MEETING OF COUNCIL.

FINISHING TOUCHES PUT TO THE MILL AID BYLAW.

It is Given Its Third Reading, is Reconsidered and Finally Signed—City Solicitor Thinks it Unnecessary to Pass a Ward Bylaw.

Monday evening's meeting of the council passed without any business being done, those present being Mayor York, Ald. Smith, Worden and Robertson. The meeting simply stood adjourned till the next night.

On Tuesday evening the same quartette was present.

Communications read: From Returning Officer Bentley, stating result of the ballot by the ratepayers on bylaw No. 14, being 41 for and 7 against; also his official declaration regarding same. Accepted and filed.

City Solicitor Jorand submitted advice that it was not necessary to divide the city into wards. Ordered filed.

The Victoria Colonist and the Vancouver Province submitted specimen copies of debentures, as asked for by the council. The Colonist also telegraphed a price of $17.50 for printed debentures and $65 for lithographing same. Laid on table for one week, to obtain prices from the Province.

Bills presented: D. Arnot, lumber and spikes, $17.92; H. R. Jorand, for typewriting voters' list, $1.25. Referred to finance committee.

His worship, for the board of works, reported on the work done to the approach to the lower bridge over the Slocan river. It was a very creditable job and the cost was less than the $25 appropriated.

Ald. Smith submitted a tender from L. Skelly for clearing east Delaney ave and north Springer street. Left over for one week for the board of works to report.

Bylaw No. 14 was taken up and given its third reading.

Ald. Smith and Worden moved the adoption of the bylaw as read a third time. Carried.

The meeting then stood adjourned till the next night, in order to reconsider the bylaw and finally adopt it.

The council accordingly met again on Wednesday evening, when bylaw No. 14 was reconsidered, finally adopted, and duly signed by the mayor and city clerk.

WILL BEGIN CONSTRUCTION.

At the close of the poll on Tuesday, Mayor York wired the result to Geo. Chew, Midland, Ont., managing director of the Ontario-Slocan Lumber Co. Mr. Chew replied in these words:

"Accept for yourself and citizens our appreciation of wise decision. Trust our association with you may warrant continued confidence. Thos. Chew left for coast Saturday. Be there two days and return to Slocan."

It will be seen from the above that the company purpose losing no time in living up to their agreement, and mean business from the turn loose. Upon the arrival here of Thos. Chew the work of constructing the shingle mill will be commenced and rushed through to completion. It is the intention to have the shingle mill in operation this winter.

Shipping Zinc to Kansas.

The shipment of zinc ore from the Slocan country to Iola, Kansas, has materialized, as consignments have gone forward this week both by way of Kaslo and Slocan. On Tuesday the Bosun mine, at New Denver, made its initial shipment of one car, the ore being transferred here. It was consigned to the Lanyon Zinc Co., and is to be followed at regular intervals by a dozen other cars, aggregating in all 250 tons. These shipments are in the nature of an experiment, the smelter company contracting for 1000 tons from the Slocan to test the quality and character of the ore. The Bosun, Payne, Ivanhoe and Slocan Star are dividing the 1000 tons between them. The grade of the ore is not less than 50 per cent zinc and running about 75 oz in silver. Should the experiment prove satisfactory, as is confidently believed, there will be a steady output of zinc from the Slocan mines, the bulk of which will be handled by the Lanyon company.

Mark Manley in a Big Deal.

A despatch from New York states that George R. Woodin, the mining operator of Boston, and Mark Manley—formerly of Slocan, but more recently of Spokane—have bonded the famous Enterprise group of mines in Trinity county, California. The group consists of nine full claims, including water rights, 10-stamp mill and several buildings. A large amount of work has been accomplished on the several claims, from which more than $500,000 has been extracted. The capacity of the mill is to be doubled and a large force of men will be employed immediately at the mine and mill. J. F. Stevens, of Murray, Idaho, former superintendent of the Golden Chest mill, takes charge of the property. Mark has gone down to the mine.

A DANGEROUS FIRE.

The McCallum Block Almost Destroyed Last Thursday.

The business portion of the city had a narrow escape from a disastrous conflagration last Thursday night. Fire started at midnight in the rear part of the hardware store of McCallum & Co.'s store, having caught from the chimney, and it had got considerable headway before being noticed. Dr. Bentley, living on the flat above, first discovered the blaze by the smoke coming up through the stairway, and promptly gave the alarm. It did not take long for the town to turn out and in a few minutes half a hundred willing workers were employed. Bucket brigades were formed to the near-by pumps and in half an hour the danger was over, but only after the hardest kind of work. The rear part of the store and the stairway were badly scorched and some damage done to the store and stock by smoke and water. How the fire was kept from spreading through the entire building is a marvel, as the flames were fed by the oil-soaked floor of the storehouse.

It was very fortunate that it had rained heavily for hours previous, else had the outside of the building been dry the whole block would have gone. Once headway was gained, the fire would have swept clear to the Music Hall. Nothing could have prevented it either spreading to the drug store on the opposite side of Delaney ave and then the whole town would have been wiped out. As it was many of the neighboring residents began packing up their goods for a hasty exit. Dr. Bentley's family had to get out of their home in a hurry, they meeting with some loss by having their belongings damaged by being thrown out the windows.

McCallum & Co.'s loss on building and stock was about $2000, which is fully covered by insurance. The city—and the insurance companies in particular—is under the deepest obligations to the men who fought the fire so successfully and well, thereby preventing a Sandon experience.

More Ore at Exchange.

Ted Eyton, who is doing the whole thing at the Exchange, came down on Saturday and reported a nice strike. He had run in a crosscut from the main drift to the foot wall, a distance of 10 feet, and opened up another fine streak of ore. The quartz is alive with black sulphurets and is of shipping quality.

The Knocker.

If there's one thing in this country wot the h'av'rige man detests,
Wot is h'injurin' the country quite a lot,
H'it's that pure an' simple noosance wot's a product of the We:t's:
H'it's the 'nocker; h'it's the 'nocker—that is wot.
'Ee's a breaker up of minin' deals, which wins for 'im the naime,
For 'ee knocks full many a scheme upon the 'ead;
'Ee's a universal kicker an' 'ee's h'at h'it all the time,
An' h'it's wonderful 'ow small opinions spread.

