The Foot Of the Throne.

A case that has to be bolstered up by statements which require no demonstration of their falsity must be fundamentally weak. Such is the sagacious verdict of the Victoria Times with respect to a controversy which it has been waging with the Colonist on the subject of Premier McBride's mission to London; a conclusion with which no sane controversialist will be found to disagree. It will, however, occur to most people who have followed the Liberal campaign in this Province for the past six months that the Times has made a whip for its own back, and that its most capable critic could hardly have phrased a sentence which would better have described its own attitude. From the moment that it was decided that Premier McBride should go to Ottawa, the Liberal press, Janus-like, has turned one face of smiling approbation towards the general subject of better terms, and another of frowning disapproval upon those who were charged first by the Government and then by the voters to prosecute the case. The first move in the game was to attack the personal character of the emissary. The next was to belittle his mission, and try to discredit his case by declaring that it was improperly prepared and could only have been made effective by the co-operation of the leader of the Opposition. Later on every move of Premier McBride at the Ottawa conference was misrepresented, and in order to make political capital, statements were attributed to members of the conference which they never uttered, and which they subsequently denied. When Premier McBride took a manly stand, and refused to remain in a convention which had failed to give effect to the declaration of Sir Wilfred Laurier, the Liberal press charged that his action had deprived the Province of the chance of securing even an instalment of Better Terms. When Premier McBride announced his intention of carrying the matter to "the foot of the Throne," it was greeted with a howl of derision, and the electors were told that it was just a game of bluff, that there was not the slightest intention to carry the matter to London, and that the declaration was only made for campaign purposes. Then the election took place, and in addition to receiving a general endorsation, Premier McBride was given a special mandate to put the case of Better Terms, and to take it to the highest Court. When he was ready to start for London, and it was seen that the bluff was not on his part, but on the part of his critics, and that he had effectively called it by booking his passage, it became necessary for his critics to follow another tack. Obviously they could no longer contend that he would not go, since he had started, so the note of ridicule was struck, he was pictured as taking a pleasant holiday at the expense of the Province. He was to visit the races, and gay Paris, but as for laying his case at the foot of the Throne, why, he would not be allowed to get within a block. This campaign of ridicule reached its climax in an editorial which appeared in the Montreal Herald only a few days ago, and which was gleefully appropriated by the minor organs of the party. In this editorial, the visit of Mr. McBride was compared with that of the Indian Chiefs who went to London last year and were accorded a personal interview with his Majesty; and as reputable an organ as the Herald had no keener appreciation of the claims of British Columbia and the importance of Premier McBride's mission, than to institute this comparison and to put it before its readers as a parallel case. This is the stage at which the sententious utterance of the Victoria Times as to the bolstering up of a case appeared to The Week to be singularly appropriate. Such ineptitude can only be explained on one of two grounds, either the Herald knows nothing and cares less about the claims of British Columbia, or it is driven hard to please the political masters from whom during the last ten years, it has received $160,000 for political services.

There is the further reflection very properly suggested by the Colonist in commenting upon the editorial, that since there are in the East some people who believe all that the Herald says, it is not to be wondered at that if such views as it expresses are widely held Premier McBride found it impossible to wring satisfactory terms from a conference which was dominated by Eastern Provincial Premiers. If anything could be sillier than the Herald editorial, it is the latest contention of the Victoria Times that because Premier McBride did not prostrate himself at the King's feet, and present his appeal, he has never reached "the foot of the Throne." If such a contention is put forward seriously, The Week in common with all Conservative organs, will be willing to accept the argument as a fair measure of the capacity of the Editor of the Victoria Times. It will be refreshing to find some point of common agreement, and The Week for one, will offer no objection to crediting the Times with having made a brilliant discovery when it found out that gaining access to his Majesty's constitutional advisers did not amount to reaching "the foot of the Throne." The end is not yet, neither The Week nor the Victoria Times enjoys the private confidences of his Majesty's advisers, and therefore cannot with accuracy predict the issue, but only by a contortion of the English language hitherto impossible to any but the Editor of the Times can it be denied that Premier McBride has already done all that he undertook to do in appealing to Caesar.

Playing at Soldiering.

The loss which was sustained both by the Province and the Dominion when the British forces, Naval and Military, were withdrawn from Victoria is only just beginning to be realized. Every week chronicles additional desertions, and our gallant defenders are now reduced to a mere cypher. Several causes have been alleged for this unwillingness on the part of young Canada to assume the position and the duties of Tommy Atkins. The one most persistently repeated and perhaps most generally believed is that the men leave because there are so many opportunities of making more money in other directions. This may apply in some cases, but not in all, and probably if the truth were known, only in very few. In the opinion of the most competent judges, if the pay were doubled, and that is probably beyond the bounds of possibility, the result would be just the same, and the closest observers agree that the trouble is not a mater of money. It certainly cannot be dissatisfaction with the Officers, the Quarters, or the conditions which prevail in and about the Barracks. Colonel Holmes is universally popular, has had a long experience in connection with Military matters, and is an enthusiast at his profession, and while minor defects may creep in, it is certain that his vigilant eye would detect any serious cause of discontent. The trouble lies deep, and may as well be faced, it is that Canadians do not possess the Military instinct. Not that they are unpatriotic, nor unwilling to shoulder arms when called upon, for the defence of their country, or of the Empire, but they are impatient of training, and unwilling to submit to the drudgery of the camp. They want to go to bed civilians and wake up soldiers, and they are not imbued with that intense feeling of combativeness which is essential to the making of a whole souled fighter. One of the difficulties in the way of overcoming this natural disinclination is the restiveness of the young Canadian under discipline. This weakness he shares with his American cousin, although perhaps he is even less amenable to the orders of his superior officer. Wholesale desertion from all garrisons was the first result of the withdrawal of the British troops. In some instances, especially Halifax, the defection was openly attributed to the unwillingness of the men to submit to this discipline, and the situation is not greatly improved. It would be humiliating for the Canadian Government to have to admit that their policy has been a failure, and it is hardly likely that the Imperial authorities would consent to reinstate the forces at Halifax and Esquimalt even if they were asked to do so. Both stations occupy a different position in the scheme of Imperial defence, from that in which they stood for many years, and Canada having shouldered the burden, will probably have to bear it. In view of these facts, the suggestion that Regulars should be replaced by the Militia is probably as good a one as could be made, indeed it seems the only feasible method by which any pretense of maintaining the units can be complied with. The time will come when Canadians will take a different view of this question, and when the people will realize that patriotism to be worth anything must be practical, but that time will not come until public sentiment has advanced beyond the stage of permitting the Government to quibble with the Imperial authorities on the subject of a few paltry millions for Imperial defence; nor will it come as long as the huxtering and bartering spirit is allowed to show itself in negotiations with the Mother Country. When it comes, the young men of Canada will have imbibed the spirit of their ancestors, and be not only willing but eager to do what at present they find impossible to submit to Military discipline, and make some personal sacrifice for the honour of their country.

The Cat Out Of the Bag.

Only in banking circles has it been known what had happened to the Sovereign Bank, and why Mr. D. M. Stewart had been peremptorily dismissed from the General Management. Mr. Aemilius Jarvis, the new President, laid the matter before the shareholders at the annual meeting, with commendable frankness; indeed too much praise cannot be given to him for recognizing the right of the shareholders, and of the public, to know just how the Bank stood. In conceding this, Mr. Jarvis did much to restore public confidence and at the same time set an admirable example to the Directors of all similar institutions. While a Bank is nominally a private corporation, it is in reality a public institution. The terms of its charter are such that it owes responsibilities and duties to the public which are not discharged by merely taking care of deposits, and paying interest. Nothing is so essential in the realm of finance as to retain the public confidence, and this is impossible when undue secrecy is observed. Everyone knew that there was something wrong with the Sovereign Bank; few knew the extent of the wrong until Tuesday when the President announced that heavy losses had occurred through the injudicious business methods of the ex-General Manager, D. M. Stewart, who had made large loans, and opened accounts without the knowledge of the Directors, causing a total loss of about two and a quarter million dollars. In face of this staggering blow, the Directors are to be congratulated on having the courage to adopt a drastic policy; they reduced each shareholder's holding 25 per cent., thus writing off one million dollars of capital. In addition they appropriated the whole of the reserve account, amounting to a million and a quarter. Having done this, the President was able to announce the continuance of dividend paying at the rate of 6 per cent., so that the Bank will be able to make a fresh start without any pressing liabilities under the personal control of Mr. Jarvis, who is one of the ablest and most successful financiers in Canada. Some people will blame Mr. Stewart; those familiar with all the circumstances will be much more inclined to blame the Directors. Mr. Stewart was too young a man to be placed in such a responsible position, and his record before starting the Sovereign Bank, whilst absolutely free from anything which could suggest a reflection upon his character, was not calculated to inspire confidence in his direction of a banking institution. There is no doubt that Mr. Stewart was carried away by enthusiasm, but the Directors who neither directed nor supervised his movements are morally if not legally responsible for the consequences.

