the field. A gang of men was stationed at each goal to keep the snow clear there.

Jimmie Davidson, Nelson's star center forward, was unable to make the trip, owing to business cropping up at the last moment.

Stepping up to the tee, Cruickshank drove off, and his ball went out-of-bounds over a railroad track that runs alongside the course.

"Look at that," grunted Cruickshank. "Eight hundred acres to play over, and I can't even keep on the course!"

WAKEFIELD, England, Nov. 9.—A timely warning given by Princess Mary was the means of ensuring the safety of a number of persons, who with herself and Viscount Lascelles, her husband, were caught in an early morning fire at Bretton hall, where Lord and Lady Allendale were entertaining.

HUNDREDS SEE PLYWOOD BEING MANUFACTURED

Nelson's Newest Industrial Plant Throws Open Its Doors to Public

UNGAINLY COTTONWOODS BECOME SHINING PANELS

Can Make Cottonwood, Spruce, Hemlock, White Pine Plywood

Nelson's newest industrial plant, that of the British Columbia Veneer Works, opened its doors to the public yesterday afternoon for an hour, hundreds of interested Nelsonites taking advantage of the opportunity to see ungainly cottonwood logs transformed into glistening panels of surprising beauty.

The plant itself is a marvel of efficiency and a revelation in modern industrial machinery. All machinery is electrically operated, though steam is used extensively in the manufacturing process.

HANDLES ALL WOODS

The plant, built by its manager, George Dvorjetz, is designed to manufacture two classes of plywoods, the first being cottonwood, and the second hemlock, spruce and white pine. Any kind of veneer, of any thickness, can be manufactured. Visitors yesterday saw cottonwood veneer being made.

Tracing the veneer to its source, one imagined forests being leveled in the Lardeau district, the logs being floated to Nelson and tied up in booms on the West Arm, converted into panels, and ultimately adorning the walls of some house, or used in the construction of airplanes.

TRACING THE LOG

Drawn up a long incline on a carriage, the log comes to a halt beneath a drag saw. A measurement, fixing the log's position, and then a drag saw cuts it to its required length.

Two men quickly strip the bark off, the skinned log is hoisted into position and gripped in a lathe. As it turns, a razor-sharp knife peels off slices. At first the slices are irregular and probably knotty. These pieces are discarded. Soon the log has become rounded and the veneer that will be used for plywood begins to slide out on to a conveyor.

PLYWOOD WATERPROOF.

Down the conveyor it goes to the big knife, where it is cut into various sizes. The smaller pieces are then passed through a glue roller, which gives them a liberal coating of glue on both sides at once. These pieces are placed between the larger sections, with the grain at right angles.

The sections are placed in the big steam press and the glue acts under the pressure and heat. This process makes waterproof plywood, of the same strength and water resistance as the plywood manufactured by Mr. Dvorjetz during the war for the British government for airplane construction.

BOIL FROZEN LOGS

From the steam press the plywood goes into the long drier, passing slowly through steam-heated rollers.

It is taken from the drier to the saws which cut it into various sizes, and to the sanding machine, which imparts the final polish.

During the winter, when the cottonwood will be frozen, it will be dumped into vats of boiling water before going to the lathe. These vats serve a double purpose, in that hemlock, spruce and white pine must be boiled before going to the lathe.

WASTE USED AS FUEL

In manufacturing hemlock, spruce and white pine into plywood, the veneer is taken from the clipper to the drier, then to the glue rollers and steam press, and finally to the cutoff saws and sanding machine.

There is no waste of any kind throughout the plant. All clippings are taken on conveyor belts to a "hog" which grinds them up, and the ground material, again traveling on a conveyor, is fed into the Dutch oven in the boiler house. The hearts of the logs from which the veneer has been pared are also used as fuel.

EXTRA LARGE PANELS

Visitors were agreeably surprised with the variety of the panels made. They are manufactured in sixes up to 98 by 46 inches, an unusually large size.

