PRETTY MISSION BOAT THE "LOIS" ARRIVES

American Presbyterian Church Mission Craft Reaches Prince Rupert—Is Beautifully Built and Equipped Craft—For Service in Alaska

On her first visit to Prince Rupert, in fact on her maiden cruise into these northern waters, where she is to do regular mission service, the fine new mission gasoline boat "Lois," belonging to the Presbyterion Home Mission Society of U. S. A., which has its headquarters in New York, came into harbor over the week-end, sailing from Seattle, where she was built.

The "Lois" is one of the finest boats of her class to visit Rupert. Her accommodation is very well designed by her captain, who is Rev. David Wagner. the missionary of the northern district of Alaska. Seaworthiness, as well as remarkably compact yet roomy apartments, distinguish the "Lois." She is one of the first large gasoline boats in these waters to have absolutely watertight bulkheads forward and aft of the engine room. Her power will remain efficient even if she is all smashed up about the bow, or amidships.

The engine is a four-cylinder Standard developing 32 H.P., and giving the boat a speed of over 8 knots in smooth water, and full seven when bucking a sea. She made this coming over the Queen Charlotte Sound on her trip north. Her beat in northern waters extends over 225 miles, the "bishopric" of her commander, Rev. Mr. Wagner, who administers the religious needs of this wide district.

Just recently at Sitka the U. S. A. Presbyterian Home Mission Board has expended $150,000 on establishing a training school for the Indians amongst whom the work is done. The great distinguishing characteristic of their method is that they help the Indians to help themselves. They train their own Indian preachers, each of whom has a district to take charge of, under Rev. Mr. Wagner or another ordained pastor.

William Duncan, and at nineteen years of age migrated with Rev. Duncan's colonly into Alaska. He has a good education and speaks English fluently. His work now is amongst the Thlingit Indians of Alaska. They speak an entirely different dialect from his own, but after thirteen years amongst them Mr. Marsden has gained great influence as a missionary with them, and is making good there.

WANT CITY TO ALTER THE CLAPP BUILDING

Property Owners Approve the Idea That the City Should Make the Necessary Alterations and Charge it to Local Improvements

A meeting of Second Avenue property owners was held at the city hall on Saturday for the purpose of representing to the public works board their position in regard to the change of grade on Second Avenue as it affects the Clapp Block, owned by Westenhaver Bros.

This building was built above the original grade of Second Avenue. Since the alteration of grade, it is below grade. Apparently it never entered into the calculations of the first council when authority for the alteration of grade was made, and the present board of works came to consider how far the city's liability extends in the matter. To make the change required in the building, Mr. Westenhaver says will cost $300. The attitude of the property holders is summed up in the following resolution:

"That the property owners present (at Saturday's city hall meeting) representing property on Second Avenue approve of the city's making the change on the Clapp Block, the cost to be included in the work of local improvement, and that Mr. Westenhaver should give a bond indemnifying the city against any objection that may be taken when the court of revision comes to deal with the matter finally."

necessary, the Mayor remarked that as there is another by-law just about ready to go before the people, that is the Hays Creek Trunk Sewer By-law, it would be convenient to put the matter of this by-law and the hydro-electric scheme before the electors at the same polling.

THE FIGHT FOR BETTER CIVIC ADMINISTRATION

There are a large number of diseases of the body that end their course in a sort of germicidal suicide The disease germs create other germs which kill the first germs. That is why certain diseases like measles rarely attack the same person twice. That is how immunity from certain diseases is acquired. It is a dangerous and expensive method of acquiring immunity, but it seems to be one ofNature's biologic laws.

In a similar way th social body seems to acquire immunity, and overcome its ill-health. When a community or a government gets so rott n that it can hardly hang together, a new force is born that fights and overcomes the old order. It is a dangerous and expensive method of acquiring immunity from social ills, but it seems to be one of Nature's sociologic laws.