Palmam Qui Meruit Ferat.

The Athletic sports which were held at Oak Bay last Saturday tend to show what Victorians lose by not being lovers of sport. Although Victoria is a small place compared with Seattle it has two points in its favor which should enable it to outstrip the great emporium in athleticism: as a City it is older, and what is of still more importance, it is essentially English, and there is no excuse for an Englishman who is not a sportsman. It has been the custom to decry American athletes on the ground of professionalism, but it is doubtful whether they are one whit worse than Canadians in this respect. How many lacrosse or baseball players at the Coast would pass muster if the strict rules which define an amateur were enforced? Be that as it may, The Week cannot refrain from complimenting the splendid team of athletes who came over from Seattle to the Y. M. C. A. sports and swept the board. It was worth going any distance to see the 100 yards, the 220, the quarter-mile, and the pole vaulting. In all the sprints record time was closely approached, and Hall, who won the 100 yards in 10 1-5, on a course that was not perfect, could certainly get inside evens under favourable conditions. Those who missed the event missed a good thing; instead of 800 people, there should have been at least 3,000, to witness by far the fastest foot racing ever seen in Victoria.

At The Street Corner

By THE LOUNGER

I have heard, as I expected, many and varied opinions on the actual coming into force of the new liquor by-law. To some it comes as a veritable Message from Mars; others regard it as a fair emblem of the annoyance hereafter to be experienced in the abode to which will be relegated erring papas. Many critics think that it has come to stay, while as many view it with suspicion as furnishing another example of "making a law and not sticking to it." Still another class of would-be law-givers see in it a direct curtailment of excursions on Sundays, and instance the thirsty crowd of arrivals who descended upon Victoria last Sunday on the Indianapolis, and triumphantly point to the fact there are, as a rule, more "drunks" to be found in closed towns and prohibition states, than in cities where the lid is not tightly screwed down.

The last view, viz., that of The Lounger, remains the same; follow the custom of the Old Country, and enforce its observance. There is, however, one other point which might have been well discussed by the City Fathers, and that is the peremptory closing of sundry "dives," whose rooms, as called for by the regulations are used for the "dumping" of "doped" wretches, fresh from the camps with a pile of dollars on them, which mysteriously vanish before the morning. It is an undisputed fact that robbery wholesale is the rule of these so-called saloons, and it would furnish a better example to "The Wild West" if such dens were stamped out rigorously for good, while respectably conducted houses were allowed to relieve the necessities of visitors during certain hours on the first day of the week.

In cases like the above, the adage confusing Ignorance with Bliss and Folly with Wisdom, does not hold good, even if we were to assume for one moment that the said ignorance exists. A quotation occurs to me which I believe comes from the Pentateuch, but I shall not take the trouble to verify it, for the class which will appreciate it will be able to give the context, together with chapter and verse, and for those to whom it will not appeal it is sufficient to know that it is taken from some portion of the Bible: "Follow not a multitude to evil." I apply it to the present case to point out that though such crimes are common in every part of the globe, there is no reason for each city to wait for the next one to take the first step. I see one, as who would say, "The Devil can quote Scripture." I have not the brains to fill the bill, but I do know that one who speaks from personal experience of these things, is more capable of talking about them than he who knows of them merely by hearsay. However, "nuff sed."

The holiday season is now coming on and I suppose most people are wondering where they are going to spend their season of rest. I never have been able to understand this desire to go away for the holidays. There is little possibility of enjoying oneself in a new place when the conscience is free of the necessity for work. The ideal time to go away is when it is absolutely necessary that one should be at home. There is a piquancy attached which far outweighs the dull enjoyment which is obtained from a pleasure trip. Just as an added flavour is added to stolen bread so a surreptitious holiday conveys to the culprit infinitely more pleasure than a legtiimate one. Who ever found a boy who could honestly say that he appreciated the apples in an orchard to which he was allowed access, in comparison with those to be found in an enclosure which necessitated manoeuvering to enter and skill to leave? It is the risk entailed, the excitement to be gained by the knowledge that there is punishment to follow in the event of discovery, which makes the purloined fruit so much juicier and sweeter than the other. Clandestine love-making is worth ten times the lovey-doving which goes on in the drawing room, while "Father" is asleep in the library, well-content with his future son-in-law. The same rule applies to holidays.

The question naturally follows as to where the legitimate holiday should be spent. "At home of course." But this advice does not mean that the man should employ himself in domestic occupations, such as pruning the rose trees or taking the children to the show. No, let him be called at the same time every morning, as in the case of the immortal boatswain; the knowledge that he can still lie in bed brings far more of the balm of Gilead to his soul than the knowledge that he is supposed to get up and go for a picnic at some place of world-wide reputation for its scenery. After a leisurely toilette and a drawn-out breakfast, a pipe and the morning paper should precede a visit to the office to watch the other fellows working. It may sound cold-blooded but there is an exquisite pleasure to be obtained from seeing your colleagues grinding away at the work you have left for them, while you stroll in for a cigarette with a compassionate smile on your face. Try it. Then waylay them on the street as they return from lunch and walk as far as the office door with them and when you part tell them of what you are going to do in the afternoon; no matter whether you intend to do it or not. Make a point of being discovered whenever possible, in a state of disgusting idleness and you will find that your holiday has given you more real refreshment at far less cost than any long- drawn-out trip to regularly advertised holiday resorts.

The above is the ideal lounger's holiday and I would recommend my more energetic brethren to try it at least once. I will guarantee that they will never revert to the old-fashioned habit of making a toil of pleasure and going away with wives and families to other places. Remember what the preliminary packing means. Thank heaven it is no longer necessary for all parties to go, provided with a tin or India-rubber bath tub, packed full of under clothes and hermetically sealed by a formidable piece of armour-plating, such as used to be seen regularly every August at all the principal London termini. Nous avons change tout cela. But there are other things. Is there anything more tended to upset the temper of a family than the hurry and bustle of packing for a four weeks' holiday? Personally, I would rather have to superintend the packing of the whole house, where at least the question of what is needed and what is not, does not rise up to confront the party responsible. Spring cleaning is a picnic to holiday packing; I speak feelingly, because I know that I always got into trouble when the discussion was being held as to whether it was advisable for my thick vests to be packed in case a cold snap came on, or whether it would not be preferable to make use of the space with a pair of goloshes (otherwise called "rubbers" and "overshoes"). The agonies of the journey are impressed on my mind; the frantic rush to the station so late that one ticket too few, or worse still, too many, had been purchased; the arrival in the growing dusk with a sleet rain coming on, because for some reason or other it usually rains on a visitor's first arrival at a popular sea-side resort, and all people who go for a holiday en famille go to the sea-side; the dullness of strolling up and down a parade amongst a lot of people whom one instinctively dislikes; the dread of the return journey, all go to make up a scene worthy of Dante's pen. But do not think me pessimistic; by no means, I am only sympathetic and wishful of giving advice. When I have a holiday it is at home that you will find the

The furniture, the hangings, the wall and floor coverings, play no more important part in the decoration of the home, than does the art pottery and bric-a-brac.

Alberni, the Coming City.

You ask me to tell you of this beautiful valley, and its snow-capped mountain peaks—its old and new towns, its grand canal, its magnificent scenery, of all that nature has done in the way of storing up values, to be worked out by man, its game and fish, its water powers—well, I will try, and first:

How to Get There.