O, don't you go for sayin' that the times 'ave gone behind—
If you do, you are a 'nocker, that is true—
We get enough opinions for the most congenial mind,
An' we almost fail to grasp 'em, so we do.
If you've anything to tell us, let us 'ave h'it with a smile,
Let h'it be that we're progressin'—as we are;
We will all laugh with you gladly, if we see h'it's worth our while
An' the 'nocker 'asn't given us a jar.

We maide h'it 'ot for Scabby in the days that now are gone,
An' John Chinaman 'as suffered at our 'and;
Now, we do not feel their absence is a thing to grieve upon,
But, another curse is present in the land.
If Faith could move the mountings, as the Boible says h'it will,
An' the 'nocker's faith could equal 'is desire,
Some mornin' light might find us without a bloomin' ill,
Lamentin' a catastrophe so dire.

But don't you go for thinkin' that the Camp is gettin' dead,
If you do, you are a 'nocker, doncher know;
An' remember, poor-mouthed logic never boosts a place a'ead
Like a cheerful bit of boomin' makes it go.
If you cannot see like others that the sun is shinin' bright,
Do not take h'it in your 'ead we all are wrong;
But, by hopin' for the better, you may later see the light
That the others 'ave been seein' right along.

We ain't no bloomin' annerchists a-howlin' out for gore,
An' we mostly finds the world is pretty square;
But w'en we see's a grumbler wot is allus feelin' sore,
We could almost victimize 'im then an' there.
The man wot 'as a grievance, an' the man wot thinks 'ee 'as,
An' wot lays it to the country all the time,
That man becomes a noosance, an' no matter wot 'ee says,
'Ee's a 'nocker; 'ee's a 'nocker, all the saime.

So, don't you go for tellin' 'ow Slocan is on the wane,
If you do, you are a 'nocker, as we say:
An' our outlook at the present is enough to quite explain
All those petty little statements clean away.
Slocan is creepin' upward h'on the ladder, rung by rung,
An' there isn't any prospect of a fall;
But, if anything is wantin' that we ain't already sung,
H'it's the absence of the 'nocker—that is all.

BYLAW CARRIES.

Ratepayers Favor Bonus to Sawmill in Pronounced Manner.

One would hardly imagine that anything of very vital import were taking place here Tuesday, so little interest did there seem to be evinced in the voting on bylaw No. 14, granting a bonus to the Ontario-Slocan Lumber Co. to establish a big milling plant in Slocan. Yet, notwithstanding the seeming quietude, there was a satisfactory vote cast, about every available ratepayer using his franchise. As was to be expected, the vote was a very one-sided affair, the ayes having it on a ratio of about six to one. In all 48 votes were cast, as follows:

For the bylaw	41
Against	7
Majority for the bylaw	34

Had all the votes been brought in from the hills and outside places the majority would have been even more pronounced, the seven against being about the full strength of the opposition. So confident were the people of the bylaw carrying that no effort was made to rustle votes. It was not till late afternoon that the votes commenced to pile up, and then they came quickly.

The bylaw is for the raising of $6000, wherewith to purchase a site for the proposed mill, and is repayable in ten years, with interest at seven per cent. The company's works are also to be exempt from taxation for the same length of time. In return the company will erect a saw, planing and shingle mill, at a cost of at least $100,000, and they guarantee to employ not less than 100 hands. They will also support the school to the tune of $50 a year. The mill is to be fully equiped and in operation within two years. The bargain is considered a good one for the city—a fact that is evidenced by the majority piled up in favor of it by the ratepayers.

Traffic receipts of the C.P.R. for the week ending October 31 were $1,347,000, and for the same week last year $1,210,000. The mileage has increased to 7638 miles.

W. D. McGregor this week purchased the Miller property in Brandon and will fit it up for a residence.

The Indians predict this will be the coldest and most severe winter on record.

OUR ORE SHIPMENTS

SUBSTANTIAL SHOWING MADE BY THIS DIVISION.

Last Year's Shipments Were 6514 Tons—A Healthy Evidence of the Life and Wealth of the Camp—Arlington the Biggest Shipper.

The Arlington alone figures in the shipping list for the week, having sent out 60 tons to Trail. Things are moving slowly at the Enterprise, all effort being centred upon development. At the other mines in the camp the outlook is bright. The Ottawa will commence moving ore so soon as the snow will permit, and the Bondholder and Hampton will also have some to go out. The winter shipments promise to be fairly good and steady. To date the output of the division amounts to 5385 tons.

For 1900 the exports from this division amounted to 2847 tons, made up from ten properties. Last year the exports totalled 6529 tons, from fourteen properties. Following is a full list of the local shipments this year to date:

MINE.	WEEK.	TOTAL.

MINES AND MINING.

Bar silver is still away below 51 cents.

The price of zinc is still on the upward trend.

Twelve men are employed on the Alamo group.

Sandon mines shipped 183 tons of ore last week.

The Bosun sent one car of ore to Trail this week.

The trail to the Ottawa is being widened into a sleigh road.

Ore shipments from the Slocan this year will equal those of last year.

The Tribune prophesies big steel works, as well as a lead refinery, for Nelson.

There is talk of the old Pilot Bay smelter being put into shape to treat zinc ores.

A temporary adjustment has been made of the coal miners' troubles at Morrissey.

Ore commenced coming into the face of the drift on the Legal last Friday night.

A couple of cars of ore went through this week from the Hewett for the Nelson smelter.

Joe Saulter and Dune Graham have been doing considerable development on the Erin group.

W. H. Davidson is having some work done on the Clyde claim, one of the Chapleau group.

The first consignment of zinc for the Kansas smelter went forward this week, coming from the Payne.

Nelson legal circles are stirring over Chapleau affairs, stating for the 100th time that things are to be settled up.

More ore sacks were sent up to the Ottawa during the week. Two cars of high grade ore is to be shipped out as a first instalment.

Mayor York has purchased from B. F. McNaught a twelfth interest in the Star Pointer group, adjoining the Hampton on the north.

A magnificent specimen of ore from the Lily B is on view at the Arlington. It was taken from the winze and is studded with grey copper.

