Eastern

The visit of Prince Fushimi to the Pacific Coast is an event of high importance, and if its importance is on a par with its significance the effects will indeed be far-reaching. He is a Prince of the Royal blood, the credited representative of the Oriental nation which has revolutionized modern warfare, conquered both on land and sea, of the greatest world Powers and at a time bound established itself as a factor to be dealt with in the settlement of all the great international affairs. History furnishes no parallel to the rapidity with which the brown men of the Island of Japan have emerged from obscurity, and reached to a foremost place in the councils of the world. A people who less than twenty years ago were considered of little or no account, a people against whose alliance

England many angry protests were made, have within two years justified the alliance formed of them by one of our greatest and most sagacious statesmen, Lord Salisbury, when he decided that the future of the Orient lay within the grasp of a united England and Japan. It has ever been the custom of the Mother Country to mark the visit of her shores of any princely ally with national displays of hospitality, but when the Shah of Persia paid his historic visit in 1870, no more lavish display and more ceremonious welcome has been accorded to any visitor than to Prince Fushimi. Had he been the heir to a leading European throne, he could not have been received with greater manifestations of cordiality and delight. The illustrations are full of pictorial representations of the entourage and of the various functions which he has attended. All the dailies have commented in friendly and dignified language on the importance of the royal visitor and of the country to which he comes. Further the somewhat unusual course has been adopted by the Government as the mouthpiece of the nation of requesting that special honour should be shown to Prince Fushimi in that part of the British Empire through which he may pass; and the final compliment has been paid him of detailing one of the great modern warships of the British Navy to convey him from Victoria to

Thus does England treat the ambassadors of her allies, and thus does she feel all distinctions when dealing with no one stands beside her in solid combat to maintain peace on the shores of the Pacific. In the maintenance of this Canada is more intimately concerned than any other portion of King Edward's dominions, and it is fitting that the spirit of appreciation and enthusiasm which have greeted the Prince during his stay in the Island, should follow him across the continent and be manifested at every turn in the convoy of British sailors he sends our shores for his Oriental home. It is beneath this great Imperial manifestation, a lesson for every British subject, a lesson which has been well learned, and it is that England regards the Japanese ally as an equal, and that they respect her dominions beyond the seas and consult their own dignity and independence following the example of the land.

The Faithful
Abdiel.

There are not a few people who believe that Johnson would not have been great if there had been no Boswell, at any rate it must be personage with an imposing stage presence. Boswell was a small, apologetic, drooping-eyed, shuffling, apology for a man, who begged to be excused for living and who justified his existence by metaphorically blacking his master's boots. There is an old saying that history repeats itself and strange as it may sound there is more than a little evidence in support of the theory that reincarnation has rendered Victoria famous as the habitat of the counterpart in some respects of Johnson and his faithful excellent reincarnation of his great prototype. In the editor of the Times, Boswell has a legitimate successor who need not be more fully particularized. How admirably he has reproduced for the delectation of an admiring party every gesture, every nod, every smile, almost every breath of his master, is a matter of common knowledge. What that master would have been, what figure he would have cut, how big he would have loomed in the judgment of British Columbians but for the industrious toil of his Boswell, it is impossible to say. Had the Hon. William made a false step, his tracks would have instantly been covered; many and many a red herring has been skilfully drawn across his trail to obliterate footmarks that indicated a deviation from the straight path of political rectitude. Did advancing age cloud his memory as to pre-election pledges, the faithful scribe hastened to chronicle the gigantic ideas which were floating through the mighty brain of the minister, and which when they took shape would transform his beloved Province into a veritable Land of Goshen. Did unsympathetic political opponents formulate an attack upon the administration of the Hon. William, forthwith the columns of the Victoria Times were flooded with malignant slanders and unscrupulous charges against the men who were trying to do for the Province what its ornamental representative at Ottawa had neglected. But all things must have an end, even his immortal genius could not save the great Doctor from the common lot of men, and it begins to look as if neither the greatness of the Hon. William Templeman nor the truculent servility of his Boswell will be able to save him from that political extinction which is the logical outcome of his political misdoings. When the leaders of the Liberal party at Ottawa with the approval, if not at the instigation of the Hon. William Templeman, undertook to dethrone the Conservative Government of this Province on the basis of a campaign of scandal and misrepresentation, for the better success of which they impressed into the service well-known political filibusters, versed in the arts of guerilla warfare, they took the first false step in a losing campaign. It is only a few months since the men with the muck rake were busy, and already if The Week had to reproduce the cartoon which in Provincial politics has become historic, it would have to blot out one conspicuous figure and alas, would have to depict the Hon. William Templeman's Boswell muck-raking alone. In emulation of the example of Abdiel he is still faithful to his task of endeavouring to besmirch the characters of the leaders of the Conservative party by mis-representing and belittling them. The fact that the Victoria Times has been practically repudiated in the matter of its conduct of the "Better Terms" controversy by the leading Liberal organs produces no effect but to incite it to a continued course of distortion and vilification. But saddest of all, the delinquency of its old colleague, the Vancouver World which has come out boldly and honourably in support of Premier McBride's attitude, is ineffectual in convincing the Hon. William Templeman's Boswell of the error of his way. He stands alone, a unique illustration of a man who has learned nothing, because he has seen nothing but the gigantic figure of his master.

A SON OF THE RISING SUN

conceded without question that but for Boswell the world would have known little of his greatness. Johnson was a big, burly

Alberni, the Coming City.

You ask me to tell you of this beautiful valley, and its snow-capped mountain peaks—its old and new towns, its grand canal, its magnificent scenery, of all that nature has done in the way of storing up values, to be worked out by man, its game and fish, its water powers—well, I will try, and first:

How to Get There.

Via Victoria, the C. P. R. run a weekly steamer, leaving midnight of 1st, 7th, 14th and 21st of each month and calling at Port Renfrew, Cape Beale lighthouse, Banfield Telegraph Cable Station, and up through the Alberni Canal for a distance of forty miles, this magnificent natural canal runs between mountains, and a constant change of scenery occurs as you progress. You arrive at New Town at from 6 p. m. to 11, according to wind and tide. Fare, with meals, say $6.00.

Via Nanaimo—The C. P. R. from Victoria, or boat from Vancouver land you at Nanaimo in time to catch the stage leaving at noon on Tuesdays and Fridays, or an auto can be secured there that will cover the 54 miles in a few hours, the stage takes one full day to make the trip, and breaks the journey at Half-way House. The scenery is very interesting and gives a wonderful panoramic view of some of British Columbia's magnificent timber resources. Cameron Lake is an ideal spot, four miles long and a mile wide. The mountain side is now covered with a plethora of shrubs and flowers in blossom. The expense in, is from $4.00 to $5.00.

Just to stretch your legs you climb the mountain on foot, and so relieve the horses.

Stage leaves Alberni Monday and Thursday, early, arriving at Nanaimo at 5 p. m.

Alberni Valley

is about 30 miles long by 10 miles wide, and lies between mountain ranges, with sub-valleys, as it were, radiating from Great Central and Sproat Lakes, two grand sheets of water, the former 27 miles in length. These lakes abut on the Beaver or Alberni Valley, and from them flows the Sumas river, whose waters afford a home for trout and salmon. The power generated by them will in future supply light and power to future generations. These two lakes are almost a primeval forest and give the finest of sport in deer, bear, panther, and further back, to elk. Alberni Valley is blessed with fine roads and the means of communication are good, the greatest difficulty being the expense of clearing the land, hand work and horses being too expensive. To a company who will come in and clear the land with a donkey engine plant, there is an unlimited field for work and usefulness. Farming is at last beginning to pay, now that there is an outside market for produce. The principal crops have been hay and oats. Fruit has done remarkably well, and now that there is a certainty of rail outlet much more will be planted, and the industry taken in hand by those who are prepared to handle it by scientific modern methods. Magnificent peaches, grapes, plums have all done well and some apples, while small fruits find this their home.

Lumber Industry.

The Redcliff Lumber Co.'y, a large Minneapolis concern, has secured from the C. P. R. and others large forest reserves of the finest timber in B. C., and are arranging for a large mill to be built on most modern plans and up-to-date in every particular. This alone will give employment to many hands and lead to other industries. Two smaller mill plants are now in the field, and will also do their part to foster industry.

The Coal Situation.

