ANKING RAFT.

For the past two weeks practically the whole of our editorial comment has been devoted to emasizing the evils of the present system of nking in Victoria; evils which have been ng recognized and have recently given se to angry murmurs of discontent, not ly here but throughout the whole of itish Columbia. Among the large numr of letters we have received on this subct there is one appeal which is common all—a request that The Week will conue the good work and, as many of r correspondents put it, keep on hamering away until beneficial alterations in e present system are effected. Most wilgly would we do this, but the field to covered by this—the only provincial reew—is so great that it is impossible for to continue, in fairness to our outlying bscribers, after this week, to devote the me space to this one subject.

A Constructive Policy.

We could easily fill the whole paper with amples, shewing the stagnating influence the commercial life of British Columa of the present bank monopoly, but we ould be repeating what is a self-evident ct to every business man of average inligence. Our object is not merely to unciate a destructive policy, but to oute a constructive one. We have not the ghtest desire to check the honest proess of Eastern banks, but we do desire build up a financial centre in the far est because we hold the opinion that it not healthy for any business community permit its currency—which is its life od—to be monopolised and controlled men who are neither resident nor inested beyond collecting and using it for en purposes.

We think that the time has come when opportunity should be seized and the BANK OF VICTORIA founded.

Must Take Risks.

We have been told that Victoria lacks necessary energy and pluck to take the nge; we say that such a remark is a l on the merchants and business men the Capital city. Individually they e never hesitated to take risks, to orise, and to develop; probably the only icism which could be made on this comnity is that it has not yet fully learnt tremendous power of unity, and that s by united action that the world's atest works have been accomplished. at are these risks which are vaguely ted at, but seldom expressed in the conte? Surely all great movements are nded by more or less risk. The Britempire as it stands today is the result aking risks. What added India to the pire? A small body of men who dared ake a great risk and hazard their lives their fortunes in the enterprise. The nding of a bank in Victoria does not for any such heroic measures. What ed Canada to the British Empire? Anr small body of men who took a risk. at was it that lost the United States he British Empire? Simply, the reance of King George III and his min's to take the risk of allotting a cermeasure of self government to the teen colonies. Had they taken that there is very little doubt but that the le of the continent of America would been colored on our Empire map to-

Favourably Situated.

Now, let us see how Victoria is situated for the founding of a Western bank, for this purpose it would be wise to take a glance at a few of the leading financial cities of the world; we will take the four greatest—London, Paris, New York and Berlin. The question of age need scarcely be taken into account as New York and Berlin—in a financial sense—are mere children in age compared with London and Paris and yet they have forged their way to the front. The banking industry has become the main channel through which accumulated wealth is distributed in its earning capacity; hence, surplus wealth for loaning purposes is necessary and an advantage which these four cities possess in a greater measure than any others. Every bank manager and director in Canada knows that Victoria possesses a similar advantage as a banking centre.

What Other Cities Have Done.

Out of the four cities taken as our example, three are capital cities; whilst this is not a necessity, it is undeniably an advantage—an advantage we may point out which Victoria also possesses. Two of the four cities mentioned are sea-ports; this point can be strengthened from the well known fact that large sea-ports all over the world have always been prolific in the foundation and building up of banks. Liverpool, Boston, Montreal, San Francisco, Melbourne, Sydney, and many other examples could be cited; the reason for this is well understood by all financial experts. Victoria is a sea-port and bids fair, at some day in the near future, to be a large sea-port. We venture to predict that long before the end of this century, the harbour of Esquimalt, the Royal Roads, and the adjacent sea frontage will teem with shipping engaged in the huge Oriental trade which is bound to come!

What has banking done for the four cities mentioned, and for every other city which has become a financial centre?

We say that by the magnetism and power of finance it has attracted industries, enterprise and wealth, to those centres as well as developing native resources.

Victoria's Advantage.

During the course of this week a well known bank manager made the remark that Victoria had every advantage necessary for the foundation of a Western bank; the only difficulty would be the necessity for Eastern avenues through which SURPLUS DEPOSITS MIGHT BE LOANED, as he doubted if a sufficient outlet could be found locally. We scarcely pause to point out that the remark emphasizes the fact of Victoria's abundant wealth, A MOST IMPORTANT POINT in the foundation of a bank. But we go on to take up the implied challenge and say that the moment a Victoria bank has surplus money, the same moment there will be a thousand and one applicants for it from the East and Middle West; but there is a far more useful outlet for this surplus.

Develop the Island.

From Alberni, from Quatsino and from Nanaimo, come abundant evidence of an awakening; this is due in part to the magic wand of the C. P. R. and in part to local enterprise. There can be no doubt that in the very near future growing centres of business activity will lie right at Victoria's door. Surely these are the natural outlets to which any surplus will find its way; FOR EVERY SUCCESSFUL BUSINESS CENTRE DEVELOPED ON VANCOUVER ISLAND MUST GIVE ADDITIONAL IMPORTANCE TO. VICTORIA. Moreover the main purpose of the founding of THE BANK OF VICTORIA is to enable us as a community, to become masters of our own currency, to use our own wealth for our own development instead of—as at present—exporting it to distant parts of the Continent.

Develop Victoria.

In addition to curing the evil from which we are now suffering, we have pointed out how the financial industry of banking is a tremendous advantage to any city; we wish to emphasize this fact. The founding of the head office of any well managed bank draws in its train dependent industries. It also materially assists the existing local industries outside of ordinary banking matters; for instance, the whole of its printing and stationery would naturally be ordered locally; the whole of the head office staff would naturally live in Victoria; and, better still, Victoria bred youths would obtain an avenue through which they might rise to the head of the banking community in their own city instead of—if they are ambitious—having to migrate to a distant part of the country.

How It Would Work.

THE BANK OF VICTORIA would start with great advantages over existing institutions. As soon as it is safely and solidly launched the city's account would naturally be handed over to her own institution, and this should be followed by the Provincial Government's account. If there be any who would say: "But suppose the City of Victoria or the Provincial Government at any time requires a large sum of money, how would a local bank be able to handle the matter?" The reply is: "Exactly in the same manner as it is done at present."

The money required could be obtained by our local bank just as readily, as easily, and on the same terms, as banks obtain it now.

A Hold-Up.

We could hardly be worse off than we were four years ago when the Bank of Commerce held up the Province, through the Government, and threatened to stop supplies unless an obnoxious Assessment Act was swallowed "holus bolus."

Not Fault of Local Agents.

In offering this criticism on Banking in Victoria we wish it to be understood that we do not lay any blame at the door of the local managers. They are all gentlemen, and do as well for the community as their insatiable masters will permit. They and their staffs are underpaid and are allowed no discretionary power. They are not endowed with the responsibility of management; they are simply delegates who mechanically chronicle the decrees of Eastern directors.

Fault in the System.

The fault lies in the system; now is Victoria's growing time and therefore her opportunity to inaugurate a new regime. Her favour, which means her money, is being courted; let her answer be, "Yes, I have money, but I want it spent for the development of local resources and the establishment of native industries, and that can only be ensured by the foundation of a local Bank." Under the exportation of currency system Victoria has been a veritable 'Sleepy Hollow" for forty years; henceforth let it reverse the policy and thrive.

Political Criticism.

The erstwhile political bed-fellows who respectively edit the Colonist and the Times, have fallen out in more senses than one, and on both sides of the fence vituperation is now the order of the day. The latest dispute is waged around the somewhat interesting but rather recondite question as to the net result of the Liberal regime. The editor of the Colonist, relieved from the obligation of his Liberal vows. declares that he can see no result beyond the acquisition by Victoria of a Senator in Mr. Riley and a Minister in Mr. Templeman. The editor of the Times on the other hand, thinks that the only fitting thing for British Columbia to do in view of its overwhelming obligation to the Dominion Government. is to sing the doxology. As usual both extremeists are wrong, there are usual both extremists are wrong, there are other things which may be tabulated among the net results of the Liberal regime and one is the endowment of the only "Conservative" Journal of Western Canada with a Liberal editor, of which circumstance the Victoria Times should be the last to complain.

The Foot Of the Throne.