Zinc ores shipped to Kansas from the Slocan get a $11 freight rate. The profits are $7 a ton greater than the returns from Antwerp, Belgium.

Reserve Cancelled.

Notice is given by the lands and works department, Victoria, that the reserve established in pursuance of the Columbia & Western Railway Subsidy Act of 1896, is cancelled on the following land in Kootenay: To the west of lots 230 and 4589; to the north of the northern boundary of townships 8A and 9A; and to the south of the southern limit of the right of way of the Columbia & Western railway. The cancellation releases the land in and around the Little Slocan. It takes effect after three months, at which time there will be a big rush for timber limits.

'TWEEN LOVE AND DUTY.

A Novel by Annie Thompson.

Per monthly visits to Glasgow, broke the monotony of Kate's life in the Feldrossan Manse. She had left her home in England ten years before this story opens, in order to reside with and care for her father's only surviving brother, the Rev. Matthew Ferris. She was then an inexperienced girl, aged eighteen years; that she was still inexperienced in many matters was perhaps inevitable, since her sphere of life was this small fishing village on the Ayrshire coast. There she devoted herself to the interests of her uncle and his parishoners and tried to forget certain visions of great achievements to come, that had glorified her youth.

Formerly, she and her uncle went into town together; she to collect her household supplies, and he to maintain his acquaintance with old friends and attend to his few money matters. Of late years, increasing age and the infirmities connected therewith made Mr. Ferris dread the fatigue entailed by the journey to and from town. Kate therefore undertook his business in addition to her own; "lifted" his stipend for him when it was due, paid his bills, and chatted with his old friends. She was not unwilling to leave him on these occasions, because Mary Forester, a younger niece of his who spent much of her time at the Manse, was so gentle, so sweet, so companionable a girl, that Mr. Ferris never wearied of her society.

Kate had not attempted to discover why it was that these days spent in town were more dear to her than any others in the year. She fretted for them till they came, enjoyed them fully while they passed, and dwelt on the memory of them when they were gone. Life at Feldrossan seemed to her so small, so narrow. No one knew how the girl chafed over the duties that occupied her. True, they were varied enough to have satisfied most minds. There were household affairs to be ordered, linen and clothes to be mended, letters to be written for her uncle, and books and papers to be read to him: also the garden must be tended, and fruit and flowers with sympathy and advice, carried to this parishoner or that. Enough scope here, surely, for the most vigorous young lady? Kate found it insufficient. Her former life had been passed in a great town, a centre of ceaseless activity, where she had studied and brooded and dreamed through her youth of the great things to be done by her when her opportunity came. Her uncle asked her to live with him, and she thought her opportunity had come. Exactly what she had expected she did not know: but year after year her horizon instead of widening seemed to narrow itself, her mental powers instead of developing became to her thinking dwarfed. Her aspirations had been so great, her attainments were so dismally small. All the philosophy which she drank in greedily from the works of Mr. Emerson and Mr. Carlyle, did not prevent her bursting into bitter tears sometimes, when, after having had her sensibilities wounded in a dozen places, she would make some such discovery as that the incorrigible Bella had committed an unpardonable sin in mixing too much dripping with the oatcakes! The tears were shed in private, of course: Kate stormed at herself for her want of sense—crying at a trifle, when real troubles found her tearless.

Such a climax as this, was invariably reached at the end of the month; but her day in town brought comfort to the girl. From the moment in which she entered the crowded streets, her own life with its over-familiar surroundings was lost sight of. She forgot her humiliations, she forgot to loathe and despise herself; she became engrossed in the study of others. Her own personality was thrust upon her notice every day in the month save this, when she could study other personalities. Every face she passed had a history written on it for her to decipher. There was no scope for her imagination in the Feldrossan faces and lives and dwellings, the details of which she already knew too intimately; here everything was unknown, and therefore intensely interesting.

Having noted down her uncle's commissions on this particular morning, she added to her list Mary Forester's requirements as the cousins walked together to the Manse gate.

"One skein of the pink and two of the apple-green filoselle, please," said Mary, as she broke a dusky rose from its tree, and fastened it into Kate's dress. "This rose is a charm, to bring you back from your beloved town; I believe some day you will get so fond of the dirty place that you will never leave it again. Don't be away long to-day, dear, and be sure to tell me if you see any one we know."

"Why, Mary, who am I likely to see, except the tradesmen? And how can I possibly come back before the usual afternoon train?"

Kate's voice had a touch of asperity in it, as she said this. Linked to each other though these two girls were, by ties of relationship and love, there were constant little frictions between them. They lived much in each other's company, but they had little in common. To Kate, life seemed a very tragic thing, its sorrows were always before her; she held decided opinions on many subjects; she neither spoke nor acted without definite intention. To Mary, life was one long ray of sunlight, wherein lay infinite possibilities of finding and giving enjoyment; opinions seemed to her tiresome things which it was a ludicrous waste of time to form; as to intention in speech or action, she was entirely innocent of it. She had her little griefs, of course, and wept over them copiously; but her radiance was soon restored to her—whence Kate deduced that Mary's feelings were shallow, and allowed herself an unexpressed sense of satisfaction in the greater depth of her own. Each misjudged and misunderstood the other. On the present occasion, Mary thought "Kate is in one of her touchy moods to-day." Raising herself on tiptoe, to kiss her cousin, she opened the gate for her without further remark. With the soft pressure of Mary's lips upon her cheek and the scent of Mary's rose surrounding her, Kate walked up the road to Garleigh Station, which was two miles distant. She enjoyed the walk—every step she took brought her nearer the town: she enjoyed the railway ride, leaning back in the carriage with closed eyes, while her thoughts, travelling more swiftly than the train, anticipated her arrival. Yet when the journey was over, she hesitated to enter the dirty prosaic streets which had never failed hitherto to yield the exhilaration she craved. This day, her depression of spirits was so extreme, that it seemed as though the usual remedy must be inadequate. She feared to grasp the pleasure within her reach, lest it should prove an added disappointment. As he stepped out into the crowded thoroughfare, she said to herself half petulantly, "Even the days in town are all alike: there never is any change!"

