APPOINTING A CITY FIREMAN

Ald. Newton Wants Him to be a Real Citizen not an Importation from Outside.

Quite a lot of talk took place at the council meeting last night over the appointment of a fireman. The main point in the discussion was that brought out by Alderman Newton, viz., that the man be engaged from the city's own applicants and not from the outside. This Alderman Douglas supported, but Alderman Clayton thought it a childish idea. The Mayor suggested referring the whole thing to the fire committee and fire chief.

Following is the list of applicants: George Martin, William B. Cornish, F. V. Clarke, James Forbes, Arthur Burritt, Frank C. Peck, Thomas Hall, J. Duram, E. Wainard, And. Scully, Walt Wickes, William S. Sweet, E. L. Morgan, Allan Fraser, Leo Curtain, H. P. Thomas, Charles A. Couture, J. F. McLeod, And. McKenzie, Thomas H. Hodges, Ardid McNeil, Tom Lloyd, Thomas Kurkham, Neil McDonald.

ALD. MORRISSEY BACK

Complemented by Mayor and Council on His Return

In a brief speech the Mayor congratulated the council last night on the return of Alderman Morrissey from his prolonged visit to the East. The council concurred with the congratulatory terms by applause, which Alderman Morrissey acknowledged the compliment suitably, expressing himself ready for the council work, and glad to be back.

HOW THE CITY'S MONEY IS BURIED OUT OF SIGHT

Ald. Newton Unearths Some Extravagances on Cemetery Road—Broken Down Culvert Costs $1200 to Repair—Costly Retaining Wall Work

On the way to the cemetery according to the investigations of Alderman Newton the city's money is being buried by the bucketful. He went forth on Sunday to discover things and "took a squint around" as he said in council last night, with the result that he found a broken culvert costing $1200 to repair, and some costly retaining wall work going on on Park avenue near the culvert in question. He thought that in view of the fact that finances were found to be so low, the city should be economising. Was there any contract now for this work being done? he asked.

In answer to this Alderman Hilditch explained that the culvert in question was the first ever built by the city. It had collapsed because it had been built on a hill and the rainfall had caused a flow of water which had swept out its foundations. As for the retaining wall Alderman Hilditch asked if Alderman Newton was really so childish as not to know after so many months in council that all retaining walls were part of Section One bylaw. Not until these retaining walls were completed could a Court of Revision be held. The city was bound to go on with this work. Alderman Newton declared that it would take a Philadelphia lawyer to discover where all the money was going that was being spent by the Public Works Department. He had been trying to find this out for all his term

COUNCIL ABUSED DAILY NEWS

Are Very Much Incensed Over the Exposure of the Woodworth Lake Clearing Fiasco—Would Like Press to be Driven Out

NEWTON MAKES ATTACK ON HILDITCH

Tells Him That the Biggest Curse City is Laboring Under Today is the Influence of Ald. Hilditch—Little Clayton Came in at the Tail End With Some Characteristic Phrases—Vote of Censure Was Dropped in Face of the Opposition it Aroused—No Contracts Were Awarded

Rising to the defence of the City Engineer over the matter of the criticism directed at him in last night's News editorial, Alderman Hilditch not only condemned the Daily News, but fell foul of Alderman Newton and included his paper, the Empire, in the wholesale denunciation of Prince Rupert's daily press.

Pointing out that the City Engineer was unable to take personal action to defend himself, Alderman Hilditch blamed Alderman Newton for the position. The City Engineer had not had time to put in a bid of his own for the clearing of the Lakeside. Alderman Newton had first asked why, and then moved that he should do so after the other tenders had been opened.

Read Editor's Aloud

Referring directly to the News editorial which he read out aloud, Alderman Hilditch said "Mr. Mayor, it is time the council did something to protect our City Engineer from this sort of thing. It's all very well for this stuff to appear in Prince Rupert. We know these papers, and don't give much weight to what they say. But the people outside don't know them as we do, and stuff like this editorial going east where the City Engineer has a first rate reputation is apt to be misunderstood, and to do harm to Colonel Davis. It is absolutely cowardly of this paper to attack, and I say to attack maliciously, the reputation of a man like Colonel Davis whose reputation in the east is worth dollars and cents to him. Let the papers attack the aldermen as much as they please, but not the city officials who cannot defend themselves."