We all know that large quantities of Vancouver coal go to San Francisco, principally from Union Bay on the east side of the island. This coal is mined at Cumberland and sent by rail to Union wharf, a distance of six or eight miles. The coal carrying fleet have to travel an extra 200 miles to load there, as compared to Alberni. This means expense, time and insurance. The natural output for coal will be via Alberni, just so soon as the C. P. R. build from Cumberland to here. It is reported on good authority that large coal measures exist between here and Cumberland; these, too, will in the future find an outlet via this port.

The Canal and Harbor.

The Alberni Canal is about 40 miles long by an average of one mile wide, with great depth, and has for years been navigated by night as well as day, and presents grand facilities for navigation. Canneries are built on its waters, and some large mining properties on its shores have lately been bonded, and further work will at once be proceeded with.

Some year or so ago four English war vessels were anchored in Alberni Harbor, the admiral expressing himself delighted with the situation and stating that he had seldom seen a place so well suited to the makings of a large and beautiful city as it was, the lay of the land, the hills, the snow-capped mountains, all combining to create almost perfect natural facilities and a beauty spot.

Many years ago the adventurous farmer, trapper and prospector found in Alberni Valley a home and a field to which they naturally turned. Its many natural advantages even in that day appealed to them. Amongst others was a monied man, a Mr. Anderson, who became possessed of some of the finest of the locations. Some three miles by one in depth, on this property, which lies abutting on the canal, he laid out two townsites, one called the Old Town, and later on, one called the New Town. These are a mile and a half apart and inasmuch as all towns grown westward they must in time become one, especially if the C. P. R. station is located where the survey touches salt water—at a point equal distance from each. Some 20 years ago the district was caught in a copper mining craze and adventurous speculators (more enterprising than honest) subdivided farms away out and sold the lots to the unsuspecting public. This has caused much trouble, as the titles to some of them are not clear and part of the land is of little value. It is criminal to offer lots that it is evident an owner can never use to any advantage, and this is being done today, here and now. Lots 33x119 overhanging a ravine or in it, with no road or chance of a road, should not be allowed to be put on the market unless distinctly shown as such on the plan, so that the purchaser knows full well what he is buying.

Alberni's Needs.

Essentially it needs a railway, well that is surely coming. The main necessity and for which there is ample room for work, is an up-to-date development company to clear the land for fruit-growing in five to twenty-acre plots. The soil is right—the climatic conditions are unexcelled. There is ample scope for brick and tile making on a large scale, also for Portland Cement works, as brick, limestone, coal and wood are here in abundance.

So soon as railway development commences, there will be a large demand for further hotel and home accommodation, the present facilities being inadequate.

Fishing and Shooting.

The fishing at Great Central lake is now almost at its best. Trolling!—fine fish of 6 pounds or more are caught. A few days ago one fisherman drew in his troll as he had as many as he wanted to pack. The sport at this end of the lake, at the outlet, is very fine. The same conditions exist at Sproat Lake and on the falls of the Sumas River.

In the fall grouse, pheasant, duck, pigeon, deer are quite plentiful (almost in town), while bear, wolf, elk and panther are to be had at comparatively easy distances. In short, the canal, the chain of lakes and rivers make Alberni a veritable sportsman's paradise.

The Future of Alberni.

In these days of fierce competition, time plays a very important factor, and today a strenuous conflict is on, as to which company or line shall be able to offer the quickest time between the east and the west, Europe and the Orient. A line of fast C. P. R. steamers on the Atlantic and

THE RIGHT GLASSES FOR SUMMER DRINKS.

Of course, you are all interested just now in the matter of cooling off, and the summer drink is a prominent feature.

In summer, particularly, a drink tastes better from a thin glass than a thick one, and is no more liable to break.

We carry a large line of thin blown glassware, plain, etched and engraved—suitable for all beverages.

After the double tracking of the prairie, will, with a transfer from Vancouver to Nanose Bay and a port railway journey to Alberni, enable them to save much time, and about 100 miles of journey, as done present. This shortage of haul and saving of time will be an important factor in enabling them to compete with the Peninsula and Oriental Steamship lines.

The Great Interior Mine.

We have all read of the famous Leadwell Mine of Alaska, an immense body of low grade ore. Well, those who know state that the "Great Interior Mine" will equal it, both in size and quantity of ore. It lies 100 miles past the farther end of the Central Lake, at a great elevation, and is snow-capped. The extracted ore makes it a quarrying proposition from the start and will necessitate an expenditure of an immense amount of money, and the constant employment of an army of men. In addition, with other mining interests in the immediate neighborhood, will draw their supplies from Alberni.

To the mountain climber, the trip to this mine affords a magnificent panoramic view. The sight from the pier of a large portion of Vancouver Island is indeed a grand one, one easily forgotten, while the wealth of mountain flowers and plants alone will repay one for the trip.

The investor prepared to back up with faith by dollars, there lies in Alberni a field for pluck, energy and success.

Those men who will come to live, to work and develop the natural resources of the earth, there is not elsewhere to be found a field to equal it.

Conclusion: "Where keel and rail meet, there shall a city be." Now Alberni grow.

Another most important point is the fact that all ocean-going vessels coming to this port will be able to lie in fresh water when the process of unloading and loading is going on. This is an important factor as the fresh water is death to the barnacles, which drop off the ship. Seattle today is building a canal with locks to enable their ocean vessels to get through into Lake Washington. Here there is no necessity for any such trouble and expense—nature and the Sumas river do the work most effectively. The vast body of silt which forms the mouth of the Sumas river is of such a nature that a dredge can handle it to any depth, and a company like the C. P. R. will not be slow to recognize its benefits and utilize its advantages.

The British Columbia Game Reserve.

At the last session of the Parliament of British Columbia, none of the various game-protection measures before that body were acted upon. The Executive Council of the Government took up the Hornaday-Phillips recommendation for a game and forest reserve between the Elk and Bull Rivers, and referred it to the Provincial Game Warden for examination and report; but before action could be taken, Premier McBride found it necessary to leave suddenly for England, on official business, and a decision was postponed.

Sportsmen who were in a position to judge of the situation have reported that throughout British Columbia the necessity for a game sanctuary in the Kootenay district is now conceded, and the only serious question seems to be regarding the best location. The eastern advocates of "Goat Mountain Park" have been assured that the greater portion of that area is likely to be reserved, and the whole of it may be if investigation establishes all that is claimed for it.

After his trip last September from Phillips' Peak to Monro Lake and back, Mr. Phillips estimated that the proposed Goat Mountain Park now contains 1,000 goats, 200 sheep, 50 bears, many deer, and a few elk. To some persons who have not themselves been in that country, the estimated number of sheep seemed incredible; but in view of the fact that Mr. Phillips has spent six seasons in that region, and has given careful thought to the matter, his estimate of the abundance of game may safely be regarded as absolutely reliable. In view of the fact that 75 square miles, 239 goats, his estimate of 1,000 for the whole 450 square miles does not seem like an impossible number.

Most unfortunately for immediate results regarding "Goat Mountain Park," no sooner had Dr. Hornaday and Mr. Phillips begun their campaign in behalf of their ideal territory than other persons began to come forward with all sorts of proposals for making the preserve "farther north," or "farther east," or "up to the main line of the C. P. R.," or any old place save the country that is most abundantly stocked with wild animals. Some of the ideas pressed forward—for example, that for making the reserve far up against the Alberta boundary, where there is certainly very little game of any kind—were almost absurd. The last recommendation, to make the reserve wholly north of White River, in a country that has been "cleaned out" of game by the Stoney Indians, and is almost barren of sheep, is the worst of all.

Throughout all this discussion of other localities, Messrs. Phillips and Hornaday have resolutely stood by their original proposition, and refused to budge from it one inch. They have said, over and over, "No matter how many other game preserves are made elsewhere, Goat Mountain Park is too fine to be destroyed; and it must and shall be preserved! Make the game preserve any size, any shape, or anywhere that you please, provided the whole of that region is in it!" They have asked the Provincial Game Warden to go through it from end to end, and see its game for himself; and it is hoped that he will be able to do so before the next session of Parliament.

It is the expectation of some Victoria sportsmen who are in a position to know the trend of possibilities, that next winter the Government of British Columbia will appoint a commission to select a location, and define boundaries, for a game reserve somewhere in the region between the Kootenay River and the Alberta boundary.

This idea does not greatly please the champions of Goat Mountain Park. They fear that if that plan is carried into effect, the reservation may possibly be located according to the preponderance of local "influence"; and in that event, the finest game country in the whole of British Columbia may get lost in the shuffle.

