The Great German Bluff

THE capture of Combles and Thiepval and the great French victory will be recognized for ever as outstanding events in the Great War. Their fall proves, what the Battle of the Somme was out to prove, that the German "iron walls" are not invincible, as official German reports had loudly proclaimed them to be. This must be a serious blow to German confidence, and coming, as it does, so soon after the destruction of three of their darling airships, we may safely assume that the much-vaunted enemy "will to conquer" has recoiled upon itself. We must never forget that all civilian populations are much alike, and as easily depressed as uplifted. The Germans had their enthusiasm first. Their early triumphs, due entirely to the unpreparedness of the Allies, were hailed as victories of genius and superiority. The docile Germans really believed at last that they were the heaven-sent super-race of their professors. Their elation had no parallel in history. Their arrogance knew no bounds. A bluff on such a scale has never before been attempted by a governing class, and never before has a nation succumbed so completely to self-esteem. One of these days there will be a psychological study of this strange translation of a people from dull docility to roaring and impudent arrogance. In the meantime we shall be pleasantly occupied in observing the gradual collapse of German elation. Already there are signs that the bluff can be carried on no longer. German official communications are abandoning arrogance for apology. Those who write these documents are perfectly aware of what is happening, and they fear their own people much more, if that be possible, than they fear the triumphant, deliberate and confident advances of the Franco-British forces. Therefore have they become explanatory for the first time since the opening of hostilities. They do not as yet admit defeat, but they are preparing the way for such an admission. The British Army is still "contemptible," and the French Army is still "effete," but their disruptable forces are apparently enabled to do things because they are aided in the "massed employment of the materials prepared by the War Industries of the whole world." Presently the apology will go a step further, and the docile German population will be told of the heroism of their armies in an impossible fight against impossible odds. They will forget that the Allies were once engaged in what the Germans hoped was an impossible fight against impossible German odds, and the valiant Hun, so brave when everything is going in his favour, will begin his whimper of defeat. That is how the new spirit will fall upon Germany. But with the depression of German enthusiasm we have on the other side of the lines the ascendant enthusiasm of the Allies. These things count as highly as men and guns. Never since the beginning of the war has France or Britain wavered in determination, and only occasionally has confidence wavered. But into the soul of this doggedness has now entered the flame of victory. Our men are tasting the fruit which has so long been beyond their reach. And the fact that they have never called the grapes sour will in no wise lessen their sweetness. There is no vain and empty talk about the "will to conquer" and "invincibility." We French and British have no use for shoddy philosophical phrases. We prefer to say we are "doing our bit" and doing it with all our might. Better than all is the manner in which the new spirit is manifesting itself. We have cause for vanity, yet vanity is put aside; we have cause to cheer, yet we are silent. The new spirit is a reinforcement of our quiet determination and tireless confidence. We seem at this moment to be inspired by that solid quality which was expressed in the famous words of Captain Scott—"Slog on! Slog on!" And so it shall be until the end. That end is not merely the defeat of a nation in arms; it is the defeat of a poisonous idea, an idea which had insinuated itself under German promotion into all civilized peoples. Our best minds have known and feared it whenever it has arisen, but healthy fear of the dread thing has been drowned in the apathy of the era of materialism through which the world has passed, and of which the great war is the climax, and it is to be hoped the cleansing.

Editorial Notes

The promises of King Constantine are like piecrust, made to broken. When one considers his actions during the last twelve months it is almost impossible to understand why the Entente Allies have not adopted more drastic measures. It would be an impertinence to suggest that they have not done the best thing under the circumstances and therefore it is impossible not to conclude that having put the screws on they will continue turning them until the treacherous monarch cries "peccavi." The French press is most outspoken in its denunciation and exposure of this Hohenzollern popinjay.

A cruel correspondent, writing with reference to a Zeppelin brought down in England recently, tries to get past us this morning with the question, "Why didn't the Zeppelinger?" And we fell compelled to reply, though reluctantly, that it was because our Robinson Cruise so well;" (We tried to resist, but there, it is done now!)

