DELECTABLE FISH FOR COAST WATERS

To Plant Whitefish from Great Lakes Next Spring—May Also Place Lobsters.

First fruits of the mission to Ottawa of Premier McBride and his colleagues. Mr. Bowser and Hon. Mr. Ross, are indicated in a letter which Mr. Bowser, as provincial commissioner of fisheries, has just received from Hon. J. D. Hazen, the minister of marine and fisheries, a letter that is also, in itself, a testimony to the energy and activity of the new minister in dealing with departmental matters with the administrator of which he is officially concerned. Hon. Mr. Hazen's communication is directly in reply seriatim to the memorandum on various fisheries matters with regard to which Hon. Mr. Bowser interviewed him during the visit to Ottawa.

As to the introduction into British Columbia waters of the famous whitefish of the Eastern and Manitoba lakes, Hon. Mr. Hazen shows himself to be in hearty sympathy with the proposals advanced by the provincial fisheries commissioner. He points out, however, that unusual and unfavorable weather conditions have this year been experienced, more especially in Manitoba, owing to which it is found impossible to obtain the required five million whitefish eggs from Lake Manitoba. As large a quantity as possible will consequently be obtained from this lake, supplemented if necessary by further supplies from Lake Erie.

After a conference on the subject with Superintendent Cunningham, Hon. Mr. Hazen suggests that in order to assure best results, half of the consignment of ova should be placed for development at the Granite Creek hatchery at Shuswap lake, the residue going to the Harrison lake establishment. The officer in charge at the former has had considerable experience in the propagation of whitefish from the ova in eastern centres, and will give the fish intended for British Columbia stocking his careful personal attention, while similar special care will be given the eggs sent to Harrison lake by Superintendent Cunningham personally. Necessary arrangements for the incubation of the ova are now being perfected, and when the fry is ready for distribution—which should be in about four months—a part will be given to Shuswap and the remainder to Harrison lake.

Rainbow Trout.

With respect to the rainbow trout with which it is proposed to stock various suitable streams on Vancouver island, the minister writes that his department is quite prepared to give the Cowichan lake hatchery facilities for the incubation and propagation of the ova, provided the provincial authorities deliver the ova in the eye stage from the Seto lake hatchery, which is a British Columbia institution.

Incidentally the federal minister states that he has recently received several applications from eastern centres for supplies of British Columbia trout ova desired for the restocking of eastern streams, the fame of the trout of this province having been firmly established as far away from its home even as New Brunswick. Naturally, British Columbia has no objection whatever to sharing with the eastern brethren.

As to the lobsters desired by Hon. Mr. Bowser for British Columbia planting, Hon. Mr. Hazen writes that the officials of his department have advised scientific investigation of Pacific coast conditions precedent to the planting of the delectable crustaceans in British Columbia waters. If conditions are found suitable, the minister expresses himself as quite prepared to send consignments of young lobsters not only this year, but every year for three or four seasons, in order that the lobster may be substantially established in these waters. He advises that investigation of conditions here as they are likely to affect the eastern lobster should be undertaken by the federal biological station at Nanaimo.

It is quite probable that such an investigation will be decided upon, but meanwhile Hon. Mr. Bowser will press for an immediate shipment—which he will undoubtedly get—the success of which will be carefully watched as a most practical experiment.

Prince Albert for Canada.

The other great dominions are to be similarly honored, says Curtis Brown, the London correspondent of a number of American newspapers, and each will have a royal prince as Viceroy. Indeed, according to his account, the idea was inspired through political consideration with regard to India, rather than on Canada's account, although the experiment will be made first in Canada, for the very good reason that the Prince selected as Connaught's successor is the oldest of the King's sons, with the exception of the Prince of Wales. This is Prince Albert, the sixteen-year-old naval cadet. By the time the term of the present Governor-General is up Prince Albert will be about old enough to succeed him, should it be the wish of the King that he should do so. Prince Henry, the third son, is said to be destined for India. He is eleven years old. Prince George, aged nine, and Prince John, aged six, might go to Australia and South Africa, respectively, the King and Queen, fortunately, having enough sons to go round.

The Indian Situation.

In Canada the arguments that now exist for the proposed change are of recent origin, but those that concern India are long standing. The very reasons that make the Indian Corruptions desirable are the reasons that suggest the propriety of having a Royal Prince as Viceroy. It is recognized by every British statesman that the native of India, devoted as they are to the Crown, are almost without exception men of towering pride. They feel themselves in every respect, save that of authority, to be the equals, if not the superiors, of their Viceroys, especially if the Viceroys happen, like Lord Curzon, not to have the grand manner. They do not mistake an earl for a king, and are said to feel humiliated because they have to make their obeisance to one not of Royal birth, and, though they do not openly show their feelings in this respect, there is little doubt that they exist, and that they make the task of governing India more delicate than it would be if they were a prince of the blood instead of an earl to represent the kingly authority at Calcutta.

To Strengthen the Crown. It is said that King George has other reasons for the plan he is credited with by the correspondent. He desires, in all constitutional ways, to increase the power of the Crown, and their living and their living hard to strengthen the ties of empire. He has expressed himself on the latter point more than once, and about the most suitable way for a prince to do some real work is to train himself for kingship, and to strengthen the ties of empire. As a rule an American newspaper correspondent is not the safest guide to the intentions of the British Government or of the King of England, and we should be reluctant to give the credence to Mr. Brown's story that would attach to an announcement in the Court Circular. However such matters are usually hinted at and discussed long before any authoritative statement is made regarding them, and Mr. Brown may be discharging a useful function in breaking the ice.—Mall and Empire.

PROMINENT RAILROAD MAN

STRONGLY ADVISES HIS FRIENDS TO TRY GIN PILLS FOR THE KIDNEYS

"I have been a Pullman Conductor on the C. P. R. and Michigan Central during the last three years. About four years ago, I was laid up with intense pains in the groin, a very sore back, and suffered most severely when I tried to urinate. I treated with my family physician for two months for gravel in the bladder but did not receive any benefit. About that time, I met another railroad man who had been similarly affected and who had been cured by taking Gin Pills, after having been given up by a prominent physician who treated him for Diabetes. He is now running on the road and is perfectly cured. He strongly advised me to try Gin Pills which I did, with the result that the pains left me entirely. FRANK S. IDE, BUFFALO, N. Y. 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50. Sample free. SEEN ON A VISIT

TO GAY TRIPOLI

A Well Known Traveler Gives Some Interesting Facts of the Place.