The result of Premier McBride's visit to England, even if nothing remains to be added, would fully justify the course he decided to adopt. He may or may not succeed in securing better terms for British Columbia than those offered at the Ottawa conference. That remains to be seen, but he has furnished an object lesson not only to the Dominion of Canada but to the British Empire of the freedom of our institutions and the accessibility of the highest authority to every suppliant. Hereafter no ... distant colony, however insignificant, need hesitate to follow in the steps of Premier McBride, and petition the Throne in person for those rights to which it considers it is entitled. It did not need the visit of Mr. McBride to London to establish this fact, although the Liberal press of British Columbia was a unit in denouncing and in declaring that he neither could nor would reach the Throne, but the incident has emphasized in an impressive manner the privilege which every country enjoys under the British flag. Political critics who have all along declared that Mr. McBride was merely running a bluff, and seeking to make political capital, may not have the fairness to admit it, but they must now see that he is a Premier of a different calibre to the one they depicted, that he has already scored two notable successes in the fight, the wringing of an admission from Sir Wilfred Laurier that British Columbia was entitled to special treatment, and the securing of the ear of Lord Elgin and the Colonial Office, and an opportunity to present the case in person. The constitutional method adopted by Premier McBride is bound to bear fruit; it may not secure just what is sought, but that it will be barren of results cannot for a moment be believed. If our Premier scores a final success, he will have rendered a notable service not only to his native Province but to the cause of constitutional appeal throughout the Empire.

The Chehalis Verdict.

The final result of the Chehalis trial made known this week, while it may be disappointing to the plaintiffs and contrary to public opinion is nevertheless strictly in line with the evidence. The moral is that a sharper lookout must be kept by small craft.

At The Street Corner

By THE LOUNGER

In my time I have commented upon many nuisances, but for the most part have dealt with abstract or inanimate objects. This week I wish to say a few words on the subject of human nuisances. Of course there are various kinds, including duns, brass bands and book agents. The class that I have in my mind, however, is of a more subtle kind, and has no idea that any person can possibly hold the opinion that he is not the most entertaining individual on the face of the globe.

First of all there is the window-starer. This extraordinary human proposes a walk down the street and insists on stopping at every shop window to look at the articles there displayed. In a woman this is excusable, as it is part of her prerogative, and could be no more easily abolished than her inalienable right to have the last word. It is one of the weaknesses of the sex and has probably been indulged in since the time when the pre-historic maiden stopped her brawny lover to discuss the comparative advantages of an ichthyosaurean skirt or that made out of megalosaurus.

In a man, however, such a habit is most condemnable. There are two reasons for this discrimination between the sexes. It is a well known axiom that a woman can never make up her mind whereas determination is the recognized character of the man. If I happen to require any article, I know what I want and I know the class of store in which it is sold; I, therefore, repair without delay to the emporium in question and inquire if they have what I want in stock. There is no need for me to gaze in the window to disturb my already made-up mind. Secondly, this habit of window-gazing is calculated to induce the unweary passer-by to waste his substance on things of which he has no need. The class of people who indulge in this idle folly are a source of nuisance to their companions, owing to their perpetually nudging them in the ribs to "Come and see this." Time is wasted, regret is felt that the want of cash prevents its purchase, or else, and this is more often the case, credit is obtained, debt ensues and the last end of the window-gazer is worse than the first.

A similar nuisance is the companion who will take you for a country walk when nuts, blackberries or other wild edibles are in season, and will insist on diving into the hedges or wayside shrubs in order to pick and eat. For me such a course of conduct destroys all the pleasure of the ramble, and I invariably return home sulky and irritable.

There is, however, an even worse pest than either of the above-mentioned, in the shape of the amateur botanist. Imbued with laudable craving to learn the truth about Nature's beauties, he has not the consideration to pursue his investigations alone, where he would be able to take his time, and pursue his erratic course without annoying his friends; he usually suggests the walk, and then enlightens you as to his dread pursuit. Argument is useless; in all probability you are enlisted in the enterprise, and probably return home laden with rank weeds and noxious grasses, a source of ridicule and contempt to all whom you may meet. You have been dragged up almost inaccessible peaks; you have descended into what appears to have been the pit itself. You have walked three times as far as you wanted, and then you have been made a beast of burden.

It is such little things as these which make life intolerable to those who are devoid of such transient and minor interests. There is an element of deceit underlying the whole system. If you want to walk down the street, do so; if you want to walk down the street to look into the shop-windows, do so, but warn your companion first. If there is a hollow craving in the interior of your anatomy for blackberries or nuts, get up an expedition to go and pick them, but do not enlist an incautious friend whose tastes lie rather in the direction of philosophy or the stage. The amateur botanist, geologist and any other "ist" should never set out on his tour of exploration without first explaining his intention in no mistakable language.

There was a magnificent parade of automobiles in Victoria on Sunday last on the occasion of the visit paid to the Capital by a large party of Mystic Shriners. Every public car for hire was pressed into service, and there were also two or more private cars, while the number of tally-hoes and hacks which were interspersed with their horseless rivals was extraordinarily large. Fortunately the weather was magnificent up to five o'clock and the drive round Oak Bay and back down the Dallas Road must have been perfect. The sight of the masses of clouds grouped on the Olympic range, so far from having a detrimental effect on the view, seemed if anything to lend new grandeur to the scene. It seemed impossible to believe that so many automobiles could have been imported into Victoria within so short a time as two years, for I believe that it was just so long ago that the first made its appearance.

It is a pity that some means cannot be devised by which the scavengers might obviate the dust which they cause when loading the refuse of the streets onto their carts. Obviously this refuse must be dispsoed of, but when the dust cart comes round in dry weather it is almost impossible for residents to keep open their windows or doors without having the house filled with a most unhealthy deposit of dust. I do not think that a very scientific expedient need be resorted to. On the analogy of sprinkling water on a wooden floor before weilding the broom, I would suggest that the city invest in a number of large watering pots, with which its employees could gently moisten the heeps swept to the roadside before shovelling them into their carts. I feel confident that there are many who will agree in this.

Next week I hope to regale you with an account of the numerous comic incidents which are inseparable from a public holiday. I would do so this week if it were possible, but as I have to submit my copy on this occasion before Thursday, it is manifestly impossible, unless I exceed the bounds of truth and tell of things before they happen. This I cannot do, for though you may not believe it, the other name for George Washington was

How Champagne Is Made

Chapter 3.

Shortly after the wine is bottled a fermentation takes place, and, the grapes being grown on chalky soil, the fermentation is sufficient to produce the effervescence in champagne, thereby forming a sediment which later on must be removed. After the wine has become ripe for consumption, G. H. Mumm & Co. have this done by placing the bottles in racks and shaking each bottle several times a day, turning it a little and gradually standing it on its head so that all sediment formed in the bottle rests on the cork. This operation requires from four to six weeks and is performed by skilled workmen called "Remueurs."

After the sediment has settled on the cork, the full bottles, head down, are carried on electric runways in Mumm's cellars to the degorguer, who, holding the bottle by the neck at a slight elevation, removes with pincers the cork, which is ejected with great force by the natural effervescence of the wine, carrying the sediment with it. The dosage is then added, the proportions of which depend entirely on the taste of the market for which the wine is being prepared. The bottles are then recorked and wired and are ready to be capped and labelled for export.

Conclusion.

The dosage is the last process in the preparation of French Champagne and depends upon the market for which the wine is intended. France, Germany and in fact most of the Continent preferring not as dry champagne as Great Britain and the United States, which demand wines of extraordinary dryness. The fact that Americans are always willing to pay for the best is one reason why the house of G. H. Mumm & Co. exports its choicest products to this country. Some brands produce heavy wines by the addition of alcohol, but G. H. Mumm & Co. have always aimed to furnish a pure champagne and of the very best quality, the Extra Dry being of its type unexcelled, while the Selected Brut is pronounced by connoisseurs the finest brut champagne imported into the United States, all cuvees being made of vintage wines.

The wearing of uniform gives a man a sense of responsibility and self-respect that his own clothes do not invest him with—in the case of drivers, at any rate—and general experience has proven that the garbing of the men in uniform has been productive of much better work than would have been forthcoming had they been allowed to disport in their own garments.—Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News.

Canadian Optimism.

Perhaps there are men alive today who will see Canada the wealthiest and the most populous section of the Empire. with Colonial Conferences meeting in our Federal capital wherever that may be. It is our turn to indulge an optimistic mood.—Victoria Times, B. C.

Unrest in India.

Day after day under the present short-sighted government we in India are drifting into a condition which cannot but be viewed with alarm by those who have witnessed the past and can only look to the future with anxiety.—Correspondent of The Pioneer, Allahabad.

Ethics for Lawyers.