Via Victoria, the C. P. R. run a weekly steamer, leaving midnight of 1st, 7th, 14th and 21st of each month and calling at Port Renfrew, Cape Beale lighthouse, Banfield Telegraph Cable Station, and up through the Alberni Canal for a distnace of forty miles, this magnificent natural canal runs between mountains, and a constant change of scenery occurs as you progress. You arrive at New Town at from 6 p. m. to 11, according to wind and tide. Fare, with meals, say $6.00.

Via Nanaimo—The C. P. R. from Victoria, or boat from Vancouver land you at Nanaimo in time to catch the stage leaving at noon on Tuesdays and Fridays, or an auto can be secured there that will cover the 54 miles in a few hours, the stage takes one full day to make the trip, and breaks the journey at Half-way House. The scenery is very interesting and gives a wonderful panoramic view of some of British Columbia's magnificent timber resources. Camnon Lake is an ideal spot, four miles long and a mile wide. The mountain side is now covered with a plethorn of shrubs and flowers in blossom. The expense in, from $4.00 to $5.00.

Just t ostretch your legs you climb the mountain on foot, and so relieve the horses.

Stage leaves Alberni Monday and Thursday, early, arriving at Nanaimo 5 p. m.

is about 30 miles long by 10 miles wide, and lies between mountain ranges, with sub-valleys, as it were, radiating from Great Central and Sproat Lakes, two grand sheets of water, the former 27 miles in length. These lakes abut on the Beam or Alberni Valley, and from them flows the Sumas river, whose waters afford a home for trout and salmon. The power generated by them will in future supply light and power to future generations. These two lakes are almost a primeval forest and give the finest of sport in deer, bear, panther, and further back, to elk. Alberni Valley is blessed with fine roads and the means of communication are good, the greatest difficulty being the expense of clearing the land, hand work and horses being too expensive. To a company who will come in and clear the land with a donkey engine plant, there is an unlimited field for work and usefulness. Farming is at last beginning to pay, now that there is an outside market for produce. The principal crops have been hay and oats. Fruit has done remarkably well, and now that there is a certainty of rail outlet much more will be planted, and the industry taken in hand by those who are prepared to handle it by scientific modern methods. Magnificent peaches, grapes, plums have all done well and some apples, while small fruits find this their home.

Lumber Industry.

The Redcliff Lumber Co.'y, a large Minneapolis concern, has secured from the C. P. R. and others large forest reserves of the finest timber in B. C., and are arranging for a large mill to be built on most modern plans and up-to-date in every particular. This alone will give employment to many hands and lead to other industries. Two smaller mill plants are now in the field, and will also do their part to foster industry.

The Local Situation.

We all know that large quantities of Vancouver coal go to San Francisco, principally from Union Bay on the east side of the island. This coal is mined at Cumberland and sent by rail to Union wharf, a distance of six or eight miles. The coal carrying fleet have to travel an extra 200 miles to load there, as compared to Alnerni. This means expense, time and insurance. The natural output for coal will be via Alberni, just so soon as the C. P. R. build from Cumberland to here. It is reported on good authority that large coal measures exist between here and Cumberland; these, too, will in the future find an outlet via this port.

The Canal and Harbor.

The Alberni Canal is about 40 miles long by an average of one mile wide, with great depth, and has for years been navigated by night as well as day, and presents grand facilities for navigation. Canneries are built on its waters, and some large mining properties on its shores have lately been bonded, and further work will at once be proceeded with.

Some year or so ago four English war vessels were anchored in Alberni Harbor, the admiral expressing himself delighted with the situation and stating that he had seldom seen a place so well suited to the makings of a large and beautiful city as it was, the lay of the land, the hills, the snow-capped mountains, all combining to create almost perfect natural facilities and a beauty spot.

Many years ago the adventurous farmer, trapper and prospector found in Alberni Valley a home and a field to which they naturally turned. Its many natural advantages even in that day appealed to them. Amongst others was a married man, a Mr. Anderson, who became possessed of some of the finest of the locations. Some three miles by one in depth, on this property, which lies abutting on the canal, he laid out two townsites, one called the Old Town, and later on, one called the New Town. These are a mile and a half apart and inasmuch as all towns grown westward they must in time become one, especially if the C. P. R. station is located where the survey touches salt water—at a point equal distance from each. Some 20 years ago the district was caught in a copper mining craze and adventurous speculators (more enterprising than honest) subdivided farms away out and sold the lots to the unsuspecting public. This has caused much trouble, as the titles to some of them are not clear and part of the land is of little value. It is criminal to offer lots that it is evident an owner can never use to any advantage, and this is being done today, here and now. Lots 33x119 overhanging a ravine or in it, with no road or chance of a road, should not be allowed to be put on the market unless distinctly shown as such on the plan, so that the purchaser knows full well what he is buying.

Alberni's Needs.

Essentially it needs a railway, well that is surely coming. The main necessity and for which there is ample room for work, is an up-to-date development company to clear the land for fruit-growing in five to twenty-acre plots. The soil is right—the climatic conditions are unexcelled. There is ample scope for brick and tile making on a large scale, also for Portland Cement works, as brick, limestone, coal and wood are here in abundance.

So soon as railway development commences, there will be a large demand for further hotel and home accommodation, the present facilities being inadequate.

Fishing and Shooting.

The fishing at Great Central lake is now almost at its best. Trolling!—fine fish of 6 pounds or more are caught. A few days ago one fisherman drew in his troll as he had as many as he wanted to pack. The sport at this end of the lake, at the outlet, is very fine. The same conditions exist at Sproat Lake and on the falls of the Sumas River.

In the fall grouse, pheasant, duck, pigeon, deer are quite plentiful (almost in town), while bear, wolf, elk and panther are to be had at comparatively easy distances. In short, the canal, the chain of lakes and rivers make Alberni a veritable sportsman's paradise.

The Future of Alberni.

In these days of fierce competition, time plays a very important factor, and today a strenuous conflict is on, as to which company or line shall be able to offer the quickest time between the east and the west, Europe and the Orient. A line of fast C. P. R. steamers on the Atlantic and further double tracking of the prairie section, will, with a transfer from Vancouver to Nanoose Bay and a short railway journey to Alberni, enable them to save much time, and about 100 miles of journey, as done at present. This shortage of haul and saving of time will be an important factor in enabling them to compete with the Peninsula and Oriental steamship lines.

The Great Interior Mine.

We have all read of the famous Treadwell Mine of Alaska, an immense body of low grade ore. Well, those who know state that the "Great Interior Mine" will equal it, both in values and quantity of ore. It lies some miles past the farther end of Great Central Lake, at a great elevation, and is snow-capped. The exposed ore makes it a quarrying proposition from the start and will necessitate an expenditure of an immense amount of money, and the constant employment of an army of men. This, with other mining interests in the immediate neighborhood, will draw their supplies from Alberni.

To the mountain climber, the trip to this mine affords a magnificent panoramic view. The sight from the Glacier of a large portion of Vancouver Island is indeed a grand one, one not easily forgotten, while the wealth of mountain flowers and plants alone amply repay one for the trip.

To the investor prepared to back up his faith by dollars, there lies in Alberni a field for pluck, energy and progress.

To those men who will come to stay, to live, to work and develop the natural resources of the earth, there cannot elsewhere be found a field to equal it.

In conclusion: "Where keel and rail meet, there shall a city be." Now watch Alberni grow.

Sporting Comment

The last three days of next week will witness the best race meet ever held in this city and it is expected that it will pave the way to other meets during the season. Being the opening of the track since it was improved considerable interest is being taken in the events and some very fast time is looked for. The presence of a large number of horses certainly points to good races and at present everything points to a most successful meet. Already there are as many horses at the track as there were at the last meet and more than half the racers have yet to put in an appearance. Several entries for the harness events have been received and information received from up country is to the effect that some of the good ones from that part of the Province will make an effort to get a part of the money. In the running events it is very likely that there will be more competitors than ever before and with the track in good shape there is no reason why the events should not be closely contested. A member of the committee is at present making a tour of the Sound, taking entries and generally boosting the meeting and his work is attracting considerable interest. Being the opening of the track, His Worship has decided to proclaim a public holiday and it is expected that the first day will witness the largest attendance that has ever been at a race meeting in this city and if good races are given on the first occasion there is no reason why the attendance should not be maintained during the two remaining days. For the last few weeks the track has been the scene of an interesting brush almost every day and several fast miles have been shown. It is generally conceded that Victoria can never produce horses of any standing whatever, and it will no doubt surprise some of the knockers to know that during the past week one horse was seen by "Umpire" working out in 2.19. This goes to show that there will be racers of quality at this meet and if it is not a success it will be entirely the fault of the people. Now that the races have been arranged it is due the committee that there should be a good attendance every day and unless this actually happens it is likely that the result will be a loss. Every person in Victoria who likes to drive a horse or has any liking for a good horse should show by his presence at the races that he is willing to assist by his share in making the meeting a success.