Trafalgar Day was loyally celebrated in Victoria by one of the most interesting and enthusiastic meetings in the history of the Local Branch of the Navy League. The platform was a strong one, including the Bishop of Victoria, the Bishop-elect of Columbia, the Premier-elect of British Columbia, the leader of the Canadian Senate, and the President of the B. C. Federated Navy League. The speeches were worthy of the occasion, that of the Bishop of Victoria in particular rising to the true heights of eloquence. The Chairman's opening remarks left no doubt as to the propriety of celebrating the occasion. Incidentally he took advantage of the opportunity to give a send-off to the British Sailors' Relief Fund, which is now well under way. If the ultimate success of the Fund depends on the thoroughness and extent of the preliminary organizing work, there is no doubt that it will achieve a very handsome result.

Apropos the British Sailors' Relief Fund, it is a happy omen that that energetic and capable body, the Rotary Club, has consented to organize an "envelope collection day" on a date to be agreed upon. The Rotary Club has done many good things in Victoria, but none which will more certainly commend it to popular favour, and none which will more certainly redound to its credit. This new departure in the activities of the organization will only tend to demonstrate its versatility, and to show that its programme is far wider than that of merely promoting business. There is no nobler cause to be served at the present time than that which aids the British Sailor, and it is especially fitting that a business organization should recognize its obligations to the British Navy by manfully shouldering a portion of the "White Man's Burden." To President Hunter and his colleagues, The Week extends its heartiest felicitations on their decision.

The Editor of The Colonist announces that the term "Premier-Elect" is not permissible, and that it is "a very common error." The Week, with considerable trepidation, ventures to join issue with this contention. In doing so it has nothing to say on the constitutional fact that a premier is not elected as such, but the sense in which the term has been applied to Mr. Brewster is strictly correct, because he is the leader of the Liberal Party, there is no question that he will be Premier, he is therefore premier-designate, and as an elected Member of the House, he is equally Premier-Elect. The only condition which would render the term either incorrect or inappropriate, would be if there were any doubt as to his becoming Premier. Since there is not, he was ipso facto Premier-designate and Premier-elect from the moment of his election to the House.

On Wednesday The Colonist published an interesting statement furnished by the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, showing to what considerable extent apples are imported into Victoria at a time when there is an abundant supply of local grown fruit. In quoting the figures, The Colonist says "the substantial character of our imports calls for some explanation, but we are not able ourselves to give it, and hesitate about hazarding a guess for fear we may do some injustice." The Week has no hesitation in rushing in where angels fear to tread, and in so doing may justify its right to wear the cap and bells. But the answer is so easy that it seems a pity to let the opportunity slip. It is that the middle-man makes more profit on the imported than on the local apples.

Sir Thomas White, our able Minister of Finance, has just made an appeal to Canadians to be more thrifty, to save every dollar they can, and to invest it for the better prosecution of the War. This is admirable. No patriotic Canadian will offer the slightest objection. We are all doing our best, but we are going to try to do a little better, because we all feel that there is only one thing that really matters, and that is "the big thing." Will Sir Thomas White, however, accept a friendly suggestion from the Far West? And that is that he should whisper something into the ears of the Eastern Canadian Manufacturers who are coining millions out of the War, while the unequipped West is looking on. We can still continue to give the "widow's mite," and will do so till the last, but for effective purposes, the millions of surplus which are being wrung out of the Empire's agony by Eastern sharks, through the medium of War contracts, are much better worth the attention of the Finance Minister.

The Federal Government has announced its intention to institute an inquiry into the cause of the high cost of living and its steady increase. To be more precise, it has intimated its intention to authorize municipalities to conduct this investigation and to take evidence on oath. The Week would like to know what the Federal Government has been doing with its Special Bureau for the last two years, if it has not collected practically all the information available on this subject. Furthermore The Week would like to know what good purpose can be served by the middle-men, say of Victoria, tendering evidence to show the moderation of their profits, while the farmers, say at Cowichan, tender evidence as to the rapacity of the middle-men. It is not information that is wanted; if it were, the Government has only to turn to the Annual Report of The Lake of the Woods Milling Company, which trades in the "Staff of Life" and which earned last year a profit of nearly 30 per cent on its Preference Stock and nearly 20 per cent on its Common Stock, and yet we must have a Royal Commission to ascertain why bread is dear and getting dearer!

