Graham Island Notes

The two Conservative parties on Massett Inlet held a meeting on the 21st Nov. and decided to drop their difierences and combine, under a new set of officers.

Six young deer for propagation purposes were turned loose on the hills of Juskatla inlet by a force of men under Constable Condon.

A sawmill owned by a colony of Seventh Day Adventists, is nearing completion at Sewell city, on the west bank of Massett Inlet. Rev. Mr. Watson of the colony, who is a resident of Woden River, conducts services at Delkatla, Massett and other points along the inlet.

Henry Edenshaw is building an addition to the wharf at the Indian reserve, Massett.

The Department of Marine and Fisheries intend placing lights at the entrance to Massett Inlet, the ground for which has been donated by the Massets.

The contract for a new wharf at Massett townsite has not been awarded, awaiting the report of the resident engineer on the name of the successful tenderer.

On account of the absence of dog salmon this year, the Indians are engaged in catching and preserving halibut for winter use. The natives depended on dog salmon, which they consider superior to any other fish, through the absence of oil and of being a better quality when smoked and keeping when the other varieties of salmon become unfit for use. This is the first year that the Indians have been compelled to resort solely to halibut diet.

Several families have removed to Queenstown, at the end of Mexican Tom's trail, where they have taken up permanent residence. Mr. Tingley owns a fine hotel at Queenstown, and James Martin has a general store there. T. L. Williams resides on the Bay, near the end of the trail, and Messrs. Adam and McQuaker have a store and post-office at Stewart Bay, at the entrance to Kumdis Slough. Mexican Tom's trail is passable during the summer, and is but sixteen miles from Tl-el river. With a little improvement the trail would be open the year round, bringing the residents of Messett inlet and Skidegate inlet in touch the year round.

The first application for a divorce made by one of the Masset tribe of Indians is now being heard in Prince Rupert. Eliza Chapman is applying for a separation from John Chapman.

Mr. Nash is surveying Sewell city, the latest aspirant for townsite favors, and a party of workmen are building trails to the locations recently sold to prospective settlers by the Star Realty company.

Alfred Adams, leader of the Massett Brass Band, returned from a trip to Vancouver, where he arranged for a new set of instruments for the Indian Band. The members intend to practice during the winter months.

Constable W, J. Condon is installed at Massett, and Constable Daniel Martin is filling the vacancy caused by the absence, on leave, of J. F. Macdonald, who has gone to Scotland on a two months' vacation. During his stay in Scotland Mr. Macdonald will lecture on British Columbia.

Dr. A. Ross Fraser, who has been residing at Massett during the past three years, accepted a position at Pender Island, and left on steamer of Nov. 9th. Mrs. Fraser and family and Miss Outram accompanied Dr. Fraser. During their stay on the island they made many warm friends, Miss Outram occupying the position of organist in the Anglican Church and doing missionary work.

Mr. Nash, with his survey party, had an experience recently which will be long remembered. During one of the recent storms the boat was driven ashore near the Ain river and was badly damaged. The accident occurred in the middle of the night and the whole party took to the wooded shores, where they remained without a fire and in scant attire until daybreak. The Polaris, which is the most speedy and best fitted up launch on the island waters, was afterwards raised and taken to Massett, and will be repaired.

Randol Acquitted.

At the criminal assize court held in Prince Rupert recently, Lestor Randol, a young white fisherman, was charged with assault, causing bodily harm to William Matthews, an Indian, on board the accused's boat near Massett on 7th September last. After hearing evidence the jury brought in a verdict of acquittal

Farmer Ends His Life

James R. Bell, a Nose Point rancher on Graham Island, committed suicide several days ago by blowing himself to pieces with a stick of dynamite. Word was brought to Queen Charlotte on Saturday forenoon that he was missing and had not been seen since he left here nearly a fortnight ago. This report was substantiated later in the day by Joseph Renner, who has a farm on Maude Island, nearly opposite Nose Point. Not having seen Bell for several days Renner went over to his cabin to see if he had shown up. In the cabin Renner found two letters, and in one addressed to him, Bell left instructions stating that if anything happened to him he wished to leave his property to a local party. The letter was not signed. This information was given by Mr. Renner to Constable Jack, who immediately organized a search party. On arrival at Bell's cabin everything was found in perfect order and no indications that a ything was amiss. A search was instituted in the vicinity of the cabin and a few yards away a gruesome sight was met with, where a dismembered portion of his body was found, the other parts being amissing. There is not the least doubt about it being a clear case of self-destruction and that the agency used was dynamite. The letters left by Bell giving instructions about his property proves this. Bell was well known locally and was regarded as a man of eccentric habits. He came to Graham Island two years ago and is reported to have a brother at Stewart.