In making arrangements at the track the committee should remember the press. In past years the reporters of the local and visiting newspapers have been forced to obtain whatever position they could and in several instances it was impossible for them to follow the horses around the track. Last year they occupied the judges' stand and were put in a very humiliating position by being asked to leave their point of vantage. This is not as it should be and it is up to the committee to see that the reporters are given suitable and comfortable positions and not be put in the position of running the risk of being put out of the stand.

The sportsmen of the city in general were strongly opposed to the erection of a cannery at Cowichan Bay and it is expected that their objections have been registered with the proper authorities. The erection of a cannery at this point would certainly interfere with the sport which so many Victorians now enjoy. Another matter that has been reported to the authorities is the killing of grilse at the fish traps. This is a very serious matter not only from the standpoint of a sportsman but also from a business view, and it should receive the attention of the fisheries inspectors. With the salmon run yearly growing smaller there is absolutely no reason why a large number of young salmon should be killed owing to the short-sightedness of those in charge.

The announcement that there will be baseball practically every Saturday until the end of the season will be hailed with delight by all the lovers of the American National game in this city. Once more the apathy of Victorians has come into evidence and it has remained for an outsider to step in and take up the work which naturally belongs to the local enthusiasts. Mr. Armstrong deserves the hearty support of every citizen of Victoria and everything possible should be done to assist him. All that the fans of this city ask is good ball and this Mr. Armstrong has promised them and it is up to him to keep his promise. Although the team will not be confined strictly to Victoria players, those who show any promise whatever will have no trouble in securing an opportunity to show what class they are in. Mr. Armstrong comes well recommended and it is up to the sport loving people of Victoria to see that he gets that support which he deserves. If Mr. Armstrong continues to follow the lines laid down by him while on his first visit to Victoria there is very little doubt but that he will make the game a success.

Meredith has proved his ability as a batter and has succeeded in winning the cricket bat, donated by "Umpire" to the player making the first century this season. His innings last Saturday was a treat. He plays a nice, steady game and it is hoped that he will continue his good work with the bat.

Eastern cricketers are looking for great results from Cobbett. They will not have to look far, for Cobbett will certainly show them how the game is played in Victoria.

Although the Oak Bay Club was defeated by the Victorians, the players are not disappointed and today they are trying conclusions with the team from Tacoma at Oak Bay.

Cricketers are anxiously awaiting the return of L. Yorke to the game. Louis is very keen, but at present he is acting under the direction of his medical adviser and he will likely be out for a few weeks yet. Immediately he is given permission, however, he will waste no time in getting busy.

"Bob" Foster has not yet lost his cunning and the pitch which he has prepared at Oak Bay is certainly a good one. "Bob" is as happy as a clam to get back into his old game, and he can be seen at any time of the day improving his wicket.

(Cox to be member of the club.); Ladies inrigged skiff (double) with gentleman coxswain. Messrs. J. Erskine (vice captain), A. T. Minogue and G. O. Nesbitt compose the committee, which have the regatta and dance in hand, are working hard.

A. W. LePage, the gasoline expert, has returned to Vancouver from an extended business trip through the Okanagan. Mr. LePage reports that section of the interior in a flourishing condition. While in Vernon he sold a big motor-boat engine to V. C. Maddock & Co., besides securing a large number of orders for engine supplies. At Kelowna he was also successful, taking orders from H. Lysons. Mr. LePage has had a man down in Nelson who sold Mr. York a gasoline boat engine.

The prospectus of the E. H. Heaps & Co., Ltd., has been issued and the National Finance Co., have been appointed brokers in the disposal of the shares. The company owning large mills at Cedar Cove, Vancouver, and at Ruskin, besides 20,000 acres of timber land, has been capitalized at one million and a half, divided into fifteen thousand shares of $100 each. The Provisional Board of Directors are E. H. Heaps, President and General Manager; Wm. Sulley, Vice-President and Treasurer; Wm. Sulley, Jr., Mechanical Superintendent; E. N. Heaps, Manager of Ruskin Mill, and J. W. Heaps, Secretary. The new capital will be used in extending the business.

"The Saturday Sunset" will make its appearance today. Messrs. Ford and McConnell, who are behind the enterprise, have received splendid support for their initial number, and backed by ample capital and experience, Vancouver's new weekly paper enters upon a prosperous career.

The King's Statecraft.

In circles where the game of statecraft is played, King Edward has proved himself to be the greatest strategist in diplomatic manoeuvre since the days of Tallyrand, only King Edward's employment of language is for a purpose exactly the reverse of the great French diplomatist who said that words were fit only to conceal one's purpose, when his words are too clear in their meaning to be misunderstood.—News Letter, San Francisco.

What Was Wrong With It?

A party of American tourists were visiting the ancient landmarks of England, and their guide was supplying them with valuable historic facts.

"This tower," he remarked, "goes back to William the Conqueror."

"Why, what's the matter?" inquired one of his listeners. "Isn't it satisfactory?"

No Royal Road.

Believe always that every other life has been more tempted, more tried than your own; believe that the lives higher and better than your own are not so through more ease, but more effort; that the lives lower than yours are so through less opportunity, more trial.—Mary R. S. Andrews.

In spite of all the mistakes and tragedies of love it remains the world's one vital thing.

Words of Wisdom.

It is probably true of most women that their first ideals of love are someone who shall love them supremely, and that as they grow old their cry is, first of all, for someone to love supremely; for it is not a necessity to anyone to be loved, but that each of us should know the power of an absorbing love for some other creature is an essential of development, if not of salvation.

A Lady's Letter

By BABETTE.

Dear Madge:

Some of the most interesting rooms in the world are its lumber-rooms. Many of the most valuable treasures now in museums and art galleries have been unearthed in old lumber-rooms covered with the dust of ages, and much treasure of various kinds doubtless still "perdu" in them. What is useless lumber to one generation becomes a valuable asset very often to those succeeding it a few decades later. After oblivion has "scattered her poppy" over the contents of the top attic where the rejected household relics have been stowed they emerge into the light of day not much the worse for their long rest and increased a hundred-fold in decorative value. "We that are very old"—to borrow a phrase from the immortal Isaac Bickerstaff—must remember what a haven of delight the lumber-room was to us when we were children. What games we played in it, what castles we built in it, what splendid "properties" the old disused pieces of furniture and numberless odds and ends, with which the enchanted attic was stocked, made when the game was "let's pretend." And how, when it was getting dark, we crept softly down the creaky staircase and left it to the ghosts and bogies which we knew took possession of it, as soon as the twilight fell. Genius has often burned her lamp in the lumber attic; some of Chatterton's exquisite lines were written in the lumber-room of his mother's house in Bristol. Who knows what thrilling tales these old waste places could unfold if their begrimed walls could speak? Old wills and documents that have changed the destinies of lives have been discovered in them, and how many secrets ma ythey still keep? But apart from the romance which clings to them they have a very real and practical interest and value for the clever housewife, who will find this deserted, dust-ridden region a happy hunting ground in which she may find valuable quarry. "Never throw anything away; it is sure to come in useful within seven years," is wise advice where furniture is concerned.

Fashion in furniture, like history, is constantly repeating itself, and old things have a wondrous way of becoming new again. Even prim early-Victorian samples, and needlework pictures are resurrected with much joy today. They are framed, hung up and pointed to with pride as our grandmother's work and have become almost beautiful in our eyes.