Obviously there must be "owls" and "owls." In Tuesday's Times we read of a plague of owls sweeping over the south end of Vancouver Island. These are said to be the "Western horned owls and dusky owls, which kill anything that carries a feather, not only quail, grouse and pheasants," but even full grown chickens, weighing as much as five pounds each are carried off bodily. At the beginning of this week six of these owls, charging en echelon invaded a chicken pen in James Bay and killed some of the birds. They must have been chickens of a smaller growth. Strange to say, the Birmingham Weekly Post which came to hand on Tuesday tells of an owl which is to be protected at all costs, and for the protection of which barrels are fixed horizontally in the trees with a hole cut in one end, and people are urged on no account to interfere with the inmates of the barrel, for they are owls, and are thus protected by "a discerning and intelligent land-owner or game-keeper in order to encourage and increase the number of owls, as they are an extremely useful bird, feeding almost entirely upon mice, moles, rates, bats, and the larger insects." The article concludes as follows: "Until recently, large numbers of these owls were killed in the belief that they preyed upon game, now the better class keepers are doing their utmost to protect them." You pays your money and you takes your choice.

As The Week goes to press the Arts and Crafts Exhibition is in full swing and attracting a good list of callers. It is a surprise even to those who have had experience of the splendid exhibitions of this Club in the past, and may be said with truth to establish a new standard of excellence. It is not to speak in depreciation of any of the other exhibits to say that the piece de resistance is the Returned Soldiers' table, which contains many articles betraying rare workmanship and skill. In its next issue The Week hopes to give a detailed account of one of the most attractive Art Exhibitions ever held in Victoria.

The Daily Press of Wednesday chronicled the conviction of a Victoria drunk named Monte Powell, who was arraigned in the Police Court on Tuesday and fined $100. The evidence showed that there had been great risk of human life, that the accused had no control of the car, and that he had previously been fined for a similar offence. Yet once again he got off with a fine. The Week regrets that the magistrate could not see his way to pronounce a sentence of imprisonment without the option of a fine. It is obvious that the accused is as indifferent to fines as he is to the public safety, and in view of the increasing carelessness on the part of motor drivers in Victoria lately, it is regrettable that in this particular instance at any rate the punishment could not be made "to fit the crime."

There are plenty of people in British Columbia who know Frank Farrington. Unfortunately their knowledge is of none too favourable a character, since he has played a very unsavoury part in connection with labour troubles, and especially in connection with the last miners' strike on Vancouver Island, when The Week took occasion to point out that he was not acting in the best interest of the men. Farrington seems to have met his Waterloo by accepting a bribe for his support to the Hughes candidate for Governor in the State of Illinois. The Union officials say that he accepted $10,000, which he denies, but admits receiving $1,000, and that for "personal expenses." We have heard something like this before, and shall watch with interest how Farrington manages to square himself, not with the public, whom he has so often flouted, but with his own colleagues, whom he appears to have betrayed.

The Women's Canadian Club made history at its Annual Meeting on Wednesday. It accepted the resignation of its retiring President, Mrs. Jenkins, who has directed its affairs for some years with that conspicuous ability which she brings to bear upon all her public duties. In appointing Mrs. H. C. Hannington as her successor the Club selected the one woman who by her marked ability and energy stood out from among at least a dozen possible Presidents. Mrs. Hannington has a great work before her in maintaining the traditions and widening the scope of the Club. That she will rise to the demands of her position, no one who knows her doubts, and The Week has the greatest possible pleasure in congratulating her upon her election, and in wishing her success in the field of high endeavour offered by the Presidency of the Women's Canadian Club.