To-day, there was a change. The first person upon whom Kate's glance fell, was one she had imagined to be thousands of miles away. His face was turned from her, and she, irresistibly impelled, followed him, to assure herself that she was not mistaken in his identity. He walked slowly, pausing presently before a shop window: Kate stood aloof to watch him. Her eyesight was keen: she readily satisfied herself that it was indeed John Cayford upon whom she looked, yet she seemed unable to stir from the spot, a spell was upon her holding her there. Although her gaze was directed toward him, she did not see him now; she saw nothing outwardly. Her inward vision, however, was doubly clear. Slowly a mist seemed to lift itself away from her past life, and a truth, hitherto shrouded, lay revealed. The moments of time that passed were few, but they were epoch-making moments, such as come to all of us.

We shrink from examining our highest joys and deepest griefs, save in an environment of calm and quiet. When some one in the passing crowd pushed against Kate, the material touch roused her to a sense of her surroundings: she moved away to attend to her errands, saying to herself, "I will think over this to-night."

Where was now the close scrutiny with which she had been wont to examine the faces she passed in the streets? Her eyes were dilated, it is true, but she was unconscious of the passers by. She walked rapidly forward, her mind filled with one thought—He has come back! These words rang in her ears, drowning the tumult and din of the city; they appeared to be traced in glowing characters over her own sharp pencillings when she glanced down at the list in her hand. The grocer who took her orders, did not know how nearly he had received this same sentence instead of a request for coffee and tea; and the woman who served her with silks and watched her intent study of shades, would have been amazed to see Kate open the parcel, later on, to assure herself that she really had executed her cousin's orders.

When her business was finished it was time for her to return to the station. She never doubted that she would find John Cayford there. This was the most convenient train by which he could travel to Garleigh, and of course Feldrossan was his destination. She congratulated herself that she was now prepared to meet him with outward composure: yet when she reached the platform her heart beat so violently as almost to suffocate her. He was not there. Twice her eager eyes searched the group by the train; it did not contain him. She turned away with a sickening sense of disappointment. Cruel, cruel of her eyes to have deceived her, and caused her to dwell for hours in a fool's paradise. She had time to think several very bitter thoughts, before a hand touched her shoulder and a familiar voice said in her ear, "What good luck brings you to town to-day, Kate? Are you glad to see me home again?" There was little doubt as to Kate's gladness!

CHAPTER III.

Our endowments, considered apart, may be unalloyed blessings; but, qualified as each of them is by other gifts, they often become productive of pain rather than pleasure. Kate Ferris possessed a vivid imagination, but her power of sympathy was not less acute; and when, with impish cruelty, imagination stirred her too ready sympathies into activity, their owner suffered much unnecessary distress.

To-day she had been dazzled with illusive visions of happiness: she was now to be tormented with ideas as illusive—suggested to her by the air of gravity and abstration which settled upon her companion after she had answered the eager questions asked by him as soon as they were seated in the train now carrying them to Garleigh.

"Give me news, Kate. I am hungry for it. Remember that I have been away for seven years, and tell me all about everything."

"Where shall I begin?" she asked.

"With Feldrossan: has it changed?" This was not the question he longed to utter, but it would lead to it.

"Surely you have foegotten the place, John; did it alter all the years that you lived in it? Stay, the schoolhouse has been renovated I think; and certainly the old flour mill at Leith Point has been washed away by the sea, since you left. Otherwise there is no difference."

"And the people?"

"They are all seven years older."

"Which means—?"

"That some who were little more than children, are grown up: and others who used never to know a day's illness are rheumatic: and a few more are deplorably deaf. Also, there have of course been births, marriages, and—deaths." She lowered her voice at the last word, for John's only sister had died recently.

"How are they at the Manse, Kate?"

"I believe you will think Uncle more changed than any one. He has aged very much lately; he is not so active as he used to be."

"And Mary?" He waited anxiously for her answer.

"You will think her altered, too, perhaps. She is very beautiful and very sweet. Everybody loves Mary," added Kate involuntarily.

"Then she cannot be at all altered. Does she live with you still?"

"She is with us just now. She gives us what time she can spare from her cousins in Glasgow."

"How good of her!" he said, so fervently, that Kate looked at him in astonishment.

"Well I don't know; I imagine these newcomers can hardly be so dear to her as we are. Why didn't you let us know that you were coming, John?"

"Because I could not. My arrangements were very hurried at the last: until a day or two before I started, I was uncertain whether I should get away. Besides, I wanted to have the pleasure of surprising you all."

"It is a delightful surprise. We have spoken of you so often lately; wondering what you were doing, and when we should see you again. Can't you imagine the astonishment and joy in Uncle's face and Mary's, when they see you walk up to the Manse! But how you will miss Alice!" Again Kate's voice sank almost to a whisper.

Her companion did not hear her; his mind was full of the welcome awaiting him. Noting his silence and preoccupation, Kate set herself to divine his thoughts, and at once concluded that sad memories of his dead sister must be pressing upon him. How could it be otherwise? Alice had been so much to him; his intimate companion till he left home, his faithful correspondent thereafter—the blank made by her absence must be terrible. Kate looked at him with eyes too full of pity to discern anything but sorrow in his countenance: she moved away to the further end of the carriage, that her presence might seem less of an intrusion on his grief. The railway journey appeared interminable to her, and yet she dreaded its conclusion: for, if the scenery unfolded before them as they hurried south were potent to rouse memories of Alice, what a crowd of reminiscences must be stirred at every step of the familiar road lying between Garleigh and Feldrossan. She recalled her own desolation of spirit after the death of her favorite brother; such a desolation must now have fallen upon her companion, and she was powerless to lessen it. "These things are worse for men than for women," concluded Kate, "because we can speak about them, and they can't." By the time they reached Garleigh, she had worked herself into an agony of apprehension lest Barron the station master, who greeted John Cayford with warmth, should make some jarring allusion to his bereavement. She was amazed at the readiness with which Barron's remarks upon topics of local interest were responded to afterwards it occurred to her that this self-control was admirable, but that strong natures, most capable of exercising it, were also those most capable of suffering keenly.

