Hotels

The Pioneer hotel is well named. It was built in 1895, and was the forerunner of the many hospitable hostleries to be erected in Greenwood. Wm. Nelson is the proprietor, and a most excellent host. Mrs. Nelson attends to the dining room, which has the distinction of being Greenwood's first ballroom, for the initial terpsichorean evening was held in this room 14 years ago, and was a memorable event, one couple taking the stove, pipe and fittings with them in their mazy whirl. The first Xmas dinner served in Greenwood was at the Pioneer, and many a good time since has occurred in Greenwood's oldest hotel. Mr. Nelson has accommodation for a large number of guests and deserves a fuller measure of business than he has received.

The Norden hotel, on Copper street, was built in October, 1899, and in 1907 took over the Queen's hotel, next door, and is now one of the largest and best appointed hotels in town. The proprietors are Messrs. Sater and Johns, both good fellows, who attend to the wants of the inner man in a well conducted dining room and an excellent bar. The Norden is the town headquarters for the Mother Lode stage.

The Rosland hotel, on Copper street, with George Wellwood, proprietor, is one of the old time hotels of Greenwood. Mr. Wellwood started in business February 12, 1900. The Rosland is the home of many of the old timers, and George has a welcome for one and all. He has accommodation for a number of guests. Mrs. Wellwood attends to the dining room.

The Imperial hotel is the leading hotel in Greenwood, and is admirably conducted by the proprietors, Messrs. Graham & Parry. They started business in the old Imperial, now known as the Clarendon hotel, in the winter of 1897, where they did an enormous business. Those were the days of Greenwood's beginnings. There were few families here, few homes, and everyone boarded at the Imperial. In January, 1900, almost 10 years ago, Messrs. Graham & Parry moved to their new quarters, the present three-storey building on the corner of Copper and Deadwood streets, and have maintained their business prestige throughout the dull times of the past few years. In June, 1906, they bought the spacious Armstrong hotel as an adjunct to their sleeping accommodation. The Imperial bar is a favorite resort, where Pat presides, and where first-class potions can be obtained in any quantity. The Imperial dining room is large and comfortable, the meals and attendance are first-class. For the convenience of travelers the Imperial has several large sample rooms in connection with the establishment. A bus meets every train, and Pat meets every bus.

The Clarendon hotel has changed hands possibly more often than any other in Greenwood. It is situated on the best corner in town, on Copper and Greenwood streets, opposite the Bank of Montreal. The present proprietor is J. H. Goodeve, more popularly known as "Doc," a most efficient host, who took over the business of D. Manchester last August. The Clarendon is a three-storey building and has a large number of comfortable bedrooms to accommodate the traveling public. Doc is an able raconteur and his patrons can be sure of the "very latest" with every wet they buy.

Messrs. Greig & Morrison are the proprietors of the Pacific hotel, a three-storey building on Copper street, where they have been in business since May, 1906. The Pacific has a commodious dining room and lunch counter, with an excellent cuisine and staff. This is a most popular establishment and meals are served at popular prices. The bedrooms are large and most comfortable. The hotel is heated throughout by hot water radiators and lighted by electricity. Both Alex Greig and Norman Morrison attend to the liquid refreshments and are deservedly popular.

The Windsor hotel, next door to the Pacific, was originally a log building, and the first to be built on Copper street. The present building is a three-storey structure with a fine, large dining room, lunch counter, bar room and billiard room on the ground floor. A servicable parlor and many large and well lighted bedrooms in the upper stories complete the establishment. Charles McClung, the proprietor, came to Greenwood in June, 1908, and has built up a most excellent business. The hotel is steam heated and has every accommodation for the traveling public.

HUDSON-FULTON CELEBRATION

Henry Hudson, an Englishman in the employ of the Dutch, was the first to discover the great river of America, which bears his name. This was in September, 1609. His ship was called the Half Moon.

Robert Fulton was the man who, in 1807, plied the first steamboat, the Clermont, on the Hudson.

The present historical pageant being celebrated in New York is designed to do honor to these two great pioneers. The Hudson was an unknown stream and New York merely a small Dutch village in Hudson's day. He opened up a new world, and by his daring voyage in his little 60-ton cackle shell laid the foundations of the greatest harbor in the world. Fulton's pioneer steamboat, 200 years later, was the forerunner of the mighty leviathans that daily, hourly throbb their way across the vast oceans and have annihilated distance between land and land.