Alderman Porter has already announced his intention to contest the Mayoralty at the next Election. It is entirely a matter of surmise as to who his opponents may be, although several names have been mentioned. The Week, however, ventures to predict that whoever may ultimately decide to try "a fall" with the popular Alderman, the result will be the same, and it will be a case of Porter first, and all the rest nowhere. Alderman Porter has spent the whole of a busy life in Victoria. He has earned a reputation for the possession of just those qualities which British people all the world over admire. He is a straightforward, honest, outspoken, kind-hearted, courageous man. He has no "axe to grind," and no object to serve but to advance the interests of the city. He possesses strong common-sense, and sound business ability. He is devoid of frills, and having secured the confidence of his fellow citizens will undoubtedly receive their endorsation for the office of chief magistrate. The Week considers that Victoria will be fortunate in being served by as typical a Britisher as Alderman Porter.

The Pall Mall Gazette says that a proposal has been made for the establishment of a British Colonial Fleet for the Pacific. The proposal is that Canada, Australia, and New Zealand should contribute the ships and personnel to the Fleet under the Common Flag. There is little doubt that this will be the outcome of the great War. The Navy League of Briish Columbia have always advocated a Pacific Fleet. The developments of the last two years have modified the original conception, and made it practically certain that instead of a Canadian Navy, it will be a joint Navy, as now outlined in the London Press. The details cannot even yet be outlined, but the principle has been settled by the War. It will be one of co-operation, and it will undoubtedly involve the establishment of an Imperial Naval Base at Esquimalt.

In the Ladies' Boudoir

"Come in. What is it Martha?"

"Madame Ylonen Miss."

"Ask her to come in Martha. Show Madame Ylonen into the morning room. I'll be there in a minute."

"Yes, Miss."

"Madame Ylonen! Who is Madame Ylonen, my dear?"

"She's——come in!"

"A telegram, Miss."

"Thank you. Good gracious! James wounded—shot in the chest! 'Regret to inform you your brother wounded in action—shot in chest. Hoped not seriously. Now in hospital. No details. Deputy Minister of War, Ottawa.'

"How awful! Poor James, he may be dead now. What shall I do?"

"Silly child! It said, 'hoped not seriously! It isn't likely they would say that unless there were some cause for believing so. Of course he's not dead, silly girl!"

"Well, he may be dangerously ill."

"But the telegram said 'hoped not seriously' my dear. Read it again. Nothing of the sort. It's no use being unduly alarmed. Just wait."

"What shall I do?"

"Send a wire asking for details if you like, but they will advise you as soon as possible anyway, Vera."

"Oh I'll send a wire in any case. Will you take it on your way back?"

"Yes, certainly."

"Oh, and please go and ask Madame Ylonen to excuse me. Tell her I've got bad news and say I'll send her a message when I am ready."

"All right Vera, but you didn't tell me who Madame Ylonen is. But never mind, I'll wait till tomorrow, I know you must be worried. Goodbye, dear."

"Good-bye."

"Hullo Vera, any news?"

"Yes, I had a cable from James himself, early this morning. He's not badly wounded, thank goodness—says he expects to be all right again soon. Heavens, what a relief! I was terribly afraid that he might be badly injured."

"Silly girl. I told you not to be alarmed. I'm coming over to tea this afternoon and—get some tea cake—you know my special kind."

"Yes, I know."

*

"Come along, Marjorie—here's your tea cake!"

"Good, will you have some?"

"Thank you."

"What was the matter with your line this morning? I tried to get you several times and every time 'Central' said, 'That line is busy.'"

"Oh I rang up two or three people to tell them the news about poor James and then I was busy talking about my new gown."

"Gown! What gown?"

"Ah! Now you're curious."

"You make everybody curious, Vera, you're so mysterious."

"No mystery at all, my dear. Madame Ylonen is making me a new evening gown and it's going to be something very special."

"Who is Madame Ylonen then? I've never heard of her."

"Madame Ylonen in the Stobart-Pease Building. She has not been here very long but she came to Victoria with a reputation—more than ten years experience in some of the leading New York Fashion Houses. She was very strongly recommended to me by a cousin of mine the other day and she is making me a very pretty evening dress."

"Oh, really! When is it to be ready?"

"I don't know yet, but I'm to be fitted tomorrow and you shall come with me and make Madame Ylonen's acquaintance."

"I'd like to very much, Vera, but it is impossible. I can't get away from the house all day. But be sure and tell me when it is done and I will come over and see it."