The Mayor's Move

Here the Mayor remarked "This is a case where criticism was made in this very paper at a time previous to this incident. The city council advised for tenders in the usual way—the lowest or any tender not necessarily to be accepted. I think it perfectly proper for the council now to satisfy themselves regarding the relative cost of these tenders and days' labor by our own department, when the lowest or any tender was not necessarily to be accepted. I quite appreciate Alderman Hilditch's remarks about the criticism of Colonel Davis, and repeat that it is quite right of the council to take this method of finding out whether the tender prices are exorbitant or not."

Ald. Newton—"And how do we know that these prices are not exorbitant when the City Engineer has never submitted a figure?"

The Mayor—"That is a matter for investigation."

Hilditch's Defence

Ald. Newton—"I do not think it is. We are playing the Engineer a large salary to advise us, and it is his duty to advise us in this way. It is all very well for Alderman Hilditch to find fault with the press and defend Colonel Davis, but there is no denying the fact that for months past Alderman Hilditch has had the City Engineer by the throat, and what is the result? Criticism like we have tonight. I have no wish to cross swords with Alderman Hilditch on this particular issue but there it is."

Ald. Douglas—"The City Engineer should have been asked to tender before the other bids were opened. I think this work should be done by days' labor."

Ald. Hilditch—"I want to tell Alderman Newton that I am ready to cross swords with him on any issue at any time he likes, or every night if he likes."

Ald. Newton—"You are a very brave man." (Laughter).

Blamed the Papers

Ald. Hilditch—"Very often during the past months the City Engineer and I have had occasion to consult together, and very often I have disagreed with the City Engineer, as might be seen when I have voted against the adoption of his reports. Let me tell Alderman Newton that if I was a good enough man to keep the City Engineer under my thumb I wouldn't be standing here talking to him. I want to say that the greatest drawback Prince Rupert has ever had has been two of the most ragged newspapers a city was ever cursed with. That is Alderman Newton's paper and this man Cowper's. As fast as the citizens boost the town these papers knock it. I say that if the citizens were doing their duty, these two papers would be driven outside the city limits."

Or Is It Hilditch?

Ald. Newton—"If both newspapers had done as much harm with their joint efforts as one particular alderman—that is Alderman Hilditch—has done I would say they were going some. The biggest curse this city is laboring under today is the influence of this one alderman, Alderman Hilditch."

"A Perfect Gentleman"

This ended the war of the council lions, but with the worrying activity of the jackal Alderman Clayton got his bark in at the tail of the discussion. "Mr. Mayor," he said, "I just want to say before this matter closes, that I think this mean, cowardly editorial shows the cowardly, dirty, mongrel stuff the man who presumes to occupy the editor's chair is made of when he has to have recourse to these prehistoric methods of criticism."

Somewhat wearily it seemed the Mayor heard Alderman Clayton and then passed on to the next order of business.

FACTS ABOUT THE WOODWORTH LAKE CLEARING CONTRACTS

The Mayor's Exact Words Upon Topic of Interest, as Taken from the News Short-hand Report of Last Night's Council Meeting

"The tenders received for the work of clearing Woodworth Lake shores have been gone over, and the lowest of them is considerably in excess of the estimates made by the City Engineer previously for this work. There is about $10,000 difference between the lowest estimate and that first made by the City Engineer. It may be that the council will negotiate with some of the lowest bidders in the course of a few days, but I do not think the council is ready to tackle this now."—Mayor Manson.

CHEHALIS POWDER FACTORY IS BLOWN UP

Terrible Disaster to Washington Village—Eight Young Women Employed in the Building Are Dead—All Men Escaped—Building Wrecked in a Twinkling

(Canadian Press Despatch)
Cehalis, Wash., Nov. 2.—By a terrible fire followed by an explosion which blew up the powder factory of the Imperial Powder Company here, eight young women have lost their lives.

Men All Escaped

Only two girls out of ten escaped with their lives, although all of the twelve men employed there are unhurt. The name of one of the victims is Bertha Nagle.

It is believed that the accident was due to a workman allowing a pot of paraffin he was heating to boil over and run into the powder in the mixing room. The heat of the melting wax ignited the powder and caused an explosion and more fire.