Just how tall woman ought to be is a question that has never been decided. Orlando thought Rosalind ideal because she was "just as high as my heart." But while there is no standard, as a general thing any woman who is under 5 ft. 5 in. is anxious to make herself look taller. There are various ways of doing this, says a Paris authority on dress, who has just been laying down the law in the matter. In the first place, let the short woman dress her hair high and wear a tall comb to add to the effect. Her skirts should be moderately long and her heels reasonably high. Striped materials with the stripes running up and down, trimmings applied in the same way, frocks cut princess style—all these devices add to the apparent height. Even more important than atention to the dress is attention to the carriage. The girl who holds her head high, who knows how to manage her neck, to give her head just the right graceful turn, will inevitably seem taller than the girl of more inches who carries her chin screwed into her neck. Short women moreover, should bend all their forces to keeping thin and they must not wear tight-fitting clothing.

The hand beautiful is not the hand of idleness. It is no longer thought necessary to emulate the famous French beauty who, to preserve the exquisite loveliness of her hands, never used them even so much as to shut a door.

The perfectly idle hand, the absolutely useless hand, loses some of the finer and more spirituelle lines of beauty which makes the chief attraction of the well-kept hand of the worker. It is work and usefulness that lend sensibility to the fingers and add to the charm of the whole palm without destroying the texture of the skin or changing and over-developing the general contour.

The hand of the girl of sixteen may be lovely in texture and form; it may have all the possibilities, but it cannot have the charm, the power, or the capability of the hand of the matron who is skilled in soothing pain, in comforting and helping, and who has sympathy and feeling which develop only with time and suffering.

Titian, in his picture of the reclining Venus, has painted her hands with such beauty of line and colour that they still remain the model of the ages. These are not the dimpled hands of a young girl. The Venus herself is distinctly a woman between thirty-three and thirty-eight. The hand is not a tiny rose-leaf affair, but is fully developed with mature lines of perfect beauty and grace. The model from whom they were painted must undoubtedly have been a woman acquainted with not perhaps the rough work of a house, but certainly versed in some of the arts of the time, a dilettante, perhaps, in music, poetry, sculpture and painting. The hands of this Venus find their exact counterpart in those of a woman of today whose fingers are accustomed to work of many kinds.

A serene blue, full of mystery, with a reminiscence of Eastern night in it, is called Sphinx, and is the latest contribution to the long list of blues which fashion has introduced this spring. It is particularly becoming to girls with chestnut-brown hair and a colouring of ivory only faintly tinted with pink.

Another new dye is called Earth of Egypt. In tone a warm sand shade with a touch of actual yellow in it, it recalls the desert, and is yet distinctly different from tan, inasmuch as the burning sun seems to be suggested by its soft brilliance.

The elbow sleeve is doomed. The best dressmakers have discarded it, and for their Ascot dresses will adopt the opposite extreme in modes, the sleeves that extends to the knuckles. One compromise between the two, and one only, they allow in the out-of-door dresses they are making, and that is the sleeve that ends at the wrist, where the fulness is hidden beneath a goffered frill of lawn or taffetas, called the "grandfather," after the shirt ruffles it resembles.

The Rejane sleeve, now so fashionable, which covers the arm and hand even to the knuckles, is exceedingly becoming to the hand, which it refines and beautifies. It also makes a good setting for the displays of handsome rings and pretty bracelets. As lace and lawn are prone to fall back from the hands and disturb the symmetry of the arrangement, an elastic band is invisibly placed round each thumb, in order that the mitten may be kept in the correct position.

When Orpheus Smote His Lyre.

The joint concert given by the Orion Club of Victoria and the Orpheus Club of Tacoma, on Friday evening, the 7th inst., was one of the most enjoyable of the many offerings for which Victoria is indebted to the musical organizations of the City. It would have been rendered notable by the excellent performance of the local singers and orchestra, but the importance of the occasion was greatly heightened by the brilliant work of the visiting society. It is only fair to admit that in style and finish the work of the Tacoma aggregation surpassed that of the Arion club. This was due to more assiduous practice, for in richness and volume the Victoria chorus were obviously superior, but in execution they could not claim to be in the same class, judged by Friday's performance. Rarely if ever have Victorians heard pianissimo passages so exquisitely rendered by a chorus, whilst the absolute control of the Tacoma Conductor, Mr. Middleton, was little short of marvellous. When the two choruses sang together the effect though less even was superb, the only blemishes being due to lack of practice.

Of the choruses the Pilgrim's chorus seemed to be the popular favourite, but from a musical standpoint the most satisfactory number was Gluck's Media Vitae, a double chorus known as the battle hymn of the monks. It is sung by two bodies of monks each divided into three part harmony, and concludes with a merging chorus. This number gave each of the Societies an opportunity to display their qualities, and the effect both singly and in unison was very fine.

As to the soloists it would be difficult to speak too highly of the artistic singing of Mrs. Brougham. While her voice has lost a little of its freshness her style is still inimitable, and a delicious selection from her extensive repertoire enabled her to sustain a reputation which she has held for many years as one of the finest contraltos in the West.

Mr. Hanlin is a popular favourite with of the line, he has a powerful voice, with a good middle register. His low notes are inclined to be hoarsh, and his style is a little stilted, but there is no question as to his musical temperament and sympathetic rendering of ballads. It is probable that he will get to his best work in oratorio, for which he is well fitted both by voice and manner. The work of the orchestra was decidedly meritorious though not without blemishes, the Lodoiska Overture should not have been selected, it was entirely beyond the powers of the performers and was marred by the vagaries of the cornet. For a concert of such importance, it was painfully obvious that the practice of the orchestra had been insufficient. There is one other point which cannot be overlooked, and which should receive the serious attention of all promoters of concerts in Victoria, that is the ridiculous custom of encoring every item. If the committees will have the courage to adopt the English rule and allow no encores, but prepare a programme which would fill the allotted time, say from 8.30 to 10.30, everybody would be satisfied, but the present system is an abuse by which in the end no one benefits. Encores which are not discriminating are meaningless, and when an audience is compelled to sit until 11.30, even though it may be partially responsible, the good effect of the concert is neutralized. There were many complaints on Friday night on this score, inconsistently enough from people who had contributed to lengthening out the programme.

The Committee responsible for arranging this concert is deserving of every commendation, it introduced Victorians to the finest chorus ever heard in this city, it will stimulate local talent, and above all it will intensify the love for music which attracted more than a thousand people to the Victoria Theatre.

Sports.

The lacrosse players of the city have realized that they can make a good team if all the players in the city pull together and work for the best interest of the club, and they have again formed themselves into a club and it is expected that some games will be played in this city before the close of the season. The management of the club is making a big mistake, however, in arranging a game to take place the same day as the horse races. This is very foolish and the players should endeavor to arrange matters in some manner agreeable to all parties. There has been too much bickering in past years and it is time that all forms of athletics should combine themselves into an association for the mutual benefit of every branch as it is only by good-fellowship among the players that the gates will exist. It is not too late to change the date of the lacrosse match and The Week suggests that the game be played on the 29th inst.

If Victoria athletes are to hold their own in athletics it is very evident that they will have to take more interest in the work than they have in the past, otherwise their standing will soon be very low. This was clearly shown last Saturday at Oak Bay when the competitors from Seattle won practically every event. The only events which did not go to Seattle were won by Vancouver, the local competitors being completely outclassed. In this connection, it is clearly shown that the suggestion made by "Umpire" a few weeks ago that the two clubs of the city should take hold of the younger athletes is a correct one and until the management of the two institutions realize this there will be no good athletes representing Victoria. This was very evident in the Marathon race, where a Victoria runner was on even terms with the winner as far as the golf links when he was seized with cramps and had to retire. It is not unusual for an athlete to be seized in this manner, but in this case it was entirely due to a change in the diet of the runner. He is an inexperienced runner and depending on his own knowledge, took dinner a few hours before the race, completely changing his regular dinner course. Under this circumstance it is not surprising that he was unable to finish the race. It is in these small matters where the older athletes can give their advice and it is hoped that they will not neglect to do so. One other matter which came to the notice of "Umpire" was the absence of several promising athletes. Among those who were missing were Todd in the dashes; Winch in the half-mile; Brown in the Marathon race, and Heater in the high jump. It is plainly up to the older organizations to get hold of these young athletes and see that they are kept up in their work. The younger Victorians who competed acquitted themselves very creditably. Agnew, Viao, Finch, Gibson, Redfern and Bryce are comers and could be looked after to advantage by either the J. B. A. A. or the Y. M. C. A. and it is up to them to do so. The annual gathering of the athletes of the Coast will be held in Seattle during the coming week and it is the sorry duty of "Umpire" to state that Victoria will not be represented. This is not as it should be and it is very clear that the fault lies with the elder organizations.