In a study of the commission government of cities—the application of business system to municipal corporations—the significant truth is borne home, that in nearly every case, these most progressive of cities are the products of a reaction against boss rule and machine politics. In almost every instance it has been the fight of a few citizens and a newspaper on one side, against the forces of machine rule and a subsidized press on the other, that has started the victorious fight.

Mayor Dan Dineen of Decatur, Illinois, in a personal letter to the Daily News has outlined very succintly the reasons that made that city adopt the commission form of government. Decatur it may be mentioned is a city of over 30,000 inhabitants. This is what Mayor Dineen says about the subject:

First, This community as well as others, has grown tired of "machine politics," and under this plan, every candidate stands on his own footing. It is unlawful to contribute money for the election of any particular candidate, and the successful candidate has to file a sworn statement of his actual expenses and by whom the money was contributed. The candidate's name goes on the ballot in alphabetical order and there is nothing to show the candidate's party affiliation and anyone can be a candidate without asking any "boss."

Second, The plan attracts abler men to fill the offices because of the increase in salary and the reduction in number. It fixes individual responsibility, the same being direct and personal, and renders communication between the citizens and the City Hall easier.

Third, By means of the Initiative, Referendum and Recall, which are not essentials of commission form of government, but are usually attached to the plan, the power which has formerly been usurped by the officials has been returned to the people where it belongs. By these means a community may initiate legislation or protest against legislation, and may recall unworthy officials.

Fourth, Privileges to public service corporations are safe-guarded in that they lay over one week before passage, and then in most instances before they become effective, they must be submitted to a vote of the people, and if vote results in a majority in favor of granting the privilege, the ordinance becomes effective, otherwise, not. This method eliminates public service corporations from getting behind certain candidates. Free transportation to city officials is prohibited and all discrimination is absolutely forbidden.

Yours truly,

DAN DINEEN, Mayor.

The four excellent reasons that influenced the city of Decatur might apply very well to the city of Prince Rupert.

FIRST: "CATCH YOUR PRINTER"

DIRECTIONS FOR COOKING A HARE:
FIRST:—"CATCH YOUR HARE"

To produce good printing you must "first catch your good printer. . . You can't get good printing from a poor printer, even if he work with never so good an equipment. If he lacks the "knack," the trained taste, the single-minded fondness for his work which real printers have, he will do poor printing for you. If he has all of these, and in addition to them adequate modern equipment, your printing will have distinction, salesmanship, the lure of type-beauty.

As this office produces good printing you may infer the presence of a good printer—who is "catchable."

THE Pillar of Light

By Louis Tracy

The blast of the terrible ones! What a vivid pen-picture of the awesome forces of nature. How long would this tornado continue? Already it must have strewed its path with havoc at sea and on land. His physical senses were elevated to the supernatural. He seemed to acquire abnormal powers of sight and hearing. He could see the trees bending before the wrathful wind, hear the crashing tiles and brickwork as houses were demolished and people hurled to death. But there was no ecstasy of soul, no mental altitude. In quick reaction came the fanciful memory of the hardy old salt who cheered his shipmates during a terrific gale with the trite remark:

What a curious jumble of emotions jostled in his brain. A step from the sublime to the ridiculous! Not even a step. They were inextricably interwoven, the woof and the warp of things. He recalled the odd expression of an officer who had passed unscathed through the Inferno of Spion Kop.

"I had no sense of fear," said he, "but my teeth began to ache."

Brand, a student, even of himself, discovered that his dominant sensation was one of curiosity.

"If it has to be," said his nervous system, "let it come quickly." He felt like a man lying on the operating table waiting for the chloroform.

Suddenly, the bright flame of the lamp lessened. The use that was his second nature caused him to raise the wicks and admit more draught. Even whilst his deft fingers arranged the complex burner, his ear caught a change in the external din. The shriek of the wind dropped to a thunderous growl. This was a gale, not a tempest. God be praised, the crisis had passed!