Death Of Mexican Tom

The death occurred at the General Hospital, Prince Rupert, last Saturday, of Thomas Hodges, better known as "Mexican Tom," after an illness of several months' duration. Deceased met with an accident some time ago near Massett, whereby he received a fractured leg, through his team bolting. Not making much headway, and other complications arising, he was removed to Prince Rupert for treatment a few weeks ago.

The deceased was about the first to pre-empt land on Graham Island, and along with Antoine Cromp as a partner, had a fine ranch at Tl-el River. For several years he supplied beef to mainland points and to local parties. About three years ago he sold his place at Tl-el to Mr. J. Walsh, and took up another location at Cape Ball and latterly was engaged freighting supplies from Massett to the East Coast.

Mr. L. Saville arrlved last week from Vancouver to act as resident manager at Slate Chuck for the British Pacific Coal Company.

Aids To Navigation Wanted.

The trip from Prince Rupert to the Queen Charlotte Islands during the winter months is attended with a certain amount of risk, and captains of steamers have to be extremely careful, especially during night and in foggy weather. This risk is caused by the absence of lights and fog-horns, to mark the danger spots on the Queen Charlotte Islands' coast and in the channels leading to and from Prince Rupert. With the great increase in shipping to Queen Charlotte Islands' ports, as well as the large nnmber of boats engaged in the fishing industry by local companys, warrants the placing of additional aids to navigation in these waters without delay. It is true that the Dominion Government is alive to the conditions prevailing on this coast and recently sent an engineer to make examinations for sites for proposed lighthouses on the islands. This is very good, but what we would like to draw the attention of the Government to is the absence of lights at the entrance to many of the inlets where steamers make regular calls with passengers and freight. The following is a list of aids that would be of great assistance to mariners on this coast:

Gall rocks, entrance to Chatham Sound, flash light.

Seal rocks, outside of Eddy Passage, flash light.

Triple island, Brown Passage, flash light.

Skidegate buoy to be secured by proper anchors.

Dead Tree Point, flash light.

Bare island, Skidegate inlet, flash light.

Cumshewa rocks, flash light.

Buoy marking northern extremity of shoal in Cumshewa inlet.

Buoy marking rock at Lockeport.

Lighthouse and fog-horn on Bonila I.

Danger rocks, entrance to Houston Stewart channel, flash light.

Light on rock north of Shuttle Island, Darwin Sound.

Lightouse on Rose Spit.

Lights on Straie Island and E try Point, Massett.

Two gas buoys, marking bar, entrance to Naden Harbor.

All buoys exposed to the force of the waves to be secured by proper anchors.

A meeting of the parties interested in forming a new political association was held in Massett Townsite on the 22nd Nov. It was proposed to dissolve the two former associations and start a new organization, to which the meeting assented. A Liberal-Conservative association was then organized and the following officers elected: W. Parks, president; T. L. Williams vice-president; E. J. Tingley, secretary. Several speakers brought forward the necessity of unity, and the meeting adjourned after appointing a committee to formulate a set of by-laws for the government or the association.

Haidas and Their Legends.

By Mr. Charles Harrison.

Article XXII---Medicine Men of the Haidas.