In a righteous cause the lawyer must fight valiantly; in an unrighteous cause, never. This does not mean that the righteous lawyer is the one always to be found on the right side. There are enough doubtful cases, requiring the skilled activity of the advocate to keep him engaged without selling his talents to defend the clearly unrighteous.—Independent, New York.

Discipline of Gambling.

There is no severer moral or mental discipline than that provided by gambling. The tortures which the prosperous suffer as they see their pile of gold diminishing the delirious excitement which the poor feel as they see theirs increasing, are all part and parcel of that development of character which is really the end and aim of all existence. Nothing is harder than to be a good loser.—Ladies' Field.

Speed Mania.

Just as there are some persons upon hom even one lgass of wine exercises an exciting and stimulating effect, so there are human beings upon whom speeds at all high produce a craving for rapid motion. The best drivers, both amateur and professional, that I have known in an experience extending over ten years have either never given way to speed mania or have cured themselves of it.—Car.

Earth's nothing but a nine-hole course at best;
The ball by king and peasant is addressed;
We have to start by teeing off, and each
Or soon, or late, holes out, and is at rest.

The Ballad of the Angel.

"Who is it knocking in the night,
That fain would enter in?"
"The ghost of lost delight am I,
The sin you would not sin,
Who comes to look in your two eyes
And see what might have been."

"Oh, long ago and long ago
I cast you forth," he said,
"For that your eyes were all too blue
Your laughing mouth too red,
And my torn soul was tangled in
The tresses of your head."

"Now mind you with what bitter words
You cast me forth from you?"
"I bade you back to that fair hell
From whence your breath you drew,
And with great blows I broke my heart
Lest it might follow, too.

"Yea, from the grasp of your white hands
I freed my hands that day.
And have I not climbed near to God
As these his henchmen may?"
"Ah, man, ah, man! 'twas my two hands
That led you all the way."

"I hid my eyes from your two eyes
That they might see aright."
"Yet think you 'twas a star that led
Your feet from height to height?
It was the flame of my two eyes
That drew you through the night."

With trembling hands he threw the door,
Then fell upon his knee.
"Ah, armed vision cloaked in light,
Why do you honour me?"
"The Angel of your strength am I
Who was your sin," quoth she.

"For that you slew me long ago
My hands have raised you high;
For that you closed my eyes—my eyes
Are lights to lead you by,
And 'tis my touch shall swing the gates
Of heaven when you die!"
—Theodosia Garrison.

Music and Stage.

The musical treat afforded Victorians last Tuesday evening proved an immense success. The Institute Hall was well filled when at 8.30 Signor Claudio and his orchestra, The Margherita Mandolin Club, appeared. The orchestra was assisted by well known amateurs in town, whose talents won a well-merited recognition. The club has done well during the past year, and testifies to the ungrudging attention of both players and conductor. All their pieces were played with expression and in perfect accord, one with another, and also with the conductor. This is as it should be, but, alas, so many amateur orchestras are composed of players who are quite content if their instrument can be heard above any other. The Margherita Mandolin Club can congratulate itself on this point, that all the players seemed to be playing as a whole, and not as a unit. Mrs. Harry Young was the accompanist throughout the evening, and never has she appeared to better advantage. The accompanist is too often left out in musical critiques, which is grossly unfair, as a bad accompanist will spoil the best singer. Mrs. Young is both sympathetic and accurate. Miss Brooker as a violinist was excellent, as was Mr. B. Foote as a celloist. Mr. Arthur Gore sung "The Bandillero" with good effect and Mr. Henry Griffith pleased all with his rendering of "Voices of the Woods" as set to Rubenstein's melody in F. Miss Jennie Bishop also scored a success with her song. To show that the concert was a success it is only necessary to say that every one of the individual turns was encored, and that all the ladies received bouquets. Needless to say Signor Claudio himself was enthusiastically received when he gave his violin solo and was compelled to return again.

Miss Barrymore's Summer Tour.

Ethel Barrymore is now playing at the Empire Theatre, the most successful engagement she has ever known in New York. Her engagement there closes on May 18th and she immediately goes on tour for a summer season, which will extend well into August. Miss Barrymore has been having a busy time of it. Last October she went on tour in J. M. Barrie's play, Alice-Sit-by the Fire. Later she appeared in Captain Jinks which she also used for her opening play at the Empire. Following this she has appeared in "The Silver Box," "Her Excellency the Governor," and "Cousin Kate." Miss Barrymore will be seen in "Captain Jinks" on tour and will visit this city. Clyde Fitch never wrote a more delightful comedy or conceived a sweeter love story than that told in this play. The scenes are laid in the old New York in the days of hoop skirts and crinoline. It is a striking picture of the days of the young gallants. Miss Barrymore plays the part of Mlle. Trentoni, an opera singer returning to her own land—America—for her first appearance. It is her best creation and the one that established her as a Star.

New Grand.

The New Grand this week has certainly been putting up a good show as befits the time when Victoria is expecting a large concourse of visitors. W. North's cornet solo was admirably rendered and well received. The Illustrated Song was up to the average. Cora Simpson as a male impersonator was excellent both in her pathic and humorous selections. The house was convulsed with the seriocomicalities of Courtright & Co. Finnigan is a lucky man to have such a friend as Tom Gillen, who is rapidly making him as much of a popular character as the historic "Mrs. Kelly." The turn presented by the Lutz Brothers is indeed a sensational marvel. The wonderful performance of Clarence Lutz, the armless wonder, who uses his toes and feet with infinite more agility than does the ordinary person their fingers and hands, entranced the audience who sat spellbound while witnessing his extraordinary marksmanship. The utmost credit to the intrepidity of his brother who displayed every confidence in the Armless One's accuracy of aim. The moving pictures were among the most amusing that have yet visited Victoria.

Correspondence.

Approval From Vancouver.

Vancouver, B.C., May 13, 1907.

Dear Sir,—I have been much interested and instructed by your articles on Banking Graft. Allow me to congratulate you on your courage and the fearlessness with which you have attacked the Trust which has control of the whole money power of the people of Canada, and which is almost, if not altogether, responsible for the backward position of British Columbia, compared with the Pacific States to the south of us.

We in Vancouver, sir, can sympathize with Victoria people in the extraordinary and unjustifiable position in which they have been placed by the transfer of what you so aptly term "The Life Blood of Commerce" from its legitimate arteries; but we have found a remedy, or, to speak rightly, the remedy has asserted itself. Some weeks ago, when financial institutions began to put on the screws here, there was a rush for money by people who had payments to meet on their real estate investments. Money became so scarce after a few days that, in several instances, men of substance and responsibility were compelled to discount the amounts coming to them on agreements of sale at rates that ran as high as thirty per cent. per annum. Almost immediately, depositors began to withdraw their money from the savings banks and go in for the discounting of agreements, and for the good mortgages which were offering as high as eight per cent. The banks soon became aware that their action in closing down on legitimate investors was proving a boomerang, and today eight per cent. money is going begging by the thousands.

There is another remedy, sir. There are in British Columbia several institutions, controlled and managed by well-known local business men, which offer depositors a fair rate of interest on their money, instead of the paltry three per cent. which the savings banks allow. These institutions can offer as good security in proportion to their deposits as the banks. They invest all their money in British Columbia, and persons dealing with them do not have to suffer the humiliation of impertinent questions and advice from the upstart clerks who constitute the bulk of the "puppets" mentioned in your article of the 11th inst. When a man deposits his money in a local institution, he not only gets an increased rate of interest, but he knows who is handling his money, and that it is working in his home town, not in Mexico or South America, or on the Stock Market in New York, upholding American enterprises.

Yours sincerely,
AUNTY GRAFT.

Straightforward Legislators.

A legislator in either Houses of Parliament who flatters the people is a sycophant; a legislator who deceives the people is a liar; and Parliament would be a far nobler assembly than it is if every man, either peer or commoner, who belonged to either branch of the Legislature, never failed to speak his mind boldly and freely to the people.—Quarterly Review.

A Trot Round Victoria By a New Comer.

I have in my lifetime more than once been lost in a city or town of picturesque North or South Wales and, upon seeking advice of location from a native Cambriau, found that he knew nothing except "Dim Sassenach," or whatever is his gutteral translation of "Don't know English." Upon the offer of sixpence, however, Mr. Taffy can always rise to the occasion and intelligently direct one to take the street to the right, perhaps called Llanbawdanfwarr-y-nylly-phwr for two blocks, and then another street to the left which sounds like Pwyll-yel-zstnyth, and then keep going down the steep incline to Morgannystyddllan-dudno or some such nice, easy appelation for a belated Englishman to pronounce.