At all events, all American sportsmen, and all others who desire the perpetual preservation of the mountain goat, sheep and grizzly bear, will watch with keen interest to see what British Columbia will do next winter about Goat Mountain Park.

In an Arizona court a barber was recently convicted of murdering his wife. Although the evidence was only circumstantial the jury rendered a verdict of guilty, as a result of the eloquence and persuasion of the district attorney. When the judge told the prisoner he had the right to express a last wish and asked him if he had anything to say, the man stood up and, facing the district attorney, said in a clear voice:

"Your honor, I should like just once more to be allowed the privilege of shaving the district attorney."—H. I. R.

A New Breed of Cow.

An old dorky in south Mississippi was suing a railway company for damages, one of their freight trains having killed his cow.

Now a pine woods cow, at an outside valuation, is seldom worth twenty dollars, but he sued for one hundred and at the trial stoutly swore that the animal was worth that sum.

Counsel for defendant cross-examined him somewhat after this fashion: "It was your cow that was killed, Uncle?"

Yes, suh, an' a mighty fine cow she wah, too."

"Worth one hundred dollars, was she?"

"Yas, suh, she wah a mighty fine stock."

"Good stock, eh?"

"Yas, suh, fine stock."

"Well, what was she? What breed?"

"She was a mighty fine breed, sah."

"Now, Uncle, you say she was a fine cow?"

"Yas, suh!"

"Can you tell me whether she was a Dunlop or a Stetson?"

"Well, Boss, I don't just 'xactly' member, but I tink she wah a Dunlop."—M. M. W.

Return the Mine.

Two Englishmen, having resolved to better their fortunes by mining in Mexico, one of them came to the land of "tortillas, frijoles and manana" to prospect, while the other remained in the "tight little island."

Some months later the latter received some samples of ore weighing about a ton and a half and assaying very high in precious metals.

With such a showing, the necessary capital to work the mine was easily secured. The miner in Mexico received the following cablegram: "Stock all subscribed. Start development work on mine at once." His answer was: "Congratulations. Please return the mine."—W. R. J.

In a recent issue of the Navy League Journal the photographs of two prominent men appear, both of whom have seen service at the Esquimalt Station. The first is Rear Admiral Frank Finnis, who is now Rear Admiral in the home fleet, and who when in these waters was captain of the Amphion. The second is Captain Collin Keppel, C. V. O., C.B., D. S. O., who is at present commodore, second class, in command of H. M. Yacht Victoria and Albert. Both of these men have won many distinctions since they were attached to the Esquimalt Station. Both officers were extremely popular in social circles here.

The New Weekly.

The Vancouver "Sunset" has made its bow, and whether or not it fills a want, a stereotyped phrase downowned by its editor, it should if maintained at the standard of its first issue create a market. It is a not discreditable copy of the well known "Toronto Saturday Night," and follows the line of that excellent journal as closely as is possible under existing conditions. All the reading matter is good, some of it excellent, the weakest spot is the editorial, but probably the editor felt hampered by the numerous announcements which he had to make in its first issue. Whilst the Toronto Saturday Night possesses many popular features, its strong point has always been its trenchant, terse, forceful, and independent editorial. If the Saturday Sunset can strengthen this feature, it will become as popular in British Columbia as its model is in Ontario.

Welcome to the Coast.

Among the many visitors attracted to the Coast these days by the splendor which is in progress, is our old friend John Ferguson McRae, one of the Rossland pioneers, a stalwart of the nineties who did much to build up the Copper City in the days when it needed building. He was there during the regime of ex-Governor McIntosh, and indeed earlier, floating in with the mining population in the early days of the LeRoi discoveries. John held his ground until 1901 when things appeared to be on the down grade, and the camp became very quiet. He then went East and successfully accomplished work for which his great natural shrewdness, and tact, eminently fit him, in connection with the lobbying of important measures at Ottawa. In this he was eminently successful, and comes West with large means at his control to develop townsites on the route of the G. T. P. The West wishes him every success and if he retains his accustomed energy, it will not be long before there will be something doing in townsites even if there is nothing doing in the way of Railway building.

The Miracle.

Love came to me; his brow was sear
With knowledge born of pain,
And deep within his eyes, dead years
Gave up their ghosts again.

He bade me follow down a way
All bare and rough and dim,
Gaily and unafraid, I went
To share his load with him.

Now strange what Love and me befell
And yet most wondrous sweet:
At every step, the stony road
Grew smooth beneath our feet;

And, from each barren place we pass
Such fragrant blossoms sprung,
Love's weary brow was cleared again,
Love's eyes once more were young.

The New Grand.

The show this week at the New Grand, Victoria, is good with two exceptions. The man who wrote the illustrated song ought to be crucified over a slow fire, and I should be happy to witness the incident. It is a shame to prostitute Mr. Kearney's really fine voice to singing rubbish as this week. When will the company realise that the Illustrated Song is one of the features of the performance. The Moving Pictures have been up to the mark this week either but considering how successful they have been in the past, one can hardly blame them for having an "off week." The star feature is the troupe of the Toledo Brothers. I have seen the Crag Brothers in London, England, but for contortion I have never seen anything to equal the troupe at present playing in Victoria. They are clever, they are graceful, they are original and they make me want to go and see them again. Mrs. Stockton presented a good sketch which allows Mrs. Stockton to make use of her magnificent voice; in the critic wonders why she chooses to act in vaudeville comedy instead of grand opera. For dancing commend me to John and Bertha Gerson; their work is pretty; their dancing is clever and their turn well served the applause which it met the night of my attendance. Mrs. Clarke, as the Scottish Nightingale scored heavily. Her rendering of old time songs was splendid, and her house was most enthusiastic in reception of "The Highland Lassie." MOMUM

The table in the dining room was very artistic with festoons of smilax on the damask cloth, a large mirror was in the centre, bordered with the smilax, on which was a tall vase of carnations. White satin ribbons entwined with smilax were suspended from the chandelier to the corners of the table. The young ladies serving were the Misses Lipset, sister of the hostess, in white; Hughes, in pale green taffeta; Doherty and Kyle, little Miss Ray Mathers, sister of Mrs. McCagne, in white silk and pink, attended the door.

Sports.

The lacrosse players of the city are to be commended for the action they have taken towards forming a team to represent Victoria. Now that the Victoria West and Central teams have combined there is no reason why a team cannot be secured which will worthily uphold the name of the Capital city of the Province. With New Westminster and Vancouver squabbling among themselves, the local players should have no difficulty in securing dates. They have shown considerable enterprise in arranging a game with Vancouver to be played in the Terminal City on Dominion Day, and if the boys get out and drill regularly there will be something doing in Vancouver and it will not be all Vancouver. The club is also to be congratulated on postponing their match against Bellingham which was to be played in this city on Saturday.

Another slur is being cast on Canadian athletes by some people of the East in sending a lacrosse team to Australia under the title of the All Canadian team which has no more right to the name than a bunch of kids playing in a back lot. The exhibitions which have been given by this team of All Stars is nothing more or less than a disgrace to every lacrosse player in Canada and until these irresponsible people are taught the aspect of true sport, lacrosse or any other game, will soon lose its prestige in Canada. In selecting the team Mr. Miller has chosen a number of his personal friends and has given no thought to the best team whatever. The greater number of the players come from Orillia, which, by the way, is Mr. Miller's home, which gives the impression that Mr. Miller is giving that town a boost in preference to Canada. The personnel of the team is comprised of players who have in the majority of cases never figured on any of the first class teams and at present they are more fit for an Old Man's Home than playing lacrosse. It is too bad that the Victorian intermediates could not arrange a game for if they had it is practically certain that the All-Stars would have been beaten.

If the J. B. A. A. devoted as much attention to track athletes as is done to rowing that institution would have as good a reputation in that branch of sport as it bears in aquatics and the fame of the club from a rowing standpoint is such that any club would well feel proud. It is unconceivable why so little attention is given to field sports when such opportunities for holding meets are presented in this city. Victoria should not only hold the premier place among the Coast clubs in aquatics, but the clubs of the city should also make a bid to develop some of the young athletes who have recently been brought before the attention of the public. Although Victoria will not be represented in the annual meet of the Coast athletes, which will be held in Seattle today, it is very gratifying to learn that several of the more enthusiastic devotees of field events are undergoing a course of training at Oak Bay preparatory to taking part in the races at Vancouver on Dominion Day. The boys who intend to visit Vancouver are in the care of Prof. Foster, and under his careful tuition there is every reason to expect them to make a good showing.