A Mass of Flame

It was only a minute from the first flash until the whole place was a mass of flame. Two of the girls managed to escape by a sudden rush for the door, but most of them perished in the flames. Bertha Nagle was brought out terribly injured but died soon after reaching the hospital. Her death made the eighth.

Three Great Flashes

Little is known of the disaster, save the testimony of the townspeople that they saw three flashes and explosions in quick succession.

Money Loss $20,000

The money loss is not heavy, being about $20,000. The buildings were light and flimsy in construction, as is required by law for powder factories.

MAY TAKE PROBATIONERS AT THE HOSPITAL SOON

Idea is Not Popular With the Medical Men But Objections May be Overcome—Proposal is Made to Erect a Wing to the Hospital

Increase of work at the hospital, and the need for more help has given rise to the idea that the institution should now open out and undertake the training of probationers who help out the work of the trained nurses, at less cost. This idea is not welcomed by medical men or by the matron at the present stage of the hospital, but the objections to it are likely to be overcome, and at yesterday's meeting of the Hospital Board the president, Mr. D. G. Stewart thought the time had come to institute the probationer system at the hospital.

The idea is at present to have three probationers engaged according to the plan which has been found satisfactory at Hazelton and Port Simpson hospitals. The appointment of one of the temporary nurses to a permanency at the hospital is being considered. A permanent nurse gets $60 per month, and a temporary $25 per week. Financial matters are satisfactory but the need for a new wing calls for increased activity in the search for funds. Both the G. T. P. and the Government paid over their regular cheques according to agreement. Mayor Manson has approved the idea of erecting a new wing, and promised city aid, and W. W. Foster, Deputy Minister of Public Works, who visited the hospital during his visit here, has promised his own influence at Victoria for Government aid. New special lavatory and disinfecting apparatus for the treatment of typhoid fever patients' appliances will be outfitted on the recommendation of the Medical Health Officer.

Motions of thanks were accorded to P. Burns for a gift of Thanksgiving turkeys, and to Rev. H. Des Barres for an office desk gifted. No advice is yet to hand regarding the ambulance.

For the month when the matron was away Nurse Moore took charge of the hospital and the Board has agreed to pay her at the same rate as the matron for that month's work as she took entire responsibility for the institution during that time.

THE ATTACK ON THE "NEWS"

A philosopher has pointed out the reason why a buzz of anger comes from those insect creatures that love the dark, when a rude hand rolls away the stone that hides them, and lets in the light. The psychology of the insect is the psychology of the human animal under similar circumstances. A great thinker once applied it to a branch of the human race in a very biting sentence.

For these reasons, the attack of Alderman Hilditch and the Mayor on the News was a matter of no surprise. A newspaper that lets in the light is the last thing in newspapers they want. A lickspittle soporific sheet plentifully fattened by pap from the civic purse, chanting hired praises to the aldermen would suit them better. The News prefers, however, to espouse the interest of the citizens.

Alderman Hilditch and the Mayor are very much alarmed lest Colonel Davis may feel hurt over any criticism he may receive. But there is no word of sympathy for the thirty-nine gangs of men who packed their grub up through the bush to Woodworth Lake, who spent the days in measuring up the timber and at nights risked the perils of sleeping out in the open, on a fool's errand.

Colonel Davis is a professional man and is in receipt of a good salary for the part he played in the comedy of "Letting the Contracts by Competitive Tender." Colonel Davis is a professional man, and knows perfectly well the impropriety of acquainting himself with the bids of the contractors and station gangs before putting in his own bid. If Colonel Davis while in receipt of a salary paid by the citizens, is willing to put professional usage behind his back and join in with Alderman Hilditch and the Mayor in their petty political schemes, Colonel Davis need not expect to find protection by lurking behind his professional position.

The proof that Alderman Hilditch and the Mayor intended to fool the station gangs is seen in the statement made by the Mayor last night in reference to the clearing contracts.

And as for the City Engineer's estimate the citizens do not forget that the City Engineer's estimate for the retaining walls done by to be labor was $8,000.

THE

Pillar of Light

By Louis Tracy

She arrived safely. Enid followed her, with equal sang froid, though a lift of forty odd feet whilst standing in a ship and clinging to a rope is not an every-day experience. "Dang me," said Ben, as Enid, too, was swung into the lighthouse, "but they're two plucked 'uns."