* * *

I remember once, some summers ago, taking a short walk up a street of a small Welsh town while I waited for the next train. Standing at a corner of the road was a fair specimen of the nervous pink and white young English curate, in tourist attire. As he appeared to be somewhat familiar with the place I ventured to ask him the derivation of its name, Machynclytth. He was a very fair young man with hair the color of unwashed flannel and he blushed painfully and appeared to be greatly distressed that, in his bashfulness, he could not give me the English of it. Later on in the day I was introduced to a bluff old Welsh farmer whose mock modesty did not prevent him from saying: "It do pe called Machynclytth, pecause it do mean pig-in-milk."

* * *

Were the streets of our own beautiful Victoria as hard to pronounce as those of romantic "Welsh Wales" I imagine that the patience of our esteemed friends, the Tourists Association, would be taxed to their uttermost. The stranger within our gates should certainly be considered much more than he is in the matter of street names.

* * *

This last week I have done considerable trotting around and I find our Victoria street names frequently conspicuous by their absence. In many cases where the street names are there they are unreadable, battered-looking as though they had been through some celebrated seige. There is not always a native interpreter upon the spot and the unfortunate stranger hast to walk along until he meets someone, or summon up courage to ring somebody's door bell for proper direction. I am now, of course, referring to the residential streets.

* * *

A lady told me the other day that she walked rapidly after another lady to enquire the name of the street she was on, only to find the other woman puzzling herself with the same query. She then retraced her footsteps to meet another, rather an elderly lady, who also proved to be a stranger to Victoria. This lady was equally puzzled. Finally, these three distressed females from a sister province paused to ask advice from an old and extremely stiff-backed gentleman whose chesty air, fortunately for them, betokened him to be a walking encyclopedia of information regarding localities.

* * *

A newspaper woman from Toronto was energetically searching last week for the number of a house on Pandora avenue. The number she sought for bore a duplicate and she was naturally much puzzled. This must be trying to both residents of the two houses numbered the same, for each is continually receiving callers, letters and literature for her neighbor. Of course if the number were 23 one could say "skidoo' and end it, but it isn't.

N. L.

Be True.

A gulf so deep, so dark, so wide
Between us yawns, when side by side;
Yet heart to heart, as hand to hand
Together should we only stand;
And when we meet I may not lay
My hand in yours and softly say
"Be true!"

Yon silv'ry star, high in the sky
Seems nearer far to you than I,
And yet in every passing breeze,
In every murmur of the trees
Your voice I hear, "Hope on, sweetheart,
There's Heaven above, God will not part,
"Be true!"

Notes on Provincial News

An Excellent Appointment.

The announcement made by the Nelson Daily News that Mr. R. R. Hedley is to have charge of the collection of mining statistics and the preparation of reports, dealing with the subject of mining and smelting in all the Western Provinces, will be welcomed with delight. It would have been impossible to find a more competent or a more trustworthy gentleman for the position. Mr. Hedley is not only a trained Mining Engineer and an experienced smelter man, but he has done what none of his predecessors could do, in rescuing the Hall Mines Smelter from a condition of bankruptcy, and made it into a successful and economical proposition. Other people sometimes claim a share of the credit for Mr. Hedley's achievement, but all Western men know that he alone deserves it.

It is to be hoped that the new Minister of Mines will be able to retain the services of Mr. Hedley permanently in connection with a Department which requires the most reliable and honourable men to render efficient.

A Square Deal.

It is not often that a Corporation voluntarily relinquishes a pecuniary advantage. Under the stress of circumstances individuals have occasionally done so, but not so Companies. The C. P. R. has behaved handsomely to the Coal Mining Companies in the Crow's Nest Pass and Eastern Alberta. These Companies, as has been pointed out by The Week, have been mining coal at a very small profit, and the recent 10 per cent advance in miners' wages hit them rather hard, in spite of the fact that the C. P. R. had contracts with most of the mines, they have voluntarily increased their contract price 10c a ton to meet the advancing wages. As they are customers for about 70 per cent of the total output it will be seen how important this concession is, and what a substantial contribution it makes to the solution of the fuel difficulties.

Labour Shortage.

Lest Victoria and Vancouver should think that the Coast alone is hampered by shortage of labour it may be well to repeat a statement recently made to the press by as competent authority as Mr. J. L. Retallack, the well known mining man of Kaslo. He declares that labour shortage exists along Kootenay lake points and the Slocan to an alarming extent at the present time. and that at the moment there was work waiting for 100 miners and muckers and 20 carpenters, none offering. During the winter time. Mr. Retallack said, there was generally a supply of good local men, but during the summer months these men were engaged in looking after their own interests, doing assessment work, fruit farming or prospecting and there was none to take their places.

To the Point.

The Slocan Mining Review, commenting on the settlement of the coal strike. makes the following pertinent remark: "While we were all pleased to learn of the termination of the coal strike, we cannot help feeling that a few more strikes will have the effect of forcing the Government to assume control of the coal mines. That is a desideratum we in common with the Socialists dream of, but it certainly will not be attained so long as the Crow's Nest Company have the dead immortal cinch on the public, and are subsidizing a certain newspaper not a hundred miles from Nelson.

Another Guessing Contest.

The Liberal press of the Province is once more busily engaged in a cheap guessing contest, the puzzle is to fill the portfolio of the Attorney-General, and considering the difficulty which a premier usually experiences in making satisfactory appointments to his ministry, it is not a little surprising to witness the unanimity and ease with which the Liberal organs nominate Mr. Bowser for the position. It is probable that the guess is as near to comparative accuracy as the performance of the same organs last year in predicting the date of the Provincial elections.

Disingenuous.

When The Week announced the receipt of a despatch from Toronto predicting the early resignation of General Manager Lindsay the News wasted a dollar in telegraphing to Toronto for confirmation, and of course for the coveted denial. Six months ago when The Week announced that shortly there would be a fresh issue of stock by the C. N. P. Co., the Daily News and another Provincial paper obtained an official denial. On Sunday last the Victoria Colonist announced that Mr. Lindsay had authorized the press to state that there would at once be an issue of $500,000 worth of new stock by his Company. Let the Editor of the News possess his soul in patience. In less than six months, and probably in less than three, the prediction of The Week will be verified, our authority is the same well informed person who gave us the first information about the issue in stock, and also told us that it would synchronize with the exhaustion of the funds which had been raised by selling stock at a premium. Since the new stock is to be issued at $250 for $100, it is quite evident that the system has paid well enough to be continued. It is also equally obvious that the Nelson News is not in the confidence of its financial backers.

Easily Explained.

The Nelson Daily News has always championed the cause of the West Kootenay Power and Light Co., against the City of Nelson. It did so when the city was engaged in a legal fight to protect its rights, thereby greatly weakening the hands of those who were straining every nerve to prevent a giant monopoly from appropriating its power site. Now that the West Kootenay Co. has absorbed the Cascade Co., on terms which would never have been secured if the Daily News could have prevented it, and now that the litigation with the city is settled that paper is reading the citizens of Nelson a lesson on the beatitudes and particularly the one which declares that it is blessed to manifest the spirit of meekness, and when you are smitten on one cheek to turn the other. It argues that Nelson ought to be very much obliged to the West Kootenay Co. for condescending to transact business in the district, and it urges a reversal of the policy pursued by the civic authorities of the city in vigorously defending their rights. As far as The Week knows Nelson has never engaged in an offensive campaign against the corporation in question; it has unfortunately been compelled to wage a very costly defensive war, in which it received no assistance from the Daily News, and the virtuous platitudes of that organ will only tend to deepen the impression that at no stage would it have been a safe ally.

The Industrious Beaver.

The opportunities for observing the beavers at work are not as numerous now as in pioneer days; it is therefore interesting to note that so near to an industrial centre as the new coal city of Hosmer. interesting specimens of their work have recently come to life. The Fernie Free Press says: "Cree and Moffatt have in their window some unique curios in the form of stumps off which the trees have been cut by beaver at Hosmer. The cut of the beaver will compare favourably with the axe work of many a man who considers himself a chopper. From the nature of their cut it is evident that the sagacious animals had considered the direction in which they wished to drop their trees and gnawed accordingly. The exhibit is attracting considerable attention."

We Stand Corrected.