All honor to these great men. New York this week is rightly honoring herself in remembering her two pioneers. Every great nation is represented by a flotilla of men-of-war and the envoys of the powers have joined the general jubilation.

It is sad to think that while Fulton was laid at rest with honor by his countrymen, Hudson, after repeated failure to sail to China by the North pole, died miserably, trying to get out of Hudson's Bay, called after him, after mutiny on board his little ship, abandoned and alone on the waters of that icy bay.

THE KING WIRES BOY SCOUTS

Eleven thousand Boy Scouts marched past Lieutenant General Baden-Powell at the Crystal Palace first annual review recently in a column that took 25 minutes to pass the saluting point.

The following message from the King was received:

"The King is glad to know that the Boy Scouts are holding their first annual parade. Please assure the boys that the King takes the greatest interest in them, and tell them that if he should call upon them later in his life the sense of patriotic responsibility and habits of discipline which they are now acquiring as boys will enable them to do their duty as men, should any danger threaten the empire."

A reply was sent as follows: "Boy Scouts, assembled at Crystal Palace, present their humble duty, and thank His Majesty for his gracious message, which will be a great incentive to them to prepare at all times to perform their duty to King and country before all else."

The message was received with a roar of treble cheering such as the Crystal Palace must have seldom heard. Countless staves sprang into the air above the heads of the great khaki crowd of boys, and were shaken like a forest of quivering reeds.

BOUNDARY OLD TIMER

The marriage took place at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Andrew Little, at Little Falls, N. Y., on August 21st, of John Abraham Corvett, of Grand Forks, to Miss Emma Gordon. Mr. and Mrs. Corvett will reside permanently at Grand Forks, where Mr. Corvett will resume the business of Corvett & Co. He is a very old timer, having come to the Boundary in 1892 from Vernon, and was for some time resident in Greenwood, and is well known and popular. At the outbreak of the war in South Africa, he went to fight for the old country, and while he was in some of the heaviest engagements, managed to come back unharmed. But in one engagement Jack was captured, and the capture is permanent. The Times extends heartfelt congratulations.

After the war Mr. Corvett followed mining and surveying, and later, with considerable difficulty, secured 13 oil concessions, approximately 150 square miles, in Madagascar, which has become extremely valuable. An account of this oil company will appear next week.

Important Announcement

We have secured the exclusive selling rights here for Cole's Original Air-Tight Wood Stoves, the finest yet made, which we sell on the following remarkable guarantee:

Original Cole's Air-Tight

We guarantee every Cole's air-tight wood stove bearing our name to remain air-tight as long as used.
We guarantee that it will hold fire over night with dry wood.
We guarantee the combustion so complete with wood that ashes need not be removed oftener than four times each winter.
We guarantee each stove to be free from imperfect material and workmanship.
COLE MANUFACTURING CO.

The two basic principles which make a successful, economical wood heater—one that will stand severe usage and give permanent satisfaction—are:

1. An absolutely air-tight construction, giving a perfect control over the fire.
2. A large, sensitive radiating surface, which responds quickly to the fire and radiates all the heat from a slow, perfectly controlled, economical combustion of the fuel.

Cole's Original Air-Tight Wood Stove is the embodiment of these two basic principles. The patented construction makes it possible for the manufacturer to guarantee Cole's Original Air-Tight Heater to remain always air-tight—and this remarkable stove is just as economical after ten years' use as the day it is first put up. Cole's patented air-tight construction means that the fire is never out from the time the stove is set up in the Fall until taken down in the Spring. It means—a combustion of the fuel so complete that you do not have to remove ashes oftener than once in two months.

It means—that you have heat in the morning when you want it, without building a new fire. It means—a saving of about one-half your usual fuel bill. It means—a perfect radiation of the heat, which is perfectly controlled at all times. It means—a long lived stove and perfect satisfaction given. It is a good thing to observe that no matter how much greater is the price of other wood stoves, the makers cannot or will not write you a guarantee like ours. Now, printing this advertisement with our name signed to it, is just as binding with us as a legally drawn document, so we flash our triumphant guarantee of satisfaction before the whole world.