Mr. John Horne, a well-known traveler last year made a trip to Tripoli, and wrote a graphic account of his experiences. His starting point was the island of Djerba, on the north coast of Africa, where he had been resting. Some extracts may be of interest at the present juncture:

By steamer from Djerba to Tripoli is only one night along the coast, and when I went on deck next morning at sunrise, we were anchored about 200 yards from the shore, inside a line of dangerous looking rocks, which just showed above the water. In the hands of any other nation this reef would have been turned into an excellent harbor, but under Turkish rule it remains a serious menace to shipping, and in rough weather often forces steamers to pass without stopping at all. But the black rocks held my attention only a moment. Along the water's edge lay the most truly eastern town I had ever seen. Before its snowy domes and spear-like minarets, Algiers, Tunis and even Constantinople paled and were as nothing. Tripoli could not lay claim to the splendor of these others, but here was no mixture of east and west, no blending of styles. It was the purity of line and the complete absence of European architecture which made one feel that this, at last, was the true Arab east.

Cosmopolitan Crowd.

Outside, all Islam seemed crowded into the narrow picturesque streets. Turks, in badly fitting frock coats, rubbed shoulders with Tunisian Arabs, Bedouins, Arabs from Egypt and Syria, and even Soudanese, black as ebony, oily and shiny, picked their way among the sleeping dogs and heaps of garbage. And the odor of it all! How I love the smell of the east! That subtle mixture of burning charcoal and spices, with kiff, chumam or coffee thrown in, according to the shop one happens to be passing. Not exactly a pleasant odor in itself, but one feels that the east would be nothing without it.

As the consular body and a few merchants are the only Europeans in Tripoli, it stands to reason that plotting and intrigue are the order of the day. I was most amused at hearing the secret intentions with which I was credited. Nobody could believe that a simple tourist would come to Tripoli without an arriere pensee. Each country imagines that its neighbor is preparing to "protect" the place in the near or less distant future. "After Morocco-Tripoli," say the wiseacres; and I can quite believe it. In spite of what has been said to the contrary, I found the natives quite friendly, and was never molested in any of my long walks in the town and oasis. The beauty of the latter must be seen to be understood. No running water exists in Tripoli, and every drop for these eight square miles of palms and gardens has to be raised from the wells, or norias, which abound everywhere. The system is the ancient one, universal in the east, by which a mule or camel walks up and down an inclined plane, and raises the water in a goat skin, which empties itself into a wooden trough at the top of the well. The creaking of the wooden rollers never ceases, night or day, and as the wells are often entirely covered with bushes, the sound gives a strange impression of invisible workers, laboring underground in the deserted oasis.

Inferno of Fairyland.

On the south the desert touches the very walls of the town, extending away in arid grandeur over hundreds of miles of grey hills and valleys. Under the terrible rays of the midday sun it seems an inferno of monotony and heat; but at sunset a very fairyland of rose and purple takes the place of the palpitating grey. The desert is alive. A shepherd with his flock of goats appears from nowhere, wending his way slowly homeward. In the distance one hears the sound of approaching bells, and over the hillocks rises a long line of camels, moving slowly, majestically, every line of their blue and red trappings standing out sharply in the falling light. The curtains of the huge baskets in which the women travel have been thrown back, and one catches a glimpse of dark, languorous eyes and pearly teeth before they are closed once more as the first palms are reached. The Arab rarely gives outward sign of the joy or sorrow he feels. No quickening of pace, no word or cry, as the journey ends after weeks—perhaps months—of danger. Allah has willed that they should arrive; that suffices. It is the admirable, unattainable "Kismet" for which the hurrying European must sigh in vain.

As I turned away towards the town in the gathering twilight, a large modern looking building among the palms caught my attention. And on nearer inspection it turned out to be one of the large barracks which the Turks have built within the last few years. Now I knew that foreigners are not allowed even to approach any military post, but my curiosity was aroused, and I determined to get inside, if only for a moment. There was a large gateway in the middle of the long white wall, so I walked boldly towards it, expecting every moment to be turned back or even arrested.

A Skeleton Garrison.

However, nothing of the sort occurred. To my astonishment not a soul was to be seen. Under the archway on one side a guard room, on the other a smaller one with a divan and table of coffee for the officer on guard; and both were empty. Where were the soldiers? The great courtyard was deserted and presented no particular interest. A line of well built stables told me that the place was a cavalry barracks—without men or horses. I retired as I had come, unmolested; but outside the gate the sound of hoofs coming from the direction of the town made me hesitate. A moment later an officer and four men galloped up and dismounted. The officer, a young man of about 30, showed none of the shabbiness of the ordinary Turk. Not a speck of dust on the well-fitting dark blue uniform; not a strap or buckle out of place. I looked and wondered. But the men—what a contrast! No smartness here. Their clothes had been patched and repatched, till not a shred of the original uniform remained; only one wore what had once been boots. And still they are splendid soldiers, and because of their rags and unkempt appearance one is forced to admire them all the more.

With the exception of a few important garrisons, the Turkish soldier hardly ever receives any pay. Each man gets two loaves of bread a day, and in order to have a few pence for their other needs, they generally sell one of them. At Tripoli I often saw them standing in rows in the market place, each with his basket of bread in front of him, doing business like the ordinary bakers. But to return to my story. The officer saluted politely and remarked in excellent French that he must ask me not to remain where I was, as foreigners were not allowed to approach the barracks. For a moment I was about to comply with his request, but the situation seemed so amusing that at all risks, I felt I must confide in him. So I replied that I had been so surprised to find the place deserted that I had already examined the whole of it. The quiet laugh that greeted this statement relieved my mind considerably.

"Ah," he said, "what is the use of hiding the truth from you Europeans? You find out everything. These barracks were built for a thousand men, and I am here with only twenty." He went on to tell me that he had been only a few months in Tripoli, having been banished from Constantinople for some reason which he himself ignored.

"Will you go back?" I asked. "Inch Allah" (if Allah wills) was the reply. And I went on my way, wondering what unwritten pages of Turkish history these political undesirables could unfold—if they dared.

G. Lockie Brown, Manager

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1911

CHANGE OF MANAGEMENT.

Men, like the seasons, come and go. Mr. E. A. Paige, who, for six years has had the management of this paper has resigned and Mr. George Lockie Brown becomes its directing head. When Mr. Paige assumed charge he had not only the difficult task of making a second daily paper hold its own in New Westminster, but he had to grapple with problems resulting from mistakes at his institution, and the enemy freely predicted that it could not live three months. Six years have passed and it still lives, with an increased usefulness in this rapidly growing community, thanks to the untiring energy of the late Managing Director. In these years that have passed into history, he had not only these financial problems to grapple with and a determined opposition ever trying to wreck the mechanical staff, and interfere in every possible manner with the even flow of the revenues of the paper, but he had to deal with warring factions within the party to which the "Daily News" has given an unswerving allegiance, endeavoring to heal the various breaches and present a solid front to the enemy. To Mr. Paige belongs the credit of persistently urging that steps be taken to throw off our village appearance by the construction of permanent roadways and sidewalks. One of his slogans was "Let us wake up and be a city," and every citizen, no matter what his creed or politics, rejoices at the marvellous change that has come about. We have only in a measure commenced to build. To him must be given the credit of warning against excessive expenditures, by the civic authorities, that could not result in benefit to the community. The final outcome, in two cases at least, has proven that it would have been much better to follow his advice. Mr. Paige was a trenchant writer and to those who came within the sweep of his pen at times, it may have seemed that he was more forceful than pleasant, but believing that he was right, he gave no quarter, and asked none. His kindly side was shown many a time in his careful guarding of the good name of a family, when one of its members fell by the wayside, also in the institution and conduct of relief funds when the necessities of the occasion demanded. His one absorbing interest was the "Daily News." This is borne out by his self-sacrifice in refusing lucrative positions and interests on several occasions during his incumbency. Some time ago he pressed to be relieved of his connection with the "fourth estate," so that he could enter commercial life, and on Tuesday last his fellow directors accepted his resignation. He can now devote his whole energies to the business he has been connected with for some time in North Vancouver.