The hurricane had lasted thirty-five minutes. A similar tornado sufficed to wreck one-half of the City of St. Louis. This one, as he learnt afterwards, swept around the south of Ireland, created a tidal wave which did great damage to the Scilly Isles and the headlands of the south coast, yet spent itself somewhere in the North Sea. Dwellers in inland cities were amazed and incredulous when the newspapers spoke of its extraordinary violence. A truth is harder to swallow than a lie, all the time.

Up clattered Enid with the steaming beverage; Constance, the lantern-bearer, providing the rear-guard.

"I do believe it is blowing worse than ever," said Enid, striving desperately to be unconcerned. In reality, the angry wind was no longer able to behead the waves. With a rising tide and the gale assisting there would soon be a sea worthy of Turner in his maddest mood.

"Good gracious, dad,' cried Constance, "how pale you are. And your forehead is wet. What have you been doing?"

"During some of the heavy gusts," he explained, "I was compelled to stand on the trimming stage. And—the micrometer valve required adjustment."

She eyed him narrowly. The margin of suspicion was wider.

"There is nothing else wrong?" she asked.

He approached and kissed her ear.

"Since when did my little girl begin to doubt me?" he said quietly.

Her eyes filled. Even the hint of a reproach from him was intolerable. For the life of her she could no longer control the flood of terror which welled up beyond restraint.

"Forgive me, dad," she murmured, "but I thought, and I still think, that we were and are in a position of the utmost peril. I can't help knowing that it is high-water about two o'clock. It is now only a quarter to one. The worst is not over. Do you think I cannot read your dear face! Dad! If there is danger, don't send us away again."

Tears were streaming down her white cheeks. Enid holding the tray in speechless bewilderment during this outburst from her proud and self-reliant sister, set it down on the writing-desk with a crash.

"Oh dear," she wailed, "I don't want any cocoa if we're gug-gug-going to be drowned."

Certainly if Stephen Brand had imagined, two minutes earlier, that he was about to laugh long and loudly, in a genuine surrender to an uncontrollable spasm of mirth, he would have feared lest his wits were leaving him. Yet he laughed now until his vision was blurred. And the wonderful relief of it! What a tonic, after the ordeal he had endured!

It chanced, just then, that an emancipated wave embraced the granite column, hit the cornice, and deluged the lantern, its disintegrating mass striking the glass with force enough to break any ordinary window. The astounded girls could not refuse the evidence of eyes and ears. Here was the frantic sea leaping to a height of one hundred and forty feet and more, yet their father was treating the incident as the merriest joke of many a month.

No better cure for their hysteria could be contrived. Brand was obviously not acting. The hearty pulsations of laughter had restored his ruddy color. Evidently they were alarmed about nothing.

"Here, Enid, drink your parting cup," he cried at last. "Have no fear. It is only the dochan doris before many another feast."

Feeling somewhat ashamed of themselves, though smiling very wistfully, they obeyed him. He sipped his cocoa with real nonchalance. Another wave turned a somersault over the lantern. Brand's only anxiety was to blow at the steaming liquid and cool it sufficiently.

Yet was he watching them and hammering out the right course to adopt. He alone understood that, to the novice, the amazing ordeal from which the lighthouse had successfully emerged was as naught compared with the thunderous blows of the waves, the astounding reverberations of the hollow pillar, the continuous deluge of spray striking the lantern, which the infuriated sea would inflict on them.

To urge any further effort to sleep was folly. They must remain with him and be comforted.

Being reasonable girls, of fine spirit under conditions less benumbing, it was better that they should grasp the facts accurately. They would be timid, of course, just as people are timid during their first attempt to walk 'twixt rock and cataract at the Falls of Niagara, but they would have confidence in their guide and endure the surrounding pandemonium.

"Here's to you, Enid. Still we live," he cried, and drained his cup.

"I sup-pup-pose so," she stammered.

"Better sup up your cocoa," said Constance. "Now I am quits with you for this afternoon.'

"I'll tell you what," went on Brand, confidentially. "In that locker you will find a couple of stout pilot-coats. Put them on. As I cannot persuade you to leave me you must sit down, and it is cold in here. Moreover, for the first time in twenty-one years I will smoke on duty. I have earned a little relaxation of the law."