B. C.'S FASCINATION

That British Columbia possesses a peculiar fascination, for those who have once breathed its balmy summer air, or its dry winter cold, or those who have waded through its warm coast rains, is a fact. It is still "home" to those who left for the war in South Africa, and found work there later, and Englishmen who exchange the damp chill days in the old country for the healthy climate of this province, seldom return to their motherland after a visit of any length to B. C.

Last week we had the pleasure of spending a most enjoyable evening with an old timer, a friend of some 16 years standing, John A. Coryell, of Grand Forks, who went to Africa to fight the Boers eight years ago, and remained to develop mines and oil areas, till he found the B. C. fascination too strong for him and returned to our hospitable mountains and our superb climatic conditions. Jack visited every part of the British possessions, and found no one part to compare with B. C. It states emphatically that he would not trade B. C. for all Africa, as many have said before, and that, in spite of all the possibilities of making fortunes in that graveyard of Britain, the fascination for B. C. was so strong that he could not resist it, and back he came to spend the rest of his days in a white man's country.

GREENWOOD ELIGIBLES

A careful canvas in this town, of all eligible bachelors, for their views on matrimony and its manifold advantages, has brought only disappointment to the canvasser. With a view to improving the miserable life conditions of the many good looking, able-bodied, hard working bachelor members of the community, by securing their views, discovering their ideals, and airing their wants, we interviewed some of the best looking, and therefore the most eligible. One preferred brunettes, another blonds, one even wanted a brick-colored head piece. Some wanted a tidy wife (which shows his ignorance), and one even suggested a scensible one (which is worse), but they one and all attached a mercenary addendum to their several requisitions, and therein lies the disappointment.

We were prepared to boost them, one and all, to help provide them with helpmeets, to help ourselves, too, by charging a small fee for advertising their individual mere male charms, and incidentally assist in making some poor, lone angels happy, or otherwise, but all that is past. Such philanthropic motives are ruined by this cry for dough—and we hope, that if any of these eligibles get any life companion at all, that they have to provide the dough themselves they knead for their bread and butter.

ADVERTISE YOUR TOWN

What are you doing, to advertise this town? The Times is doing its best to show up Greenwood and district resources, and it is up to you, who live here and enjoy the benefits of life in this rich copper producing center to do your share. Every man in business should help out the "local advertiser" with his own ad. Most of the good things of this world are free to those who ask—and take, and if we want a lot of the filthy lucre we must advertise ourselves, our business, our town and our country, and then get busy and take all the best of everything that comes our way. Stop kicking and grumbling—boost and advertise and the world is ours, or at any rate, a large part of it. All that's good for us, except the North pole, and that belongs to Dr. Cook—and Canada.

EXCHANGE AND MART

The columns of this paper are open to all to advertise their wants, and what they have to exchange and get rid of, so we hope our readers will take advantage of this convenience for a modest fee.

Have you a white elephant which might be of use to someone else, who has a white kangaroo, which might be of use to you? Let us know—pay the above-mentioned "modest fee"—and we will do the rest—all the rest, except pay the drayage, and that can be arranged for, too. We knew a man who wanted to exchange a worn-out set of false teeth for a piano, ivory for ivory, and by advertising in the Exchange and Mart, he lost his front teeth and had a piano stool thrown at him. Come on!

You needn't be afraid.

One day a lady who had been reared in the careful luxury of the old-fashioned English home was invited to visit the kitchen of a great metropolitan hotel. She wanted to go, but was afraid. When asked why, she replied, "I'm afraid I'll see something that will forever destroy my appetite for hotel food." She went, and found everything delightfully clean.

Good housewives consider cleanliness and purity first of all; that's why Quaker Oats is their choice among all oatmeals. In making Quaker Oats the grain is sifted and resifted, passing through more than fifty processes of cleaning before it is cooked and rolled. If you took a handful of oats and scrubbed and polished and wiped each separate grain, it wouldn't then be nearly as clean as Quaker Oats. No human hand ever touches a single grain of Quaker Oats from the field to your kitchen. The best advice on food you could have is: Eat Quaker Oats every morning for breakfast. You'll find Quaker Oats put up in two size packages, the regular size and the large, family size for those who are not convenient to the store. The large package contains a piece of handsome china for the table. Quaker Oats is one of Canada's greatest products.