The Tacoma cricketers met their Waterloo last Saturday when the Oak Bay players administered a decisive beating. Since their formation the local players have shown great interest in the game and other important victories are looked for before the close of the season.

For the first time in several years, a cricket team from the Royal Navy took part in a match at the Jubilee Hospital grounds on Wednesday last. In years gone by it was no unusual occurrence for the Navy to take part in game, but since the withdrawal of the forces from Esquimalt it is very seldom that the local players have had the opportunity of meeting their old time rivals. It is very pleasing to see the friendly relations between the Navy and Civilians teams still existing.

The most interesting sporting event to take place in the near future is the International yacht race which will be sailed at Seattle on July 4th. The Americans will be represented by the Spirit, designed and built by a promising young Seattleite and the Americans are banking on winning the cup. To the Vancouver Yacht Club has fallen the honor of upholding the honour of Canada and that club has constructed a handsome yacht which has been christened the Alexandra. There is very little difference in the construction of the two yachts and with a good breeze there is no doubt but that it will be an interesting contest. The prize for the race is a very handsome cup, presented by His Honour Lieutenant-Governor Dunsmuir. The cup will be contested for in perpetuity and promises to become as interesting as the famous American cup, which has caused more international events than any other trophy now in existence.

I have had pleasure in handing over to Mr. Meredith a splendid cricket bat from the well-seasoned stock of W. H. Adams, for having made the first century for the Victoria Cricket Club this season. I am authorized by the Manager of The Week to say that he will give a similar bat at the end of the season to the highest average score in the Victoria Cricket Club and another for the same in the Oak Bay Cricket Club. Also a ball to each club for the bowler securing the best average.

The J. B. A. A. is living up to its reputation and has entered a representative in every event in connection with the annual regatta under the auspices of the N. P. A. A. O., which will be held on Lake Washington, Seattle, on July 4th. This is very gratifying and it is hoped that the local oarsmen will maintain the reputation which has been held by the club for the last few years. The Big Four this year is practically a new outfit but this will not hinder them from making a strong bid for the race. Although not as big as the crew of the past years, the four oarsmen who have been selected to represent the club are rowing well together and it will have to be a very fast crew that will beat them. In the other events the club is equally well represented and it will be surprising if some of the prizes are not brought home by the Victoria oarsmen.

The lawn tennis season is now in full swing and the lovers of this popular pastime are anxiously awaiting the date of the tournaments. The courts of the local club on Belcher street are in daily use and some very interesting practice games have been played. The J. B. A. A. courts are also well patronized and it is easily seen that lawn tennis will soon be one of Victoria's popular summer amusements.

The thanks of the lovers of horse racing are due the executive committee of the Agricultural Association for the manner in which they have attended to the track at the Driving Park. The opening of the track proved a grand success and although no records were broken the first day, the sport was very good. One thing, however, remains to be done and that is to arrange quarters for the representatives of the Press where they will be entirely apart from the public. At a race meet the representatives of the press are practically the only people who have work to attend to, and if they are unable to follow the horses it is impossible for them to give a good account of the races. The promoters of the races are dependent on the press for the success of their meeting and it is certainly due the reporters that they be treated with extreme courtesy. In connection with the present meet an effort was made to give the reporters a place where they can witness the events without being interfered with by the public, but it was a very weak attempt. In the first place the position allotted to the press is entirely unsatisfactory. It is not elevated sufficiently to give a clear view of the entire track, and in the second place it is open to the public, and on the opening day the reporters were put in the humiliating position of having to call on a member of the committee to clear the stand in order that they might get a glimpse of the horses. This is not as it should be and a remedy should be found, otherwise it might be impossible to give an account of the events.

Correspondence.

Michel, B.C., June 10, 1907.

Editor The Week.

Dear Sir,—Only during my trips (which are few) down to Michel do I get opportunities to read the Provincial papers which may be at the hotel. I am glad to note the success of The Week and beg to congratulate you on the same. Your efforts, I am glad to see, are in the way of making the crooked places straight, and for the general welfare of our Province. I am no seeker after newspaper notoriety, but it may be of interest to you to have the following notes.

In the Nelson Daily News of recent date I notice the Board of Trade there are stirred up to a little excitement over certain reports in the Winnipeg papers decrying the fruit lands now being boomed. I have been up the Elk valley 12 months and know it fairly well. And in Winnipeg I fancy Kootenay lands, although in the Elk valley above Michel and 2,000 feet above Nelson, may be thought to be in the best fruit growing district, but it is not so.

And the point is here: A speculator has bought land 15 or 16 miles up the valley; this has been surveyed and is now put on the market in Winnipeg as the finest fruit land at $7 per acre.

Adjoining the same land in sight of the corner stakes I had ice one-eighth of an inch on June 1st; the farmers up here cannot grow potatoes and an apple tree planted here four years ago is quite a dwarf, without sign of blossom. I have no further wish than to see things done in the square deal line and if the above facts are of any service you are very welcome to the same.

Yours truly,
SQUARE DEAL.

Prince Fushimi's Visit.

Japanese readiness in the performance of graceful acts was demonstrated on Tuesday, when Prince Fushimi and Admiral Yamamoto both handed over to the managing director of the Clydebank yard gifts of money to be used for behoof of the employees. It is satisfactory to note also that all yesterday's arrangements for the entertainment of the Imperial guest, and his introduction to typical scenes of the city's industries, passed without hitch of any kind. His view of what he saw, and what he heard from the lips of his hosts, cannot fail to promote a better understanding between the two allies, who are brought together by ties of mutual interest of commerce, and of the obligations under which they have come to guarantee the peace of the Far East. BEAUTIFUL PARISIAN MODELS—The Week, by special arrangement with the celebrated photographer, Henri Manuel, of Paris, is enabled to present, weekly, to its readers, the newest creations in fashion, posed specially by famous Parisian models. Unlike the illustrations in fashion magazines, these reproductions are from life. The above evening coat of white broadcloth is from the Maison Weber, Paris. It is trimmed with bands of heavy embroidered applique. The sleeves are of Irish crochet, and the head decoration is of pink roses and a Bird of Paradise plume.

A Lady's Letter

By BABETTE.

Dear Madge:
Unfortunately not every woman would don one of this season's most stylish hats knows exactly how should be worn. With regard to tilt, the thus far and no farther should be decided by each wearer, for besides the size of the face and the figure, the natural carriage of the head has to be largely taken into account. It is a trying fashion to the majority, this broad-brimmed, mushroom-shaped hat, for it is created to worn drooping down towards the side of the neck rather than throwing a becoming shade over the face. With a dainty toilet and all the effective appurtenances for carriage wear these hats are invariably very satisfying and picturesque; but for every-day wear there are strong disadvantages, as an energetic rushing woman and there can soon displace the heavily trimmed chapeau and suggest a caricature.
The average English woman likes a hat square and straight and solid on the centre of the head; her hair dressed one way every morning, that way it remains, no matter if it is a toque, a motor cap, or a big hat that is to be worn upon it.
The excellent qualities that have made so much to build up the fame and fortune of England, and are so typical of the national characteristics which the English should be most proud and are unfortunately at the moment leading the feminine portion of the nation most sadly astray as regards their clothes. Particularly do these qualities refuse to assimilate in the right adjustment of hats. These sterling qualities of straightness and uncompromising directness of pose are excellent as morals, but they do not agree with hats. The hat of the moment (of course I speak of the beautiful exclusive French model and not those turned out by the hundred), is most emphatically not adaptable and requires the utmost care both in choosing and arranging, morals must be flung to the winds if we desire to wear our hats successfully. One of the milliners told me that in spite of her protestations numbers of her customers are insisting on wearing the new hats wrong side before. They are English, and they cling firmly to hair supported by large pads in front, and thereby the new hats, which should sink down upon the head to look well, will not fit at all. These large hats that are so new, and have all the width at the back should have the hair lightly rolled away from the face and brought up loosely at each side.