What He Had in Him.

A certain eloquent preacher, who recently assumed charge of a large Presbyterian church in a Western city, was calling, the other day, on an old Scotch lady, a member of his flock, who entertained him with stories of her Highland ancestors. Thinking to ingratiate himself with her, he mentioned that his own grandmother had been a Scotchwoman.

"Aye," she exclaimed, enthusiastically, "that explains it, and I micht hae kent it, for never, since I hae been in this country, hae I heard a gran', stirrin', sermon withoot findin' that the man wha preached it had a drop o' Scotch in him."

The Vagaries of Domestics and Mistresses.

By BOHEMIAN.

I remember once filling this column with a dissertation on babies, on the principle that the person who can give the most unbiased opinion on a subject is the one who knows nothing about it. This week it has been suggested that since pater familias, mater familias, and the editor of the Colonist combined have failed to offer any solution of the domestic servant problem, I might try my prentice hand. Being a bachelor, a bohemian and a lodger, there may be some appropriateness in the suggestion. I can at any rate say what I think and tell something of what I have observed.

My first comment is that domestic servants, like babies, are on the down grade, and for the same reason, there is a scarcity of mothers. As applied to the latter, my proposition cannot be contested, and if anyone is so incredulous as to doubt it, I simply refer them to Teddy and leave the matter there.

The connection between scarcity of mothers and scarcity of domestic servants is perfectly obvious, if one bears in mind that mothers no longer train their daughters for this once honourable occupation. Nowadays the majority of girls have little or nothing to do with domestic work until after they marry.

In Canada even the working man, or rather his wife, ekes out her own drudgery by the aid of John Chinaman, and the good man of the house spends his leisure in doing chores. Meanwhile Belinda or Rosabella may be found at The Grand, or the Gorge, when she is not contemplating the latest confections at Spencer's or the White House.

I never knew a country in which the father of the family did so much domestic work; and what with gardening, chopping wood, carrying in coal and water, carrying out ashes, to say nothing of a thousand and one nameless services, it is no marvel that he is a vigorous petitioner for shorter hours of labour. I have always maintained that labour is underpaid; I still think so, but if anything would cause me to hesitate in urging a higher rate of remuneration, it would be a consideration of the vast amount of money wasted by the daughters of working men on dress.

I forbear discussing the inconsistency of the wife of a unionist who employs even partially a Chinese domestic. But let us carry the matter a little further. What about those with larger incomes, to whom a paid domestic of some kind is a necessity, and who can afford to hire one? For such the supply of female help is extremely limited, and will become more so. This is because girls are unwilling to wear the badge of servitude, they are unwilling for it to be known that they are "in service." They prefer the factory, the store, the warehouse or the office. Anything in fact rather than housework. The principal reason for this is that they have more liberty, and of course in some occupations, though not in all, more money. But there is another reason not generally admitted, and yet easily discoverable by careful enquiry, and that is that the majority of mistresses in this new country have not been accustomed in their own homes in the East or in the Old Country, or perhaps south of the line, to the luxury of servants, and therefore do not know how to treat them.

The gentle art of managing a female domestic can only be acquired by a long process of careful training. And the independence of the damsel is such that it asserts itself at the slightest provocation. After carefully observing and considering this matter, I am convinced that within ten years female domestic service will be practically unknown in Western Canada, and the problem which will have to be faced by the housewife and I fear also by the house man, will be that of a substitute. At present the only substitute in sight is John Chinaman, and under existing conditions, he is becoming almost unendurable. The head tax has lifted him on to a pedestal where nothing less than $30 a month can touch him, and unless things alter it will not be long before he will demand and receive $40 and even $50.

Is the Jap a possible substitute? Certainly, if we are prepared to pay the price, but he is even more independent than John Chinaman, and cannot be hired except at his own figure. Then it cannot be denied that on many grounds he is far less desirable as a domestic; indeed there are conditions under which he would be impossible.

Now I do not claim to be a philosopher, but even a bachelor may think, and I venture to say that the only solution of the domestic servant problem is a radical change in the training and education of children, an abandonment of the absurd curricula which prevail in our public schools, where mathematics, physiology, chemistry and other sciences are taught to girls while sewing is not recognized. How many school girls of today can make their own linen, or darn their own stockings? With a wiser training, and simpler living the family circle which has been broken by the extravagances of a new rich era would be restored, and within its own borders would be found the many hands which make light work.

In this connection it must not be forgotten that great strides have been made in sanitary science, and in the production of those aids which make work much easier for our daughters, than it was for our mothers. I am old fashioned enough to assert that the happiest household is that which is independent of hired help, and since for the many it is no longer attainable it will be the height of wisdom to make a virtue of a necessity, by doing without it.

Bohemian.

A Brilliant Musician.

An addition of note has just been made to Victoria musical circles by the arrival of M. Henri Rousseau, who has been living in Vancouver for several years, during which time he has established a high reputation both as an executant pianist and a teacher of music. He has now resolved to start a private class in Victoria and has received promises of help from several influential citizens.

M. Rousseau is a graduate of the Royal Conservatory of Music, Leipsic, and has taken a special course of study under Leopold Godowski, Berlin, and Theo. Leschetiszky, of Vienna.

He has also made several successful concert tours, and has attained some distinction as a composer. His Nocturne Op. 12, No. 2, and also a Grande Valse di Concert in E., and a Symphony being especially popular. The Week has known M. Rousseau for nearly two years and has had many opportunities of testing his ability. It is pleased to be able to endorse him as a thoroughly competent and accomplished instructor.

The New Grand.

It takes a clever man to be a fool and this week the Adele Palmer Company have borne out this axiom to the full. "The Iceman" is the most absurd piece of nonsense that I have ever seen, and in that lies its excellence. It is not everyone who could run about the stage with a bunch of lettuce in his mouth and make it seem funny, but Dennis Mullen does; Semour Sinclair as a wooden-faced waiter, woes his part capitally, as does the Count. Miss Palmer as a fictitious daughter, is good, especially in the scene where she tries to hide the vulgarities of her assumed father. White & Sandford have a pleasing turn in vaudeville melody, the Italian monologue and the Italian dancer being exceptional. Flo Irwin became a favourite immediately, and to my great delight called down "the other monkey" in the front seats, when he became too funny. Her voice is good and her repertoire also. Enid Delle is a clever little soubrette, especially as a dancer. Mr. Keane gave a splendid rendering of quite a pretty song and the Moving Pictures gave a thrilling representation of life in America in the days of Daniel Boone.

MOMUS.

The Music Cure.

Music has been added to the materia medica. This is not an altogether new curative agent, but its method of application provides a novel phase in the treatment of trouble.

"H-m-m-m," says the physician, slowly, as he writes something down on his prescription pad. "I think this will make you feel all right."

The patient glances with idle curiosity at the prescription. To his astonishment he sees, instead of the regulation, illegible Latin, five straight lines, a treble clef and a few notes written along the lines, with perhaps the word "scherzo" topping it.

"What on earth do you want me to do with this?" demands the patient.

"Have it filled at the nearest music shop," laughs the physician. "It will do you more good than all the drugs in the world—take my word for it."

Such conversations between physician and patient, we are assured, have actually taken place. Harmony and melody are today playing their part in the cure of most of the ills to which flesh is heir.

For nervous troubles, nervous prostration, neurasthenia, brain fag, and kindred ills, music alone has wrought wonderful cures. Of course, it must be the proper kind of music. A patient about to go under ether for a dangerous operation mustn't hear "Over the river they are beckoning to me," or "This time another year, oh, Lord, we may be gone!" A lively march, for instance, or a stirring song would quicken the pulse and increase the respiration, thereby putting the patient in better condition for the operation.

Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsodie No. 2, for example, has been found to be stimulating to a high degree; whereas Mendelssohn's "On wings of song" has the effect of a sedative in the treating of a nervous patient. A Schubert "Ave Maria" is a narcotic, and for patients in need of a tonic, marches and bright and melodious waltz songs are most effective.

Developing Animal Palates.

From a Hackney inquest comes the revelation, confirmed by an experienced local doctor, that raw sausage is a common food for young children in that part of London. Some mothers seem to have developed an acquired taste for it in their children, and give it to them when they cry for it. Thus a child in a peevish mood, which is more than likely to be due to its being out of sorts already, is particularly in danger of having this "food" given to it to stop its crying.—The Tribune.