Out of the corner of his eye he saw that Constance, if not Enid, had not missed the subtle hint in his words. But she was quite normal again. She gave no sign; helped her sister into the heavy reefer, and made herself comfortable in turn.

"Neither of you will ever regret tonight's experience—when it is nicely over," he said. "You are like a couple of recruits in their first battle."

"I am sure—" began Enid.

A huge wave, containing several hundred tons of water, smote the lighthouse, and cavorted over their heads. The house that was founded upon a rock fell not, but it shook through all its iron-bound tiers, and the empty cups danced on their saucers.

Not another word could Enid utter. She was paralyzed.

"That fellow—arrived—in the nick of time—to emphasize my remarks," said Brand, lighting his pipe. "This is your baptism of fire, if I may strain a metaphor. But you are far better situated than the soldier. He gets scared out of his wits by big guns which are comparatively harmless, and when he has been well pounded for an hour or so, he advances quite blithely to meet the almost silent hail of dangerous bullets. So, you see, in his case, ignorance is bliss."

"Are we in bliss?" demanded Constance.

"You have been. The lighthouse has outfaced a hurricane such as has not visited England before in my lifetime. It is over. The wind has dropped to a No. 10 gale, and we have not lost even a bit of skin to my knowledge. Now the cannonade is beginning. Certainly, we may have the glass broken, by a rare accident, but no worse fate can befall us.'

A heavy thud was followed by a deluge without. They heard the water pouring off the gallery.

Constance leaned forward, with hands on knees. Her large eyes looked into his.

"This time dad, you are not choosing your words, she said.

"I am sorry you should think that," was the reply. "I selected each phrase with singular care. Never be misled by the apparent ease of a speaker. The best impromptu is prepared beforehand."

"You dear old humbug," she cried.

Now the quiet deadliness of the scene which followed the reappearance of Enid and herself from their bed-room was manifest to her. Enid, too, was looking from one to the other in eager striving to grasp the essentials of an episode rapidly grouping its details into sequence. Brand knew that if he parried his daughters' questioning they would be on their knees by his side forthwith, and he wished to avoid any further excitement.

"Please attend, both of you," he growled, with mock severity. "I am going to tell you something that will console you."

"This kind of thing does not go on all the time," he continued. "Otherwise we should have five hours of spasmodic conversation. As soon as the tide rises sufficiently to gain an uninterrupted run across the reef we will have at least two hours of comparative quiet. About four o'clock there will be a second edition for an hour or so. I suppose that any suggestion of bed—"

"Will be scouted," exclaimed Enid.

"A nice pair of beauties you will be in the morning," he grumbled artfully.

Not even Constance was proof against this new burthen of woe. She glanced around.

"You say that," she cried, "knowing that the nearest looking-glass is yards away.

He pointed with his pipe.

"In the second drawer of the desk you will find a heliograph It is only a toy, but will justify me."

They ran together, and found the little circular mirror. The next wave passed unheeded. Smiling, he went up to the lamp. Even yet there was hope they might go to bed when the respite came.

After much talk of disordered hair wan cheeks, rings round the eyes cracked lips, and other outrageous defects which a pretty woman mourns when divorced from her dressing table, Constance called him

"Here is a queer thing," she said "Have you heard any steamer hooting?"

"No," he answered. Bending between the two of them he saw the pointer of the auriscope bore due southwest, though the last siren of which they had any knowledge sounded from the opposite direction.

He picked up a little trumpet resembling the horn of a motor-car.

"I use this for tests," he explained. Its tiny vibrator quickly brought the needle round towards his hand.

"It is improbable in the highest degree that any steamer is near enough to affect the auriscope," he said. "On a night like this they give the coast a wide berth."

He quitted them again. The girls, having nothing better to do, watched the dial to see if any change occurred. He heard them use the small trumpet three times. Then Enid sang out:

He joined in the watch The needle was pointing north in obedience to the sound-waves created in the room. Suddenly, it swung round nearly half the circumference of the dial.