The "Daily News" wishes him every success in his venture there.

DEVELOPING CANADA.

To all except the natural mathematician, statistics are uninviting, repellant. In the mother of parliaments, at the heart of the Empire, Mr. Gladstone, the Grand Old Man of Liberalism, the outstanding figure in the politics and the life of his time, made figures interesting. As Chancellor of the Exchequer he produced a budget that was technically and scientifically so correct that critics, examining it, were dumb. By the power of his splendid imagination he made figures alive and interesting. Which him the Budget was the life of the great British nation, its movements registered and recorded at the points where they touched the financial currents of world history. He demonstrated that nothing is aloof, unrelated, absolute. He showed that national finance is but another phase of the same problem as is presented by starving children in the city slums, by the thrifty housewife striving to make "both ends meet," by the vigorous, alert, capable business man who bends his best energies to making his ledger show a balance on the right side. In short, he showed that figures are eloquent.

The report to the Census and Statistics Office at Ottawa for the month ending October 31 shows that the total area in potatoes, roots, fodder crops, hay and clover throughout the Dominion this year was 9,007,492 acres, with a total products value of $219,055,000. This is $1,600,000 more than last year, and there is a decrease of $3,129,000 in hay and clover. The largest increase is shown in potatoes, which is nearly $6,000,000 more than last year, although the product is less by 8,000,000 bushels. The average selling price was 60 cents per bushel as compared with 45 cents a year ago. The value of this year's product of hay and clover and fodder corn is $159,065,000, which is less than last year's value by $2,508,000. Potatoes, turnips and other roots and sugar beets have a value of $50,990,000, being more than last year's value by $4,213,000. The quality of all the crops this year is 90 per cent and over, excepting sugar beets, which is 88 per cent, and last year all crops excepting potatoes, turnips and other roots, were over 90. The value of all root and fodder crops this year by provinces were $5,754,000 in Prince Edward Island, $12,228,000 in Nova Scotia, $12,596,000 in New Brunswick, $73,315,000 in Quebec, $89,468,000 in Ontario, $5,583,000 in Manitoba, $3,790,000 in Saskatchewan and $6,321,000 in Alberta. The per cent of fall ploughing completed ranges from 73.57 in Ontario to 90.40 in Prince Edward Island for the eastern provinces, and from 18.73 in Alberta to 34.12 in Manitoba for the western provinces, which is less than the averages of last year at the same date. For summer following the average in all the provinces is well over 90 per cent for each of the three years 1009-11.

CORROBORATION OF KIPLING'S NEW POEM

Mrs. Vermilya comes just when Mr. Kipling is surrounded by skeptical tormentors who scoff at the notion that the "Female of the Species is more Deadly than the Male."

The Chicago woman who is accused of being a nine-fold murderess might inspire the Imperial songster with a sequel that would crush the whole army of parodists who have sprung into being with the deadly intent of ridicule headed by the chivalrous Sydney Low, with his mingled strain.

"Woman good, and kind, and clinging, timid, soft, anemic, pale. For the female of the species was an adjunct of the male."

One can imagine a few of these authorities, ancient and modern, upon whom Mr. Kipling based his sweeping generalization:

Here are some, not put forward in defence of Kipling; far from it, but just to show that there is easily another side to the character of the "ministering angel":

"No possible punishment can deter women from heaping crime upon crime. Their perversity of mind is more fertile in new crimes than the imagination of a judge in new punishments."—Corrado Celto (fifteenth century).

"Feminine criminality is more cynical, more depraved, and more terrible than the criminality of the male."—Huxley.

"The violence of the ocean waves or of devouring flames is terrible. Terrible is novelty—but woman is more terrible than all else."—Euripides.

"The perversity of woman is so great as to be incredible even to its victim."—Caro.

"A terrible point of superiority in the female born criminal over the male lies in the refined, diabolical cruelty, with which she accomplishes her crime."—Lombroso.

Leaving Kipling out of consideration the case of Mrs. Vermilya, the Chicago woman accused of being a "pepper box Borgias" has features that call to mind some of the famous cases in the annals of criminology: The Borgias and the Medicis and others.

The fine cunning that the use of the pepper box charged with arsenic bespeaks and the obsession of the accused in regard to corpses—her morbid love of seeing and handling the dead—are features of the case that make it of particular interest to the criminologist.

The More Ferocious Females. Passing over the case of Lucrezia Borgia, the much maligned Italian lady whose character has recently been patched up by the partial dissipation of the myth regarding her propensity for poisoning folks, one may find in criminal annals many cases that go to substantiate the assertion of Lombroso, the great Italian criminologist, that though females, born criminals are fewer than male they are often much more ferocious.

"History has recorded the mingled cruelty and lust of women who have enjoyed royal or popular power," he says. "We know of instances among Romans, Greeks and Russians, from Agrippina, Fulvia, Messalina, down to Elizabeth of Russia. Theroinne de Merloort and the female cannibals of Paris and Palermo."

"Terrible Things Done to Rival's." "And the same may be said of Aelia Amestris, to revenge herself on a rival, begged Xerxes to hand over to her the rival's mother, whose breasts, ears, lips and tongue she cut off and threw to the dogs, after which she sent the mutilated woman home."

"Parysatis, mother of Artaxerxes" ordered a rival to be buried alive, the rival herself she ordered to be cut to pieces.

"Ta-Ki, the mistress of the Emperor Choen-Sin, plunged him into vicious excesses, and when a rival appeared on the scene she had her killed and sent the body, cut into pieces, to the murdered woman's father, whom she caused to be assassinated."

"M. R., a case described by Ottonlength, was a thief, a corrupter of youth, a blackmail, and all this at the age of 17. When only 12 she robbed her father. At 15 she fled from home with a lover whom she left almost at once for a vicious career. She was extremely vindictive—on one occasion she conceived such a violent hatred for a rival that, catching her into a cave, she poisoned her coffee and thus caused her death."