I am sorry to hear that certain modish ladies are adding to the general slitheriness by discarding tablecloths at dinner, and bidding their guests eat off the slippery polished oak or mahogany. Already we have to guide our uncertain steps across acres of polished parquet floors encumbered with mats and rugs which slide beneath the feet; in some smart houses we have to negotiate staircases which are the pride and joy of their owners, but are as dangerous to ankles as beeswax can make them; and now we are asked to manipulate glasses and china plates on a still more "slithering" ground. It is time that personal comfort came into fashion again, and that the tablecloth and carpet (once the symbols of the higher civilisation) should be reinstated in public esteem. Why, indeed, should a guest be made uncomfortable, and risk breaking his own indispensable leg, or his hostess' priceless glass for the mere vanity of showing off oaken boards or a shiny mahogany table?
The somewhat mystic gentleman in China who was known as Confucius had decidedly retrograde opinions about women's rights. Like most Orientals, he scented a danger in the feminine half of humanity, and was resolved to keep it in its proper place. Its proper place all over the East is the harem or the zenana, and on this point the great religious philosopher would have no trifling. "Man is the Representative of Heaven," he declares, "and is in supreme authority over all things. Woman yields obedience to the institutions of man, and helps him to carry out his principles. On this account she can determine nothing for herself." So far, the great Chinaman is curiously in agreement with many European wisecracks. But he goes on to ordain that "no instructions or orders must issue from the harem. Woman's business is simply the preparation and supplying of wine and food. She may take no step of her own motion, and may come to no conclusion in her own mind." The italics are mine, but surely this interference in the psychology of the brain is going a bit too far, even for an Oriental philosopher. The only result of such a system is that when a Chinese woman does possess high intelligence she uses it, like the present Empress, in an autocratic manner. Let us hope that there are numbers of henpecked Mandarins and proud wearers of the peacock feather who at home go in fear and awe of their lawful wives.

A Chinese woman wrote a book once, for the instruction of her countrywomen in the art of life. The Chinese woman's husband, said this moralist, is to her as heaven; how dare she disobey him? The husband commands, the wife obeys. Yet let there be mutual grace and love. Let them be to each other as guests in politeness.

If her husband does wrong, let her only exhort and persuade him, and not imitate stupid women, who call down calamities on bad husbands. If by the middle of the night he has not returned home, the wife may not sleep but must still wait up for him. If your husband is sweet, be you sweet; if he is sorrowful, be you sorrowful; if he is rich, you are rich; or vice versa. In life you are one, in death let the same grave cover you.

Whatever the modern attitude of men towards women may be, it certainly does not err on the side of courtesy. There used to be an unwritten law in England, I believe, that women-folk must not be caricatured; only the other day "Punch" (usually the quintessence of chivalry) published a picture on the subject of Woman's Suffrage so ungallant as to draw forth protests from eminent writers in the public press. But another English humorist goes even further than "Punch." He not only describes these militant Suffragists as "brawling women", but recommends that magistrates be empowered to sentence them to be clipped. "No woman," he says, "aware that if she made herself a nuisance she would emerge from the police court bald as an egg, would dream of becoming a holliganess." This plan may seem exceedingly humorous to the suggestor, but it does not altogether fit in with ideas of the liberty of the subject as we conceive them in England. Once apply this principle of personal disfigurement as a deterrent to political agitation, and where will the thing end? Perhaps we shall one day hear of this humourist condemned (for brawling in Trafalgar Square about conscription or the income-tax) to remain in durance vile until he has grown a luxuriant pair of whiskers—first being shaved to the satisfaction of the magistrates.

Literary Appraisements.

By BOHEMIAN.

A few weeks ago I wrote at length on the subject of literary judgments, confining my remarks entirely to a consideration of prose authors, and reviewers. I am tempted this week to deal briefly with a subject which, if of less general interest, is certainly of more vital importance viewed in any aspect. I refer to the literary appraisal of poetry.

In the first place it may be clearly stated that poetry was never so popular as at the present time. The test of this statement may not be a very high one, yet I fear it must be regarded as determinate, I refer to the commercial test. This is an age of magazines, the number is added to almost daily. The fashion has been set of punctuating the pauses between prose articles with verses, the demand is far in excess of the supply, consequently the commercial value of verse is greater than ever before.

Not all versifiers are poets, but all adept versifiers are assured of an income which would have looked like a gold mine to the poets of bygone ages. When one thinks of the fifty and hundred-dollar cheques which are received weekly by scores of magazine verse writers, and then recalls the circumstances under which Chatterton and other poets lived and died, one is forced to admit that an age of commercialism is doing what a literary era failed to do in at least furnishing a market for literary wares.

It must be admitted that much of the verse which appears in the magazines and journals of today, is not worth printing. I have sometimes thought of justifying my own conduct in consigning whole reams to the waste paper basket by publishing it verbatim. I should secure an ample vindication and the disappointed contributors would at any rate find that whatever their own opinion of their efforts, the verdict of their dearest friend would sustain that of the critic.

It has been said many times, although never in the columns of The Week, and therefore I wish to say it now, that no editor or reader turns down a manuscript which has merit, and this is especially true of verse. The conspiracy to prevent any author from getting his productions into the press is a figment of the imagination, all that an editor wants is good copy, it is his business to get it; he is forever haunted by the fear that his competitor may get it, and so scoop him. Probably Marie Corelli is the only person left with an unshaken belief in the conspiracy theory and she is—a freak.

Few contributors know how patient and long-suffering an editor is. I do not believe that in this respect the editor of The Week is a greater martyr than the average editor, but I really think he has a more tender spot for the budding author. I have known him spend two hours in remodelling and correcting a rejected manuscript before he returned it to the author. In some cases he not only failed to get a "thank you" for his pains, but was curtly told that it was an impertinence to touch the manuscript. Strictly speaking this is no doubt correct, but it is better to incur the enmity of an aspiring but unsuccessful writer than to allow him to go on his way wearing a halo of complacency. And then there is the further consideration that this trouble is only taken in cases where there is distinct promise. The result has in several notable instances more than justified the course pursued.

I recall the case of one young lady whose first efforts were submitted to The Week, they were crude, but it was the crudeness of inexperience, the spark of real merit was discernible, and after three manuscripts had been mutilated and returned, something much better began to arrive. This was a year ago; today the lady is writing successfully in half a dozen American magazines, and receiving never less than $50 for a short story. She had been trying for three or four years to get her stories accepted, but without success, and was fair enough to attribute her ultimate success to the ruthless blue-pencil of The Week editor.

I could tell a different story, and a story which raises one of the most interesting and difficult problems in literary criticism. Let me illustrate the point. Only this week I was asked to read a poem by one of Canada's leading poets whose work is known throughout the British Empire, and who ranks high as an inspired Son of Song. I was familiar with all his published poems, and had them carefully classified in my mind, but this one struck a new note, a deeper, a more profound, and in my judgment a more sympathetic than any I had detected in his previous work. My personal judgment would place it higher than anything he has written, and that was my verdict. I submitted the manuscript to a friend whom I consider one of the best judges of literature both prose and poetry, with whom I am acquainted, a critic with a natural instinct for literary appraisal, and who unfailingly detects a false note. To my great delight the opinion I had formed, and which I had not intimated, was confirmed. Then I hied to the poet, and told him what I thought of it. He at once said that the judgment afforded him pleasure, because it confirmed his own opinion, and then he added, "I dare say you will be greatly surprised to know that the manuscript was rejected by 'The Spectator'." I was greatly surprised because much of his work has appeared in its columns, and it will forever remain a mystery to me how so competent an appraiser should have failed to discern the high merit of the poem. I am satisfied that the time will come when it will be recognized as a gem; like Kipling's "Recessional" it might easily have found its way to the waste paper basket after being rejected by "The Spectator."

This incident recalls many bearing upon the point of the failure of admittedly high authorities to correctly appraise literary manuscript. But the matter may be carried a step further and it can be said with perfect truth that an author is by no means the best judge of his own work, and is apt to place an inferior production upon a higher plane than something far more meritorious. This was the case with such great poets as Tennyson and Browning. At the same time it may be interesting to note that Swinburne has always manifested an unerring instinct in this direction.

I have only one remark to add; it is that not less striking than the failure to correctly appraise one's own literary work is the inability of the poet to explain fully the meaning of some of his more obscure passages. I know that this branch of the subject opens up a wide field for speculation, and cannot be dealt with in the concluding paragraph of an article, it demands careful and extensive treatment, but this may be said, that it should never be forgotten that the true poet is inspired. In a sense he is the instrument for recording inspired thought, he may record it without grasping its full significance. He may pourtray a phase of experience, or suggest a line of thought which conveys a profounder meaning to another person than to himself, because they may have plumbed depths of human experience to which he is a stranger; and so it comes about that the poet often strikes a note which awakens in the heart of another echoes to which he is a stranger.