If it is right to protect the public from spurious foods, there should also be a law to guard against bad pictures. At least that is what the Photographers' Association of the Pacific Northwest believes, and it has appointed a legislative committee to urge an inspection bureau. It would also serve to curb the activities of fake picture men.

he was about to speak a knock came at the cabin door, and Prendergast opened it.

The visitor Harry recognized instantly. It was the man who had called for fair play at the fight before the saloon, who had drawn him into the hotel.

Felder carried a bundle under his arm. He nodded curtly to Prendergast and addressed himself to Harry.

"I am the bearer of a gift from some one in the town," he said. "I have been asked to deliver this to you." He put the bundle into the other's hands.

Harry drew up one of the chairs hastily. "Please sit down," he said courteously. He looked at the bundle curiously. "Et eos dona ferentes," he said slowly. "A gift from some one in the town?"

A keen surprise flashed into the lawyer's glance. "The quotation is classic," he said, "but it need not apply here." He took the bundle, unwrapped it and disclosed a battered violin. "Let me explain," he continued. "For the owner of this violin fought a battle yesterday. You tested its tone a little later. It seems that you are a master of the most difficult of instruments. There was a time, I believe, when the old man was its master also. He was once, they say, the conductor of an orchestra in San Francisco. Drink and the devil finally brought him down. For three years past he has lived in Smoky Mountain. Nobody knows his name. The town has always called him 'Old Despair.' You did him what is perhaps the first real kindness he has ever known at his hands. He has done the only thing he could to requite it."

"It was his express wish that I give the violin to you."

Harry had colored painfully as Felder began to speak. His voice was unsteady as he answered:

"I appreciate it, I am deeply grateful, but it is quite impossible that I accept it from him."

"You need not hesitate," said the lawyer. "Old Despair needs it no longer. He died last night in Devil's dance hall, where he played when he was sober enough for his lodging. I happened to be near by, and I assure you it was his express wish that I give the violin to you."

Rising, he held out his hand. "Good night," he said. "I hope your memory will soon return. The town is much interested in your case."

The flush grew deeper in Harry's cheek, though he saw there was nothing ironical in the remark. "I scarcely hope so much," he replied. "I am learning that forgetfulness has its advantages."

Chapter 17

THE little town had been unconsciously grateful for its new sensation. The return of Hugh Stires and his apparent curious transformation for a half year the place had known but one other event as startling. That was the finding some months before of a dead body—that of a comparative stranger in the place—thrust beneath a thicket on Smoky mountain, on the very claim which now held Prendergast and his partner.

The "amen corner" of the Mountain Valley House had discussed the pros and cons exhaustively. There were many who sneered at the loss of memory and took their cue from Devil, who, smarting from his humiliation and nursing venom, revamped suspicions wherever he showed his battered face. In his opinion Hugh Stires was "playing a slick game."

"Your view is colored by your prejudices, Devil," said Felder. "He's been a blackleg in the past—granted. But give the devil his due. As for the other ugly tale, there's no more evidence against him than there is against you or me?"

"They didn't find the body on my ground," had been the other's surly retort, "and I didn't clear out the day before either."

The phenomenon, however, whether credited or poohpoohed, was a drawing card. More than a few found occasion to climb the mountain by the hillside trail that skirted the lonely cabin. These as likely as not saw Prendergast lounging in the doorway smoking, while the younger man worked, leading a trench along the brow of the hill to bring the water from its intake, which Harry's quick eye had seen was practicable.

The spectacle of Hugh Stires, who had been used to pass his days in the saloons and his nights in even less becoming resorts, turned practical miner adds a touch of opera bouffe to the situation that to a degree modulated the rigor of disparage. It was the consensus of opinion that the new Hugh Stires seemed vastly different from the old; that if he were "playing a game" it was a curious one.

On the one side was a black record, exemplified in Prendergast—clouded infamy, a shuddering abhorrence of his past self as he saw it through the pitiless lens of public opinion; on the other was a grim constancy of purpose, a passionate wish to reconstruct the warped structure of life of which he found himself the tenant, days of healthful, peace inspiring toil, a woman's face that threatened his every thought. As he wielded his pick in the trench or laboriously washed out the few glistening grains that now were to mean his daily sustenance he turned often to gaze up the slope where, set in its foliage, the glass roof of the sanitarium sparkled softly through the Indian haze. Strange that the sight should mysteriously suggest the face that haunted him!