Merciless Analysis of Female Traits. Lombroso is merciless in his analysis of the feminine traits.

"What is the explanation?" he asks. "We have seen that the normal woman is naturally less sensitive to pain than a man, and the compassion is the offspring of sentiment."

"We also see that the women have many traits in common with children: that their moral sense is deficient, that they are revengeful, jealous, inclined to vengeance of a refined cruelty."

"In ordinary cases these defects are neutralized by piety, maternity, want of passion. But when piety and maternal sentiments are wanting and in their place are strong passions and intensely erotic tendencies it is clear that the innocuous semi-criminal present in the normal woman must be transformed into a born criminal more terrible than any man."

"What terrific criminals would children be if they had strong passions, muscular strength and sufficient intelligence, and, if, moreover, their evil tendencies were exasperated by a morbid psychological activity!"

"And women are big children. Their evil tendencies are more numerous and more varied than men's but generally remain latent."

"AD" WOLGAST IS ON ROAD TO RECOVERY

Thought He Had Been Knocked Out by Welsh—Physical Condition Supports Him.

Los Angeles, Nov. 29.—The operation on Ad Wolgast, who had been suddenly taken ill with appendicitis, was completed at 10:50 o'clock. Manager Tom Jones descended from the operating room to escort Mrs. Wolgast upstairs to see her husband.

"Ad is still unconscious from the anaesthetic," said Jones, "but the doctors say he is doing fine."

Attendees said this afternoon he would continue to be dazed and incoherent until night. His physical condition seems to be standing him in good stead. His one idea is that he was knocked out by Welsh.

TO ARRANGE MATCH WITH SOUTH HILL

There being no match scheduled to take place next Saturday the boys of the senior amateur football team are trying to arrange to play a game against the South Hill club on that date. If these negotiations are brought to a satisfactory conclusion the match will be pulled off at Moody square grounds on that afternoon.

The South Hill club is a comparatively new institution, having only been formed this fall. In connection with the South Vancouver league which was organized this season. Nevertheless the members consider themselves a strong aggregation, and the match should prove an interesting one.

REFEREE CHOSEN FOR V. A. C. GAME

Arrangements for the game to be played on December 9 between the New Westminster senior amateur football team and the V. A. C. in the ante-final for the Iroquois cup are being completed. The match will take place on the Cambie street grounds, Vancouver, and Mr. Hamlin will be the referee.

R. L. STEVENSON'S HOME IN THE ADIRONDACKS

In the heart of the Adirondack mountains, which skirt the eastern boundary line of the United States and Canada, lies a picturesque little village of the name of Saranac, whose associations entitle it to a worthy place among the homes and haunts of Robert Louis Stevenson. It will be remembered that shortly after his father's death in May, 1887, the death of R. L. S. was such that his medical advisers deemed a change of climate imperative. Proceeding with his wife, mother and stepson to the United States with the intention of seeking a temporary home in the mountains of Colorado, Stevenson was advised by his friends in New York to try the Adirondacks instead, and there he took up his quarters in October, 1887, remaining until April of the following year. "It seems a first-rate place," he wrote soon after his arrival. "We have a house in the eye of many winds, with a view of a piece of running water—Highland, all but the dear view of peat and too many hills—Highland, also, but for the lack of weather.

The favorite impression formed at first does not seem to have lasted, however: a winter of exceptional severity completely disposing of any thoughts he may have entertained of settling for any length of time in the neighborhood. The climate, we are told, "comprised every variety of unpleasantness: it rained, it snowed, it sleeted, it blew, it was thick fog, it froze—the cold was Arctic; it thawed—the discomfort was worse; and it combined these different phases in every possible way." Truly "not a very pleasant spot," as his biographer remarks.

An inspiration.

But with all its climatic vagaries, Saranac has one strong claim to be remembered kindly by Stevenson's admirers; it supplied the inspiration and a large part of the color for one of his greatest works—"The Master of Ballantrae." The idea of a story dealing with the vicissitudes of the House of Durriadeer had long been in his mind, but it was not until that night, which he so vividly described, on the balcony of the wooden house in which he lived, outside the hamlet of Saranac, with the sound of the river "contending with ice and boulders," in his ears, that the vision came to him of the grim tragedy with its final scene in the "barbarous wilderness" of the Adirondacks.

It was at Saranac, too, that he wrote the ballad of "Ticonderoga," and the series of articles for Scribner's Magazine, which did so much to advance his popularity in the United States.

The impression probably formed by most Stevensonians from the author's account of his own experience, and from the gloomy narrative of the Master's journey in the wilderness, is that the Adirondacks are a mountain solitude, black, barren, and almost uninhabitable. They would be agreeably surprised, as I was, to find that, whatever the region may be like in winter, it is in summer one of the most delightful retreats to be found on the American continent. What R. L. S. depicted as a barbarous wilderness has become a favorite pleasure ground and health resort, a kind of fashionable Arcadia, with palatial summer houses, up-to-date hotels and finely equipped sanatoria.

In its bracing altitudes New York "society" seeks relief from the strenuous whirl of Broadway; thither the Wall street millionaire, tired of "doing Europe" in a hurry, repairs for the rest cure and a taste of the simple life. The Adirondacks are today, indeed, the Trossachs of the eastern states—more Highland, though without the peat and the heather, than even Stevenson imagined—and Saranac lake, to give the village in which he stayed its proper name, is their centre.

Peace Profound.

Set in a valley, it commands a magnificent view of hill, lake and forest. A quarter of a mile away, the stream which appealed so strongly to the heart of R. L. S., reminding him, as it did, bouldered bed, murmuring in tones subdued the song that was once an inspiration to the isolated dweller in the house above.

From the surrounding hills, with their long sloping stretches of pine, steals the delicious scent of balsam, filling the valley with a soft healing sweetness that is infinitely soothing, and communicating to the little village, dozing in the summer sunlight, an added sense of drowsiness. The prevailing impression is that of a profound silence broken only by echoes thrown off peace, of the hush of eternal hills, by Scar and Saddle Back—names which Stevenson himself might well have invented. The spell of the place is such that one is tempted to linger on the slope of a hill and drink in the nectar-like air and the beauty of a scene which even our own highlands could scarcely surpass.

But the spirit of Stevenson calls, and we must away to seek the house where he lived and wrote "The Master of Ballantrae." It was not without some difficulty that we found it. Saranac lake, like most holiday resorts, is indifferent to its past, and unconscious of any other claims to greatness than those represented by its attractiveness. To the desires of its numerous and well-to-do visitors the inhabitants cater with an enthusiasm that is as profitable as it is keen, but if they know the history of their own place they are not particularly disposed to impart it to strangers.

