SOME RESOURCES OF GREENWOOD

Gold, Silver, Copper and Coal Mines.--- Fruit Farms, Cattle Ranches, Logging Camps, Railways, Stages, Good Roads, Live and Energetic Business Men.

On the bench lands on both sides of Boundary creek, between Greenwood and Midway, farming is carried on in its varied forms. The McLaren property at Deadwood, consisting of 640 acres of good arable land has lacked the attention necessary to make it a most productive farm. There is evidence that fruit trees will thrive here, and all that is needed is the stocking and cultivation.

Within the city limits is the milk ranch of the Jenk's Bros., who raise hogs, grow vegetables, keep cattle, and supply a considerable number of the townfolk with excellent milk.

Up Twin creek, between Greenwood and its neighboring town, Phoenix, are several small farms, which, considering the altitude, are a continuous surprise to those who know the mines in the Boundary, but have not paid much attention to its farming possibilities.

Parallel to Twin is Lind creek, which flows into Boundary creek at Anaconda. There have been farms here for a number of years. The first to be located was Spencer's ranch, in 1894, when the first wagon road was built up Lind creek, connecting the scattered valleys of Okanagan, Kettle river and Midway with Grand Prairie valley, where Grand Forks is now built. Spencer cleared and cultivated a large area and also conducted a half-way house, famous for its hospitality, which, in those days of stage travel only, was largely patronized. This is now the property of J. Parker.

One of the best fruit farms in Lind Creek valley is the 40-acre property of J. E. McDonell, who moved here in 1899. Fruit trees of all kinds, small fruits and every known kind of vegetable seem to flourish here, and McDonell's plums are something to talk about. Then there are the ranches of W. Wartman, D. J. McDougal and others, which are all close to Greenwood and help to supply the town.

At Midway there is a fine stretch of farms for many miles west to Rock creek and up the Kettle valley to Westbridge and Carmi. The Midway Townsite company have subdivided a large area into small holdings and these are covered with a variety of fruit trees. The Norris fruit farm, the Ford fruit farm, Jackson's ranch, Joe Richter's fine meadows, the Robert's fruit and cattle ranch are only a few instances of what can be done on the Kettle river, while the possibility of profitable farming in this section is shown by a visit to the lands of the Kettle River Irrigated fruit lands under the present management of D. R. Tait.

Beyond Rock creek is the large farming district known as Anarchist Mountain, with its neighbor, Myer's Creek valley, all of which is directly tributary to this town. While many hundred acres are added yearly to the number already under cultivation there is room for a great many more settlers in this district, and fruit growers will do well to look over what has been accomplished in this regard in the western part of the Boundary country.

The eastern half of the Boundary speaks for itself. It is older than ourselves in farming and fruit growing, and no finer showing of fruit farms and ranches can be found in B. C. But as it is not tributary to this town, and therefore does not come under the head of resources of Greenwood, a description of that section must be left for another occasion.

Transportation.

Greenwood is reachable from anywhere on the map by the Canadian Pacific Railway, the construction of which was completed in 1899. A splendid service of daily trains exists between Nelson, on the Kootenay lake, and Greenwood, and every comfort is provided for passengers. Goods shipped to this town arrive by freight at all hours of the day and night.

The Great Northern Railway is not as yet completed to this town, but daily trains come to Phoenix, four miles to the eastward, and to Midway, nine miles south of Greenwood.

A splendid stage service centers in Greenwood, from Phoenix daily, from Midway twice a day, to and from the West Fork country and Rock Creek once a week, while three times a day a stage runs to and from the Mother Lode mine. The Phoenix stage is operated by Lang & Gillis. The Midway stage is operated by J. E. McDonell, who meets each train daily from Spokane and Hedley. This stage carries the U. S. A. mail, and is the principle mode of coming in and out of the Boundary from the south. The Rock Creek and West Fork stage connects with the McDonell stage at Midway, and reaches all points in the West Fork country.

Timber.

The timber resources of the Boundary are a long way from being exhausted. Millions of feet of lumber have been cut in this section and shipped during the past twelve years, and there is still large areas of timber lands on the Kettle river and its tributaries. The West Fork and the main river afford excellent opportunities of profitable logging open to those interested in the lumber business. The Anarchist mountain and McKinney sections are also tributary to Greenwood. Much of the best timber is owned by Greenwoodites and this will be worked as the demand for lumber increases. Alberta and Saskatchewan afford an inexhaustible market for good lumber and the Kettle river an excellent means of transportation for logs to Midway, where the C. P. R. and Great Northern Railway are both located.