The Kelowna Courier has seen the point of the observations made in The Week with respect to its diminished size, and now wishes to explain that its proposal is simply to cut out boiler plate, and give nothing but original matter. The Week did not understand this before or would not have hesitated to say that one page of local original stuff is worth twenty of imported boiler plate. In abolishing the latter the Courier is following an example set by the Colonist as soon as the present management came into control, a course which is to be commended. There is not the shadow of a doubt that subscribers generally have no use for American inserts. When they want American or Eastern material they buy it at first hand. The Courier will be well advised to act on the result of the vote already to hand. It will save money. time and patience.

Severance.

These many days my soul has breathed
New airs and subtle joys:
I've walked in dreams, as one set free
From life's old jar and noise.

The burden of the long, dread years
Your magic hands did raise.
The stifled cry my heart gave forth
Grew glad before your gaze.

I looked and I am parched to taste
The redness of your mouth.
The golden glint athwart your hair
Reflects the ardent south.

But Spring—the promised happy time,
You say will never bloom * * *
The orchards blighted stand, and stark,
The world is black with gloom.

Alone, then, I my sober path
Must travel sad afar,
Remembering once my soul did hold
Sweet converse with a star!

Sanity.

By BOHEMIAN.

Sanity.

I should be sorry for my readers to think that there is any connection between the title of my sketch this week, and lunatic asylums, or "dementia Americana." My resolve to write on the subject of sanity is traceable to a totally different origin. The word sane is frequently used to denote a man of sound judgment. I imagine the word has crept into this usage because it is fuller and more expressive than any other. It implies a correct judgment and also correctness infused with humanness. A judgment which springs not only from intellectual grasp of a subject or an incident, in relation to all its bearings, but from the sympathetic assent of a well-balanced mind and a generous heart.

The term is applied to literary critics, and differentiates the man of cold intellectual accuracy from the one who, in addition, is equipped with breadth of view, and a charitable outlook on human nature and the foibles of the race. A good illustration of this point is furnished if one compares Robertson Nicoll with Andrew Lang, or George Chesterton with Thomas Seccombe.

Of all the living critics and appreciators of literature Robertson Nicoll is the sanest, he has his failings and possibly is a shade too dogmatic; he also exhibits at times a trace of that self-complacency which is never entirely absent from the Scotchman, but his judgments are broad, generous, and inspired, as well as being keenly intellectual and analytical.

On the other hand Andrew Lang, with a higher reputation, based largely upon his exquisite contributions to literature, is a far less reliable guide, because his views are narrow, his prejudices ingrained, and he is constitutionally unable to put himself in the other man's place.

A comparison between George Chesterton and Thomas Seccombe would proceed upon somewhat similar lines. Seccombe is brilliant and at times will produce a literary criticism worthy of William Haslitt, but his judgment is far from being as sound as Chesterton's. I would vouch for it that if an unknown author submitted a document of merit to these four men, and they had to pronounce upon it without any clue to the authorship or any determining factor other than the character of the document, the chances of acceptance by Nicoll would be far greater than in the case of either of the other critics, and the least likely to approve of it would be the one who is really the most brilliant of the quartette, Andrew Lang.

This is where the term sanity applies to literary criticism, and explains why for twenty years I have invariably followed the lead of Robertson Nicoll and never once been misled. When I think of the writers whom he has discovered, and whose contributions he published in the pages of the British Weekly, after they had been rejected by famous publishing houses and readers, I feel that my confidence is more than ever justified. It is sufficient to mention that the first work of J. M. Barrie, Ian McLaren, S. R. Crockett, and J. Nevison first appeared in the British Weekly to substantiate my case.

But when I started out I had no intention of saying so much about literary criticism, but rather to direct attention to the use of the term sanity as applied to the judgments of men with respect to their fellows, and here the term is not so definitely understood. As a rule if one speaks of a man as sane, the antithesis occurs to the mind, and we find ourselves balancing his mental equipments as against that of the insane man. Perhaps for example he is endeavoring to sustain a difficult and trying relationship, a relationship which is permitted only because it is recognized that he is an exceptional man, with an exceptional character. Part of this may be due to natural endowments, and indeed must be, but a large part may also be due to wide experience in human affairs; for any man who brings an invariably sane judgment to bear upon the incidents or life must have fathomed the depths of human experience, must have known what it is for the iron to enter his soul, and above all must have outlived that period of dreary pessimism, which attacks every man of character however virile, when he first reads the handwriting on the wall and realizes the truth of the great teacher's dictum, that "all is vanity and vexation of spirit."

In the first shock of this conviction most men stagger, it means the dispelling of a bright dream, the shattering of an idol or the revealing of "feet of clay." This is a small matter to a weak man, or to one who does not take life seriously, it simply means a superficial bruise but no deep wound. He will quickly recover and either become cynical or sceptical, and in any event thereafter eternally selfish. He feels that having once been victimized it is his due, it is his right, to be avenged, and in the pettiness of his spirit he puts a dab of putty and varnish over the scar and sallies forth a confirmed egotist.

But all men are not so constituted. After the first shock of dis-illusionment, they recover their poise. It may be slowly, but character will assert itself, the sane judgment comes to their rescue, and helps them to take the unselfish view. They are fair enough to realize that the world was not made for them alone. Then they begin to learn the greatest lesson of life, the one which it is the hardest to learn, and which can only be mastered by soul struggle through sleepless nights. It is a lesson of self denial, which may even involve renunciation. What so hard in the heyday of life, with all the faculties eager and keen, as to forego the things we have counted our own. Nature rebels, the very fountains of the deep are stirred, the dominant characteristic of the race asserts itself, the natural impulse to take, to hold, to defend. It appeals as a right, and sane indeed must be the judgment which asserts to relinquishment; and yet there are times when peace and even safety can only be so attained. Here is the supreme test, and the man who can win out in this kind of a battle, and end by acquiescing in the decree of fate must indeed be sane. He must be sane with the sanity of the Ages, with the accumulated wisdom of the Centuries, and when he has attained this pinnacle, he will be scorned and ridiculed as insane. Hollow mockery of fate!

But who really triumphs? Is it a victory for the man or for fate; does his act of renunciation demonstrate weakness or strength? He finds himself asking "cui bono?" He sits in judgment upon his own conduct, and finds himself asking the question, does anyone benefit? Is the sacrifice appreciated does it attain its object, or has he simply wrecked his own happiness in the vain endeavor to minister to that of others. But sanity comes to his rescue even then, and he sees that he has nothing to do with consequences and that the duty imposed upon him is not hampered by any considerations but those of compulsion; and so having made the sacrifice he may even be deprived of the satisfaction of knowing that it is effective.

Are there any such men? Is the standard too high for poor humanity to reach? I spoke last week of standards which we could never reach, but which have to be aimed at. I suppose this is one of them, but whenever I hear a man complimented on his sanity, and accorded privileges on that account, I stand afar off and worship; he is not a man, he is a god. If he triumphs, he will emerge from the conflict with mortal wounds, and a visage marred more than any man's, but he will have acquired the distinction of having preserved the faith of the world in human sanity, that will be his reward; what more should mortal man ask?

A Victor of Salamis.

William Stearns Davis, the author of "A Victor of Salamis," is undoubtedly the leader among the younger generation of American authors in this class of fiction. Although he is still under thirty, he has no less than six books to his credit. Mr. Davis seems to be the legitimate successor of Gen. Lew Wallace and Sienkiewicz. His stories are equally remarkable for their correctness of historical detail and the genuine spirit of romance that runs through them.

In this new story Mr. Davis has turned to that radiant period in classic history when Athens was queen of Greece and Greece led the civilized world. He seems to have reserved this brilliant stage for the time of his maturer powers; and most successfully has he made use of the dramatic possibilities of that heroic struggle in which Hellas saved herself, and in so doing saved all Europe from Oriental despotism. Recalling this momentous period it is no wonder that "A Victor of Salamis" is a continuous narrative of glorious fighting and splendid episodes of action.

The principal character is a young athlete who wins the wreath of victory at the Isthmian games, and the exciting contest, in which he meets the champions of all Greece, is vivified with remarkable and exciting distinctness. Later, the athlete, through the machinations of enemies, is driven forth from Athens, and the scene shifts to Persia, where the book glows with all the color and warmth of the Orient at the period of Xerxes' greatest power. This power is turned toward the subjugation of Greece, and gives the hero an opportunity to redeem his name by manly feats of courage at the battle of Salamis and elsewhere.