When I inquired the way to Stevenson's cottage, I was told that nobody of that name lived in the neighborhood. Another intelligent native whom I consulted solemnly said "Mr. Stevenson kept a boarding house?" Everybody in Saranac lake keeps such an establishment, so that according to local lights the question was perhaps not unnatural.

Reference to the guide book of the district was equally unavailing. It contained beautifully written descriptions of the scenery and of the advantages of camp life in the Adirondacks, but not a word about R. L. S. At last I remembered that the family with whom Stevenson had boarded was named Baker, and with this as a clue I soon obtained the information desired.

In the Eye of the Winds.

It turned out that there were several families of the name of Baker in the neighborhood, but the proprietor of one of the hotels had an idea that a "writer fellow" had some time or other stayed with "Mrs. Baker on the hill," and to "Mrs. Baker on the hill" I was directed, to find, sure enough, that her house was the place I sought.

If confirmation had been needed, it would have been supplied by Stevenson's own description of his home—"a wooden house with a verandah on a hill overlooking the river." There it stood "in the eye of the winds," just as he left it—a plain but comfortable looking dwelling, its roof brushed by the branches of a few pine trees, which formed the fringe of a belt stretching behind to within reach of the mountain summit.

To cross the bridge over the stream, climb the hill and pay my respects to Stevenson's landlady was the only thing for a Stevensonian to do. I was met at the door by a tall, kindly-eyed lady, who seemed rather pleased when informed that I was not in search of rooms, for, as she explained, her house was already filled with boarders, and she "just hated to turn people away."

The fact that I was a humble admirer and countryman of the great Scottish writer who had found shelter under her roof seemed to be a sufficient introduction to the good graces of Mrs. Baker, and it required no assurance on her part to convince me that here, as everywhere else he went, Stevenson had left a memory faithfully cherished.

Yes, she remembered him "as if it were yesterday, with his long hair an-spare figure, a queer young man in some of his ways," but having "some thing about him that everybody liked." We talked at the door for a few minutes, while I took stock of the verandah and had pointed out his favorite corner sheltered from the winds, and then, as if the subject seemed to her liking, she invited me into the sitting room. This was in all probability what Stevenson described as the "prophet's chamber," and here it was that he did his writing and entertained visitors. Among the most welcome of these was Dr. Trudeau, who attended him while he remained at Saranac, "was all the winter at my side," and whose services as a doctor and friend were rewarded by the author afterwards with a complete set of his works, each bearing on the fly leaf a quaint dedication.

Dr. Trudeau.

Dr. Trudeau still lives at Saranac Lake, which as a health resort he may be said to have founded. Stricken with tuberculosis while a young man studying for his profession, he decided to try the open-air cure in the Adirondacks, and the results were so satisfactory that he established and took charge of a permanent sanatorium, which was among the first in America, and which today is regarded as the best equipped on the continent.

Dr. Trudeau tried hard to persuade R. L. S. to undergo the open-air treatment, which, he is certain, would at any rate have prolonged his life, but the novelist would have none of it, pleading that the remedy would be worse than the disease. Brought into contact with him under circumstances which made for intimate friendship, the doctor got to know the real Stevenson better than most, and the days and nights he spent with him around the fire in Mrs. Baker's sitting room, or out in the woods, are among his most cherished recollections.

But to return to Mrs. Baker: I found her, as I have indicated, most willing to talk of her famous boarder, and her impressions were none the less interesting because they were chiefly of the little home traits that a more profound observer would have overlooked. She had read some of his books, but it was evident that they had not appealed to her so strongly as the author himself. His addiction to the cigarette, his habit of lying in bed after breakfast propped up with pillows and reading and smoking, his restlessness, his interest in everything and everybody around him, his attachment to the fire, "which did not radiate," his unbounded delight over what she regarded as "trifles"—all these characteristics had been noted and remembered as indicative of a person out of the ordinary.

His Whistle and Nonsense.

But what had impressed her most was his unflinching good spirits. "He came here very sick, but you would have thought he was the happiest man alive. With his whistle and his nonsense he kept us all in good humor." He liked to talk with the mountain guides, of whom Mr. Baker was one, and he would get them to describe their experiences in return for which he would tell them stories of his own travels. It was evidently from this source that he gathered much of the material which was turned to such excellent account in "The Master of Ballantrae."

It would have delighted the heart of Stevenson himself to have heard Mrs. Baker describe him as a "fine talker." It appeared that he often found his way into the kitchen, and with his back to the stove would "talk as I never heard anyone talk before." She could not remember what it was all about, "but some of the things he seemed to say in jest struck me as being very serious," a remark which had more profundity in tives have been invited to use the V. A. C. building as their headquarters on that day, and to make themselves thoroughly at home there. The game itself will start half an hour earlier than usual, the kick-off being timed for 2:30 p.m.

Altogether her reminiscences, little personal touches, showed clearly that many of the characteristics of Stevenson which impressed those who knew him best had not escaped the vigilant but kindly eye of his hostess at Saranac.

Like Dr. Trudeau, Mrs. Baker was sorry that Stevenson had not stayed longer in the Adirondacks: "she was sure it would have done him good." When he left in the spring of 1888 it was his intention to return, she said. A number of his belongings were left with her, and when he came back he was to go to a hunter's cottage some way down the valley. But he never came. His belongings were afterwards sent for, and Saranac knew him no more.

In that plain frame house on the hill, however, his memory still lives. C. S. B.

DR. HODGETTS WILL FIGHT THE "ANTIS" IN CANADA.

Medical Adviser to the Health Section of the National Conservation Commission Advocates a Compulsory System as Now Obtains in Many Countries—A Life-Long Student of All Forms of Sanitation.

The Anti-Vaccination League of Canada, which from its headquarters in Montreal has opened a campaign against vaccination, will find a sturdy opponent in Dr. Charles A. Hodgetts, medical adviser to the health section of the National Conservation Commission. A short time before Dr. Hodgetts resigned his position as secretary of the Ontario Board of Health and deputy registrar-general, to go to Ottawa, a reporter had a chat with him on this subject.

"I advocate a compulsory vaccination law," he said, "similar to those of Germany, France, and Japan, in preference to the old-fogy, out-of-date English law."

Dr. Hodgetts is the only medical man in Ontario who has given his whole time and devoted his life work to sanitation in its widest sense. It will be remembered that when, a short time before accepting the Government position he now holds, he was offered the post of Toronto Medical Health officer, but declined it. One or two of the newspapers, however, continued to remark that he was reconsidering his decision, whereupon Dr. Hodgetts gave out this statement: "I have said that I will not accept the position. I am not a woman. I never change my mind."

Gallant South African Scouts.

Scout Thompson, of the 1st Simons-town Troop, who is only eleven years of age, has been awarded the Bronze Cross for heroism in swimming out to the rescue of a lady bather, who, when floating on "water wings," was caught by the tide and carried out to sea.