Wagon Roads.

The Boundary is noted for its good roads. In any mountain country, and especially in its earlier stages of development, transportation, which is a synonym for progress, depends on good roads. In 1894, before any serious mining had been undertaken here on any large scale, this district was shut off from the outside world by the pressing need of good roads, and the provincial government, recognizing the growing importance of the Boundary, built a first-class road from Penticton to Grand Forks, which not only opened up these lower valleys, but connected them with one another, and with the rest of B. C., also providing work for the many needy prospectors and trail blazers of those days. This road is in present use and good preservation. Since then more good roads have been built by the government, and also by private and public enterprise, to every town and mining camp in the district, and they are kept in excellent repair, under the supervision of the road superintendents and their road gangs.

Greenwood is the center of the West Boundary, and as such, roads from the town reach out in every direction and to every point. Visitors to the various mines can drive comfortably and without danger to themselves or fatigue to their horses, since the grades are uniformly good. This means much to a town and is a distinct attraction to riders and drivers alike.

This article continued next week.

SMOKER TO C. A. THOMAS

On Tuesday night a complimentary smoker was tendered to C. A. Thomas, late accountant of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, Greenwood, who has severed his connection with the bank this week, and is about to settle down for good on his fruit ranch in the Okanagan. Alone? Well that remains to be seen.

The smoker was attended by some sixty of the most prominent, business and professional men in Greenwood, including the Times representative, who is none of the three.

The meeting was called to order, more or less, at 9 o'clock, by the officiating chairman E. G. Warren, who was armed with an axe by way of enforcing his authority. In a short to-the-point speech Mr. Warren introduced the guest of the evening, who by the way, needed no introduction, (every one knows Tommy), and a splendid musical program and other wise was carried out. During the evening Tommy was presented with a purse of gold, the parting gift of his many admirers, who wished to shew their keen appreciation of his unfailing good nature, for he has ever taken a prominent part in all the local entertainments, dramatic and musical, playing continuously for the Greenwood Orchestra, and on every occasion where his fine musicianship could be of use and pleasure to those who greatly enjoyed it.

In his boyhood days Mr. Thomas resided at Plymouth, Eng. and for the first time evinced a marked taste for music at the early age of two, when he clubbed an in offending spider to death, and revelling in its last groans and death rattle, reproduced the same on his father's piano. Such talent could only meet with reward, and Tommy was later shipped to Leipzig, C. O. D. to study the piano under the venerable Dr. Carl. Reineke at the famous conservatorium. That he learnt well we all know, who have heard him, and while the land is calling Tommy we in Greenwood are the losers and muchly will he be missed and that not only in musical circles.

Mr. Thomas has been for the past five years on the Bank of Commerce staff, joining the Bank at Vancouver in 1904. Later he was moved to New Westminister, then to Penticton and finally to Greenwood nearly four years ago.

It is with extreme regret that we say good-bye to Tommy, and hope sincerely to see and hear him again.

The evening's program was most spirited. Two splendid rousing songs are credited to J. E. McAllister, who was in great voice. A Habitant recitation by A. Burnett who excelled all former renditions, songs by J. Dunlop, in his usual vigorous style, Jory surpassed himself in various vocal selections, Other songs were by F. W. McLaine, W. G. McMynn, Jim Bernie, and many others. Stories were elaborated by Tom Walsh, Doc Goodeve, Bill Fleming etc. etc. ad lib. While a sharp duel of wit, between a celebrated Scotchman and an equally celebrated gentleman from Phoenix Park, evoked much mirth, and "hot shots on both sides followed fast." Perhaps the event of the evening was the Highland fling as exemplified by four of our leading Schootchies.

One gentleman "tumbled" to all the jokes as and before they occured which proves that he does not hail frae the Land o' the heather.

The moon and sun both witnessed the festive gathering, and search parties are still seeking some of the elect.