It would have been less painful for this imaginative young lady to have walked with bare feet along the flinty road from Garleigh to the Manse, than it was for her to traverse it with feet uncut, and a heart that bled for her companion at every step she took. "Here," she thought, "is the old dyke Alice loved because it was so picturesque, how he will hate to see that it has been rebuilt and is hideous. And here is the very spot at which Alice always made us stop to admire Ailsa Craig. He must remember: will he stop now, I wonder?"—she looked at him apprehensively, but he walked straight on—"He cannot bear to stop," thought Kate. And thus did she torment herself the whole way home. Had she been less engrossed with thoughts of him, she might have reflected on the lightness of heart with which we weave associations of those we love into our closest surroundings; heedless that a time shall come when death shall divide, or estrangement alienate—and leave us environed with such sad or bitter memories, that we cannot bear to look upon the landscape or listen to the music or pluck the flowers which once were sweet remembrances.

Only Newspaper in Greenland.

Until 1850 the only printed book in Greenland was the Bible. The first printing press was introduced in 1861, and Dr. Rurk used it to establish a weekly journal which still exists. It is managed, edited, printed, folded, mailed and even illustrated by one man.

Addison's Essays.

Addison wrote his essays in the Spectator to be read at the tea tables of the upper classes and attempted by this means to improve the condition of society.

Sherbet.

Sherbet, or sorbet, as it is sometimes called, is water ice beaten rapidly while freezing, so that it is light and frothy. It is served at luncheons, dinners and suppers. Water ice is stirred only occasionally and is more solid and compact than sherbet.

Saccharin.

Saccharin is so sweet that one part in ten thousand of water is easily tasted.

HISTORIC OLD PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS IN TORONTO.

A Short Review of the Stirring Times in Which They Were the Storm Centre—History of Great Importance Made Within the Old Brick Walls Now Doomed to Destruction—Ghosts That Haunt the Pile.

"The old Parliament Buildings on Front street, Toronto, have been sold to the Paving and Constructing Company. . . . The purchasers must remove all material by July 1."

So the pile of quaint old buildings
Is to vanish into air,
With their corrodors and chambers,
Tenantless for many a year.

Soon their bricks will make our pavements,
While their beams and floors, that thrilled
With the eloquence of statesmen,
Factory and house will build.

Empty hallways where the sunshine
Crept along the dusty floor
Many a summer, many a winter,
Silent now, will be no more.

Roofless now will stand the forum,
Where the men of former days—
Government or opposition—
Strove to win immortal bays.

Where, when parliament was opened,
Many a buxom, sonsy dame,
Decked in gayest silks and satins,
Bright with smiles and glory, came.

Tear away the haunt of pressmen;
Some of them are gone to rest,
Or are busy now, reporting
In the regions of the blest.

(Perhaps, 'tis sermons they are writing,
Or a sweet and holy psalm;
Perhaps their "copy's" turned to halo,
Stump of pencil to a palm.)

Is there yet a little garden
In the shadow of the halls?
Do not vex its peace, we pray you,
When you tumble down the walls.

Let the trees yet wave above it,
Let its shrubbery antique,
Dear old flowers, and mossy borders,
To our fondest memory speak.

Tear away each dusty office;
Let the ghosts no longer dose,
Where the former years of struggle
Mixed their poetry and prose.

Raze the masonry insensate,
Give the cellars to the light;
Let the brute force of the Present
With the Past make doughty fight.

But keep yet the little garden,
As the heart that once has known
Fateful throes of living passion,
Ever keeps, for Love, his throne.

—Bernard McEvoy.

In view of the sale of the old Parliament Buildings on Front street, Toronto, and the early demolition of the historic pile a short review of the stirring times in which they were the storm centre will prove of more than passing interest.

History of the greatest importance has been made within the old brick walls now doomed to destruction. Between the opening of the first Parliament in 1832 and the prorogation of the last that was held within its chambers many important questions have been settled. The struggle for responsible government ended in victory, the secularization of the clergy reserves was consummated under its roof, the bill being passed in the session of 1858, elections were thought to have been purified to a large degree; manhood suffrage has taken the place of the former restrictions of the franchise, education has made great strides, the country has developed marvellously, villages becoming towns and towns cities, and in place of fifteen assembled men elected for the first Upper Canada Parliament in 1792, the Provincial Legislature now consists of 98 members.

Not only has the old structure served the state as a House of Parliament, but it has been a court of law, a college, a barracks, an arsenal and an asylum for the insane. In 1826 the money was voted for its construction, 1829 tenders were called and in 1837 and 1841 it was occupied by the Legislature of Upper Canada. During 1839 the Court of Queen's Bench held sittings there and seven years later the Medical school in connection with King's College found a home there. It was an asylum in 1848 and 1849. The sessions of the united provinces were held here from 1849 to 1851, and again in 1856-59. It was utilized as a military barracks in 1861-67 and from that up to the construction of the present pile in the Queen's Park it was the home of the legislature.

Of course the buildings were haunted. What enterprising spirit could wish for a more romantic domicile? When the building was used as an insane asylum one of the female patients took her life by hanging herself from a hook in the wall of the basement, and for years afterwards on dark and stormy nights she reverted to the tragic spot. She also had a rival who frequented the subterranean aisles Another chose the western cottage for her midnight peregrineations, while the fourth was a soldier ghost in full regimentals who made himself at home in the gallery of the Queen's Printers' office. Twice the buildings narrowly escaped destruction by fire and once the sacred precincts were desecrated by burglars.

Many memorable scenes have been enacted within the old chamber. Mention may be made of the exciting incidents arising out of the burning in effigy of the Lieutenant-Governor, Sir John Colborne In connection with the investigation Sir Allan McNab was imprisoned for fourteen days for refusing to answer the questions of the Committee of Privileges.

The ten years preceding the "flare up" of 1837 have been described as the most turbulent in the parliamentry history of the province, when nearly every session witnessed debates where vituperation and invective were chief weapons.

In 1829 William Lyon Mackenzie carried the warfare, which he had been conducting in his paper, into the Legislative Chamber. The Government made an attempt to rid themselves of this stormy petrel by reviving an obsolete rule, which forbade the publication of unauthorized accounts of parliamentary proceedings.

The agitation for his exclusion from the House commenced in the session of 1831. A charge of breach of privilege was made against him in the following session, when the House, by a vote of twenty-four to fifteen, decided to expel him. This precipitated the stormiest scenes ever witnessed in the historic old building. The expelled member was re-elected in the same year, when his friends carried him through the streets in triumph to the Parliament buildings. They forced the outer doors of the House and took possession of every available space. He was again expelled on a new charge, that he had deliberately repeated in The Advocate the libellous statement that "The present House is an assembly of sycophants," although the real offence seems to have been the charge that they were a band of public robbers.