"All right. In the meantime have another tea cake."

*

"My dear, talk about a creation! Isn't it sweet, just my shade of pink? How beautifully it is made."

"Yes indeed. One couldn't wish for better workmanship. It fits perfectly. And practically her own design, too. It's a really lovely costume. She's an artiste."

"Yes, I quite agree. Tomorrow you shall introduce me, Vera, and I'll see about a winter suit—there's no doubt about satisfaction with Madame Ylonen, I imagine."

"No, rather not. That is one of her strong points—satisfaction unconditionally guaranteed."

"Meet me tomorrow at 11, dear, and we'll go together."

IMMORTALITY

When other beauty governs other lips,
And snowdrops come to strange and happy springs,
When seas renewed bear yet unbuilded ships.
And alien hearts know all familiar things,
When frosty nights bring comrades to enjoy
Sweet hours at hearths where we no longer sit,
When Liverpool is one with dusty Troy,
And London famed as Attica for wit . . .
How shall it be with you, and you, and you,
How with us all who have gone greatly here
In friendship, making some delight, some true
Song in the dark, some story against fear?
Shall song still walk with love, and life be brave,
And we, who were all these, be but the grave?
No; lovers yet shall tell the nightingale
Sometimes a song that we of old time made,
And gossips gathered at the twilight ale
Shall say, "Those two were friends," or, "Unafraid
Of bitter thought were those because they loved
Better than most." And sometimes shall be told
How one, who died in his young beauty, moved,
As Astrophel, those English hearts of old.
And the new seas shall take the new ships home,
Telling how yet the Dymock orchards stand,
And you shall walk with Julius at Rome,
And Paul shall be my fellow in the Strand;
There in the midst of all those words shall be
Our names, our ghosts, our immortality.

At The Street Corner

BY THE LOUNGER

I have always been an out and out advocate of the Public Market, and have watched its development in Victoria with satisfaction. No one can deny that it fills a public need, and on the whole fills it fairly well. While there may be nothing of serious magnitude to complain about, there are a number of matters which require attention, and which I venture respectfully to submit to the notice of the Chairman of the Markets Committee. The first is the unfairness of raising the stall rents, which has recently been done to the extent of 25 per cent. I do not think the city wants to make a profit, at any rate these times, out of an institution which was established mainly for the purpose of helping the farmer and encouraging home production. It would be time enough to tax for profits when the Market has reached a much more advanced stage and the budding local industry no longer needs protection. The income from rents is now $300.00 per month, the cost of upkeep does not exceed $50.00, leaving the rather considerable margin of $250.00 for the city. I think it would be much better policy to keep this margin down and to let the growers have the full benefit of as low a rental as is necessary just to cover expenses. If the Markets Committee thinks otherwise, I would certainly urge the unreasonableness of charging the same rental for Wednesday as Saturday. Wednesday is distinctly an off day. There is very little business doing, yet no doubt it is a convenience to some stall-holders, as well as to the public, to keep the Market open. I certainly think, however, that the Committee could well afford to make the Wednesday rentals just half as much as the Saturday.

*

While on the subject of the Public Market, there is one matter of great importance, to which I would draw attention. It is the manner in which the cleaning of the Market Hall is carried out. The caretaker is not in attendance either on Monday or Thursday, but does his cleaning up on Tuesday and Friday. The consequence is that all the debris, some of which becomes filthy in the course of a couple of days, lies round the market, breeding disease germs of various kinds, when it really ought to be cleaned out as quickly as possible after the Market closes. I understand that the caretaker is only paid for four days a week, and a purely nominal wage at that, but this has nothing to do with the case because health and sanitariness are of more importance to the public than the saving of two days' wages. There is a further disadvantage in the present system under which the stall-holders labour, and that is that if the market is only washed out the day before its re-opening, the floor is always damp and often wet. I do not think that people who pay a rental should be subjected to this inconvenience and even danger. I trust that my observations made in the frendliest spirit, and by one who has always been a strong advocate of the Market, will be received in the same spirit and some remedy found for the defects complained of.