Fatal Equality.

The drawbacks to social equality come out in domestic service, if they appear at all.

A correspondent reports this conversation between an American lady living in Manilla and one of her Filipino servants:

"Ramar," said she, "why is it that you worked so well for the Spaniards and did it for so little? They treated you very badly, and I treat you well. They paid you only two pesos a month, and you ask twenty-five from me. I don't understand it."

"Ah, senora," said Ramar, "the Spaniards were our superiors. You Americans are our equals."

Visitors to Victoria are constantly asking to be directed to the most fashionable Tea Rooms. There is only one possible answer to their enquiries, and that is, by all means, go to the Cosy Corner Tea Rooms on Fort St., where you can obtain an excellent light luncheon, afternoon tea, or theatre supper at a moderate price, and amid surroundings the most unexceptionable.

Miners' Working Hours.

The fact is—and it is now definitely ascertained for the first time—that miners are not now, taking the average of the country and of actual time worked, employed so much as eight hours per day. Even the theoretical full week's work, after allowing for customary stop days and short days, is slightly under 50 hours, and the time actually worked averages only 43¼ hours, or 7¼ hours per day for six days of the week—Yorkshire Post.

IS It Oblivion?

Sunday was but the tenth anniversary of Mr. Gladstone's death at Hawarden, yet already blame or applause have died down. For half a century he was the best-recognized figure in politics, hardly a political cartoon appeared but his well-known features were in the foreground. The silence which has settled about his name suggests that his success was rather that of an orator than a statesman's, and for the orator and the actor the same oblivion waits.—London Evening News.

Physical Culture.

In the days of our fathers when people were sick
They hadn't got Physical Culture,
So they'd send for a doctor—and send double quick,
For they didn't read "Physical Culture."
But now we're informed that all doctors are fools
And all that we need is to follow the rules
Of this latest opponent of Medical Schools
And go in for Physical Culture.

Hail, Physical Culture!
Just think of the ills we've endured!
It's lovely to know that it needn't be so,
For there's nothing that cannot be cured.

For instance, suppose that my nose is too red,
I can cure it by Physical Culture.
The treatment is simple: I stand on my head
(According to "Physical Culture").
I stand on my head 'till I'm perfectly green,
Effects of this treatment are instantly seen,
And I drop on my feet again, calm and serene,
Restored through Physical Culture.

Hail, Physical Culture!
Oh, dear, what a lot we've endured!
Now thanks to this fad, there is nothing so bad
For there's nothing that cannot be cured.

Or supposing you've eaten some gooseberry pie,
No matter; there's Physical Culture.
Though you're groaning with pain and you're longing to die,
You needn't; there's Physical Culture.
Skip up to the cook, grab her tight by the hair,
With a yell swing her seventeen times through the air—
In a minute you'll know you are cured and you'll swear
That there's nothing like Physical Culture!

Hail, Physical Culture!
To think of the pain we've endured!
Oh, let us all try it (on suitable diet),
For there's nothing that cannot be cured.

Short Story

That Other Girl's Affair.

(By C. B. Hall)

"If any man ever looks at me like that, I will be his willing slave to the end of time."

"I am thirty years old today," said Louise Bushnell to her friend, Ruth Hall, who had come in for a little visit. The two had long been friends.

Ruth smiled, gave her a look of mutual understanding, and after a minute of silence, said: "I will be thirty next month."

"It would be just as well to take no special notice of this day hereafter," Louise went on. "There is no more reason for a gift on this day, or for having something for dinner that I particularly like, than on any other day."

Ruth smiled again.

"I know that girl next door calls me an old maid," proceeded Louise. "Some of my own family do that occasionally. I would not care if they only said 'bachelor girl.' I can imagine a man whose wife I should like to be, but I have never seen him, and the chances are that were he to come into this town now he would not see me. He would probably make the acquaintance of that girl next door—that girl who wonders what difference it makes what kind of a hat I have."

Ruth laughed outright.

"I unpacked today a box that has been in the attic since we moved into this house ten years ago," Louise began again, "and I came across a journal I kept in those days."

"Do let me see it," begged Ruth.

"I don't mind reading you part of it," said Louise. "A September record was of special interest;" and she reached across to the table where lay a pile of papers held by an elastic band. She turned the leaves until she came to the part named, while Ruth settled herself farther into the rocking chair, prepared for a good time. Louise read:

"September 3.—We are at the shore for the month of September. Mother would not be happy if she could not superintend the settling of Dick's room at College. So, as it was easier to find a furnished house at the shore than in town, we are down at this beautiful spot for the whole blessed month.

"I draw a long happy breath as I look out over this superb water, and think that I may have it for thirty more days.

"Many of the houses are vacant now, but there are some people in the one next to us. I have seen a tall girl about there. I hope I shall be able to make her acquaintance, for I admire her style, her gait, and especially the graceful way in which she sits down. If that is accomplished by physical culture, I shall take up physical culture next winter, and in the meantime practise on sitting without the jack-knife bend.

"September 5.—Sitting on the porch this afternoon, I had a chance to get a closer view of my neighbor. She certainly is beautiful. Her face is a little sad, yet she does not seem depressed. I don't believe she is an athletic girl—she moves too slowly. That elderly lady there is not her mother, I feel sure. The girl is very respectful to her, but if she was fond of her she would be a little less respectful and a little more affectionate in manner.

"They are very interesting people, and though they both sat on their porch all the time I was out, the only words I heard were some remarks of the elder lady that seemed apropos of nothing. Once she said, 'I have no use for a man who dawdles away his time, even though he has a bank-account. No man has a right to stop doing something for the world until age has rendered him infirm.'

"The girl made no reply and looked steadily out to sea. If she was interested she did not show it. I believe that is another reason I like her. Besides the lessons in physical culture I shall also cultivate, next winter, a non-committal expression.

"The lady's tones were quite peppery, for which I could see no reason. Of course no one objects to a man's working—every one thinks he ought. Later I heard her say again, 'Laziness is a vice. It shows some moral deterioration which will sooner or later develop into open sin.' She spoke clearly and with strong emphasis, and seemed like a person who, having advanced an opinion, considered the matter settled and expected no words of dissent.

"I thought I saw the girl wince and an expression of pain come into her face, but if she changed at all it was only like a passing shadow that was gone before it could be placed; and silently she sat with her hands lying idly in her lap and her eyes on a distant sail. Directly the lady got up and walked briskly into the house. Even her jerky little back showed plainly that something did not please her.

"After she had gone the girl seemed to relax. I felt that she had been holding herself with a grip, as she arose and strolled up and down the porch. How superbly she walks. I do not believe I could walk like that with two seasons of physical culture."

"September 6.—This afternoon both of us were out—she on her porch and I on mine. I appreciate her company even at this distance, though I am not at all sure that she has even noticed that there is a soul over here. We had not been out long when I saw a gentleman crossing the lawn toward that house.

"He was tall and had that superior manner that men put on when they wish to be known as men of the world. Of course it is put on, but of all affected things I like that best—especially when it fits. He was not a bit handsome, but distingue-looking, and before I had seen him five minutes I found myself wishing that Harry looked like that.

"His eyes were on the girl on the porch, but she never moved to meet him until he stood on the top step. Then she walked slowly toward him and offered her hand, and the smile on her face was perfectly bewitching. It atoned for any lack in haste to greet him. I know he thought so, too. He showed it, and he held the hand he took an unnecessarily long time. My spirits went up with a leap. 'Ah, ha!' said I, 'have I a love-affair right before my very eyes?' I kept one eye on him and one on her, and I felt the glow in the atmosphere.

"He was hardly seated when out came the little old lady. I was immediately conscious of the rapid depression of the mercury. He rose to greet her, and most deferentially offer a chair. With a little toss of the head and hand she waved it aside and helped herself to one, moving it so that she sat down between the two.'

"She leaned forward to lift the handkerchief that slipped from her lap and over her bended back I saw the girl turn to the man with a smile that was dear, and his eyebrows raised, and on his face was an expression that reminded me of a quotation that often comes to me, 'Oh, Lord, how long?' By the time the lady was erect again both had resumed their former positions, and for all any one could see, were thinking in a foreign tongue.