Some indication of the sentiment of the time may be learned from a notice of motion given by Mr. Thompson of an address to the King, praying him to remove the seat of of Government to some more safe and convenient position.

After Mackenzie's re-election in 1833 another great crowd followed their leader in another attempt to enter the House. The Sergeant-at-Arms ordered Mackenzie to leave and drew his sword, but Mackenzie refused to move, when the custodian of the mace attempted to eject him. A stalwart Highlander, however, interfered on behalf of the little Scotchman. Great confusion reigned in the galleries and lobbies, and, fearing bloodshed, the crowds were addressed and a truce was called.

Admirers of the two statesmen whose statues grace Queen's Park, Sir John A. Macdonald and Hon. George Brown, will recall with interest the memorable attack of the former on the latter during the sessions of 1856-9, which culminated in a charge of "falsifying testimony and suborning witnesses" in connection with an investigation concerning Kingston penitentiary. The charge was ultimately proved unfounded, but the personal hostility between the two leaders never fully died out.

In 1858 came the "double shuffle" which was characterized by the usual displays of bitter party feeling. The want of confidence motion in the Brown-Dorion Administration was fiercely debated till midnight, when the two days old Cabinet was defeated.

During a debate in 1858 Mr. Brown and the then Inspector-General, Mr. Cayley, concluded a wordy duel by throwing ink-stands at each other, and it was quite common for members to throw books and cushions at one another when aroused by taunts or innuendoes. In the same session, and amid much excitement, a bill which the Legislative Council had returned to the House with a particular clause left out was kicked along the floor and through the door

Since the first session of the new Provincial Parliament in 1867 interesting events have transpired. On two occasions death invaded the House while it was in session. On February 11th, 1881, Dr. Harkin, member for Prescott, was stricken with paralysis while the Speaker was reading the prayers and died almost immediately, and on March 25th, 1892, H. E. Clarke, one of the Toronto members, dropped dead while addressing the House.

Hon. Richard Harcourt is the veteran of the present Government in point of service, and his memory is stored with interesting reminiscences of the sessions in the old buildings.

"When I was first elected I was 28 years o'd," he remarked, "and although I have seen a lot of my contemporaries pass away, I am not as old as I look."

"What age do you think I am?" he asked jocularly.

At a little distance his very grey hair lends an octogenarian air to his countenance, which is not borne out by his erect figure and keen, alert face.

"Well, I am just 52, and I blame that old house for turning my hair grey. I was given a seat on the Government side of the House very far back and immediately beside a radiator. The heat poured out until the chamber, which was always badly ventilated, i was most uncomfortable, and I had almost perpetual headaches which, I believe, turned my hair grey."

Turning around he pointed to a small group of six, the Cabinet of another day. Two of the six only are living to-day, Sir Oliver Mowat and Hon. S. C. Wood

One of the group was T. B. Pardee and his face suggested a reminiscence of this able parliamentarian

"He was a most unusual man," said Mr. Harcourt. "He had an experience in the gold fields before going into politics which gave him a knowledge of men that few leaders possessed. He was a most persuasive speaker, and so was C. F. Fraser, but strange to say both men disliked speaking very much and would never address the House unless urged by the Premier, and then they would be cross, nervous and restless for about a week before delivering their speeches. Pardee was very keen and quick-witted. I remember on one occasion, when the session was dragging somewhat, and a man named Bishop, I think, while addressing the House, introduced some stories. He was relating a story of an old Scotchman who was attending church, and when the collection plate was passed dropped a gold piece in by mistake. Although nobody appeared to be paying much attention, at this juncture Pardee snapped out as quick as a flash. "I don't believe a word of it." The improbability of such a mistake then appealed to everybody and the remark was greeted with roars of laughter."

A WORD TO FARM TOILERS.

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND

The Home Friend of the Farmer and His Family in the Autumn Season.

After the labors and toils of the summer time, and harvesting of crops in the early autumn, many of our farmers, their wives, daughters and sons, find themselves in a condition of health demanding careful attention if suffering is to be avoided later on. Many experience kidney trouble of some form; with some the liver is torpid; there is biliousness, nausea and vomiting, with loss of appetite and depression of spirits. Thousands who have been exposed to cold, damp winds and rains, now feel the twinges of terrible rheumatism; others rundown by worry, overwork and irregular dieting, are tormented with the pangs of dyspepsia.

To the thousands of rundown, sickly and half-dead men and women in farm homes we recommend with all honesty and confidence the worker's friend, Paine's Celery Compound, the only medicine that can quickly and fully restore strength to the weak body and vigor to the muscles. Paine's Celery Compound tones the stomach; it removes poisonous acids from the blood which cause rheumatism; it feeds the weak and diseased nerves and banishes neuralgic tortures; it purifies the blood and gives true vitality and life. The use of Paine's Celery Compound in autumn means the establishing of a perfect physical vigor to withstand the rigors of a severe winter.

BUTTER EATERS

Are Particular and Critical.

In the large majority of homes, consumers of butter—old and young—are particular about the color of butter placed before them. Whitish or imperfectly colored butter does not attract the eye or tempt the taste. It is the well made butter colored with Wells, Richardson & Co.'s Improved Butter Color, that is looked for and appreciated. The lovely, delicate June shade produced by Wells, Richardson & Co.'s Improved Butter Color is well known. It is easy to detect the butter colored with crude and common colors. Such butter is usually bricky in color, sometimes mottled, and often strong and rancid. It pays buttermakers to use Wells, Richardson & Co.'s Improved Butter Color. When used by buttermakers it gives an extra value of from 2 to 4 cents per pound. Don't be deceived by any dealer; insist upon the kind that makes prize butter. All druggists and dealers.

In the Lump.