"Hush!" he said. They listened intently, but the roar of the wind and water was too deafening. They could hear naught else. He went to the southwest point of the glass dome, but the lantern was so blurred with rivulets of water that he could see nothing save a tawny vastness where the light fell on the flying spindrift.

To make sure, he tested the auriscope again, and with the same result.

"A vessel is approaching from the southwest," he announced, gravely. "Evidently she is whistling for help. I hope she will not attempt to approach too near the reef. I must have a look out."

He put on an oilskin coat and tied the strings of a sou'wester firmly beneath his chin.

The small door of the lantern opened towards the Bay, so he had no difficulty in gaining the gallery. The girls watched him forcing his way against the wind until he was facing it and gazing in the direction of the Scilly Isles.

"Perhaps some poor ship is in danger, Connie," whispered Enid. "It makes me feel quite selfish. Here was I, thinking of nothing but my own peril, yet that little machine there was faithfully doing its duty."

"It was not alone in its self-abandonment. We shall never know, dearest, how much father suffered when he sent us off with a jest on his lips. I am sure he thought the lantern would be blown away."

"And he with it! Oh, Connie!"

"Yes. He believed, if that awful thing took place whilst we were below, we might escape. I can see it all now. I had the vaguest sort of suspicion, but he hoodwinked me."

"Had we known we would not have left him," cried Enid, passionately.

"Yes, we would. Think of him, sticking to his post. Was it for us to disobey?"

Overcome by their feelings, they stood in silence for a little while. Through the thick glass they could dimly distinguish Brand's figure. A great wave assailed the lantern and Enid screamed loudly.

'Don't, dear!" cried Constance, shrilly. "Father would not remain there if it were dangerous."

Nevertheless, they both breathed more freely when they saw him again, an indeterminate shape against the luminous gloom.

Constance felt that she must speak. The sound of her own voice begat confidence.

"I have never really understood dad until to-night," she said. "What an ennobling thing is a sense of duty. He would have died here quite calmly, Enid, yet he would avoid the least risk out there. That would be endangering his trust. Oh, I am glad we are here. I have never lived before this hour."

Enid stole a wondering glance at her sister. The girl seemed to be gazing into depths immeasurable. Afterwards the words came back to her mind: "That would be endangering his trust."

Brand faced the gale a full five minutes. He returned hastily.

"There is a big steamer heading this way—a liner, I fancy," he gasped, half choked with spray . "I fear she is disabled. She is firing rockets, and I suppose her siren is going constantly, though I cannot hear it."

He ran to the room beneath. Flushed with this new excitement, the girls donned their oilskin coats and arranged their sou'westers. When he hurried up the stairs he was carrying four rockets. He noted their preparations.

"Don't come out until I have fired the alarm signals," he shouted, "and tie your dresses tightly around your knees."

They heard the loud hissing of the rockets, and the four reports travelled dully from the sky Three white starbursts and one red told the Land's End coast-guards that a ship in need of help was near the Gulf Rock. Probably they had already seen the vessel's signals. In any event, they would not miss the display from the lighthouse.

Brand had already gone to the windward side. The first rush of the gale made them breathless, yet they persevered and reached him. They were greeted by a climber, but their father, with a hand on their shoulders, pressed them down, and the spray crashed against the lantern behind them. He knew they would take no harm. When the vessel passed, their boots and stockings would be soaked. Then he could insist that they should go to bed.

At first they distinguished nothing save a chaotic blend of white and yellow foam, driving over the reef at an apparently incredible speed. Overhead, the black pall of the sky seemed to touch the top of the lantern. Around, in a vast circle carved out of the murky wilderness, the wondrous beam of the light fought and conquered its unwearied foes. Constance caught the three quick flashes of the Seven Stones light-ship away to the right. She fancied she saw a twinkling ahead, but this was the St. Agnes light, and neither girl could make out other sight or sound until Brand pointed steadily towards one spot in the darkness.