Prendergast saw the abstracted regard as he came up the trail from the town. He was in an ugly humor. The haze of gold dust which he had shown to Harry he had not returned to the hiding place in the wall, and with this in his pocket the fare table had that day tempted him. The pouch was empty now.

Harry's back was toward him, and the gold pan in which he had been washing the gravel lay at his feet. With a noiseless, mirthless laugh Prendergast stole into the cabin and reached down from the shelf the bottle into which each day Harry had poured his scanty findings. He weighed it in his hand—almost two ounces, a little less than $20. He hastily took the empty bag from his pocket.

But just then a shadow darkened the doorway, and Harry entered. He saw the action and, striding forward, took the bottle from the other's hand.

Prendergast turned on him, a sinister snarl under his affectation of surprise. "Can't you attend to your own rat killing?" he growled. "I guess I've got a right to what I need."

"Not to that," said Harry quietly. "We shall touch the bottom of the four sack tomorrow. You expect to get your meals here, I presume."

"I still look forward to that pleasure," answered Prendergast, with an evil sneer. "Three meals a day and a rotten roof over my head. When I think of the little I have done to deserve it, the hospitality overcomes me. All I have done is to keep you from starving to death and out of quod at the same time. I only taught you a safe way to beat the game, an easier one than you seem to know, and to live on Easy street."

"I am looking for no easy way," responded Harry, "whatever you mean by that I expect to earn my living as I'm earning it now. It's an honest method, at all events."

"You've grown all fired particular since you lost your memory," retorted Prendergast, his eyes narrowing. "You'll be turning dominie one of these days. Perhaps you expect to get the town to take up with you and make love to the beauty in the green riding habit that brought you here on her horse the night you were out of your head."

Harry started. "What do you mean?" he asked thickly.

Prendergast's oily manner was gone now. His savage temper came uppermost.

"I forgot you didn't know about that," he scoffed. "I made a neat story of it in the town. They've been gabbling about it ever since."

Harry caught his breath. As though a mist he saw again that green habit on the hotel balcony—that face that had haunted his waking consciousness. It had not been Prendergast alone, then, who had brought him here. And her act of charity had been made, no doubt, a thing for the tittering of the town, cheapened by chatter, coarsened by jokes!

"I wonder if she'd done it if she'd known all I know," continued the other malevolently. "You'd better go up to the sanitarium, Hugh, and give her a nice sweet kiss for it!"

A lust of rage rose in Harry's throat, but he choked it down. His hand fell like iron on Prendergast's shoulder and turned him forcibly toward the open door. His other hand pointed, and his suppressed voice said: "This cabin has grown too small for us both. The town will suit you better."

Prendergast shrank before the wrath-whitened face, the dangerous sparkle in the eyes. "You've got through with me," he growled, "and you think you can get it alone." The old suspicion leaped in the malicious countenance. "Well, it won't pay you to try it yet. I know too much! Do you understand? I know too much!"

Harry went out of the cabin. At the door he turned. "If there is anything you own here," he said, "take it with you. You needn't be here when I come back."

His fingers shaking with the black rage in his heart, Prendergast gathered his few belongings, rolled them in the white horse skin which he drew from beneath his bunk and wrapped the whole in a blanket. He fastened the bundle in a pack strap, slung it over his shoulder and left the cabin. He settled his burden and went rapidly down the trail, turning over in his mind his future schemes.

As it chanced, there was one who saw his vindictive face. Jessica, crouched on the Knob, had seen him come and now depart, pack on back, and guessed that the pair had parted company. Her whole being flamed with sympathy. She could see his malignant scowl plainly from where she leaned, screened by the bushes. It terrified her. What had passed between them in the cabin? She left the Knob wondering.

All that evening she was ill at ease. At midnight, sleepless, she was looking out from her bedroom window across the phantom peopled shadows, where on the face of the pale sky the stars trembled like slow tears. Anxiety and dread were in her heart; a pale phantom of fear seemed lurking in the shadows; the night was full of dread.

ON the day following the explosion of Prendergast, Harry woke rest less and unrefreshed. Fleeting sensations mocked him—a disturbing conviction that the struggling memory in some measure had succeeded in reasserting itself in the shadowy kingdom of sleep. Waking, the apparitions were fled again into their obscurity, leaving only the writhes of recollection to startle and disquiet. A girl's face hovered always before him—ruling his consciousness as it had ruled his sleeping thought.