There is a disposition on the part of many persons to do up their religion quickly, or in a lump. When the Easter season comes they seem very devout. They read so many chapters in the Bible, abstain from so many evil practices, and say so many prayers, that they think they can take it easier for a while in the service of God. They forget that the Lord looks upon the heart and requires them to walk humbly, love mercy, and do justly day by day. The special religious activity upon which they rely may have its place and relation, but they cannot dispense with true penitential feeling, dependence upon the Lord Jesus Christ as the sin-atoning sacrifice, and a spiritual and godly life year by year. We are not to be so religious on specified occasions that we have neither inclination nor time for doing regular and faithful duty at the house of God on the Sabbath and in the family, in society, and in business during the week, but should cultivate continually the grace of God and be so constantly in touch with him and his kingdom that everything shall be done to the glory of God and the commendation of our holy Christianity.

A MOTHER'S PRAISE

FOR THE MEDICINE THAT RESTORED HER DAUGHTER'S HEALTH.

She Has Suffered from Severe Headaches, Vomiting and Extreme Nervousness, and Feared She Would Not Regain Her Strength.

Every prudent mother will watch carefully the health of her young daughter at the period when she is passing from girlhood to womanhood. This period is the most critical in the young girl's life. It is then that she becomes pale, easily tired and troubled with headaches, without apparent cause. The blood becomes thin and watery, and unless prompt steps are taken to restore it to its rich, red, health-giving condition, decline, and perhaps consumption will follow. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured more pale, anaemic, easily tired girls than any other medicine, and mothers will make no mistake if they insist upon their growing daughters taking these pills from time to time. Mrs. P. Gage, a lady well known in Rowantown, Que., tells what these pills have done for her daughter. She says:—"My daughter, Catherine, aged fourteen years, was suffering greatly with severe headaches, vomiting and nervousness. She was so completely run down that we feared that she would not recover her strength. We tried several medicines, but they did not seem to do her any good. I then thought we would try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and the result has been up to our fondest hopes. She has fully recovered her health and strength, and I shall be very glad if this experience will help some other suffering girl regain her health."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills make rich, red blood and give new strength with every dose. They cure anaemia, headache, heart palpitation, dizziness and bring the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. These pills are also a certain cure for the ailments that make the lives of so many women a burden. Be sure you get the genuine with the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," on the wrapper around every box. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent post paid at 50 cents per box or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MARKET REVIEW.

(Compiled from The Commercial)

WHEAT—General Situation: Wheat has been firm this week, and trading has been on the liberal scale, at a narrow range of prices. While markets have been firm, there has been very little change in values, prices remaining just about where they were a week ago. Business in United States markets in a speculative way has been large.

WHEAT—Local Situation: The marketing of wheat at country points has continued on a fairly liberal scale, though the desire of farmers to get their fall plowing done has kept the movement to market considerably smaller than it would otherwise have been. There is, however, all the wheat coming in that the railways appear to be able to handle, and as it is occasional complaints come in about country elevators being full. Threshing is well advanced in many districts, and in some sections is about finished. The grain movement by rail and water and stacks at principal points are shown in our statistical statements on other pages. Prices in the local market have been firm, with little variation. At the close of yesterday's business prices were almost the same as a week ago, viz., 71¾c for 1 hard, 69¾c 1 northern spot or October delivery. Delivery first half November, 1 hard, 71c; 1 northern, 69c; and delivery last half November, 1 hard, 70½c 1 northern, 68½c; 2 northern, is 4c, 3 northern 6c, and No. 4 wheat 10c under 1 hard. All prices are in store Fort William or Port Arthur.

COUNTRY WHEAT—Farmers have been delivering very freely and many country elevators are now full of wheat, which has the effect of weakening prices. Complaints that buyers are not paying full prices are numerous, and this is due to their inability to take care of grain owing to want of storage space. From 55c to 57c per bushel is being paid to farmers at country points for their best wheat.

OATS—There is no change in the oat market here as compared with a week ago. A firmer feeling is reported in the eastern markets, but here prices are unchanged. Farmers deliveries are not heavy. To-day No 2 white oats are worth 26½ to 27c per bushel at Fort William. On track here No. 3 white oats are worth 25 to 26c per bushel, and about 23c is the price for feed white. At country points farmers are getting 20c per bushel at central points.

BARLEY—Receipts are light. Dealers are paying 33c per bushel for carlots of malting grade on track here, and 27 to 30c for feed.

FLAXSEED—The market has declined. Dealers are now paying 97c to 81 per bushel to farmers at country points.

SPELTZ—The market holds steady at 30c per bushel of 50 pounds, delivered in Winnipeg.

HAY—$6 to $7 per ton for fresh baled in carlots on track, Winnipeg.

POTATOES—30c per bushel.

BUTTER—Creamery dealers are paying 18c per pound f.o.b. factory points.

BUTTER—Dairy—Choice qualities are scarce and firm in price. Poorer grades are plentiful and not much wanted. Commission houses are paying 12 to 14c for choice to finest dairy, commission basis, here, in pails or bricks.

POULTRY—Spring chickens, 40 to 60c per pair, alive; fowl, 60 to 70c ducks, 9c per pound; turkeys, 10 to 11c, live weight.

CHEESE—Manitoba cheese is very scarce and mostly of poor quality. One lot brought 11½c last week.

EGGS—The ruling price is 16½c per dozen for choice eggs, subject to candling.

DRESSED MEATS—Beef, city dressed, 5½ to 6½c, country stock, ½c less; mutton, 8 to 9c; lamb, 11½c; hogs, 9 to 10½c.

HIDES—Dealers are now paying 6½c for No. 1 hides, 5½c for No. 2, and 4½ for No. 3. Calfskins same price as hides. Horse hides 50c to $1 each.

SENSCA ROOT—The price is 53c for best root, delivered in Winnipeg. Inferior grades range from 2 to 3c below this figure.

LIVE STOCK.

CATTLE—Exporters are moving freely. Best export steers are worth 4c per pound, point of shipment, and prices range from 3½ to 4c. Butchers' cattle are steady at 3c to 3½c.

SHEEP—Receipts are moderate and the market steady at 3½c per pound off cars Winnipeg. Lambs are lower at 4¼ to 4½c.

HOGS—Live hogs are easier, but not quotably changed, and we quote 5¾c per pound for choice weights to-day. Heavy and underweight hogs are ¼c to ½c less than this figure.

HORSES are scarce and the prices which have prevailed for the past two years continue.

Scorched Food.