Before they could follow his indication they were compelled to duck to avoid another wave. Then, as if it had just popped up out of the sea, they divined a tiny white spark swinging slowly across a considerable area. It was by that means that Brand had estimated the size and nearness of the steamer, and soon they glimpsed the red and green side-lights, though ever and anon these were hidden by the torrents of water sweeping over her decks. Of the vessel they could see nothing whatever.

Steadily she rolled along her fearful path. Having once found her, there was no difficulty in estimating the rapidity of her approach. Enid, whose eyes were strong and far-sighted, fancied she caught a fitful vision of a big, black hull laboring in the yellow waves.

Though it was difficult to speak, she crept close to Brand and screamed:

"Is she drifting onto the reef?"

"I fear so," he answered.

"Then she will be lost!"

"Yes. Unless they can manage to pass to s'uth'ard."

Luckily for poor human nature mental stress and and physical effort rarely unite forces. The mere attempt to resist the wind, the constant watchfulness needed to avoid the ambitious seas, though there, strange to say, appeared to be diminishing in size and volume as the tide rose, served to dull the horror of the threatened tragedy.

THE COSY CORNER

DEVOTED PRINCIPALLY TO THE INTERESTS OF WOMEN

This is a little section of the paper, which from day to day will be devoted to subjects of special interest to women. Any and all of the ladies of Prince Rupert are invited to contribute to its columns, and to take part in its discussions. Suggestions and criticisms are invited by the editor. The hope is expressed that "The Cosy Corner" will fill a social need.

MARRIED BY SIGNS

Unique Wedding Ceremony Performed Without Sound of Human Voice.

The adage that "Love will find a way" was worked out to the satisfaction of at least two young people when Henry Plapinger and Miss Annie Bernhardt, both deaf mutes, were married by the Rev. Dr. Barnett A. Elizas at Tempel Emanuel in Fifth avenue, New York.

Both had attended the Institute for Improved Instruction for Deaf Mutes, working out their tasks side by side. The romance continued after they left the institute. Plapinger went into the cloak business in Brooklyn and frequently visited Miss Bernhardt at the home of her parents, No. 136 Floyd street, Brooklyn.

For the first time in the history of the Temple Emanuel the entire Jewish marriage ceremony was performed in the sign language. The rabbi stood with the young couple under the silken canopy held by four of the bridegroom's friends, and spelled off on his hands the words which made them man and wife. As he used the sign language to the bride and bridegroom, Dr. Elzas repeated the words slowly that the young couple might follow the motions of his lips as well as his hands and that their friends in the audience might also comprehend all that was being said and done. When the time came for the responses from the bride and bridegroom they replied in the sign language.

Those present in the temple, nearly half of whom were deaf mutes, showed intense interest in the ceremony. When they began to gather in the temple greetings flew thick and fast from their trained fingers. As the bridegroom, accompanied by his father and the father of the bride, walked down the aisle the comments by signs were many, and the sign conversation was quickened when the bride, a slender girlish figure, leaning on the arm of her mother and the mother of her future husband, marched to he place beneath the canopy.

The ceremony was made even more solemn as the congregation beheld the intensity with which the young couple, standing face to face before the rabbi, watched breathlessly the slightest movements of his hands.

When Dr. Elzas began the words of the ritual, spelling them out with his fingers as he spoke them, a deep hush fell ove the assembly. From the intense faces to the spectators they seemed to be striving to assist the young couple in understanding what was being said to them and in making their answers.

The faces of the bride and bridegroom, however, were radiantly happy from the moment they took their places before the rabbi until, at the end of the ceremony, they drank from the bridal cup.

When the benediction had been pronounced, orally, and in the sign anguage, the bride, for the first time since entering the temple, raised her veil, revealing her face to her husband.

THE FINGER NAILS

Useful Manicuring Notes for the Season of Softest Hands

The physiological function of the nails is to protect the tips of the fingers against pressure and to give them a firm support; this increases the delicacy of the tactile sensations.