He took down from its shelf the bottle he had rescued from Prendergast's intention and emptied it of its glistening grains—enough to replenish his depleted stock of provisions. He paused a moment as he put on his hat smiling wistfully, a little sadly. He dreaded entering the town. But there could be no remedy in concealment. If he was to live and work there, appear he must on the streets sooner or later. Smoky Mountain must continue to think of him as it might. What he was from that time on was all that could count to him.

If he had but known it there was good reason for hesitation today. Early that morning an angry rumor had disturbed the town. The sluice of the hydraulic company had been robbed again. Some two months previously there had occurred a series of deprivations by which the company had suffered. The boxes were not swept of their golden harvest each day, and in spite of all precautions coarse gold had disappeared mysteriously from the rifles, this, although armed men had watched all night. There had been much guess work. The cabin on the hillside was the nearest habitation—the company's fume disgorged its flood in the gulch beneath it—and suspicion had eventually pointed its way. The sudden ceasing of the robberies with the disappearance of Hugh Stires had given focus to this suspicion. Now, almost coincident with his return, the thievery had recommenced. It had been a red letter day for Devil and his ilk, who caviled at the more charitable. Of all this, however, the object of their "I told you so" was serenely ignorant.

Entering the town, there were few stirring on the sunny streets, but he could not but be aware that those he met stopped to gaze after him. Some indeed followed. His first objective point was a jeweler's, where he could turn his gold dust into ready coin for needful purchases. He saw a sign next the Mountain Valley House and entered.

The jeweler weighed the dust, with a distrustful frown, but Harry's head was turned away. He was reading a freshly printed placard tacked on the wall, an offer of reward for the detection of the sluice thief. He read it through mechanically, for as he read there came from the street outside a sound that touched a muted chord in his brain. It was the exhaust of a motor car.

He thrust the money the goldsmith grudgingly handed him into his pocket and turned to the door. A long red automobile had stopped at the curb. Two men whom it carried were just entering the hotel. Something in the sight of the long, low "racer" reminded Harry—of what? His eye traced its polished lines, noting its cunning mechanism, its build for silent speed, with the eager lighting of a connoisseur. He took a step toward it, oblivious to all about him.

He did not note that men were gathering, that the nearest saloon was emptying of its occupants. Nor did he see a girl on horseback, with a tiny child before her on the saddle, who reined up sharply opposite.

The rider was Jessica, the child an ecstatic five-year-old she had picked up on the fringe of the town to center in with her hands gripping the pommel of the saddle. She saw Harry's position instantly and guessed it perilous. What did the men mean to do? She leaned forward, a swift apprehension in her face.

Harry came back suddenly to a realization of his surroundings. He looked about him, startled, his cheek darkening in red, every muscle instinctively tightening. He saw danger in the low-

THE UMBRELLA

For many centuries the umbrella had been in common use in China and Japan before it was introduced into European countries. About 200 years ago it was introduced into London by Jonas Hanway, a benevolent and eccentric old gentleman. When he first raised his umbrella, on a rainy day, he found it of unexpected use in keeping off a shower of sticks and stones, with which the street boys pelted him. For a long while it was considered effeminate and ridiculous to use an umbrella, and even now a great many people prefer to use someone else's to buying one of their own.

TEXAS DAY

Texas day, on October 7, will see broncho busting exhibitions and cattle branding stunts in the stadium. In the parade the Lone Star people plan a historical pageant, while at night the "Fall of the Alamo" will be picturesquely reproduced in the stadium, showing the fearful fight and last stand of the little band of Texans. An electrical display has been arranged for, and when the last Texan falls before the Mexicans, above the funeral pile will blaze forth the inscription: "Thermoplae had its survivor; the Alamo had none."

TOBACCO

The word tobacco is Indian, derived from the name of an isle of the lesser Antilles, called Tobago, where the plant grows wild in profusion. Nicotine is derived from the name of the French ambassador, Jean Nicot, who in 1560, took to Europe leaves and seed of tobacco which he presented to Catherine de Medici, as curiosities on account of their aroma when smoked. The new vice pleased the Queen, for tobacco became known as the Queen's herb.