It is plain that a story which includes scenes and events so pregnant and thrilling as these, when handled by a man who long ago proved himself to be a born story-teller, must be one to hold the attention of appreciative novel readers.

By William Stearns Davis, author of "A Friend of Caesar," "Falaise of the Blessed Voice," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.50. (The Macmillan Company).

Literary Note.

The volume of Collected Essays by Frederic Harrison, which has just been issued by The Macmillan Company, is a book which shows the religious tendencies of the time no less plainly than the Rev. R. J. Campbell's much-talked-of work, "The New Theology." As is well known, Mr. Harrison has been for many years one of the leading English Positivists and members of the so-called "Church of Humanity." But he was brought up in an orthodox High Church family, and he has himself said: "I have passed through all the typical phases of religious thought, from effusive Ritualism to Broad Church, to Latitudinarianism, Unitarianism, Theism, and finally to the Faith in Humanity in which I rest." In this book he has gathered together his most important essays on religious and philosophical subjects, prefixing them with an "Apologia pro Fide Mea," in which he tells the connected story of his religious evolution. This new and hitherto unprinted essay is perhaps Mr. Harrison's most important contribution to religious literature, beside being a human document of absorbing interest.

May 11 JAMES McLENNAN

Short Story

There's Many a Slip.

A Human Interest Sketch.

(By Mary Langton)

My old friend the wharf rat is still to the fore, so I am going to tell you his latest yarn.

"True for your, Miss, when you say 'There's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip.' that "They are good things, too, sometimes, those slips.

"Old Abe, yonder, says he wishes they'd come oftener his way, pay day night. It's often this way: I'm a thinking, Miss, there's lots of folks what's just going to drink what the preachers call a 'cup full of the pleasures of life,' when suddenly something pops out; there's a slip, and they find out afterwards as they're all the more happy for that slip. All this here reminds me of something I'd like to tell you about, what happened a short time ago. One cold March night when I was a hustling around as usual with the baggage, and occasionally putting on a extra spurt to keep warm, I seed a smooth-looking dude with a long overcoat and grey kid gloves a-walking up and down the wharf. He was one of them regular town swells, with nothing to do and lots of dough to do it with.

"Now, there's plenty of swells, me and Abe comes up against, regular decent sort of guys, and we always like as not takes a shine to 'em. But we didn't much like the cut of this here one's jib; he seemed too sleek and perlite looking with a sort of a springy and cat-like walk. Soon a Hab comes along, and out gets a middle-aged man and his purty wife. A fine man, Miss, the boss of one of the largest firms in town, and I heerd it said the smartest, most honest and busiest man in the place. But his eyes, Miss, had a kind of tired look, and his heavy beard made his face seem old. His wife was young, one of them purty creatures, Miss, what seems to sparkle all over like, when she smiles, and that was most about all the time with her then. When that smooth-faced dude sees them, off goes his topper, and he bows and scrapes and 'Ahs' till he gets right up to 'em. The man sees after the luggage, and the lady smiles up at the dude as she says: 'I do hate going away alone, even tho' its only to Seattle.'

"I was a-piling up a truck, and I couldn't help seeing the dude take her hand, and heerd him say: 'The next time I won't let you go alone, dear.' The lady kind of blushed and looked a bit sideways at him. Then, Miss, I heerd a sort of quick drawn breath, like, and there on the other side of the truck was the man, with his tired eyes all a-blazing, and just peering hard at them two over the tops of the trunks I'd piled up.

"Well, the boat pulled out, Miss, with the lady on board, a-smiling the same as ever at them two a-standing on the wharf. The smooth-faced dude with his hat in one hand, and the other a-waving his kid gloves. The other man stood quiet like, a keeping his eyes fixed on his wife, till she was out of sight, and when the dude said 'Good Night' he didn't move, but just kept a-gazing after the boat. When we started to fix up for the night I sees him go and speak to the watchman, then get into his cab and drive away.

"It was about this time a new hand came to take the night shift with Abe and me, as the work was getting kind of heavy and we needed a hep. He was a clean shaved cove, and he didn't know much about the work, as he'd been working in an office, but he wanted to learn and guessed he like the out-door life all right. He was quite tall and young compared with Abe and me, and we called him 'White Kid,' cos' he was so clean. He always wore a soft black slouch hat and he didn't talk much, but worked hard, and we all kind of cottoned to him. He used to get a bit nervous-like when a boat was coming in or going out, and I thought he hadn't quite onto his job yet. But Abe says to me 'That fellow's done something and 's trying to dodge the cops. Guess he'll vamoose one of these nights.' Then, one day, soon after this, I sees that pretty woman a-coming down the gangway, and there was that smooth dude to meet her. I heers her say 'The wire reads 'Going away on business, better come home at once to look after your mother and the servants.'

"The dude smiles with his teeth, and in a kind of sneering way, says: 'Oh, on business!'

"The days and nights went by quickly in the same old way, the White Kid was sticking close to his job, not mixing with the boys much, and we never sees him anywhere when off watch. Old Abe was getting mighty curious: 'Bet he's in a deal with the customs—anyway there's something foxy going on.' But I says 'Na, he ain't the kind to play foxy with nothing; he's on the dead every time, I can tell it by his face.'

"Yes, Miss, by his face. It was a kind of a sad face, too, wid a yearning kind of look as if he wanted something so bad but was just a-biding his time in hopes of getting it.

"Sometimes when it wasn't our watch, he'd slip away in the dark, and we wouldn't see him again till his next shift. One night, Abe says to me: 'Come on pal, let's follow him,' and I've cussed myself ever since for a-doing it. No, Miss, it was no place for the likes of Abe and me, a-hiding there like sneaks, behind the rocks, a-watching him walk up and down the shore under the stars, with only the waves to talk to and his eyes a-gazing up at those window lights in the swell houses on Nob Hill. And when the glims was all doused he goes back to the bunk house for the rest of the night.

"Well, Miss, to go on with my yarn—about three weeks after this down comes that dude again to the boat.

"This time he was a-hustling round getting a whole car-load of trunks checked, and a-tipping all the hands mighty handsome. The steward tells me he goes on board and fusses about the cabins he's engaged, opens boxes of flowers, puts them in water, and sees that everything is up to the notch. Then, who should come along but that pretty woman. She wasn't the same, though, Miss. The sparkle seemed all gone, and she was nervous like, and her eyes looked sad and strained. She didn't go on the boat, but stood alone, back near the freight shed, a-gazing up at the city, the lights a-noddin' back at her as she seemed a-telling them all a silent good-bye. Then it was, Miss, that for the first time I noticed the White Kid. He was a-standing behind a trunk near where she was, not doing his work, but a-bending down behind the boxes wid his hat off, and his eyes just burning like coals in the light as he peered into her face. She didn't see him, but kept a-looking up at them blinking city lights till two tears dropped on her hands. Then, Miss, the Kid goes forrard, I thought to stop him, but I tell you Miss, that look in his face and his burning eyes keep me back. And there he stood before her, a-holding out his arms and sort of crying like, 'Come dear, come back home again.'

"And the boat slipped out with the dude on board, and a night hand shy."

At The Last.

When I am dead and lie with folded hands
Across my breast.
Suppose a bird's glad song should reach my grave,
And break my rest?

When I am dead and lie with curtained eyes
Too dark to see,
Suppose a moonbeam silvers through the earth,
And rouses me?

When I am dead and this my heart is still,
Suppose above
You pass my grave with liseless, lonely feet,
And wake my love?

CORRESPONDENCE.

Cumberland, May 19th, 1907.