The great bell tolled away, though the snow had changed to sleet, and the heights beyond the Lighthouse End were dimly visible, so its warning note was no longer needed. The sky above was clearing. A luminous haze spreading over the waters heralded the return of the sun. But the wind was bitterly cold; the fishermen watching the open door, with one eye on the sea, lest an adventurous wave should sweep the Daisy against the rock, murmured to himself:

"'Tis a good job the wind's in the north. This sort o' thing's a weather-breeder, or my name ain't Ben Pollard."

And that was how Enid came back to the Gulf Rock to enter upon the second epoch of her life.

Once before had the reef taken her to its rough heart and fended her from peril. Would it shield her again—rescue her from the graver danger whose shadow even now loomed out of the deep. What was the bell saying in its wistful monotony?

Enid neither knew nor cared. Just then she had other things to think about.

CHAPTER IV.

THE VOICE OF THE REEF

There comes a time in the life of every thinking man or woman when the argosy of existence, floating placidly on a smooth and lazy stream, gathers unto itself speed, rushes swiftly onward past familiar landmarks of custom and convention, boils furiously over resisting rocks, and ultimately, if not submerged in an unknown sea, finds itself again meandering through new plains of wider horizon.

Such a perilous passage can never be foreseen. The rapids may begin where the trees are highest and the meadows most luxuriant. No warning is given. The increased pace of events is pleasant and exhilarating. Even the last wild plunge over the cascade is neither resented nor feared. Some frail craft are shattered in transit, some wholly sunken, some emerge with riven sails and tattered emblems. A few not only survive the ordeal, but thereby fit themselves for more daring exploits, more soul-stirring adventures.

When the two girls stood with Stephen Brand in the narrow entrance to the lighthouse, the gravity of their bright young faces was due solely to the fact that their father had announced the serious accidents which had befallen his assistants. No secret monitor whispered that fate, in her bold and merciless dramatic action, had roughly removed two characters from the stage to clear it for more striking events.

Not once in twenty years has it happened that two out of the three keepers maintained on a rock station within signalling distance of the shore have become incapacitated for duty on the same day. The thing was so bewilderingly sudden, the arrival of Constance and Enid on the scene so timely and unexpected, that Brand, a philosopher of ready decision in most affairs of life, was at a loss what to do for the best now that help, of a sort undreamed of, was at hand.

The case of Jackson, who was scalded, was simple enough. The Board of Trade medicine chest supplied to each lighthouse is a facsimile of that carried by every sea-going steamship. It contained the ordinary remedies for such an injury, and there would be little difficulty or danger in lowering the sufferer to the boat.

But Bates's affair was different. He lay almost where he had fallen. Brand had only lifted him into the store-room from the foot of the stairs, placing a pillow beneath his head, and appealing both to him and to Jackson to endure their torture unmoved whilst he went to signal for assistance.

The problem that confronted him now was one of judgment. Was it better to wait the coming of the doctor or endeavor to transfer Bates to the boat?

He consulted Ben Pollard again; the girls were already climbing the steep stairs to sympathize with and tend to the injured man.

"Do you think it will blow harder, Ben, when the tide turns?" he asked.

The fellow seemed to regard the question as most interesting and novel. Indeed, to him, some what query and its consideration provided the chief problem of each day. Therefore he surveyed land, sea and sky most carefully before he replied:

"It may be a most anything afore night, Misser Brand."

At another time Brand would have smiled. To-day he was nervous, distraught, wrenched out of the worn rut of things.

"I fancy there is some chance of the doctor being unable to land when he reaches the rock. Do you agree with me?"

His voice rang sharply. Ben caught its note and dropped his weather-wise ambiguity.

"I'll blow harder, an' mebbe snow agin," he said.

"I shall need some help here in that case, so I will retain the young ladies. Of course you can manage the boat easily enough without them?"

Pollard grinned reassuringly.

"We'll run straight in w' thiccy wind," he said.

So they settled it that way, all as simply.

A man sets up two slim masts a thousand miles apart and flashes comprehensible messages across the void. The multitude gapes at first, but soon accepts the thing as reasonable. "Wireless telegraphy" is the term, as one says "by mail."

A whole drama was flowing over a surge of the earth at that moment but the Marconi station was invisible. There was no expert in telegraphic sentation present to tell Brand and the fisherman that their commonplace words covered a magic code.