For the treatment of scorched food take the kettle at once from the fire and set in a pan of cold water for a moment or two. This will greatly subtract from the disagreeable taste of the slightly burned food. Of course any really burned bits should be removed.

Carbolic Acid.

SEVEN YEARS IN BED

This Wonderful Case Borders on the Miraculous.

Nothing Like it Has Ever been heard of—In Newfoundland, where the Story comes from it has Created a Profound Sensation.

Cottel's Cove, New Bay, Newfoundland, Oct. 27.—(Special)—This part of the island has been thoroughly aroused by the most miraculous cure of a man named Joseph Boon.

For eight years this man had been ailing, and for seven years of this time he was unable to work. He had Back Ache and Kidney Complaint, in fact he was all pains and aches. He had been treated from time to time by several doctors and although he always carefully attended to their several prescriptions exactly as ordered by them, he got no relief, but was slowly growing worse.

Finally he went to the hospital, where he remained for seven months, only to be sent home as an incurable case.

He has tried every remedy he could hear of, electric belts, liniments, oils and other medicines, but all of no avail. No one ever thought he could ever be well again.

However, one day he picked up a newspaper containing an account of how Mr. Richard Quirk, of Fortune Harbor had been cured of Lumbago by Dodd's Kidney Pills. After reading this Mr. Boon made up his mind to try this remedy and at once began a treatment

He used altogether 21 boxes before he was able to go to work again, but now he is able to attend to his daily duties as strong and vigorous as any man along the coast.

Mr. Boon is a fisherman, and is at present engaged at lobster fishing with no thought whatever of his old time backache and other pains.

The people here regard this cure as little short of miraculous.

The pineapple crop in Cuba for 1902 is estimated at nearly 200,000 barrels, holding an aggregate of 14,000,000.

A COMFORT AND A CARE.

If Your Home Is Blessed with a Baby You Will Appreciate This.

A baby is a priceless comfort, but in its utter helplessness is also a great care. Anything that will relieve the tired mother and add to baby's health and happiness is both a help and a friend. This is what makes the statement of Mrs. Thomas Little, of Kingston, Ont., so interesting to all mothers. She says:—"When my baby was eighteen months old he was troubled with a sour stomach and was badly constipated. These troubles made him cross and restless, and I had to be up with him a number of times during the night. I finally got a box of Baby's Own Tablets, and after giving them to him for a few days his bowels became regular, his stomach was sweetened and he slept well. I think these Tablets are just what mothers need for their little ones." Baby's Own Tablets are the best and most convenient form for administering medicine to the very young. They are safe and harmless and free from opiates. Sent post paid on receipt of price, 25 cents per box, by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont., or Schenectady, N.Y. A book on the care of infants and children sent free on request. Write for it.

The courts are proving very favorable to Premier Ross in Ontario, as two naughty Tories have been forced out of their seats. There is a chance for that majority of one, by the help of the threshing machine gang.

Dominion custom receipts for October increased half a million dollars over the same month last year, so keeping up the steady expansion for 1902. The revenue for the month amounted to $3,240,901, and for the three previous months to $13,311,618, making a total increase of $1,591,693.

By a vote of 126 to 61 the coal miners of Nanaimo have voted to affiliate with the Western Federation of Miners. In the past the Nanaimo men have had no outside affiliation beyond that with the Dominion Trades Council, and this was cancelled some time ago. Gradually the mine workers of the west are being gathered under one head, forming an organization of ever increasing strength and influence.

A newspaper man has at length attained his reward in this province. R. A. Renwick, of the News, has been appointed government agent and gold commissioner, stipendiary magistrate, etc., for the Nelson riding, a position he will handle with ability and a good deal of common sense. Bob knows something of the mining laws, having with the writer staked the Slug Ten claim, on Ten Mile creek, away back in '96. It proved a winner, too—for Bob.

Thanks to the influence of one man a more cheerful feeling prevails in the Slocan than has been the case for the past three years. Thomas Jones, acting for a Kansas firm, has contracted for and commenced shipping zinc ores from the country, thereby giving mineowners a chance for needed profits from their properties. Zinc is no longer scorned, but is heralded as the salvation of the camp. Eventually zinc will be treated in Canada, so giving the great masses of the low grade article in the country an opportunity to be handled at a profit.

By a pronounced majority the ratepayers on Tuesday assented to the city council's agreement with the Ontario-Slocan Lumber Co. for the establishment of an extensive milling plant here. The total vote cast was not as large as expected, explainable by the fact that many voters were absent in the hills. The smallness of the vote is offset by the scanty few opposing the bylaw, proving conclusively the unanimity among the property owners in their desire to see the city prosper and advance. There has been no question of this from the first no public meeting being deemed necessary to further the proposition With the advent of the mill the city will assuredly advance, as the expenditure of the vast sum of money entailed by the agreement on the part o the company will give a great impetus to business and encourage population. Even as it is, the prospect of the mil locating here has stimulated inquiries for realty, sales have been made, and values are increasing. The additional taxation—$900 a year for ten years—will be scarcely noticeable, the advantages accruing from a large and permanent payroll being a more important consideration. Other towns have struggled hard to get the mill and the prize is all the more valuable because of that. The ratepayers have done well to approve the bylaw, and by next summer they will have every reason to congratulate themselves upon the wisdom of their action of Tuesday last.

Your Local Paper

is a necessity to you, financially and socially. A NEWSPAPER of GENERAL CIRCULATION, containing the latest news of the world, is equally necessary to you. The "up to date man" will provide himself with these two necessaries.

In THE TWICE-A-WEEK SPOKESMAN-REVIEW will be found the very latest news of the world, its matter including information on politics, commerce, agriculture, mining, literature, as well as the local happenings in the states of Montana, Oregon, Idaho, Washington, and the province of British Columbia. In addition, its columns for women, its popular science articles, its short and continued stories, its "Answers to Correspondents," and "Puzzle Problems" combine to form a home newspaper that at $1.00 per year can nowhere be excelled.

Perhaps you have something to sell—a farm, a team, farm machinery. You may wish to buy something. The best possible way to communicate with people who wish to buy or sell is by inserting a small advertisement in the Spokesman-Review. The price is the same in the daily and the Twice-a-Week.
