A white Bird. From page 1,

If an albino it was not one of the helpless, blind birds, as it seemed perfectly able to take care of itself and find its own food.

THE ANACONDA NEWS

1 WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 6, 1902. 1

A WHITE BIRD.

WAS SEEN NEAR THE SMELTER.

SEVERAL THEORIES ADVANCED.
MOST LIKELY ONE THAT IT IS AN ALBINO.

A snowy white bird has been seen among the trees along Boundary Creek below the smelter a number of times. This bird was about as large and very much the form of a blue bird. It had a few feathers at the back of its neck of a yellowish color, but with this exception it was snowy white. It was a beautiful sight in the dark green foliage.

Several theories have been advanced about the white bird, first that it may have been an escaped canary, second that it was an albino blue bird, and lastly that an Arctic bird may have strayed so far south.

The theory of its being an albino is the most likely, as it was far too white for a canary, and were it an Arctic bird there would likely have been a mate.