LITERARY NOTES.

In "The Loves of Pelleas and Etarre," which is to be published this month, Miss Zona Gale seems actually to have discovered a new field in fiction. The book is a love story through and through, and yet the two principal characters, Pelleas and Etarre, are over seventy, and celebrate their golden wedding before the end of the story. The peculiar charm of the book lies in the fact that these two delightful old people are more ardent lovers even than any of the young lovers who surround them. They are both incorrigible match makers, and the book is largely the story of their efforts to smooth the course of true love for all of their young friends. The book is full of the spirit of inexhaustible youth, and in this respect it has been not inaptly compared to Curtis's "Prue and I."

"Spirit Lake" the first book to bear the name of Authur Heming as author, is a story of the fur hunters of the Canadian Northwest. Mr. Heming, whose work as an illustrator is well known, has spent much of his time in that country for the last fifteen years; and outside of the traders themselves and the Indians, probably no man living knows the country and its people better than he. Many of the important characters are Indians, and Mr. Heming has succeeded in representing the Indian as a human being instead of the stock figure of fiction and melodrama. Incidentally, the book presents a minute and vivid picture of the daily life of the hunters and trappers. An important feature of course is the author's own illustrations, of which there are about forty.

Arthur Heming's story of the Canadian fur hunters, "Spirit Lake," is to be published next week. Mr. Heming is fortunate beyond the lot of most novelists. First, he has a field which is all his own, and is likely to remain so; and secondly, he has eliminated the handicap of a possible unsympathetic illustrator by making his own drawings. As a matter of fact, Mr. Heming was an illustrator even before he became an author, and his striking pictures of the fur traders, Indians, and wild animals of the Canadian Northwest will add much to the attractiveness of his book.

The first important and adequately illustrated book on the picturesque aspects of Canada, is a volume written by Dr. Wilfred Campbell, with illustrations by T. Mower Martin, which has just been published. Dr. Campbell, who has frequently been called the poet laureate of Canada, writes of his native country with knowledge as well as enthusiasm, and the pictures of Mr. Martin, reproduced in colors, make this a beautiful as well as a readable book.

Heavy Handicap.

It is related of a wealthy Philadelphian, now dead, that a young man came to him one day and asked for help to start in business.

"Do you drink?" inquired the millionaire.

"Occasionally."

"Stop it! Stop it for a year and then come and see me."

The young man broke off the habit at once, and at the end of the year again presented himself.

"Do you smoke?" asked the great man.

"Yes, now and then."

"Stop it! Stop it for a year, then come and see me."

The young man went away and cut loose from the habit, and after another twelve months once more faced the philanthropist.

"Do you chew?"

"Yes."

"Stop it! Stop it for a year, then come and see me."

But the young man never called again. When someone asked him why, he replied:

"Didn't I know what he was driving at? He'd have told me that as I had stopped chewing, smoking and drinking, I must have saved enough money to start myself in business."—A. I.

Short Story

The Unbidden Guest.

Judge between me and my guest,

The stranger within my gates, the man whom in his extremity I clothed and fed.

I remember well the time of his coming, for it happened at the end of five days and nights during which the year passed from strength to age; in the interval between the swallow's departure and the redwing's coming; when the tortoise in my garden crept into his winter quarters, and the equinox was on us, with an east wind that parched the blood in the trees, so that their leaves for once knew no gradations of red and yellow, but turned at a stroke to brown, and crinkled like tinfoil.

At five o'clock in the morning of the sixth day I looked out. The wind still whistled across the sky, but now without the obstruction of any cloud. Full in front of my window Sirius shined with a whiteness that pierced the eye. A little to the right, the whole constellation of Orion was suspended clear over a wedge-like cap in the coast, wherein the sea could be guessed rather than seen. And, traveling yet farther, the eye fell on two brilliant lights, the one set high above the other—the one steady and a fiery red, the other yellow and blazing intermittently—the one Aldebaran, the other revolving on the lighthouse top, fifteen miles away.

Half-way up the east, the moon, low in her last quarter and decrepit, limbed with the dawn close at her heels. And at this hour they brought the Stranger, asking if my pleasure were to give him clothing and hospitality.

Nobody knew whence he came—except that it was from the wind and the night—seeing that he spoke in a strange tongue, moaning and making sound like the twittering birds in a chimney. But his journey must have been long and painful; for his legs bent under him, and he could not stand when they lifted him. So, finding it useless to question him for the time, I learned from the servants they had to tell—namely, that they had come upon him, but a few minutes before, lying on his face within my grounds, without staff or scrip, reheaded, spent, and crying feebly for succor in his foreign tongue; and that in pity they had carried him in and brought him to me.

Now for the look of this man, he seemed a century old, being bald, extremely wrinkled, with wide hollows where the teeth should be, and the flesh hanging loose and flaccid on his cheek-bones; and what color he had could have come only from exposure that bitter night. But his eyes, they spoke of his extreme age. They were blue and deep, and filled with the wisdom of years; and when they turned them in my direction they seemed to look through me, beyond and back upon centuries of sorrow and the slow endurance of man, as if his immediate misfortunes were but an inconceivable item in a long list.

They frightened me. Perhaps they conveyed a warning of that which I was to endure at their hands. From compassion, I ordered the servants to take him to my wife, with word that I wished to set food before him, and see that it passed his lips. How much I did for this Stranger, how I learned how he rewarded me.

He has taken my youth from me, the most of my substance, and the love of my wife. From the hour when he tasted food in my house, he sat there without a word of going. Whether from design, because age and his sufferings had really palsied him, he came back busily to life and warmth, nor for many days professed himself able to stand erect. Meanwhile he lived on the best of our hospitality. My wife loved him, and my servants ran at his bidding; for he managed early to make them understand scraps of language, though slow in acquisitions—I believe out of calculation, some one should inquire his business (which was a mystery) or hint at his departure. I myself often visited the room he had appropriated, and would sit for an hour watching those fathomless eyes while I tried to make head or tail of his discourse. When we were alone, my wife and I used to speculate at times on his probable profession. Was he a merchant?—an aged mariner?—tinker, tailor, beggarman, thief? We could never decide, and he never disclosed.

Then the awakening came. I sat one day in the chair beside his, wondering as usual. I had felt heavy of late, with a soreness and languor in my bones, as if a dead weight hung continually on my shoulders, and another rested on my breast. A warmer color in the Stranger's cheek caught my attention; and I bent forward, peering under the pendulous lids. His eyes were livelier and less profound. The melancholy was passing from them as breath fades off a pane of glass. He was growing younger. Starting up I ran across the room to the mirror.

There were two white hairs in my forelock, and at the corner of either eye half a dozen radiating lines. I was an old man.

Turning, I regarded the Stranger. He sat phlegmatic as an Indian idol; and in my fancy I felt the young blood draining from my own heart, and saw it mantling in his cheeks. Minute by minute I watched the slow miracle—the old man beautified. As buds unfold, he put on a lovely youthfulness; and, drop by drop, left me winter.

I hurried from the room, and seeking my wife, laid the case before her. "This is a ghoul," I said, "that we harbor; he is sucking my best blood, and the household is clean bewitched." She laid aside the book in which she read, and laughed at me. Now my wife was well-looking and her eyes were the light of my soul. Consider, then, how I felt as she laughed, taking the Stranger's part against me. When I left her, it was with a new suspicion in my heart. "How shall it be," I thought, "if after stealing my youth, he go on to take the one thing that is better?"

In my room, day by day, I brooded upon this—hating my own alteration, and fearing worse. With the Stranger there was no longer any disguise. The pits in his cheeks were now glowing under a transparent skin. It was Aeson renewed and thankless; and he sat on, devouring my substance. Now having probed my weakness, and being satisfied that I no longer dared to turn him out, he, who had half-imposed his native tongue upon us, constraining the household to a hideous jargon, the bastard growth of two languages, condescended to jerk us back rudely into our own speech once more, mastering it with a readiness that proved his former dissimulation, and using it henceforward as the sole vehicle of his wishes. On his past life he remained silent; but took occasion to confide in me that he proposed embracing a military career, as soon as he should tire of the shelter of my roof.