BADEN-POWELL BOY SCOUTS

Military training for boys has long been recognized as invaluable. Character is formed by the lessons in discipline, health is augmented by the physical exercises, and a clean line of thought suggested by the various side issues and interesting work laid out for the Baden-Powell Boy Scouts, an organization somewhat akin to the school military corps and the Boys' Brigade, but larger in its scope and usefulness.

To be loyal to God and King, to help others at all times, to obey the Scout's law, this is a part of the Boy Scout's oath, and it contains an all-sufficient creed for every man and woman.

Originated by Lieut. General Baden-Powell, C. B., of South African fame, who is at the head of the order, the Boy Scouts are already established in every corner of the Empire, and the present work of Mr. R. G. Hargreaves, who is establishing a camp here for the benefit of the boys of Greenwood is one of extreme merit, and deserving of every assistance and encouragement from the parents and others interested in the welfare of the boys.

The subjects of instruction are, Scoutcraft, Campaigning, Observation, Woodcraft, Chivalry, Saving Life, Endurance and Patriotism.

This is not in opposition but an auxiliary to the existing organizations for boys. "Be prepared" is their watchword, and it applies to us all, young and old.

A club room is being fitted up near the city hall for the boys by Mr. Hargreaves, and those who wish to assist him in the good work can get every information from him or the editor of this paper. A great many things are needed for the club rooms which could be donated and which will be very welcome.

GOOD-BYE McINTOSH

The late superintendent of the Mother Lode mine, with his wife, left on Monday last for Spokane, where they will reside. Mr. McIntosh is a Canadian born, hailing from Nova Scotia. His parents moved to the Black hills in 1880, and Mr. McIntosh got his first lesson in mining in the Homestake mine, Leeds, South Dakota, some twenty years ago. Here he became a citizen of the republic.

In 1887 he was foreman for the Golden Award mining company, at Terry, S. D., where he met his wife, who was Miss Susie Moore. They were married some sixteen years ago.

Later Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh moved to Rossland, and for five years Mr. McIntosh acted as shift boss at the Le Roi Two mine, from which mine he came to the Mother Lode as superintendent nearly three years back.

Both Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh were well known and popular at the mine, and in Greenwood, and last week the employees of the B. C. Copper company, at the Mother Lode mine, presented them with some very beautiful parting presents. To Mr. McIntosh a gold watch and chain with a gold locket attached, suitably engraved with his initals, and Mrs. McIntosh a gold pendant set with olivines. The presentation took place in the Hall at the mine, and was made by T. Lyons on behalf of the men, A social evening followed and everyone wished the late superintendent and his wife every success and happiness in their future life, in which the Times heartily joins.

MIDWAY NOTES

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Larson returned from a trip to the Seattle Fair.

Miss Kathleen Ferguson has gone to Grand Forks to attend high-school.

J. H. Bush has gone to his old home in Markdale, Ont., for a two month's visit.

Mrs. J. R. Jackson and children left for Victoria, last week for an extended visit.

Miss Gladys Bell, daughter of Mrs. S. Larson, Rock Creek, is spending a few days with Mrs. J. H. Bush.

Mrs. Munroe and family have moved to Grand Forks, where she intends to reside while her daughters attend the high school there.

The contract for the erecting of the poles for the local telephone line between here and Rock Creek is fast nearing completion. The workmen are in sight of town.

Mr. and Mrs. A Letts and family, and Mrs. Wm. Letts, of Anarchist Mountain, returned from the east last week, where they have been spending a pleasant vacation.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hardy, who were married in Victoria, Aug. 11, returned to their home at Midway last week, and in the evening were entertained with "royal honors."

SMITH WANTED

The Police of Vernon have offered a reward of $250 for the arrest of Alex Smith, who is wanted in connection with the burning of the Okanagan Hotel, at Vernon, in which eleven lives were lost. It is said that Smith disappeared from Vernon immediately after the fire. He is 5 feet 9 inches in height, smooth shaven of dark complexion, pale face, with a hole on the left jaw, 35 year old, slim built, and weighs 160 pounds.

MISS TO MRS. WHEN?

Quite recently Miss May Sutton, the American lawn tennis champion, broke off her engagement on the ground that no woman ought to marry before twenty-five. This has caused considerable discussion in the old country, where it is not the custom for young women, however prominent, to take the newspapers into their confidence on matters of such very personal and private a nature. Americans live so entirely in glass houses, with the blinds up, and to them Miss Sutton's public announcement of her renouncement seems quite regular; and although we are not in favor of the public airing of home washing, yet surely, some of us should be grateful to Miss Sutton for turning our attention to a matter which needs discussion.