Jackson, white and mute, was lowered first. The brave fellow would not content himself with nursing his agony amidst the excruciations. When Bates given some slight strength by a stiff dose of brandy, was carried, with infinite care, down three flights of steep and narrow stairs, and slung to the crant in an iron cot to be lowered in his turn, Jackson stood up. Heedless of remonstrances, he helped to steady the cot and adjust it amidstships clear of the sail.

"Well done, Artie," said Brand's clear voice.

"Oh, brave!" murmured Enid. "We will visit you every day at the hospital," said Constance.

Jackson smiled, yes, smiled, though his bandaged arms quivered and his seared nerves of his hands throbbed excruciatingly. Speak aloud he could not. Yet he bent over his more helpless mate and whispered hoarsely:

"Cheer up, old man. Your case is worse'n mine. An' ye did it for me."

Pollard, with a soul garbled as his body, yet had a glimpse of higher things when he muttered:

"Dye think ye can hold her, mate, whiles I hoist the cloth?"

Jackson nodded. The request was a compliment, a recognition. He sat down and hooked the tiller between his arm and ribs. Ben hauled with a will; the Daisy, as if she were glad to escape the cascades of green water swirling over the rock, sprang into instant animation. The watchers from the lighthouse saw Ben relieve the steersman and tenderly arrange the cushions behind his back. Then Brand closed the iron doors and the three were left in dim obscurity.

They climbed nearly a hundred feet of stairways and emerged on the cornice balcony after Brand had stopped the clockwork which controlled the hammer of the bell.

What a difference up here! The sea, widened immeasurably, had changed its color. Now it was a sullen blue gray. The land was nearer and higher. The Daisy had shrunk to a splash of dull brown on the tremendous ocean plain. How fierce and keen the wind! How disconsolate the murmur of the reef!

Brand, adjusting his binoculars, scrutinized the boat.

"All right aboard," he said. "I think we have adopted the wiser course. They will reach Penzance by half-past two."

His next glance was towards the Land's End signal station. A line of flags fluttered out to their right of the staff.

"Signal noted and forwarded," he read aloud. "That is all right; but the wind has changed."

Enid peered into the lantern for shelter. It was bitter cold.

"Better follow her example, Connie," said Brand, to his daughter. "I will draw the curtains. We can see just as well and be comfortable."

Indeed, the protection of the stout plate glass, so thick and tough that sea-birds on a stormy night dashed themselves to pathless death against it, was very welcome. Moreover, though neither of the girls would admit it, there was a sense of security which was strangely absent when they looked into the abyss beneath the stone gallery. Constance, balancing a telescope, Enid peering through the field-glasses, followed the progress of the Daisy in silence, but Brand's eyes wandered uneasily from the barometer, which had fallen rapidly during the past hour, to the cyclonic nimbus spreading its dark mass beyond the Seven Stones Lighthouse.

The sun had vanished, seemingly for the day, and the indicator attached to the barometer, which had fallen rapidly during the past hour, to the cyclonic nimbus spreading its dark mass beyond the Seven Stones Lighthouse.

The sun had vanished, seemingly for the day, and the indicator attached to the barometer, which had fallen rapidly during the past hour, to the cyclonic nimbus spreading its dark mass beyond the Seven Stones Lighthouse.

Nevertheless, this quick darting about of the fickle breeze did not usually betoken lasting bad weather. At the worst the girls might be compelled to pass the night on the rock. He knew that the tug with the two relief men would make a valiant effort to reach the lighthouse at the earliest possible moment. When the men joined him the girls could embark. As it was, the affair was spiced with adventure. Were it not for the mishap to the assistant-keepers the young people would have enjoyed themselves thoroughly. The new air of the wind, too, would send the Daisy speedily back to port. On the whole, a doubtful situation, but greatly relieved. His face brightened. With a grave manner not altogether artificial, he cried:

"Now, Constance, I did not take you aboard as a visitor. Between us we ought to muster a good appetite. Come with me to the store-room. I will get you anything you want and leave you in charge of the kitchen."

"Oh, yes, miss, are appointed upper house-maid. And mind you, no followers."

"Mercy! I nearly lost my situation before I got it."

"How?"

"We met Jack Stanhope and asked him to come with us."

"You asked him, you mean," said Enid.