In my former articles I forgot to state that it devolved on the brother to call in the aid of the devil doctor when a man became sick as the patient himself was not by Haida etiquette allowed to do so. Should the doctor conclude that there was no hope for him and that his soul had escaped entirely, then all the friends of the sick man were called into the house and provided with tobacco. There they sat and smoked hour after watching the sick man expire. When When he was dead they sat and smoked around his corpse the whole of the first night and recounted the many brave and good deeds of the departed. The house was generally full of sympathizing Indians, and the wailers or the old women that were paid to mourn. These were generally the witches of the tribe that did this work and also assisted the devil doctor at births in his search to locate definitely what ancestors soul had taken possession of the newly born child's body. These old women acted the part of accouchers at births and washed and dressed the corpses for burial and consequently were looked upon with great respect. These wailers oftentimes made the night hideous with their crying, moaning and howling and many a night I have been disturbed by their performances. The next day the body was generally put into a square cedar box in a sitting position with the knees to the chin, and after an interval of two or three days the deceased was stored away with his ancestors in the old-fashioned tomb-house built on two posts. As I have before stated I have observed with care the old people at the grave of their dead. After uncontrollable bursts of grief by the wailers, a long silence occurred, and I could almost imagine that I was listening to a dialogue, for a voice asked questions and seemed to await a reply. My opinion is that the old Haidas on these occasions actually believed that they were conversing with the dead and were consoled accordingly. After the funeral ceremonies were concluded they generally came from the burial places as cheerful and as happy as ever to commence their feasting and dancing in order to make the bereaved family forget their loss. After the feasting and dancing were over the nearest relative or the chief of the tribe made a potlatch and distributed the dead man's property to those who had taken part in the funeral ceremonies, in order to pay them for the labor, trouble and expense that he had caused. If the dececsed were a chief his successor generally made another potlatch and erected a large obituary gihang to his memory, as we are accustomed to erect toombstones over the departed. On this plain upright totem the coppers that deceased possessed were attached. Should there, however, be no coppers one solitary figure was carved at the bottom of the pole and frequently another at the top, and during all these transactions and ceremonies the Sa-ag-ga was the principal person consulted. The Sa-ag-ga before he died generally took three or four chiefs with him and selected his own resting or burial place in the solitude of the woods, as his body was not disposed of in the same manner as ordinary mortals. No Sa-ag-ga's body was ever put into a box after death, but he was carried by the chiefs he had selected to the exact spot where he had told them to place his body, and there he was laid dressed in all his doctor's attire and with all his charms around him. His successor generally accompanied the chiefs, and they were supposed to be the only persons cognisant of his resting place, as on the day of the funeral the rest of the people were supposed to be within doors. A covering was usually made out of split cedar boards to protect the body from animals, birds and the elements, and there he was left to repose in peace. Dr. Kootay's body, although not privately buried and the place kept from the knowledge of the majority of the people, nevertheless was not put into the ground, but can be seen to the present day reposing on boards within a minature house erected over him, composed mostly of windows in the Massett graveyard. Thus formerly the Sa-ag-ga dead still remained an object of superstition, as it was commenly reported amongst the Haidas that their bodies never decay, but dry up, without decomposition. Should any one find the skeleton only without any flesh adhering he or some of his kindred would surely die within the yenr, but if anyone came accidentally across the body of a dead devil doctor and saw the flesh as in life he was assured of success in all that he undertook, and good luck was in store for him during the balance of his life. Thus from the cradle, or in the case of the Haidas from the day of birth to the grave, the old Haidas were influenced in all the vicissitudes of their mortal life by the Sa-ag-ga and no transactions whatsoever took place without first obtaining their consent, consequently before the arrival of the whites they alone were the supreme rulers of the people. I cannot do better in closing this article than quote a story told to the late Mr. G. M. Dawson by a Haida living at that time at Skidegate. There was a certain Sa-ag-ga entombed near the Skidegate village. His informant told him that on one occasion as he was returning to the village, about twilight, when, on looking to where he knew the tomb to be, he saw the Sa-ag-ga himself, standing erect with his medicine rattle in his hand. His informant was much frightened, and on getting to the village told the people what he had seen, causing no small commotion amongst them, for the apparition was universally accepted as an evil omen. Shortly afterwards his wife, brother, brother's wife, and two sisters went with others to Victoria, and all taking small-pox died there.

The next article will be on the customs that formerly existed amongst the Haidas.