Manager Dvorjetz is most enthusiastic about his employees. Of 50 employed, 16 are girls. Nearly all are Nelson people, and Mr. Dvorjets particularly compliments their interest in the plant and their willingness to work at any job they are given.

SALES PROSPECTS GOOD

Booms of cottonwood are tied up ready for manufacture, more are on the way, and soon a steady stream of logs will be passing into the plant, emerging as plywood.

Sales prospects, Dr. W. O. Rose, president stated, were excellent. "Everything is going finely, and we are more than satisfied with the way things are turning out."

Mr. Dvorjetz stated several well-known Canadian firms have asked for the agency of the plant, and a well-known English broker is offering excellent prices for the wood.

VENEER KNIFE SEVERS FOUR OF GIRL'S FINGERS

Miss Helen Larson Insists She Is Going Back to the Same Job

Chopping downward on its veneer-cutting mission, an automatically operated knife severed four of Miss Helen Larson's fingers as she was working in the British Columbia Veneer Works plant on Tuesday.

Miss Larson was working on the clipper which cuts the veneer into various sizes as it comes from the lathe. Exactly how the accident happened is unknown. Whether Miss Larson slipped and in trying to save herself placed her hand on the bench and under the knife or whether she was not taking proper care, is a matter of surmise. At any rate, she told George Dvorjetz, manager of the plant, she wanted the same job again when she is able to return to work.

She refused to be carried to the Kootenay Lake General hospital, insisting on walking.

This was the first accident of any kind in the new plant. Miss Larson was inexperienced.

BONNINGTON SCOUT TROOP ORGANIZED

SOUTH SLOCAN, B.C., Nov. 9.—The Bonnington troop of boy scouts has recently awakened from its dormant state, which was due chiefly to the want of a scoutmaster. The boys are very keen, and excellent meetings are held every Monday night in the hall at Bonnington. ADA BLACKJACK IS ILL

Ada Blackjack, Eskimo woman, who leaped into history in the ill-starred Stefansson expedition to Wrangel Island in 1921, when Alan Crawford, young Canadian, and three companions perished, has returned to the north to die, it is reported. Ada contracted the white plague in Nome, where she has been living, it is said. She will spend her remaining days on Kodiak Island, home of her forebears. Ada, who is shown here with her son, the latest picture of them to reach the outside world, told in a diary the tragic tale of the expedition. For six months she kept vigil beside the dead body of one of the men, because to bury it would have lost for her all human association in the lone, long six months she spent on the island in 1923, before her rescue.

NEW ENGLAND IS THREATENED WITH WINTER

Work of Reconstruction Cannot Be Done Permanently Following Floods

BOSTON, Nov. 9.—In the calming presence of outside help and communication, Vermont's flood relief program stood forth tonight as a race against the white spectre of New England winter.

Help had reached nearly all sections, wire communication was rapidly resuming its activities, railroads and highways were opening up, but the relief at best was temporary spurred by the knowledge that bitter winter weather will strangle makeshift communication links, lock battered, wreck communities in the grip of ice and frozen mud that will not be broken until the spring thaws.

Army, Red Cross and civil authorities have succeeded in getting food and clothing into towns where they were most needed, both in Vermont and western Massachusetts.

Thomas Braslee, director of the extension bureau of the Vermont Agricultural college, estimated today that the great Vermont dairy interests had lost 15,000 cows in the flood. The Springfield, Mass., city council today appropriated $60,000 for flood relief in that city. The work of cleaning up debris and reopening homes was speeded there, but 150 persons were still being cared for in the state armory today.

INTERNATIONAL WATERWAY BODY WILL SIT HERE

Mayor Notified by Board and Victoria Announces Meet November 29

HEAR POWER APPLICATION AND RECLAMATION REPLY

McCulloch, Reclamation Engineer, Now in California; Idaho Yet to Hear From

VICTORIA, Nov. 9.—The international joint commission will meet in Nelson on November 29 to consider plans of the West Kootenay Power & Light company for the installation of a power unit on the Kootenay river near Nelson.