When Thompson reached the lady, she clutched him round the throat and very nearly drowned her rescuer as well as herself. But he managed to swim with her to shallow water, where the onlookers—none of whom were able to swim—gave him assistance.

Another rescue was made by Scout Esterhuizen, of the Prieska Troop, fourteen years of age. He had been bathing in the Orange River with some other boys when one of them, swinging from the bridge, fell into the water, and, not being able to swim, was in great danger of drowning.

Esterhuizen at once dived in to his rescue at the spot where he had sunk, and succeeded in getting hold of him, and in bringing him safely ashore. Esterhuizen has been granted the Silver medal.

His Early Struggles.

When Mr. Jesse Collings, M.P., was enrolled an honorary freeman of Birmingham he recalled amusing memories of his early experiences in that city. Mr. Collings told how, 62 years ago, he arrived in Birmingham, circumstances requiring that he should fend for himself, with £5 in his pocket, lent by friends who could not well afford it. He set out to seek his livelihood in the old City of Birmingham.

Clay Digger's Romance.

A romance of the Cornish claypits is recalled by the fact that the gross estate left by Mr. Woodman Peters, of St. Austell, who died lately, has been valued at over $98,000. Mr. Peters began working as a day laborer in the claypits of Mid Cornwall at a very early age and for very small wages. But with his pick and shovel he gradually dug a fortune out of the clay. He toiled early and late, and after some years he had saved a little money, and determined to invest it in moorland and dig for clay. He struck a rich bed of china clay, and soon afterwards founded the firm of Parkyn and Peters, which is to-day one of the leading firms in the Cornish clay trade.

A Mineral Eldorado.

The Mount Painter field of South Australia is a wonderful place for the occurrence of rare minerals, and a company has been recently formed to recover radium from the earth.

Ozone in Tunnels.

APES OF GIBRALTAR.

Highly Prized and Carefully Protected by Martial Law.

Major is the name of the chief of the highly prized and carefully protected tribe of Barbary apes that inhabit the rock of Gibraltar. There is a saying in the fortress to the effect that it were "better to kill the governor than Major."

There are only about twenty left of this band of monkeys, which in some mysterious manner came over from Africa many years ago and claimed citizenship in Europe. They are protected by martial law, and any addition by birth to their number is carefully chronicled and announced in the local paper. The apes change their place of residence from the highest peaks of the rock to lower and more sheltered portions and back again, according to the state of the weather. They show their sense of humor by throwing stones at the soldiers, but they are often not seen for weeks at a time save in the early morning.

A few years ago, on account of the diminishing numbers of these animals, some apes were procured from Barbary and turned loose upon the rock. But resident monkeys killed them all. Although so fierce to intruders of their own kind, they never attack human beings and are greatly beloved and esteemed.—New York Press.

PIES FOR THE KING.

Ancient Customs That Are Still Kept Alive in England.

The city of Gloucester, in England, annually presents the king with a pie. Almost from time immemorial Gloucester until the year 1834 followed the custom of expressing its loyalty to the throne by sending to the sovereign a lamprey pie. In 1834 the custom was suspended, but it was revived in 1893 and has since continued.

It was felt that the year of the diamond jubilee required some special effort, and therefore the 1897 pie, which was in May dispatched to Balmoral upon a gold dish, was of a more than usually elaborate character. This pie weighed twenty pounds and was adorned with truffles, fine prawns on gold skewers and aspic jelly. On the top was a representation of the royal crown and cushion, with a scepter to which were attached streamers of royal blue, and at the base were four golden lions.

By the survival of an ancient custom the town of Yarmouth is bound to furnish to the sheriffs of Norwich annually a hundred herrings baked in twenty-four pies, which are then sent to the lord of the manor of East Clareton, who conveys them to the king.—Harper's Weekly.

The Transformation of Percy.

His name was Johnny, and his ambition was to be grown up. He had watched Cissy and Percy, but that's another story, as Kipling says. "Papa," he piped as he wailed with his dad on the beach, "what's under those rocks?"

"Limpets!" snapped papa. This was not the first question.

"Wouldn't they rather walk about, pa?"

"No!" rapped out pa. "They prefer to cling where they are!"

"Is everything that likes clinging to something else a limpet, pa?"

"For goodness—yes!" roared father.

Johnny thought.

"Well, pa," he concluded, "is Percy a limpet, pa, when he says goodby to Cissy in the passage?"—London Answers.

There Was a Coolness.

Two fashionable Philadelphia women met in Chelsea one morning recently. As they shook hands and stopped to speak Mrs. Brown said to Mrs. Jones, "That's a beautiful hat you are wearing."

"Yes, my dear. Isn't it cunning? And I'm so glad you like it. John gave me the money, and I had it imported from Paris."

Next day little Susie Brown was playing with the Jones' girl, and she said, "My mother says your mother has an ugly old hat what is her last year's lid made up new?"

And when Mr. Brown and Mr. Jones reached a mutual friend's, hoping to spend the week end together, they found a coolness between the families.—Philadelphia Times.

Hot Air as a Polisher.

Hot air is used for polishing. The articles to be treated are placed in a basket in a centrifugal machine driven at a very high speed and heated air is blown from a pipe through the basket. A high polish is thus produced very rapidly. Nickel plated articles that have become tarnished are made bright in a few minutes. Wet metal, fresh from the bath, needs no preliminary drying, for the current of air dries and polishes it at the same moment.

Punishment.

"Has Tommie been a good boy since I've been out?" said the mother.

"No, he hasn't," replied the father.

"Did you punish him?"

"No."

"Oh, yes, you did, pop! Ddn't you remember—you sang to me?" came from the boy.—Yonkers Statesman.

Hard Luck Stories.

"I don't like to listen to hard luck stories, do you?"

"That depends on whether they are reminiscences or the preliminaries to a teach."—Washington Herald.

Hope is a batterer, but the most upright of all parasites, for she frequents the poor man's cot as well as the palace of his superiors.—Shanahan.

EDUCATION IN CHINA.

Where Students Find That Schooling Is Far From a Cinch.

A Chinese schoolboy sets off one fine morning when 7 or 8 years old to enter on his instructional course. He makes the most profound obeisance to his teacher. His parents provide the table at which and the stool on which he sits. They also supply the "four precious articles," the ink slab, the ink cake, the pen or brush for writing and the paper. He will have no need at first of the writing materials, all his time being employed in memorizing the books given him. Perhaps a dozen boys, each a class by himself, are busy on his entry. Each is shouting his task at the top of his voice, the teacher sitting at his table in all the somnolent wakefulness of a judge. No wrong pronunciation or intonation escapes his practical ear, and correction is frequent.