The presence of three hundred of the business men of Victoria at the "booster" lunch given at the Empress on Wednesday is perhaps the best evidence that the design of the promoters was well conceived. It is certain that nothing but a lunch or a dinner could bring together three hundred business men at the present time, although I think one may add that in this instance a dash of curiosity spiced the attraction. Most men were asking, "Is there anything new under the sun?" and possibly a few believed that there was. If so it did not materialize at the luncheon. The outcome went to show that there is plenty of enthusiasm in Victoria, but that there is also a "missing link," a link which is wanted to couple up enthusiasm and enterprise. Whether the Business Men's Luncheons will be able to provide it or not remains to be seen. My own view is that our various organizations do far too much talking, pass too many resolutions, and do too little work to carry them out. Will some Victoria "Business Man" kindly inform Lounger in what respect Seattle or Vancouver enjoys an advantage over Victoria in the matter of steel shipbuilding. I cannot see any. All the raw material has to be imported, and the rate of wages is the same in the three cities. Yet Seattle has established a well defined "renaissance" entirely on the strength of shipbuilding, which, according to the President of our Board of Trade, now has a monthly payroll of half a million dollars. Vancouver has just secured contracts for $10,000,000 worth of steel ships for the Norwegian Government, while Victoria is still passing resolutions and holding Business Men's Luncheons. Any school boy could lay his finger on the trouble, it is simply that Victoria lacks the enterprise; the people who have money will not put their hands in their pockets to start a new industry or to organize the work of promotion. Seattle did it to the extent of $250,000 and is now reaping the benefit. By all means have luncheons, by all means fraternize, by all means boost, they are all excellent things, but they solve no problems and they throw no light on a subject which is as old as the hills. There is no help for those who will not help themselves. This is not pessimism, it is "David Harum" philosophy. There is only one thing for Victoria to do if she wishes to become an industrial city, and that is for a sufficient number of business men who have the money or can control it, to club together, put up the money and show their faith in their own city by starting the industry. I hope that at the next Business Men's Luncheon this may be made clear by some one more entitled to speak on the subject than a mere Lounger.

When the great Reaper gathers in one full of years and honours while many may sorrow, the human mind does not rebel. Indeed there is a fitness in the quiet passing of one who has done his life's work, and of whom everyone realizes that the Master will say "Well done." This week has witnessed the triumphant departure of one of Victoria's oldest and most esteemed citizens in the person of the late Senator Macdonald. Of him it may truly be said that he has lived a life filled with good works, that he has served his day and generation well; that he was one of Victoria's, indeed of Canada's, honoured citizens, and that his memory will always be an inspiration. One hardly knows how to approach the contemplation of a promising young life nipped in the bud. The ancients represented it by the symbol of a broken shaft, and there the thought remains. The human mind cannot grasp those mysterious ways of a Providence which we know and trust, yet can never understand. When we think of the tragedy which the snatching away of a young and promising life means for the home, the inscrutable designs of Providence become more unfathomable than ever. The only thing established by thousands of years of human experience is that in face of such a trial poor humanity must either trust, or fail.

SOTTO VOCE

By the Hornet

That the book of the month is Mr. H. G. Wells' "Mr. Britling Sees It Through."

*

That while not perhaps the most entertaining, it is easily the most ambitious and able of Mr. Wells' books.

*

That if the Naval authorities wish the public to know the identity of a warship in port, they might remove the name of the ship from the hat bands of the sailors.

*

That having done this they might notify all local editors to refrain from guessing the hidden name, under pain of being shot.

*

That the British Sailors' Relief Fund has made an excellent start, and should now continue to roll along.

*

That a good motto for Victorians to keep in front of them for the next month is "REMEMBER JACK AT SEA."

*

That the way to ensure a big fund is for everyone to give early just what they can afford.

*

That the Trafalgar Day Meeting in the Old Victoria Theatre was a genuine success, thanks largely to the hearty support of the Navy League Chapter I.O.D.E.

*

That the musical programme and decorations for which they were responsible have never been surpassed on a similar occasion.

*

That the agents of the Theatre made no extra charge for the Prohibition Banner which had been left over from the recent campaign.