The commissioner's approval of the scheme is necessary, because this project would raise the level of Kootenay river in portions of that system within the United States, just south of the international boundary.

Mayor J. A. McDonald, M.P.P., has received notification from the international waterways commission that it will hold a session at the city hall, Nelson, on November 29, to consider the Creston application in connection with Kootenay river.

MAY RECALL McCULLOCH

A. L. McCulloch, hydraulic engineer, who has been acting in a technical capacity for the Creston reclamation interests, and who provided the data on the basis of which those interests asked for protection before any approval should be given to the power company's project of raising the minimum level of Kootenay lake six feet by a dam at Granite, below Nelson, went to California a fortnight ago for the winter.

He testified at the hearing here last spring before the board of investigation of the provincial water rights branch, taking the view that the Creston reclamation project would be prejudiced if the dam was built precisely as proposed, unless special drainage were arranged.

It is thought probable he will have to come back from California to testify, as he did before.

IDAHO CLAIMS

Claims of reclamation commissioners of various Idaho projects on the American side of the Kootenay Flats, that the permanent level will be above the tops of many of their gates, are yet to be finally disposed of, it is understood. At the hearing last spring, levels given by the West Kootenay Power & Light company differed slightly from those given by the Americans, but probably the international joint commission now has the reports of its own engineers on those matters.

The provincial water rights branch has advertised its interim approval of the company's project, set May 1, 1929, as the date by which construction must be started, fixed a 50-mile radius from Rossland as the area within which the additional power developed must be used, and prescribed that the company must have $3,700,000 of its capital subscribed and paid up before beginning construction. The branch, however, has approved no plans, and it is understood the province can take no further action until the joint commission has cleared up the points before it.

Silverwood Is Asked of Church and Warfare; Answers From History

To the Editor of The Daily News:

Sir—In reply to my letter in your paper of November 1, I have received a letter which reads as follows:

"Reverend Sir—Your letter of November 1, in The Daily News raises questions of great importance to all concerned. You write as a clergyman, so I would be glad to know what the church teaches regarding war, and if in the likelihood of another war the church would like any part in it, and if so, how can the church preach peace!

Yours faithfully,
RESIDENT OF NELSON."

CHURCH'S BLESSING

In reply to this and other like-minded inquiries, I will speak only for myself and answer from two considerations, namely: the cause of war and the lawfulness or unlawfulness of war. I must grant that hitherto the church has seen fit to bless and praise those weapons used for the destruction of human life. Such a practice was very common during the last war. Truth, it must be granted that peace and war are incompatible and that the church cannot reasonably preach both. Has the church any authority for making its voice heard on moral and ethical problems? If so, has it not a right to pass sentence upon war and protest against such conduct which makes mockery of the Christmas message? Let us then consider briefly the cause of war.

Socrates observed 2500 years ago that "the origin of all war is the pursuit of wealth and the method of its accumulation." No sane student of industrial and political economy would doubt such a statement for one moment. All war has an economic origin of modern wars, the industrial revolution contributed no small factor. The amazing transition from manual labor to standardized production by machinery has accentuated and opened the floodgates of economic war and strife. As a result of this transition the great urge was mass production, which meant more and more markets and if necessary, by national force of arms. Examine carefully the expansion of British trade after the following wars:

TRADE WARS OF HISTORY

The progress of foreign trade in the time of Elizabeth was due to commercial causes. The opening up of the new world made a struggle for commercial power in the west quite inevitable among European nations. In the reign of Henry VIII. we find from one of his statutes, that Malaga had been the furthest port to which at this time English seaman yet ventured. The Englishmen of the Elizabethan age ignored Spain, entered into rivalry with Holland, and thereby made England the supreme commercial power of the modern world.

The 17th and 18th centuries tell us the record of wars and struggles to attain this object. The war between Spain and Portugal and the alliance between Charles II., and Katherine of Braganza, gave to England the possession of Bombay.