Editor Week:

Sir,—Mr. Sloan paid a flying visit to Cumberland Thursday, leaving on Friday morning. His mission was, I have been informed, to enquire into political management of the News. He, with one of his lieutenants, paid a personal visit as late as half past two o'clock on Friday morning to one of his advisors. Did you notice the announcement in the first issue, May 8th, after he had attacked The Week? Fancy a man who supported the Liberal Government less than three months ago, saying that the News would not be conducted as a Liberal paper. He was born in the cradle of Liberalism—old Ontario. He will simply create what he thinks will sell. Is it supposable that any vender in the land would not rather sell Bibles than playing cards, if he could make more money selling Bibles? It will even be so with Editor Bates. He will create politics for his "health's sake." There is a strong desire in every town for a clean, reliable newspaper, printed with trustworthy news of its town and the general news of the world, and in any intelligent circle you may happen to drop into, the common talk is the untrustworthiness of certain newspapers. Whose fault is it that the people do not have better papers? Whose fault is it that they do not have a better House of Representatives, or a better Senate? Why is so much adulterated food sold? Is it because the poor stuff is cheaper than the good, or because people are ignorant, or because they do not care? It goes without saying that there will always be people ready to sell anthing that others will buy. The newspaper owner, like every other owner of everything, is more or less affected by the common desire to get rich, and to get rich speedily. And the means of attaining this end differ among newspaper proprietors as they do with men in any other business. Some are self-respecting and honest, and some are not. Some are tempted to address themselves to the tastes of the majority. And what is the taste of the majority? A mere miscellany of sensational stories, a desire to satify the newly awakened desire for notoriety on the part of certain of its readers. The newspaper that attempts to present a picture of its town's doings and to be trustworthy, must have an intelligent manager. The public is more and more capable of forming its opinions—politically especially—without editorial suggestions from men who boast of "reserving the right of criticizing any political party" when they really intend to serve the party which pays the highest price.

A Lady's Letter

By BABETTE.

Dear Madge:

Linen, galatea, and zephyr frocks are to be greatly worn—sing hey for the merry, merry laundress and the tub! Some of the colours in dress linens are lovely, and rose-pink is said now to be dyed in so that it does not fade. Grey-striped linens are also provided, and nattier blue has been successfully produced, which is a relief to the minds of its many linen-loving admirers. It is a dainty fashion, and one befitting our scrupulously cleanly British womenkind. Pleasant as it is to look upon fresh, clean washing-material frocks, it is pleasanter to reflect how clean they are.

Our glove bills for the season of grace are going to be very heavy, when fashion decrees that pearl and French grey, mastic and pale tans are the shades to wear, suede the material, and twelve or sixteen-button length the style, then the woman with a strictly limited dress allowance bebins to feel anxious. I don't know why it is, but even in high summer two afternoons' wear kills a pair of delicate-lined gloves; everything one touches leaves a mark, and things must be touched. Some women buy one long pair and half a dozen short pairs to match. They cut the hand parts off the long ones and hem the arm portion, which is pulled down over the short gloves and fastened under a bangle. It is an ingenious plan, and answers quite well. Needless to say only the careful and troubled ones of us do it, so that the gloves do not suffer greatly because of the economy.

As if choosing and buying our clothes was not already sufficiently difficult there is plainly a worse time to come in front of us. That mysterious body of people whose identity and whereabouts no one seems to be able to even guess at and yet whose existence dominates every garment we wear, seem to have given their secret commands that every length of material that is used shall be dyed some different and obscure colour. This mania for new colours is growing to such lengths that it is adding perceptibly to the burden of life. Particularly so is it in the case of the women who are trying to dress in blue, and as most of them are determined to dress in blue just now, they are all more or less cross. No two of these new blues can be found that will have anything to say to each other; they positively shriek if we attempt any blending, and as no two different materials will dye the same shade our difficulties are ten-fold. But what are we to do? No Nattier-blue frock—for instance—is in the least the same colour as any Nattier-blue hat, and yet no woman would be so cruel as to inflict a peacock blue hat with a Nattier blue frock upon the eyesight of her fellow creatures. And as black hats do not "go" in this case, and all other colours are suicidal the woman possessed of a blue frock must obviously go hatless or spend long days of agitated matching. One imagines how lucky men are to be quite exempt from this kind of difficulty. They never have to go careering round searching every shop for a shirt to match their coat, lucky creatures. All men being resolved upon looking as exactly alike as possible, the tailors and hosiers simplify matters by bringing out all the slight variations upon their few wants quite simultaneously, so that no man need walk a mile to get exactly what every other man possesses. The only exception to this I ever met was a man who proudly owned to orange-coloured pyjamas with large black lozenges. Whether these were the result of long search or accident I never heard. At any rate men should be daily thankful for their escape as no one but herself knows the agonies endured by a woman with an "eye for colour."

After a long period of degrading opulence an awakening has set in in the artistic perceptions of the people who make it their business to see to the floral decoration of dinner tables and ballrooms. The unhappy millionaire finds that several hundred dollars' worth of orchids on one table no longer bring him either admiration or envy, while the woman who understands how to arrange three roses in a vase is raved over by her friends. The reaction is a healthy one, both for mind and purse, and long may love of simplicity be with us. The enormous palm as a necessary furnishing of a room or hall is now fortunately as out of date as the "orb" or draped pot it once stood in, and in place of them we have the most graceful of natural little tree ferns and shrubs in rough earthenware pots of uncommon designs. A delicious variant upon these can be had just now by plucking long stems and branches of hawthorn and other bushes while they are still only in bud; the soft brown stems and tender green buds look exquisite wedged in large bowls. One hears it called sacrilege to pick unopened buds, but I fail to see why we should not enjoy the beauties of foliage in all its stages.

The cult of excessive slimness has reached us in its most violent form. The new short-waisted frocks make it almost a necessity, and figures are being compressed and diets curtailed to a great extent. Diet of a most rigid kind is self-imposed by the majority of women, and Lent may come and Lent may go, but it could not possibly inflict any further penance in the way of food. As this kind of living invariably results in the face being the first to suffer and to look haggard, continual massage with fattening creams and skin foods is necessary, and the life of a woman determined upon an elegant figure is not one to be envied just now. Besides the encasing garments from shoulder almost to knee of whalebone, etc., great attention has to be given to the choice of petticoats. A favourite method to obtain an extremely straight line is to wear thin silk combinations and then a long princess petticoat of soft silk perfectly plain and heavily hemmed, the hem filled with a roll of small shot, the skirt will then fall over this in undisturbed and clinging folds. Shall we soon be damping our clothes to make them cling, like the mediaeval ladies? I am quite convinced that all the doctorings of makers of rational and hygienic underwear would go for naught if the damping process was found to give good results. And then one imagines that we should see those interesting "vapours" and "swoons" and "hectic flushes" in which ladies of the past indulged.

The Passing of Chameleon Jones.

Oh, listen to the touching tale of gallant Captain Jones.
Captain, did I say? Lieutenant, by the way;
He also blew the bugle (Oh, the sweet pathetic tones!)
Bugle, did I say? 'Twas the band he had to play.
Bugle, drum and fife and all, he'd got 'em well in hand:
He played in perfect unison because, you understand,
The band was all composed of Jones, and Jones was all the band,
And that is how we managed at Esquimalt.

Chorus:
Corporal and Private, drilling of himself—
"Quick march, right wheel, halt!"
Jones was not allowed to rust or stand upon the shelf—
Poo-Bah Jones of Es—qui—malt.

Oh, listen to the touching tale of gallant Major Jones.
Major, did I say? And General half the day.
On Sundays he was Chaplain (Oh, his piteous sighs and groans!)
Chaplain, did I say? Yes, he'd hardly time to pray.
He had to change his uniform 'bout fifty times a week,
And if he disobeyed himself or gave himself some check
He formed the whole Courtmartial; was the prisoner and the beak—
Economy is practiced at Esquimalt.

Chorus:
Cooking for the Reg'ment, Sergeant on Parade * * *
"Left turn, mark time, halt!"
Just the blooming battery, battalion and brigade,
Poo-Bah Jones of Es—qui—malt.

Tit For Tat.

The fiction of the friend who is going to occupy the seat in the railway train that one has really secured as an extra seat for oneself sometimes works and sometimes doesn't. A passenger hurrying along the platform just before the train started flung himself upon a seat that was already occupied with a Gladstone bag.

"That seat is taken," said a morose old gentleman; "my friend has kept it with his bag."

"All right," said the wily passenger affably, "I'll occupy it till he comes."

Of course the friend never came, and just as the train was moving out of the station the wily passenger seized the bag and threw it out of the window.

"What are you doing, sir?" shouted the old gentleman furiously.

"Anything the matter?" inquired the other. "You don't want your friend to lose his bag, do you?"

Face to Face.

"Oh! Pat," said the priest in an Irish village to an erring member of his flock one day, "and what do you think will be your feelings at the Day of Judgment when you meet Mrs. Maloney and the pig you stole from her face to face?" "Does your reverence think the pig will be there?" "Ay, indeed, will he; and what will ye say then?" "Shure, your reverence, I shall just say, 'Mrs. Maloney, dear, here's the pig that I borrowed of ye; and mighty glad I am to have the opportunity of restoring him to you.'"

Perfectly Obvious.