"I don't care a pin how you treated Stanhope, so long as you didn't bring him," said Brand, "though, indeed, he would have been useful as it turned out."

When lunch was ready they summoned him by the electric bells he had put up throughout the building. It gave them great joy to discover in the living room a code of signals which rang him downstate by the correct call for "Meal served."

It was a hasty repast, as Brand could not remain long away from the glass-covered observatory, but they ate enjoyed it immensely. He left them as he said, "to gobble up the remains," but soon he shouted down the stairs to tell them that the Daisy had rounded Carn du. He could not tell them not knowing it, that at that precise moment old Ben Pollard was frantically calling out to Lieutenant Stanhope to change the course of the steam yacht he had commanded as soon as the murmur ran through the town that the Gulf Rock was flying the "Help wanted" signal.

The officials did not know that Brand was compelled by the snow storm to use rockets. All the information they possessed was the message from Land's End and its time of despatch.

Jack Stanhope's easy-going face became very strenuous, indeed, when he heard the news.

The hour stated was precisely the time the Daisy was due at the rock if she made a good trip. Without allowing for any possible contingency save disaster to the two girls and their escort, he rushed to the mooring-place of the 10-ton steam-yacht Lapping, impounded a couple of lounging sailors, fired up, stoked, and steered the craft himself, and was off across the Bay in a quarter of the time that the owner of the Lapping could have believed the same result.

His amazement was complete when he encountered the redoubtable Daisy bowling home before a seven-knot breeze. He instantly came round and ranged up to speaking distance. When he learnt what had occurred he readily agreed to return to Penzance in order to pick up the relief lighthouse-keepers, and thus save time in transferring them to the rock.

In a word, as Enid Trevillion was safe, he was delighted at the prospect of bringing her back that evening, when the real skipper of the Lapping would have charge of his own boat. There was no hurry at all now.

If they left the harbor at three o'clock, there would still be plenty of light to reach the Gulf Rock. Ben Pollard, glancing over his shoulder as the Daisy raced towards Penzance side by side with the Lapping, was not sure of this. But the arrangement he had suggested was the best possible one, and he was only an old fisherman who knew the coast, whereas Master Stanhope pinned his faith to the Nautical Almanac and the Rules.

The people most concerned knew nothing of these proceedings.

When Constance and Enid had solemnly decided on the menu for dinner, when they had inspected the kitchen and commended the cleanliness of the cook, Jackson, when they had washed the dishes and discovered the whereabouts of the "ten-things," they suddenly determined that it was much nicer aloft in the sky parlor than in these dim little rooms.

"I don't see why they don't have decent windows," said Enid. "Of course it blows hard here in a gale, but just look at that tiny ventilator, no bigger than a ship's port-hole, with a double storm-shutter to secure it if you please, for all the world as if the sea rose so high!"

Constance took thought for a while. "I suppose the sea never does reach this height," she said.

Enid, in order to look out, had to thrust her head and shoulders through an aperture two feet square and three feet in depth. They were in the living-room at that moment—full seventy feet above the spring tide high-water mark. Sixty feet higher, the cornice of the gallery was given its graceful outer slope to shoot the climbing waves—rests of an Atlantic gale away from the lantern. The girls could not realize this stupendous fact. Brand had never told them. He wished them to sleep peacefully on stormy nights when he was away from home. They laughed now at the fanciful notion that the sea could ever so much as toss its spray at the window of the living-room.

They passed into the narrow stairway. Their voices and footsteps sounded hollow. It was to the floor beneath that Brand had fallen.

"I don't think I like living in a lighthouse," cried Enid. "It gives one the creeps."

"Surely, there are neither ghosts nor ghouls here," said Constance. "It is modern, scientific, utilitarian in every atom of its solid granite."

But Enid was silent as they climbed the steep stairs. Once she stopped and peeped into her father's bedroom.

"That is where they brought me when I first came to the rock," she whispered. "It used to be Mr. Jones's room. I remember dad saying so."

Constance, on whose shoulders the reassuring cloak of science hung somewhat loosely, placed her arm around her sister's waist in a sudden access of tenderness.

"You have improved in appearance since then, Enid," she said.

"What a wizen little ship I must have looked! wonder who I am!"

"I know who you soon will be if you don't care."