It is a simple country house, with its earthen floor, its unglazed windows and its air of utter poverty. Our young hopeful, says The National Review, in due time is introduced to the "Trimetrical Classic" and the questionable statement which forms its very threshold, that "Men at birth are radically good," so set in classical form that he has no more idea of its meaning than if it were in Greek. It is not meaning, however, that is the object just now, but sound and memorizing.

Then he will be introduced to the book of surnames, 400 in number, as another exercise in "getting by heart" after which, in some parts of the land, the "Thousand Character Classic" is set. This is a book consisting of the number of characters named, no one of which is ever used twice. Still no explanation is vouchsafed. For all the learning our youth is gaining he might with equal profit memorize a number in varying order according to the custom followed by his teacher, the four sacred books—the "Great Learning," also known as "The Door of Virtue"; the "Analects" of Confucius, the "Doctrine of the Mean," and the "Book of Mencius." As early as 13 or 14, it may be, he will have done the memory work of the four books and be capable of reciting off "yards, rods, furlongs, or miles" of learning. Then enlightenment in the form of explanation begins. Darkness is made visible, and education may be said to have begun.

How, Indeed?

The woman who had rented a suite at an uptown hotel is very finicky, but the manager is not when he looked at the room after a complete renovation that there was nothing she could find fault with. But there was. She looked carefully at every piece of furniture, scrutinized the decorations and looked at the position of the telephone in the bedroom. Then she went into the sitting room. "Why, you have not put a telephone in the parlor," she exclaimed. "Now, suppose I should fall unconscious in this room some time. Will you tell me how on earth I am going to be able to summon assistance?"

Locomotive Puffs.

The number of puffs which a locomotive gives in a given distance is governed entirely by the size of its driving wheels. For every turn of the wheels it gives four separate puffs. Therefore if the circumference of the driving wheels is twenty feet, which is about the average, and the train is going at fifty miles an hour we get 880 puffs a minute.

The cough or puffs is due to the abrupt emission of waste steam from the smokestack.

When there are more than eighteen puffs a second the human ear cannot distinguish them separately.—London Tit-Bits.

How Spain Punished Vandals.

There was a trial by court martial of forty-three medical students of the University of Havana in November, 1871, for the alleged crime of scratching the glass plate of a vault containing the remains of a volunteer. Eight of the offenders were condemned to death on Nov. 26 and shot the following day, while thirty-one others were sentenced to imprisonment and four were acquitted. An outbreak of indignation ensued because of the severity of the penalties inflicted.

The Wing of a Bird.

The typically vertebrate limb, variously modified in a given class or order, has one bone in the upper arm, which gives support to two in the forearm, which similarly yield to four at the wrist, and from these five digits can just comfortably be extended. The bird, however, decided to fly rather than grasp with its hand, so that three and a half fingers are all it has retained of the five which its reptilian ancestors bequeathed to it.

Staving It Off.

The street piano was out our way the other night, and our next door neighbor didn't like it. "Here's a nickel," he shouted to the grinder, "if you'll go away at once." "Ees der someboda wat is seek?" asked the grinder. "Not yet," answered our neighbor. "Hurry."

Rivers in Korea.

On the western coast of Korea the tides of the Yellow sea are higher than anywhere in the world outside the Bay of Fundy, and while the rivers of eastern Korea are clear streams, that run swiftly from the mountains, those on the western side are great brown, muddy rivers, up which the thirty foot ocean tides surge many miles.

Earthquakes.

Andaman Islanders, lowest of savages, think that earthquakes are caused by the spirits of the dead, who, impatient at the delay of the resurrection, shake the palm trees on which they believe the earth to rest.

BRUIN'S BANQUET.

It Was Long Drawn Out and Only Whetted His Appetite.

THE FINISH WAS EXCITING.

After the Pork Course Gave Out a Dessert of Cold Lead Ended the Feast, and the Unwilling Host Vowed Never Again to Fool With a Bear.

A teamster in the employ of one of the big tanneries in the west had a laughable yet trying adventure with a bear while on his way from the woods with a load of bark. As he emerged from the woods with his team he stopped to give the mules a breathing spell and to eat his dinner, which he carried in a tin bucket. He had scarcely opened his bucket and begun to eat when a bear came out of the woods on one side of the road, only two or three rods in the rear of the wagon. Bruin sauntered along, paying no attention to the team, but the teamster, desirous of seeing what the bear would do, threw a bit of salt pork in his way. The bear stopped, smelled at the pork and gulped it down greedily. Then the animal, noting the source of the morsel, came toward the wagon and rose on his haunches as if to say that another bit of pork would prove acceptable.

The teamster laughed and tossed out a second piece, which bruin devoured, and then he posed again. But the teamster wanted the rest of his dinner himself and paid no attention to the shaggy intruder. The beggar, seeing that the teamster was no longer aware of his presence, snorted sharply two or three times and walked back and forth across the road as if reconnoitering the situation. Presently he growled, but the teamster, thinking that the beast would go away if he got nothing further, continued his meal.

The bear ventured near and finally climbed up the load of bark at the hind end of the wagon. The man was unpleasantly surprised at this movement of bruin's, as he was wholly unarmed.

Accordingly he threw a bit of pork into the road, at the same time yelling to the bear to direct its attention to the meat. The bear dropped down and went and picked it up, but as soon as it was swallowed and there was no more forthcoming he made another charge upon the wagon.

The teamster started the mules onward, but knew that he could not hope to escape with his heavy load of bark. An idea struck him. He would coax the bear on by feeding the lunch to him until they should come to a friend's house a mile or two along the road. Then he would get a gun and shoot the old fellow.

The teamster sat on the bark, facing backward, his big dinner bucket at hand. When the bear came up with the wagon and threatened to climb upon the load the teamster tossed out a piece of pork. The supply of this edible was limited, so he tossed the bear a slice of bread, which fell butter side up. Bruin nosed it, then licked the butter off and left it.

The next slice fell butter side down, and the bear ignored it. Boiled eggs and cheese fared the same. Bruin wanted pork. The teamster dealt this out in small bits, which failed to satisfy, and the bear was growing ugly and aggressive.

At length the teamster saw his friend at work in a field and called to him to run for his gun. The man seemed to realize the state of the case and set off on a dead run for his house, a quarter of a mile distant. But the supply of pork was out before he returned, and the poor teamster was in a sorry plight.

The bear climbed upon the load. The teamster tossed him the last piece of pork and then jumped from his wagon and tore down the road. Bruin, probably thinking that the teamster was fleeing with a stock of cooked pork, started after him. The terrified man had a fair start, but he stumbled over a stone and fell full length, and the bear was close upon him when there came the loud report of a gun.

The friend had come at last. The teamster rose and looked round. There lay his late pursuer in the road, dead. The teamster declared that never again would he fool with a bear.—Harper's Weekly.

They Bumped.