When you come to think of it, we are always making remarks which are perfectly "obvious." A young wife said to her husband, "I can't make you out, George. Sometimes you appear really manly, and sometimes you really are quite effeminate. How do you account for it?" "Oh," said George, "that's obvious. It's hereditary. One half of my ancestors were male and the other half female." Now come to think of it, that was obvious enough.

Make It a Tanner.

The free and open life of the tramp is not without its drawbacks. Be he ever so pathetic in his appeal he sometimes meets with his match in his hard world. A gentleman of the road approached a lady who was standing on her doorstep in a likely-looking suburban residence, and meekly inquired—"Please, mum, could you give a poor feller threepence for a meal?" "Certainly," was the ready response, "certainly, my man. Bring it in," and he went away sorrowful at human denseness. Another member of the same profession addressed the lady who was passing heedless by. "Could you spare a poor man a shilling, lady?" he said. The lady addressed stopped and looked at him. "A shilling?" she replied; "I don't think so. Besides, you are only blind in one eye." "Well, then, lady," he headed, "make it a tanner."

Gratified.

"Give me," he cried, "one solitary book
Which for really human folk to look—
Or human folk whose veins perchance are full
Of blood that's warm and red and not the dull
Automata, the wooden marionettes
Who find galore in modern novelettes!"
Thereon, to gratify his pleasant whim,
We passed the Dictionary on to him.
—Life.

Fame!

An Ohio author, now in Chicago, recently had a visit from a friend who still lives in the town where the two were boys together. He gives this account of one memory of that call: "Jesbit," said he, with the pleasant-faced kind of a look on his face, 'you remember that little old house on Main street where you were born?' When he said that, it brought up a vision of that house as clear as the reality. I saw the queer little windows, the nice friendly door, the yard, the lilacs—everything, 'Yes, Bill,' I said with emotion. 'I remember very well. 'Well,' he said, 'the folks have gone and put a tablet on that old house.' At first I couldn't speak. I felt all I could do to keep the tears from coming. The folks hadn't lost track of me, then! They knew what had been doing. A tablet was, I admitted to myself, somewhat behind my desserts, but—but there it was. When I could speak I said: 'And what does the tablet say, Bill, old man?' Bill looked away out of the window. 'Main Street,' said he, softly.'—Argonaut.

Our new Curate seems to be an artist."
"Oh, do you think so? I quite thought from his intoning that he was a tenor."—Punch.

Sporting Comment

The North Ward, South Park and the other schools of the city will have to develope some very fast runners if they expect to overcome the lead secured by the Centrals in the jumping events. In the jumping contests the Centrals made three times as many points as their opponents and have secured such a lead that it is almost impossible for the others to overtake them. The other events are being held at Oak Bay this afternoon, and despite the big lead the athletes from the other schools will make a determined effort to win out. If properly handled the sports should make a good start for the annual celebration of Victoria Day.

A surprise party was sprung on the Vancouver lacrosse team last Saturday, when the Maple Leafs of the same city defeated them by an overwhelming score. The fact that the winning team is made up from practically three families, was in a large measure responsible for the victory. The Vancouverites were very confident of their ability to win and consequently did not give as much attention to practice as their opponents and when the time came to play they were not able to stand the pace. The Vancouverites appeared to be standing still when the Maple Leafs got going and in the latter part of the game they were completely outclassed. The New Westminster and Maple Leafs will try conclusions at Oak Bay tomorrow afternoon to decide which club will hold the Kilmarnock cup for this year.

The J. B. A. A. opened the rowing season last Saturday, when some very interesting four-oared races were witnessed. The sport was considerably marred, however, by the long waits. If the Bays are to make a success of their regattas they will have to carry out their programme with more dispatch. It would also be a wise plan if the four-oared crew to represent the club at the annual regatta of the North Pacific association was selected. Four weeks is none to long for the rowers to practice together.

The members of the Victoria Cricket Club have set a very high standard for this season's play and will endeavor to go through the year without a defeat. In adopting this as their goal they set themselves a hard task, but from their showing last season there is no reason whatever why they shoul dnot live up to their reputation. The club has already taken part in one match this season, but unfortunately it was spoiled by the elements. While it cannot be called a win it was not a loss and consequently they can still start with a clean slate.

The lacrosse players of this city have taken the hint thrown out in the last issue of The Week, and the last few days have seen a good number at Oak Bay. If a combined effort on the part of the players is made, there is no reason why Victoria should not have at least an intermediate team, but it is up to the players. Nothing is to be gained by waiting to be coaxed and at present there is hardly a person in Victoria who will do any coaxing, so it is entirely in the hands of those who desire to play for the fun there is in it. Get busy boys and get your team going and you will have all the games you want, only you must show the public that your heart is in the game and play it for all you are worth.

It is very evident that this summer is going to be a dead one as far as baseball is concerned. Although it is now practically the end of May there has been no definite step taken towards forming a team. In a large measure the baseballers are like the lacrosse players, waiting to see how much they can make out of the game, and would rather remain out if they cannot make some money. This is a very poor sporting spirit and one that will have to be overcome before Victoria can claim to have a winning team. The writer can name nine players, who, if they got out and practised, could make a good showing against any team on the Sound or in British Columbia, but they would sooner hang around town, and besides this "there is no money in it."

Now that the track at the Driving Park has been put in fairly good condition it is up to the directors of the B. C. Agricultural Association to see that it is maintained in a proper state of repair. It is not good policy to expend a large sum of money on the track and then allow it to go without attention. The association has already succeeded in drawing a large number of horses to the track and it would be unfortunate if they were prevented from using the track, owing to a want of a little attention.

The fact that races will be held in Victoria during the latter part of the coming month, has already been noticed by horse owners all down the Coast, and today stabled at the Driving Park are some very fine animals. If properly handled, the forthcoming race meet should be the most successful ever held in the city, and it is up to those who are behind the proposal to make good, otherwise one of the strongest drawing cards for the fall fair will be knocked on the head.

The lacrosse match tomorrow at Oak Bay promises to be one of the best games seen in this city for the past few years. It is now about fifteen years since Vancouver and New Westminster played in this city and it is expected that there will be an extraordinary large crowd. It is unfortunate that this attraction takes place practically the same time as the regatta, and the blame for this practically falls on the lacrosse people, as it is an understood thing that the regatta shall take place on the afternoon of May 24th. Another year it is hoped that these matters will be arranged in an amicable manner.

Although driving an automobile around town is more a business than sport, there are some who drive for pleasure and consequently it can be referred to as a sport. In this connection the writer desires to call attention to the number of minor accidents that have occured recently. Last week there were two occasions on which automobiles ran into telephone posts, but luckily no one was hurt. If a driver cannot run his car sure enough to miss a post it is time he quit business and it has been suggested that chaffeurs be made to pass an examination prior to obtaining a license. It is only by these methods that the public are protected and something should be done before some of our visitors are seriously injured.

An Enterprising Firm.

In the 16 h. p. 4-cylinder Argyll car which he has lately imported into Victoria, Mr. R. P. Clark has introduced to the automobilists of the Capital city the latest production in horseless vehicles. Possesisng as it does the finest and most noiseless engines in Europe, the Argyll, which is built by a Glasgow firm, represents the ideal at a reasonable price. Experts in Victoria have expressed their admiration for these same engines, Mr. Clark having submitted them to their careful scrutiny. The car, which is a sample one and is for sale is extremely handsome, painted with green picked out with yellow lines; the fittings are of brass. Mr. Clark, who holds the agency for this make in B. C., is willing to give a free demonstration of its capabilities to any likely purchaser. It is worthy of notice that the Argyll boasts of the largest output in the world. An important detail is that its delivery is guaranteed. Mr. Clark's telephone number is 1382.

Modern British Modesty.

The Briton of very modern times has had instilled into him the quality of diffidence, and to be aggressive has been represented to him as amounting to vice. He is also more than ready to acknowledge the merit of those whom aforetime he used contemptuously to designate as foreigners. This modesty is commendable; but it would be dearly bought at the expense of that sense of greatness which used to belong to the nation.—Country Life.

NEMO

Is the essence of the finest grades of wheat.

It is prepared by special process which eliminates all parts of the grain useless as human food, retaining only that portion of the wheat kernels which contain every element necessary for the human body in due ratio.

Nemo is a malted food; in the malting process all the starch is neutralized; all germ life is destroyed; all the grain is thoroughly sterilized. It is purity. As a food it is perfect; NEMO ALONE is sufficient to sustain robust life and health.