The evil effects of too early marriages can be noted on every hand. Romantic standpoints will be displaced by common sense views some of these days. No girl is ever too old to be married (eh! What?) but many are married several years too young.

In the 'fifties, girls married at from 17 to 19 years of age. The idea was that young couple should start their life together, and that they should pick up their experience hand-in-hand. We have quite outgrown that idea. A man marries later in life now-our-days, thirty-three being about the average, and no man of thirty-three expects a young, untutored school girl to take her place as a full fledged matron, before she has had a chance to enjoy her girldom and its fascinating few jolly careless years at least. We guess Miss Sutton was wise.

FREAKS—A DEFENCE

There are freaks, fellow and feline, foul and fair, with their fads and fancies, who make life interesting for the general by-stander, and add color to the sombre scheme of things. Frequently the by-stander is a freak himself, and that only makes it all the more interesting to the few who are not freakishly inclined.

To be a common-place everyday personage, in these strenuous times, is to be a freak, though to be a freak is not always a criterion of one's being common, more often it is a sign that one is uncommon. But freaks, unlike bores and cranks, are quite harmless, causing mirth only, and thereby adding very materially to this world's smiles, and in this regard they are a most necessary and useful unit of society.

Humanly speaking, freaks can be divided into three classes. The first are the classy freaks, men who affect outlandish attire, such as pink socks and ties of yellow and purple stripe, which can be distinctly heard at a considerable distance and which gave the wireless inventors the first hint of transmitting messages at long distance. These are only instances. Long hair and language the slight improvement of a bray are attributes of the classy freak.

In the class two are the lasses who are all heels and no souls, whose head gear is in imitation of an African Chieftain's umbrella of state, who faint at a pinpoint but display delight at dead birds for their personal adornment. The common-or-garden girl is not a bit interesting, it is the one who rides on both sides of the fiery steed that makes us turn our heads. The feminine freak is unconventional, free and easy, and very much up-to-date. Class two appeals to most of us, which proves that we, too, are freaks. And, lastly, there are the asses. Freak freaks, assininely freakish, harmlessly humoresque, burlesquely boorish, all first-class qualifications for freakdom. The many who always do things differently to others, who think and dress unlike the majority, are freaks, but such welcome freaks that it behooves us not to ridicule them too much. We smile at the classy freak, we love the lassy freak, but the assinine freak we are apt to deplore. This is wrong. They are as necessary as the flowers in May. They furnish us with topics of conversation, their oddities arouse our mirth, but should never wake our scorn. Harmlessly pathetic, and most always good natured, a freak can be counted on in any emergency. The freak is often a genius, and while we may laugh, we should also admire those who are a little different to the common herd and meet his or her kindly generous eccentricities with respect and civility, or become, by our sourcastic stupidity, a freak of an unpleasant species not included in the above three classes.

OUTLINES OF CURRENT EVENTS

The railway commission will sit in Nelson about Nov. 1st.

There were eight men killed in the strike riots in Pittsburg last week.

There are 750,000 paupers in England and Wales. How many millionaires?

Last week 1500 carpenters quit work in Winnipeg. Building is at a stand still.

The British Association for the Advancement of Science are in session in Winnipeg.

The Ottawa government have refused an extension of the fishing season off the B. C. Coast.

Spain is still up against it in Morocco and things at home cannot be described as tranquil.

A man having one million dollars worth of counterfeit notes was recently arrested in Kentucky.

A Boosters club has been formed at Prince Rupert which will probably be known as the Empire club.

John D. Rockefeller's fortune grew $80,000,000 more last week through advance in Standard Oil stock.

An unexhaustible supply of pitch blende from which radium is obtained has been discovered in California.

North Dakota and Northwestern Minnesota were swept by a cyclone last week. The property loss is enormous.

A new whaling station has been located at the south end of the Queen Charlotte islands to be ready for next season.

Henceforth all clerks in the employ of the Molson's Bank must have $1,200 salary before joining the ranks of the benedicts.