And I groaned in my chamber; for that which I feared had come to pass. He was making love to my wife. And the eyes with which he looked at her, and the lips with which he coaxed her, had been mine; and I was an old man. Judge now between me and this guest.

One morning I went to my wife; for the burden was past bearing, and I must satisfy myself. I found her tending the plants on her window ledge; and when she turned, I saw that years had not taken from her comeliness one jot. And I was old.

So I taxed her on the matter of this Stranger, saying this and that, and how I had cause to believe he loved her.

"That is beyond doubt," she answered, and smiled.

"By my head, I believe his fancy is returned!" I blurted out.

And her smile grew radiant, as, looking me in the face, she answered, "By my soul, husband, it is."

Then I went from her, down into my garden, where the day grew hot and the flowers were beginning to droop. I started upon them and could find no solution to the problem that worked in my heart. And then justly offended wife, he waved his hand and announced that he had a story to relate.

His manner was so unusual that the rebuke died away unuttered from his wife's lips and she breathlessly awaited what was forthcoming.

"I was walking along by the docks this morning," said he, "and saw a man in imminent danger of drowning. I reached out my hand and dragged him safely out of the river. He was very grateful, and perhaps in celebrating the rescue of a human life from drowning I took too much."

Filled with pride his wife, against her judgment, forgave his appearance and even imprinted a kiss on his brow as she tucked him into bed. Aroused by this now somewhat infrequent salute, the conscience left in John got the better of him, and calling her to him and waving aside her attempts to call him "her hero," etc., after the manner of women, said: "Mary, I forgot to say that the man I dragged out of the water was myself."

He then passed off sweetly into slumberland with a conscience clear, but his wife in a fit of indignation went to spend the rest of the day with the neighbors.—W. D. B.

A Bit of Cheese Humor.

A hungry tramp entered a Chinese restaurant early on a Monday morning, and the following conversation ensued between the tramp and the Chinaman in charge:

"Good morning, Charlie. Can you fix a hungry man for a little something to eat?"

"Good morning. You wantee you breakfast? You velly hungly man, heh?"

"You bet I'm hungry. Had nothing to eat since Saturday and want it bad."

"Too badee. Umph. You likee fish?"

The tramp thought fish a queer article of food for Monday morning but better than nothing, and so replied:

"Fish? Why, yes, I like fish."

"Alee lite; you clum lound Fliday morning!"—L. D. M.

I glanced up, eastward, to the sun that is better! Strip me, spoil me—"

Above the privet-hedge, and saw him coming across the garden. He came with a light step and a smile, and I waited for him, leaning heavily on my stick.

"Give me your watch!" he called out, as he drew near.

"Why should I give you my watch?" I asked, while something worked in my throat.

"Because I wish it; because it is gold; because you are too old, and won't want it much longer."

"Take it," I cried, pulling the watch out and thrusting it into his hand. "Take it—you who have taken all

A soft laugh sounded above, and I turned. My wife was looking down on us from the window, and her eyes were both moist and glad.

"Pardon me," she said, "it is you who are spoiling the child."

John often took more than was good for him, and on one occasion appeared before his wife in a wet, bedraggled condition of one who had slept in the gutter, or been exposed to a miniature Niagara Falls. With a manner impressive and calculated to command attention, even from his

At The Street Corner

By THE LOUNGER

The time has passed since the doctrines were taught and believed that heaven would confer on the sheep the privilege of sitting on the razor-edge back of a rainbow, clothed in a golden harp and an ill-fitting halo, and that the goats would endure endless physical torment a la Gustave Dore's pictures in his illustrations of the Inferno. Most people have their own ideas on what will constitute eternal bliss and eternal misery, but a new light was thrown on the possibilities of the former, by a definition which was propounded to me by a friend a disciple of Izaak Walton. In his opinion heaven would consist of a place where one could lie in bed all morning, fish all the afternoon and play bridge all night. But there was a proviso attached, in which lay the real genius of the suggestion. There were to be other people fishing in the same pool, but they were not to catch fish of equal quality or in anything like the same quantity.

Herein is laid bare a curious streak in the composition of human nature, which goes to show that at the root of all our enjoyments there is a very strong layer of selfishness. This quality has various names, which are intended to veil its real characteristic; it is known as "Healthy rivalry," "laudable ambition" and under a host of other names, but in the end there will be found the germ of selfishness, comfortably wrapped in the swaddling-clothes of unctuous appellations. There are those who even urge that every good and kind act is performed merely through the medium of selfishness; the glow of righteous virtue which pervades the system after giving a starving beggar a chance of getting a meal in return for two hours work; the knowledge that the Recording Angel has carefully entered the same in the white book; the readily believed opinion that so-an-so would have been too stingy to give a bowl of water to a parched dog, all make the small sacrifice, if sacrifice there be, a veritable pleasure instead of an act of real charity.

No doubt there will be many who disagree with me. To such I would say that they should take thought for a whole week and for themselves, as to whether the majority of their acts and thoughts are not the direct outcome of self's promptings. Is a man a traveller? Let him lose his baggage, and see whether his grief is not assuaged by the knowledge that his travelling companion is also in the same plight; if the latter's loss be the greater, in such proportion is the chagrin of the first man relieved. Is a man a painter? The fact that his best friend has likewise failed to have his picture hung will make his own disappointment the easier to bear. Is he a speculator? It will not hurt his feelings to know that Smith also got let in over the same mining stock. The question is whether it will be the same in heaven; if so, there can be no doubt but that heaven and hell will be the same place, and the sheep will catch all the fish to the intense mortification of the goats.

However, this disquisition is becoming too serious; I am not supposed to write anything serious, that is left for the other members of the staff; besides it's too hot. It is a perfect day for a lounge, but unfortunately there is nothing exciting to be seen on the streets. except that there are a lot of people who look disgustingly busy. There is far too much rush just at present to make money; take warning by an article which appeared in "Collier's" of June 8th, in which a startling picture was drawn of the final result of this insane desire to accumulate millions. On the whole I think that it must be more nuisance to have millions than to have nothing. The ideal life is that of the tramp, quite unnecessarily referred to in uncomplimentary terms as a "hobo." The world is too much inclined to look upon the tramp as an undesirable person; on the other hand he is a real student of Nature, seeing that he is alone with her all the time. Of cares he knows nothing; his health is robust; he is in no danger from either moth or rust, nor can thieves break through and steal. The world is his home, and the fulness thereof his patrimony. I can conceive no more delightful life, and so much am I enamoured of it that I am seriously thinking of going on a ten-year tramp through North America and sending weekly columns to fill my space. For a sure living I could lecture on the beauties of Victoria, thereby earning a regular subsidy from the Tourist Association, not to speak of the hall receipts. Baggage would be unnecessary, as the correct thing to do under the circumstances is to start out in a paper suit, or a bathing costume, such an undertaking having been carefully advertised, and at the end of the period the traveller is received either at The White House, or Government House, Ottawa; his photograph is sent to all the leading magazines, and the rest of his life is spent in happy idleness, giving one interview a week to cub reporters.

It is advisable, however, to introduce a little variety into a trans-continental lounge of this description. The Aeneas game of wheeling members of the family in a barrow is both fatiguing and exploded; there must be something unique in each performance of this kind. A raiment of snakes, sloughs, threaded together with hog's bristles would be stylish and effective, but far and away the most original and captivating appendage I ever came across was a pet herring, kept by a friend of mine in England.

My friend, whose name we will say was W. Alton, has made a life-long study of fish, and had determined to see whether it was possible to train a salt water fish to live in fresh water. For the purposes of experiment he sent to Yarmouth for a herring, which came on a special truck carefully packed in the grimy. On arrival the fish was placed in a large glass bowl filled with a mixture of fresh water and Tidman's Sea Salt. Every day Alton would take out a sherry glass full of this water and replace it with a similar glass full of distilled water. In course of time the mixture was practically fresh and the experiment was a success. The herring lived, and found bread crumbs a useful substitute for its original food. Then with a bold daring Alton determined to go one step further and each day he took out a liqueur glass full of water until finally the herring, whom he christened "Jacko" lived in the fresh air. So tame did it become that it would wriggle up onto its tail when Alton came into the room in the morning, and wag its fins. The fame of it spread, as it used to walk out with its master, who had a gold chain and collar made for it. At last the Management of Le Jardin de Plantes in Paris heard of it and offered to pay all travelling expenses and a large purchase price if the stories they had heard were true. Alton accepted the offer and left for Dover amidst intense excitement. But, alas, the night was rough, and the railway journey had so reduced Jacko that he slipped his collar while on the packet and falling over-board, was drowned.