The commercial monopoly of Spain was first really attempted by Cromwell. This gentleman demanded trade with Spanish colonies, and his demands were refused whereupon he seized Jamaica and intended to secure Cuba. He did, however, secure a footing in the West Indies. Later he seized Dunkirk from Spain (then at war with France), and then, with the full consent of mercantile England, he declared war against the Dutch. Cromwell defeated the Dutch, broke their prestige in two years and ruined their trade by the Navigations act of 1657.

The wars between William III. and Anne were for the sole purpose of securing Spanish possessions. After this war was over we find England in possession of Gibraltar, now one of the keys of our Indian Empire.

As a result of these wars, English merchants then did business in the Mediterranean with Turkey and Italy, in the north with Holland, Germany, Russia, Norway, and in the east with India, Arabia and Africa, in the west with America and the Spanish colonies. As a result of the industrial revolution, this frenzy for commercial expansion became further accentuated, resulting in further economic wars which have lasted to our own day. On a careful study between 1897 and 1911 we find nations plunged into wars and industrial calamities of a long and serious nature.

BLACK WITH PILLAGE

But, why labor the point further? The history of war is black and sodden with the records of economic and industrial pillages. It is easy to appeal to the patriotism of a nation, and at the blast of a trumpet call a country to arms "in defence of national honor," when in reality the real issue is political or economic, usually both. And for such causes, nations are plunged into a welter of bloodshed and strife, to say nothing of national and international bankruptcy, of devastated homes, broken hearts, maimed lives. Against all this must be deposited the moral and ethical aspects of the lawfulness or non-lawfulness of war.

They who defend war, says Erasmus, must defend those dispositions which lead to war; and these dispositions are absolutely forbidden by the gospel. When Jesus instructed Peter to put his sword into the scabbard, the idea was that Peter might remain no longer in doubt as to the unlawfulness of war. Jesus, by attaching guilt to all violent feelings does, I contend, attach guilt to war. This argument, therefore, is sylogistical: "War cannot be allowed, if that which is necessary to war is prohibited." That is exactly the argument of Erasmus. "They who defend war must defend those dispositions which lead to war; these dispositions are absolutely forbidden."

CHRIST'S TEACHINGS

It may be asked, why did Christ say, "resist not evil." To argue that this meaning is not literal, does not mean that they do not forbid war. What is the meaning of "Resist not evil?" Does it mean to allow bombardments, devastation, slaughter? If it does not mean to allow this, it does not mean to allow war.

Jesus says, "Love your enemies—do good to them that hate you." Does this mean, ruin their commerce, sink their fleets, plunder their cities? Christ adopted two modes of condemnation. The one is to reprobate evil, and the other is to enforce the opposite good. He not only censured the passions that are necessary to war, but incalcated the effections which are most opposed to them. And here we enter the moral and ethical sphere of conduct—upheld by Christ, should of necessity be upheld by those whose work it is to preach His word: Poverty of spirit, meekness, mourning, desire of righteousness, mercy, purity of heart, peace making, sufferance of persecution. Let any reader propose eight other qualities, to be retained as a general habit of mind, which shall be more incogruous with war.

WAR FROM LUSTS

"Whence come wars and fighting among you?" asked the apostle, 1 James 4-1. "Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members!" This apostle, like his Master, maintains that the most effective way of eradicating war is to eradicate the passions which produce it. "I come not to bring peace but a sword." How is this statement to be explained? Obviously by understanding sword to mean something far more than steel. That Christ did not mean physical weapons is made clear by the apostle, who says the weapons of his warfare are not carnal, 2 Cor. X4, but "the shield of faith, helmet of salvation, and sword of the spirit," and "I have fought the good fight of faith."

I must not take up more room by expanding this subject. It would require far more room than the editor may wish to allow. The case seems clear. It is not from an alteration of Christianity, but from an assimilation of Christians into its nature that we are to hope. It is because we so easily violate the principles of our religions, because we are not what that require us to be, that wars are continued. If men will not be peaceable, let us then, at least, be honest, and acknowledge that we continue to slaughter one another not because Christianity permits it, but because we reject her laws.

I thank the editor for allowing me this space, and will not trouble him further.