Earthquakes in Sienna province Italy, have done great damage. Last week a series of shocks were felt and many persons injured.

Eleven men were carried down in the wreck of the Gloucestor schooner Oronoco, which capsized twenty-five miles off Sambri, near Halifax.

Six beautiful gold medals, commemorative of the Quebec tercentenary, have been received by the Mayor of Quebec for distribution. Earl Grey and Sir Wilfrid Laurier will each receive one.

The Persian government has dismissed General Smirnoff, the Russian tutor of Ahmed Mirza, the youg Persian Shah, and has appointed Hodjasenah, a learned native, to teach the Shah political science.

W. C. Wells, of Nelson, who was commissioner of Lands and Works in the Dunsmuir and Prior governments, 1901—1905, will be the next Lieutenant-Governor of B. C. The Hon. James Dunsmuir having resigned.

The Prince of Wales has consented to visit South Africa and to open the South African Union parliament. It is possible that his Royal Highness will be accompanied by the Princess. The Union will be proclaimed on May 31, 1910.

A fifteen mile ditch and flume is being built, on the Quesnel River, near Bullion, B. C., to convey water to some valuable mining claims and it is estimated that between two and three million feet of lumber will be used in it construction.

The receipt in New York last week of a carload of pig iron marks an event in the industrial history of the world. The pig iron was delivered at a local foundry at $25 a ton, less than it could be bought for at tide water, and was smelted by electricity, the first carload ever smelted by that process. No coal, coke or blast was used in the process, proving that iron ore deposits anywhere in the world need no longer be unworked. The iron is pronounced the finest quality for smelting.

STRATHCONA WELCOME

Very great interest is being shown in the visit of Lord Strathcona to Winnipeg, an event that is set down for the latter part of this month, probably about the 25th. The civic, Provincial and Dominion Governments will join in doing honor to the aged son of the West, and a special meeting of the general committee of Canada's International Exposition and Selkirk Centennial will be called to make arrangements for the part which the Expositon Committee will take in the hearty welcome that will be tendered Lord Strathcona by the people of his old home.

HUMAN PARCEL POST

English postmasters may arrange for the conduct of a person to an address by an express messenger.—Postoffice Guide, page 33.

Scarcely one person in a hundred thousand is aware of the regulation under which "human parcels" can be despatched to their destination, yet the process is both simple and economical.

One gentleman, whose little son aged seven, was at a school in the Midlands, instructed the school authorities to send the boy up to London in charge of a postoffice messenger. This was done; the boy duly arrived, and was signed for as an "express packet."

Another instance was that of an American lady. She wanted to go shopping in the West End, and, being unfamiliar with London, wanted someone to act as guide and stay outside the shops and look after her children while she was making purchases. A boy was placed at her disposal. He performed his task of "nurse-maid" so well that it drew forth an enthusiastic appreciation of our British postal service.

The Sultan of Morocco is torturing prisoners he captured last week of the Pretender's forces. The Riffs are torturing Spanish soldiers they capture near Mellila, and Spain is doing the same to families of insurrectionists where they cannot get the principles.

The first food of the day.

Every man, woman and child begins the day with more or less vigor of mind and strength of body according to the first food supplied to the stomach. The best first dish of the day is a bowl of Quaker Oats. The stomach can assimilate it more quickly and with less effort than other foods. There is little or no waste and every ounce of food is converted into muscle, vigor and brain activity. The strongest people in the world are the regular eaters of Quaker Oats. You should eat it for breakfast every day. Loyal Canadians are proud of this great industry. The mills are at Peterborough.

If you are convenient to the store you'll probably buy the regular size package. For those who live in the country the large size family package is more satisfactory. The large package contains a piece of handsome china for the table.

Chapter 10

FIVE miles through the dark, under the breathless, expectant stars. The car was on the broad curve now where the road bent to the bluff above the river to pass the skeleton railroad bridge. But Harry knew neither place nor time. He was conscious only of motion—swift, swallow-like, irresistible—this and the racing pictures in his brain stenciled on the blur of night that closed around him. These pictures came and went—the last revel of the saints when he was Satan Sanderson, Hugh sneering at his calling, Jessica facing him with unbandaged eyes, Hallelujah Jones preaching on the street corner.