The nails should be slightly curbed irom side to side, of a light rose color and smooth surface. The lunula should be visible at the root of the nail. Brittleness of the nails is a defect which causes them to tear esaily; it is generally due to the condition of the general health.

There is a natural tendency for the dirt to accumulate on the under surface of the nail, between it and the finger. This is not only unsightly, but it is often the cause of actual danger, as this forms a lodgment ior the germs of disease. Not only is it necessary for soctors and nurses to give the most scrupulous attention to the care of the nails, but we should insist upon domestics and housewives giving the greatest attention to their nails.

The hands should always be washed immediately before going to the table, and cleaning the nails is always a finishing touch in washing the hands.

For the purpose of cleaning the nails an orange stick or nail-file should be used, and never the point of scissors or the blade of a knie, for either of these causes a roughening of the under surface of the nails, whereby the lodgment of dirt becomes only the more securely fixed. After the use of the nail-file, the nail-brush should be used, followed again by the use of the file or stick. If there is a tendency to a roughening of the skin under the nail, it can be obviated by the use of cold cream at night. Just before retiring, the fingers should be dipped into cold cream, and let the tips take up just as much as they will retain, and after this dipped into talcum powder.

The small rim of epidermis which laps over the nail should be gently shoved back with the orange stick every day This skin, when torn, forms the so-called hangnails, by which infection easily enters the system; it may give rise to felons or even to general blood-poisoning.

For the Elbows

Bathe the elbows in warm soapy water until the skin is softened. Rinse and dry and then apply cold cream, rubbing it into the skin thoroughly. Holding the elbows in olive oil will also have a softening effect upon the skin.

Good Tip

For cleaning and polishing irons, saturate a cloth with water, wring partially dry, rubbing soap thoroughly on it. Place on several thicknesses of paper. Rub iron over it several times, pressing hard, to remove starch and roughness. The result is surprising, as it makes the surface of iron perfectly clean and smooth.

Starch Hint

Some housekeepers keep a white paraffin candle handy on washday, and when making boiled starch shave a little of the paraffin into the hot starch or dip the end in the boiling liquid and twist it about a few times, so a little will melt off. This gives the ironed clothes a pretty gloss that is not otherwise obtained.

For WashDay

Cut up one bar of any soap in thin slices and add four quarts of boiling water. Boil until the soap is melted, then pour into a bowl or tin. Whe cool it will form a stiff jelly, which readily dissolved when used. You will find it invaluable for washing flannels, silver and china. The best results are obtained when the soap jelly is dissolved in tepid water.

Laundry Hint

Before laundering undergarments run with ribbon, catch one end of the ribbon to a piece of narrow tape, then pull out the ribbon and let the tape remain through the beading until after the garment is washed and ironed. The ribbon is then caught to the tape and pulled through the beading, keeping smooth and straight.

Leaky Boiler

It is annoying to find the boiler leaking after the washing is begun. If the leak is not large it may be stopped by dropping into the boiler a handful of cornmeal. The suction of the water oozing through the hole draws the meal to that place, the meal swells and is drawn into the leakage and stops it so that the work may go on.

Muffins

Beat to a cream two tablespoonfuls of butter and two of sugar, add two well beaten eggs, one cupful of milk, one scant quart of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and a pinch of salt; beat batter with egg whisk, and pour into hot, well greased muffin pans. Bake in quick oven.

German Apple Cake

One pint flour, one-half teaspoonful baking powder, one-half teaspoonful salt, mixed and sifted; rub in two tablespoonfuls of butter, add one beaten egg, and milk to make thick batter. Spread one inch deep in greased shallow tin. Have ready several pared, cored, and quartered apples. Press points into dough, sprinkle thickly with sugar mixed with little cinnamon. Bake in hot oven.

SOME STRIKE!

New York, Nov. 4.—Australian diamonds are the latest novelty in the Maiden Lane jewelry district. They are declared by experts to be of fine quality. Hundreds of these diamonds were obtained in the space of a few hours in an extensive volcano in the northern part of New South Wales, and were extracted from the loam by the primitive method of hand-sifting the sands in a tub of water. About twenty specimens were sent here for private exhibition.