A true happening which has been made the subject of a cartoon occurred at a fashionable golf club near London. A young man interested in golf solely for the sake of the social atmosphere one day decided to play a round. So he sauntered leisurely down to the caddy house, where he met a certain peppery lord. Not knowing the gentleman and barely looking at him, the somewhat foppish youth asked, "Are you the caddy master here?" Without an instant's hesitation Lord — replied, "No, I am not, but I happen to know that he is not in need of any caddies this afternoon." It was some time before either recovered.—Boston Transcript.

Tongue Could Tell.

"Last night, George, you told me you loved me more than tongue could tell, and, oh, George, that wasn't true!" "Why, darling, what do you mean?" "I mean that it wasn't more than my little brother's tongue could tell, he heard it all!"

FROG FARMING VERY PROFITABLE IN SOUTH

Young Woman Making Pile of Money Out of the Industry.

Frog farming is an enterprise carried on by the American girl of today. Miss Isabelle Morgan is a pioneer in this line. Before taking up the occupation of frog farming she was a stenographer in Baltimore. The strict business training then gained she considers the basis of her success.

When the strain of office hours told on Miss Morgan's health, her physicians ordered her into the open air and she returned to her home on a farm. A progressive, ambitious girl in touch with large interests finds such a situation difficult. In looking back Miss Morgan considers it the most fortunate incident of her career, for she embarked on her present business.

Maryland is one of the six states that lead in supplying the country with frogs, and the marshy lowlands on Miss Morgan's father's property offered suitable environment for the work.

The bullfrog is the variety with which it is more profitable to stock a farm, as their large size makes them especially valuable as a table delicacy and their greedy habits render them easy to capture. When sold for food full grown bullfrogs bring from one to four dollars per dozen. Especially large, fine specimens are shipped by Miss Morgan for use in biological laboratories. These often bring as big a price as three dollars each.

The frog reserve of this Maryland girl consists of a series of marshy ponds, each enclosed by fine wire fencing. This prevents the escape of the frogs and insures their safety against snakes and turtles. From May to July the ponds are closely watched for eggs, which are removed to another enclosure. Here the eggs hatch and the giant bullfrog tadpoles often reach a length of six or seven inches. They are carefully guarded, as not only the bulk of the full grown frog, but also the number of years necessary for this growth depends largely upon the size attained by the tadpole before its transformation.

The young frog, when it develops, is removed to a third pond where he can neither molest the tadpoles or be harmed by his full grown relatives. Here he spends his time bled in the mud and moss except at night, when he comes out to feed upon the insects, dead fish, larvae and other delicacies that make up the young frog's menu.

The frogs Miss Morgan raises for eating purposes have the legs skinned and slipped in ice water. The choice specimens destined for laboratory use are first selected. It requires some time to establish a well organized frog reserve. When once the business is launched, Miss Morgan's experience shows that it is both interesting and profitable.

CITY NEWS

Mr. George Mead leaves today for California, where he will spend some three months visiting.

Raincoats that are rainproof. A. S. Mills & Co., 517 Columbia street.

Mrs. J. J. Johnston will receive today, and not again until the third Thursday in January.

Ice cream, all fruit flavors, promptly delivered. Phone 310. I. A. Reid.

Look! Misses, Women's and Children's Shoes at tempting prices. 641 Front street.

According to present arrangements the school board will hold a meeting tomorrow afternoon in the city hall at 4 o'clock.

Stop! Consider! It pays to invest your money in shoes of quality. Come in and invest. 641 Front street.

The monthly meeting of the board of trade will be held in the board of trade rooms, city hall, this evening, at 8 o'clock sharp.

Headaches caused from defective eyesight. Get your eyes tested by a graduate optician, and have your glasses made to suit, satisfaction guaranteed. W. Gifford Optical Parlors, in T. Gifford's jewelry store.

An interesting ceremony will be performed tomorrow at South Westminster, when the Right Rev. Lord Bishop of New Westminster will consecrate the new church of St. Helen's at that place. The consecration service will be held at 10:30 a.m., and half an hour later communion will be celebrated, the bishop preaching the sermon. Another service will be held in the evening, on which occasion Ven. Archdeacon Pentreath, of Vancouver, will be the preacher.

Mrs. Lester will open an adult beginners' class in St. George's hall, Thursday, November 30, at 7:30 p.m.; also an informal hop from 9 to 12 for last season's pupils and their friends.

Take the steamer Transfer for a round trip Saturday afternoon. Leaves Blackman-Ker wharf at 2 o'clock.

On Tuesday evening in St. Andrew's Presbyterian church, corner of Blackwood and Carnarvon streets, Rev. J. S. Henderson will give the first of a series of lectures, supplemented by lantern slides, on his trip to Europe last summer. These lectures should prove of great interest. Some of us in the far west have but a hazy conception of European continental life.

Are you married? Then don't pay rent. We furnish the money to build and you repay it same as rent. National Finance Co., Ltd., 521 Columbia street.

Do it now—what? Give us that list! National Finance Co., Ltd., 521 Columbia street.

Five room house, modern, for rent. $18 per month. National Finance Co., Ltd., 521 Columbia street.

NEW PROBLEMS IN OLD CHINA

Major Fox Thinks Insurrection Wave Will Carry All Before It.

The whole of the province of Chi-Hi, although it has been under the influence of the Manchu dynasty for nearly three centuries, said Major A. C. Fox, of Tientsin, who was a passenger in the Empress of India for Vancouver yesterday, is friendly to revolutionary cause, and although, when he left the city, there was little sign there of the convulsion which is awakening the dragon from his sleep of generations, yet the whole Chinese population was with difficulty restrained from showing open sympathy with the revolutionary cause in the southern and central provinces, which had already made great progress when he left to join the C. P. R. liner, and he fully anticipated that the city, whose possession has always been a determining factor in the mastery of the national capital, would go over to the republican forces without any effective resistance. The struggle was recognized by all parties in China as inevitable, and the white residents, military and civil, realized that a crisis was at hand.

Tientsin was too far removed from the seat of military operations for them to have any special knowledge of the condition of affairs in the affected areas, but there was no doubt that the progress of the country, while it would suffer from the temporary dislocation of business, would go far towards regeneration when the republican administration was able to establish itself.

The major asked a number of questions about the progress of the insurrection since he left China, and expressed surprise that the investment of Nanking had not yet taken place. However, he said, no doubt the leaders of the revolution were anxious to secure the country around them before attacking the southern capital. He believed the insurrectionary forces were strong enough to compel the surrender of General Chang, and that the wave of revolution would then sweep northward towards Peking.

He was not surprised to hear that the Prince Regent's wife was reported to have escaped to Mukden, for rumors were current in Tientsin when he left that the Imperial family had secretly withdrawn from the capital. He doubted whether the Yuan Shi Kai administration could stem the tide of affairs, now they had reached the present pitch.

The major said the official representatives of the European and American powers were looking well after the safety of the white residents scattered through the country.