Something in Harry's brain seemed to snap. A tiny shutter, like that of a camera, fell down. His hands dropped from the steering wheel, and, swaying in his seat, he began to sing in a voice made high and uneven by the speed of the car:

"Palms of victory!
Crowns of glory!
Palms of victory I shall wear!"

He sang but the three lines, for suddenly the car left the road, the inflated tires rebounded from the steel ridge of the railroad track, the forward axle caught an iron signal post, and the great motor car, its shattered lamp jingling like a gong, its pistons thrusting in midair, reared on two wheels, hurling its occupant out like a pebble thrown from a sling, half turned and, leaving a trail of sparks like the tail of a rocket behind it, plunged heavily over the rim of the bluff into the river.

The forward axle caught an iron signal post.

A moment later the deep black waters of "the hole" had closed above the mass of sentient steel. The swift current had smoothed away every trace of the strange monster it had engulfed, and there by the side of the track, huddled against the broken signal post, his clothing plastered with mud and grime, motionless and with a nasty cut on the temple, lay Harry Sanderson.

A long, saturating peace, a deep and drenching darkness, had folded him. Dully at first, at length more insistently and sharply, a rhythmic pulsing sound began to annoy the quietude. K-track, k-track, k-track—it grew louder; it grew more momentous and material; it irritated the calm that had wrapped the animate universe. As though from an immeasurable distance he heard a low, continuous roar and now and again through the roar nearer voices.

Harry awoke. His mind awoke, but his eyes did not open at once, for the gentle swaying that cradled him was pleasant, and the muffled clack and hum soothed him like opium. He opened his eyes. It was daylight. He was lying on dusty boards that rattled and vibrated beneath him, the floor of an empty freight car in motion. A small brown dog, an abject, muddied and shivering morsel, was snuggled close to his side. It whined as if with joy to see his eyes opened, and its stubby tail beat the floor.

Harry turned his head. Two men in dingy garments were seated on the floor a little distance away thumbing a decrepit pack of cards over an empty box. He could see both side faces, one weather beaten and good humored, the other crafty—knights of the road.

The sudden movement had sent a momentary twinge to his temple. He put up his hand. It touched a coarse handkerchief that had been bound tightly about it. The corner hung down. It was soiled and stiff with blood. What was he doing there? Where was he? Who was he?

It came to him with a start that he actually for the moment did not know who he was—that he had ridiculously slipped the leash of his identity. He smiled at his predicament. He would lie quietly for a few moments, and it would come. Of course it would come!

Yet it did not come, though he lay many moments, the fingers of his mind fumbling for the latch of the closed door. He had waked perfectly well, all save the slight cut on his temple, and that was clearly superficial, a mere scratch. Not a trouble or anxiety marred his soul. His mind was as clear and light as a lark's. Body and brain together felt as if they had never had a serious ache in the world. But all that had preceded his awakening was gone from him as completely as though it had had no existence.

Stealthily he rose to a sitting posture and, with a frown of humorous perplexity, took a swift and silent inventory. He scanned his clothing. His coat was threadbare and, with mud, oil and coal dust, was in a more disreputable state. His wristbands were grimy, and one cufflink had been torn away. He had no hat.

He bethought himself of his pockets and went through them methodically one by one. They yielded several dollars in coin, a penknife and a tiny gold cross, but not a letter, not a scrap of paper, nothing to serve him. The gleam of a ring on his finger caught his eye. He rubbed away the dirt and carefully examined it, wondering if the stone was real. His hand was slightly cut and swollen, and the circlet would not come off, but by shifting it slightly he could see the white depression made by long wear. The setting was an odd one, formed of the twisted letters H. S. Those naturally should be his initials, but there he stopped. He repeated to himself all the names he could think of, beginning with S, but they told him nothing.

He looked himself over again carefully, reflectively. He put out his hand and laid it on the spaniel's head.

Its rough tongue licked his fingers. It held up one fore paw mutely and lamely. He drew the feverish, dirty little creature into his lap and examined the limp member. It was broken.

"Poor little beggar!" said he under his breath. "So you've been knocked out too!" With his knife he cut a piece from the lining of his coat and with a splinter of wood from the floor he set the fractured bone and wrapped the leg tightly. The dog submitted without a whimper, and when he set it down it lay quietly beside him watching him with affectionate canine solicitude.