Enid blushed prettily. She glanced at herself in a small mirror on the wall. Trust a woman to find a mirror in any apartment.

"I suppose Jack will ask me to marry him," she mused.

"And what will you reply?"

The girl's lips parted. Her eyes shone as she looked up. Then she buried her face against her sister's bosom.

"O, Connie," she whined, "I shall hate to leave you and dad. Why hasn't Jack got a brother as nice as himself?"

Whereupon Constance laughed loud and long.

The relief was grateful to both. Enid's idea of a happy solution of the domestic difficulty appealed to their daily attitude of humor.

"Never mind, dear," cried Constance at last. "You shall marry your Jack and invite all the nice men to dinner. Good gracious! I will have the pick of the navy. Perhaps the Admiral may be a widower."

With flushed faces they reached the region of light. Brand was writing at a small desk in the service-room.

"Something seems to have amused you," he said. "I have heard weird peals ascending from the depths."

"Connie is going to splice the admiral," explained Enid.

"What admiral?"

"Any old admiral."

"Indeed, I will not take an old admiral," protested the elder.

"Then you had better take him when he is a lieutenant," said Brand.

Enid offered too good an opening to be resisted.

"Enid has already secured the lieutenant," she murmured, with a swift glance at the other.

Brand looked up quizzically.

"Dear me," he cried, "if my congratulations are not belated—"

Enid was blushing again. She threw her arms about his neck.

"Don't believe her, dad," she said. "She's jealous!"

Constance saw a book lying on the table: "Regulations for the Lighthouse Service." She opened it. Brand stroked Enid's hair gently, and resumed the writing of his daily journal.

"The Elder Brethren!" whispered Constance. "Do they wear long white beards?"

"And carry wands?" added the recovered Enid.

HAVE NEW IDEA FOR BORROWERS

Canadian Home Investment Co.
Open Offices in the City—Mr. A. J. Tate is Local Manager.

A new idea for the loaning of money at a five per cent rate to those who wish to borrow for building homes is being utilized by the Canadian Home Investment Co., Ltd., who have recently opened offices in the McIntyre Block with Mr. A. J. Tate as local manager.

The plan is to arrange for a series of contract holders who each make monthly payments to a pool arranged by the company. Three per cent interest is paid on the money taken in. When the amount is large enough to loan out, the pool goes to the contract holders in turn, who are credited with what they have paid in, and then pay off the balance of their loan at five per cent. The company are meeting with considerable success, and are opening branch offices all over Canada.

MARRIED AN ORIENTAL

California Girl Finds Him a Tyrant and Regrets It

The Princess Hassan, better known as Viola Humphrey, a California girl, is in London seeking divorce from Prince Ibrahim Hassan, first cousin of the Khedive of Egypt, whom she married last April. "He ordered me about," she said, "and I had no freedom of thought or action. I was not allowed to see my friends or even to receive letters. For one month I was a prisoner. I married him for love, but it was a great mistake. He's an Egyptian prince, and I am just one of the plain people, there you have the whole story. In one occasion the prince told me to wait for him in the foyer of the hotel. I waited three hours and a half and then went up to my room. Later the prince came up, very angry. He asked me why I had not waited for him, and said I must obey orders. 'You are the only person in the world,' he said, 'who has ever dared to combat my will.' The prince, now in Paris, won't talk."

"MRS. JEKYLL-HYDE"

Beloved Sunday School Teacher Proves to be Well Known Shop-lifter.

Boston, Nov. 1.—Stories of the Jekyll and Hyde existence of Mrs. Mary L. Burbank, 32 years old, a wealthy Worcester widow, were told following her plea of guilty in the municipal court to charges of stealing goods valued at $119 from Boston department stores.

When she was taken into custody she strenuously insisted that a mistake had been made, but in court, in the presence of Rev. Mr. Ewing, pastor of a Universalist church at Worcester, in which she is a leader in the Sunday school and teacher of a class of twenty-five girls, she broke down and confessed.

Mr. Ewing, who had come to court to testify that she was a woman of the highest character, was astonished when he heard her plea, and police records were produced showing that she had been arrested in Boston before for shoplifting and fined $100.

"It can't be," said the minister. "She is one of the most beloved teachers in my Sunday School."

In a former hunting trip in Africa she passed through five hundred villages and shot lions, leopards and hippopotami.