. . . . ITEMS OF . . . . SPORT!

It is not all beer and skittles being a professional footballer in Britain. Receiving $20 a week for a hour and a halt's play. keeping oneself fit by daily attendance at the ground from ten till four, or taking long, invigorating walks into the country, with evenings spent at a theatre or music hall at someone else's expense, and visiting many strange towns without paying a penny for fare or refreshment en route, is only one side of the picture.

The other side is the way the professional footballer is fettered. He has to be a very clever individual indeed if he can observe all the extraordinary laws to which he is sunject. Look at the fines which can be imposed upon him with impunity Suppose a player incurs the wrath of a manager by turning up late. If that official so desires, he can impose a fine of five shillings, whereas in the case of an ordinary workman committing a similar offense the amount would probably be threepence.

Even if he objects, the leather-chaser has no legal redress. The rules of the football world decree that he shall not bring an action. One footballer once sued a London club for detaining a medal. Not only did the court hold that it had not jurisdiction, as the matter was one for settlement by the football association, but it mulcted the plaintiff in a couple of guineas costs Should a footballer receive very drastic punishment for any offence, and the fact be reported in the newspapers, he may not bring an action for libel. Why? Simply because the body which controls him says so.

Until quite recently our leather-chaser could not demand a bonus of more than ten pounds, even if he were sold to another club for a hundred times that amount. For transgressing this law one player was suspended for life, and it was only after a long spell, during which time thousands of people signed a petition asking for the removal of the suspension that he was reinstated.

When there is an international match, the "pro," can be packed off to any part of the British Isles to play. The club to which he belongs may want his services very badly on that particular day: it matters not. Unless he can furnish a valid excuse for not playing in an international—few, it is true, would want to escape such an honor—he may be dealt with for "misconduct," and severely punished. And if his club supports his action, the club encounters the stormclouds too.

ROYAL RIVALS FLIRTING

(Special to the Daily News)

Digby Island, 1 p.m.—A scandalous state of affairs has just been flashed from Queen Charlotte City. The shocking discovery has just been made by the local bum-boat Mrs. Grundy, that the Princess Mary and the Prince John, the young and attractive representatives of rival Royal houses extremely well known throughout the world, were there together holding a most outrageous flirtation at noon. At the time of sending the flash the Prince and Princess were going on in scandalous manner making goo-goo eyes at each other to the demoralisation of every self-respecting gasoline launch in the harbor.

AN INDIAN MISSIONARY

On the platform at the Empress Theatre during last night's Presbyterian Church service by the Rev. F. W. Kerr, were present Messrs. Wagner and Marsden, missionaries on their way to the coast of Southeastern Alaska, where for many years they have been laboring amongst the Indians.

Mr. Marsden, himself an educated Indian of one of the Coast tribes, gave a short address at the close of Rev. F. W. Kerr's sermon on "The Sower." The native missionary dwelt with fervor on the power of the gospel to raise the Indians, his countrymen, from their wretched conditions, and went on to express an eloquent appeal to the white men to send them more missionary workers and to extend the field of the work to places were no Christian services were ever held. Places, which are situated between Prince Rupert and Vancouver, and which are passed regularly by the big passenger steamers whose lists are thronged with the names of Christian and church-attending Canadian men and women still unaware of the full needs of the Coast district for missionary enterprise.

"On behalf of my countrymen," said the missionary, "I appeal for them to you, who are developing this land so wonderfully. Open the doors of your schools, and of your churches, to us. Do not let us stand without the circle of your community.. Let us share in the work of development, share the employment of your industries, and the advantages of your Christian civilization."

Rev. F. W. Kerr complimented Mr. Marsden on his appeal by saying that he only wished the members of the churches back east could hear and see the wonderful results of the Christian influence and education as were displayed by this native Indian missionary, and used so eloquently on behalf of his fellow countrymen.