*

That the audience was greatly impressed by the quality of the address delivered by Bishop Macdonald.

*

That it was an ideal specimen of intellectual vigor and spiritual force.

*

That it was like old times to see Senator Bostock once more on a Victoria platform.

*

That many tides have rolled in and out since he started "The Province" in the old Church Building on Courtney Street.

*

That there will soon be an overflow of returned soldiers at the Convalescent Hospital, with the imperative necessity for a convalescent home.

*

That the Government cannot too soon take this matter into their serious consideration.

*

That the profit of $800 produced by the recent Home Products Exhibition is highly creditable to the management.

*

That Mr. Herbert Kent's new Edison Gramaphone is easily the best instrument of the kind yet placed on the market.

*

That at the recent Home Products Exhibition it sent "Hornet" hunting round the building to find the lady who was singing.

*

That the Postal Authorities have not yet seen their way to furnish sponges for stamping.

*

That apparently the only remedy is for the public to insist on the vendors of the stamps doing the licking.

*

That it is a safe bet that once this regulation comes in there will be no lack of sponges.

*

That about the cheapest thing to do in Victoria is to drive a motor car when drunk.

*

That you can have lots of fun and settle it all with a cheque, even if you are a frequent offender.

*

That there is not the slightest danger of a drunken motorist finding his way to the cells, as long as he is in a position to pay up.

*

That the only other recreation which is absolutely as cheap is selling stolen Government clothing at Sidney.

*

That Hornet again takes the liberty of asking his readers to "REMEMBER JACK AT SEA," and send their contributions at once to Arthur Coles, Broad Street, or F. A. Crawford, Bank of Commerce.

A military wedding of interest to many Victorians which was solmenized on Tuesday, October 18th, at All Saints Church, Vernon, by Captain, the Rev. G. COWICHAN DISTRICT HELPING SAILORS Collections for the British Sailors' Relief Fund in Cowichan are making good progress. The committee in charge has appointed canvassers for every part of the district and a sum in the neighborhood of $1,000 is expected by the 25th. A hackney, presented by M. A. Leslie-Melville, is being raffled for the fund.

AND SHALL WE JUDGE?

It was war time, and he was a Slacker. He must have been a Slacker, because everyone said so—by everyone I mean the girls in the same office whose boys had gone, the people who saw him taking round the plate in church on Sunday, and others who met him in the Park on a Saturday afternoon listening to the band, and so on; it was generally understood, that was all.

I had a little sister, a sweet little thing of four, just as bright and mischievous as all happy, healthy children are by virtue of their birthright. As she and I walked along beside the beach on sunny days, or along shady wooded pathways, she would run here and there, in pursuit of butterflies, searching for grasshoppers, anything the accomplishment of which would enable her to revel in the joy of movement, herself a queen of butterflies.

One day we chanced to be strolling along the main street of the town when the fire gong sounded; the glorious horses charged from their stables, the engines rattled and swayed—when baby, oh! My baby, little feet dancing and tiny arms waving, ran to meet them—those maddened animals and fire-belching tons of steel. Oh! God! God!

A man darted forth, the horses swerved, just a second, but sufficient, and with a magnificent backward leap both man and child were safe. The Slacker! A courteous bow, and a murmured "it is nothing, ma'am," then he fell, and dimly through miles and miles of space I heard a doctor say, "Poor fellow! So he has gone. He was so keen on joining up too, but I told him his heart would not stand it."

(It is to meet just such cases as this that The Week has always advocated a badge—and we shall soon have it.—Ed. Week.)

PANTAGES THEATRE

The Pantages has an exceptional bill next week, topped by Harrington Reynolds and company in a musical farce entitled, "Oh, the Woman." The scene shown is the interior of a French shop and the gowns are shown on living models. Miss Florence Moore, the prima donna, is a dainty little brunette with more than the usual agility in dancing. Albert Finlay's impersonation of a Frenchman also is clever. Princess Jue Quon Tai, Chinese prima donna, sings two songs in Chinese and two in English. She is a dainty little maiden. The balance of the act is fully up to the high standard of this house.