Now that is the sort of companion which would help a tramp to pay expenses, and any offers of assistance in procuring some such aid will be gratefully accepted by

Too Good for Them.

In a certain Canadian city there lived a little Cockney Englishman who was possessed with an intense hatred of the Irish and an equally intense love for strong waters. One day, while carrying his usual "load," he saw a crowd standing before a furniture dealer's window in which was displayed a picture of Parnell and his followers, taken when Parnell was leader of the Irish party in the British House of Commons. Beneath the picture was the legend,

"Nothing's too good for the Irish."

By elbowing and dodging his way through the crowd, Charlie arrived before the picture, studied it carefully, and without emotion until he spied the inscription. In a voice quivering with indignation he turned to the crowd and exclaimed, "Nawthin's too good for the Irish, heh? Hi know wot's too good for the Irish; 'angin', damn 'em, 'angin'."—W. R. J.

Two Evils.

Thou art not to be pitied who hast known
The threat of midnight when the fore-lands moan,
And all the winds are out;
Dread and despair and anguish, the great things,
That sit like crowns upon the brows of kings,
Or that queens weep about.
If by these only thou hast been accursed,
Grieve not too much, for they are not the worst.

It is the slow and softly dropping tears
That bring the furrows on man's face,
The years
Falling and fallen in vain,
That turn the gold to grey upon his head,
And the dull days to disappointment wed,
And pain that gathers pain,
That make life bitter in the mouth and strew
The dead with roses, but the quick with yew.

Better a wide and windy world, and scope
For rise and downfall of a mighty hope,
Than many little ills;
Better the sudden horror, the swift wrong,
Than doubts and fears that die not, and the long
Monotony that kills;
The empty dawns, pale stars, and narrow skies,
Mean hopes, mean fears, mean sorrows and mean sighs.

 One day a young lady went into Ickstein's store and stood to one side waiting, when Mrs. Ickstein came up to her and asked what she wished. "I should like to see your husband," replied the young lady. "What? you mean mine son—mine husband was dead." "Oh, is that so, I am so sorry," remarked the young lady. "Yes," said Mrs. Ickstein, "he shuddered when we needed him in de business most."

Paddy and the Telephone.

Father O'Halloran had a telephone put into the parsonage in connection with the church. Patrick, the priest's handy man, was instructed in the use of the instrument, and the next day, when dusting out the church, he heard the clatter of the telephone. Picking down the receiver he was pleased to hear the priest's familiar voice asking him something about the work. Pat, in answering, remembered that the priest was a long way off and yelled into the transmitter the top of his voice. "I didn't understand you, Pat," said the telephone. Pat tried again, with no better success. On his third trial he near the telephone, but Father O'Halloran said he could not understand. He had lost his patience, and, as he stood gathering up breath for his fourth blast he could not refrain from saying in a low voice: "Ah, may the devil fly away with that old fool!" But Pat dropped the receiver like a hot potato and fell on his knees in prayer when he heard his priest say: "Now I can hear you perfectly, Patrick."

Vancouver Notes.

Vancouver will be en fete today, for H. I. H. Prince Fushimi who is due to arrive at the C. P. R. depot this afternoon. Loyal Japanese have erected a fine arch at the foot of Granville Street, the court house has been strung with multi-colored electric lights and the city generally is decorated for a regal reception. On his arrival here the Prince will be escorted by a guard of honor to the Hotel Vancouver, where an official reception will be held. A drive around Stanley Park, a visit to the Pacific Coast mills and a reception and tea at Consul Morikawa's residence will take up the afternoon. In the evening additional amusement will be provided by the local Japanese colony who will have a torchlight procession and fireworks display in honor of the distinguished visitor. The guard of honor will be as follows: The Regimental and Bugle bands; A and B companies, 1 sergeant, 14 privates; C Company, 1 sergeant, 1 corporal, 17 privates; D company, 1 sergeant, 17 privates; E company, 1 corporal, 13 privates; F company, 1 corporal, 15 privates; G company, 1 sergeant, 9 privates; H company, 1 corporal, 1* privates. Captain J. D. Hulme will command the guard on arrival of Prince Fushimi, and Captain J. S. Tait upon his departure.

During the past week the city has been host to two big fraternal organizations. In addition to the meetings of the Orange Sovereign Grand Lodge and the 34th convocation meeting of the Most Worshipful Grand Black Chapter of British America of the same Order, the Provincial Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons has been in session. At the annual session of the Orange Sovereign Grand Lodge at the auditorium of the City Hall His Worship Mayor Bethune extended the usual greetings and read an address of welcome. In concluding his address he took occasion to point out to the visitors some of the features of the growth of Vancouver, as follows:

"The citizens of Vancouver who greet you today are seventy thousand in number, and if our conditions of growth continue in the future as they have in the past, we will, ten years hence, have a quarter of a million souls to welcome you back. Such, at least, is the conservative estimate of the Dominion statistician's office of the future growth of Vancouver's population. Thus does the sunshine of prosperity gladden the hearts and the bright rainbow of promise quicken the hopes of the city, whose freedom today is yours. Indeed, that bright rainbow of promise spans the horizon of all British Columbia.

"Although we have in British Columbia but 3 per cent. of Canada's population and but 10 per cent. of Canada's area, we produce more than one-half of Canada's timber wealth; our fruit trees produce more, our pear trees 26 per cent. more, our cherry trees 100 per cent. more, and our plum trees 200 per cent. more than the fruit trees of the rest of Canada; and our arable land grows more per acre, 60 per cent. more barley, twice as much wheat, and two and one-fifth times as much oats as the average arable land of the rest of Canada.

"Just as Nature has been lavish to us of her kindness, not only in her material blessings, but in the scenic grandeur of our Province and the salubrity of our climate, so, in like measure, we of Vancouver as your hosts would give to you of our hospitality and our goodwill.

"Sir, wishing you all a very pleasant and prosperous Grand Lodge session, and a safe return to your homes, on behalf of the citizens of Vancouver, I tender you the freedom of the City of the Lions' Gate."

Work has started on the installation in Stanley Park of 1,000 colored incandescent electric lights in the open space and around the grand stand. This portion of the park will at night when the lights are turned on, present a most unique and attractive spectacle which will be an added charm to tourists who visit the park.

The British Columbia Telephone Co. is now operating from its new office building, the connections having been made last Sunday. A modern service to supply the needs of 4,200 lines has been installed and shortly, with the placing of new 'phones for customers Vancouver will have a thoroughly up-to-date service.

A wordy controversy has been waging in the local press anent the recent examinations held by the B. C. Dental Association. Dr. Baker gave to The World a story of the inside workings of the Association which made anything but agreeable reading. The Province published the Association's side of the story, in which it claims that the non-passing of many students was due to "cribbing." The News Advertiser editorially sums up the situation as follows: "It is evident that there must have been peculiar circumstances connected with the recent examination, and in the public interest, as well as in that of the candidates and of the Association itself, an authoritative statement should be made, without any regard to what the result may be to any individual." The public is now awaiting the authoritative statement.

The Difference.
Ah! heavy is my heart,
Or light as any feather,
If we're alone, apart,
Or we're alone together.
—Carolyn Wells.

A Fine Address.

The Week is in receipt of a neat pamphlet decorated on the cover by a portrait of the never to be forgotten hero to whom is attributed the historic exhortation, "England expects that every man will do his duty." The pamphlet contains the admirable address delivered by Captain Clive Phillips Wolley, on behalf of the Navy League in the City Hall, Victoria, on the 14th of May last. It is an address which will be read at least by every Canadian, and which could be read to advantage by every British subject in whatever part of the world. Few men have done more in the Western world to stimulate the Imperial sentiment than Captain Wolley. His services both in the press and on the platform have placed him in the front of the advocates of Imperialism, and if we are making any progress towards a realization of the dream of our great statesman, Mr. Chamberlain, and who can doubt it, not a little of the credit is due to the persistent and eloquent advocacy of its apostle in B. C.

The cartoon which The Week artist, Mr. W. H. Stokes, designed for the front page of the Colonist, representing Premier McBride defeating Premier Laurier in a joust, has been greatly admired.

The unkindest cuts we get fall from the lips that ought to frame apologies.