"That there was conversation I could tell by the murmur of voices, but no one except the old lady spoke loud enough to have the words distinct across this narrow strip between our porches. Once I heard her say, 'I do not think it a proper time to be out walking, for the ground is quite damp,' and again, 'It would be a foolish thing to go for a drive so late in the day as this,' and after both these comments there was a long silence.

"September 10.—Today I strolled along the beach in full sympathy with the heavenly air and calm water glistening in the sun.

"When I reached the huge rocks I sat down too blissfully content to do anything but lazily breathe. I soon detected the odor of smoke, and glancing around, I saw the man. What need to say 'What man'? Since I have seen this stranger I have decided that he is my ideal, and I confess that now when I think of Harry, I have no longer the rapturous feelings I used to have at the sound of his name. I am afraid Harry is commonplace.

"The stranger was half sitting, half lying on the rocks, a pipe in his mouth, his hat drawn over his eyes, and his arms thrown over his head. Apparently, he did not observe me, and I had a good time watching him. He dresses well; his taste is good; his manners are perfect. I wonder what's the matter with him? I would be willing to risk him, and I fancy that in this respect that girl and I are agreed.

"Soon I heard a voice singing that sweet old Scotch song:

'Better loved ye canna be,
Will ye nae come back again?'

"At the first note the man sat up quickly, and in an instant was on his feet. Just then the girl came slowly around the rocks, still softly singing, and would I could put down in words the expression of that man's face as he looked at her. The joy of his heart radiated through every feature, permeated the very atmosphere.

"If any man ever looks at me like that, I will be his willing slave to the end of time. He put his pipe in his pocket, raised his hat, and went to meet her, and together they strolled away, both unconscious of my presence.

"I think the aunt, or grandmother, or guardian, whichever she be, went into town this morning.

"September 14.—Sitting on the porch this forenoon, I heard little shrieks and hurried steps and quick calls in the next house. Directly a servant came from the house and ran down the road. In an incredibly short time the doctor's automobile stood at the door. Soon there were more messengers out, and after a time I saw a surgeon go in, and a little later one of the blue-gowned, white-aproned nurses. I hope my neighbor girl is not hurt.

"Later—She is safe, for I have seen her. It must be the old lady.

"September 15.—I saw the girl come out with a note in her hand this morning. The colored boy came around the house, and she gave it to him with some definite instructions, I know, for he listened intently. And after he went away she strolled about the grounds, picked some flowers, sang a little to herself, and finally looked over at me and smiled and nodded.

"That is the first time she has ever shown any consciousness of my presence, and my heart thumped a wild beat too with joy. I adore her.

"She seemed quite cheery, so I am sure the lady is not seriously hurt.

"It has been a night fit for paradise. The moon was full; the tide was high; the air was soft. I lay in the hammock and forgot earthly things as I lived in spirit with that man and the girl on the next porch.

"He has talked more than usual, though I have not heard a word—only the murmur of his voice. Twice they have been interrupted by the nurse, who must have come with a message from the lady.

"I think it was rather late when she arose to go, and with his arm about her they walked up and down the porch a few times and then stopped at the steps. They stood in the softest moonlight. I saw his hand rest caressingly on her hair, and then, bending both arms, he gathered her to the dearest hug.

"How I got out of the hammock I don't know, but I found myself actually hanging over the porch rail, intent was I on those two people. When I realized my position I had the grace to say, 'Louise Bushnell, isn't you ashamed of yourself?' I certainly am, and yet I feel I was hindered quite irresponsible by the exigencies of the occasion.

"I don't believe in a girl marrying unless she meets her ideal, and Harry certainly is not mine.

"September 30.—It is the last day of our stay. I hate the surprised way in which every one looked at me when I told mother that she need not have Harry down to spend the last day, as she suggested. I did not want him, and I was not going to have him here to interfere with the second-hand pleasure I have in that dear man.

"I can see them now from my window. He sits on the porch-rail in front of her, with the happiest face, and it isn't difficult to guess what he is saying when the color changes and deepens in hers like that.

"I think I shall never marry."

Louise laid down the papers, and looking at Ruth, said:

"I afterward learned the name of that girl and man, and in this morning's paper I saw their pictures, with an announcement in large type of divorce proceedings."

Ruth gasped.

"I don't know whether the little old lady died too soon to say 'I told you so.'" she went on, and for the first time Louise smiled. Louise seemed rather sober today.

"What about Harry?" at last ventured Ruth.

"The last time I saw Harry," replied Louise, "I met him in a railway station. He had a baby in his arms and was carrying a heavy suit case. His wife hurried along behind him, holding by the hand another baby—she also carried a bag.

"With no hand for her clothes, she let her skirts drag over a sloppy pavement, and she was generally dishevelled. I lifted a heart full of praise that I was not Mrs. Harry."

"But do you suppose Mrs. Harry, with her two fine children, lifted a heart full of regret that she was not you?" asked Ruth.

"Probably not," said Louise. "And maybe she's right. I used to think her Harry was commonplace, but he seems to be wearing better than 'that other girl's' admirer—the man who made love to her next to our house at the seaside."

Mr. Deakin's Prophecy.

Mr. Deakin, the Australian Premier, informed a crowded National Service League gathering in the Queen's Hall on Thursday that he believed that before long they would have universal service compulsory throughout Australia.

The British Empire could never be regarded as an aggressive force, but no one had more to lose, no one had more to protect, no one had more to retain than the British Empire. (Cheers). In Australia they had not only cadets in the schools, senior cadets, militia, and volunteers, but in every community there was a rifle club which formed a reserve force which could be drawn upon if necessary. But still they were dissatisfied. Universal service would be most appropriate, because their States undertook the education of their citizens, and they believed military training to be a necessary part of that education. A nation ought not to say, "We will hire our defence." It was far nobler that a community should discharge the duties of its own defence. There could be no greater guarantee of peace than that every household should share the risks of war. (Cheers.)

An Important Sale.

On Wednesday and Thursday of next week, Messrs. Williams & Janion will dispose of the household furniture and effects and a unique collection of Indian Curios, belonging to the Hon. Edgar Dewdney; the sale will take place at his residence on Rockland Avenue, and will furnish an opportunity for lovers of art and connoisseurs to acquire some of the most valuable antique furniture and curios in the Province. The latter represent a fifty years' collection, gathered together from all parts of B. C. In the early days the Hon. Mr. Dewdney enjoyed special facilities for acquiring these interesting objects. The collection under this heading comprises more than one hundred articles. There are also a number of exceedingly rare and valuable furs choice portfolios, of birds and fishes, five rare steel engravings after Hogarth, and a number after Bartellozzi, Pietro Dicortona, Antonio Vandyke, and Maratt. There are also a number of choice oils and water colors, the former by J. Salmon, Vickers, and Vernon, and the latter by Gibson.

Collectors of autographs will be eager to acquire fine portraits of Lord Stanley, Lord and Lady Aberdeen, and Madam Albani, all autographed. The dinnerware is very recherche, including an expensive Limoges desert service. Altogether this is one of the most exceptional sales held in Victoria, and will no doubt attract widespread attention.

Nothing is permanent but change.

Editorial Piracy.

The Week is getting tired of calling attention to the deliberate piracy which is continually practised in the editorial columns of the Colonist. The ingenious compiler exercises his wit to borrow from his contemporaries all the ideas he can, and then to mangle their expression so that they may be unrecognizable by those who have read them in English. Piracy of this kind has been complained of times out of number and the reference given, but there is another playful trick to which the Editor resorts of which a fair illustration is to be found in the Colonist of yesterday. On the editorial page under the stereotyped heading, "The Spirit of the Press," is an editorial on the subject of Premier McBride's mission to London. It is reprinted verbatim and accredited to the "Golden Star," as a matter of fact this editorial appeared in The Week of May 25, and after travelling through the columns of nearly every paper in the Province, properly accredited to The Week, it finally turns up on the editorial page of the Colonist as if copied from the Golden "Star." As a matter of fact the Golden "Star," by an oversight neglected to print the magic words The Week at the end of the article, this may be the defence of the editor of the Colonist for falling into such a trap, if so to his well known proclivity for piracy, must now be added an exhibition of laxity fortunately rare among men who aspire to editorial control.