"I wonder who we are, you and I!" muttered Harry Sanderson whimsically. "I wonder!"

The players looked around. One of them nodded approvingly.

"Right as a trivet!" he said. "I made a pretty good job of that cut of yours. Hurt you much?"

"No," said Harry. "I'm obliged to you for the attention."

"Foolish to walk on a railroad track," the other went on. "By your looks you've been on the road long enough to know better. We stopped to tank there, and we picked you up, you and your four legged mate. Must have been a bit squiffy, eh?"

He drank thirstily

He winked and took a flask from his pocket. "Have a hair of the dog that bit you?" he said.

Harry took the flask and, wiping the top on his sleeve, uncorked it. Something in the penetrating odor of the contents seemed to cleave through far mental wastes to an intimate, though mysterious, goal. He put it to his lips and drank thirstily.

As the burning liquid scorched his throat a recrudescence of old impulses surged up through the crust of more modern usage. The Harry Sanderson of the new, remorseful, temperate life, of chastened impulses, of rote and rule and reformed habit—the rector of St. James— been lost on that wild night r The man who had awakened in the freight car was the Satan Sanderson of four years before.

SINCE that tragical wedding day at the white house in the aspens Jessica had passed through a confusion of experiences. She had always lived much in herself, and to her natural reserve her blindness had added. As a result her knowledge both of herself and of life had been superficial. The first bitter shock of her catastrophe seemed to burn up in her the very capacity for further poignant suffering, and she went through the motions of life apathetically.

Change of scene and the declining health of David Stires occupied fortunately much of her waking thoughts. After the first few months of travel he failed steadily. His citric acid moods were forgotten, his harsh tempers put aside. Hour after hour he lay in his chair, gazing out from the wide sun parlor of the sanitarium on the crest of Smoky mountain, whither their journeying had finally brought them. He had never spoken of Hugh.

In time her fiercer pain had dulled, and her imagination, naturally so importunate, had begun to seize upon her surroundings. In the summer season the sanitarium had few guests, and for this she was thankful. Dr. Brent, its head, rallying her on her paleness, drove her out of doors with good natured severity, and when she was not with David Stires she walked or rode for hours at a time over the mountain trails. Breathing in the crisp air of altitude, her spirits grew more buoyant. She fed the squirrels, listened to the pert chirp of the whisky jack and the whirring drum of the partridge or sat on a hidden elevation which she named "The Knob," facing across the shallow valley to the south.

The knob overlooked a little grassy shelf a few hundred feet below, where stood a miner's cabin, with weed grown gravel heaps near by, in front of which a tree bore the legend painted roughly on a board, "The Little Paymaster Claim."

Her interest had opened eagerly to these scenes. The solitudes soothed, and the life of the community below, frankly primitive and uncomplicated, attracted her. Between the town of Smoky Mountain and the expensive sanitarium on the ridge a great social gulf was fixed. The latter's patrons for the most part came and went by the narrow gauge road that linked with northern junction. The settlement far below was only a feature of the panorama for which they paid so well. Even Dr. Brent, who had perched this place of healing where his patients could breathe air fresh from the Pacific and cooled by the snow peaks, knew it chiefly through two of its citizens—Mrs. Halloran, the capable, bustling wife of the proprietor of the Mountain Valley House, the town's single hostelry, who brewed old fashioned blackberry wine and cordials for his patients, and Tom Felder, a young lawyer whom he had known on the coast before ill health had sent him to hang out his shingle in a more genial altitude.

The latter sometimes came for a chat with the physician, and on one of these calls Jessica and he had met. She had liked his keen, good humored face and waving, slightly graying hair. She had met him once since on the mountain road, and he had walked with her and told her quaint stories of the townspeople. He had taken her to Mrs. Halloran, whose heart she had won by praise of her cherry cordial.

"It brings back my boyhood," David Stires said to her one afternoon, tapping the bottle by his wheel chair. "Somehow this has the old taste."

"It is nearly gone," she said. "I'll get another bottle. I am going for a ride now. I think it does you good."

"Before you go," he said, "fetch my writing case, and I will dictate a letter."

She brought and opened it with a trouble at her heart, for the request showed his increasing weakness. Until today the few letters he had written had been done with his own hand. Thinking of this as she waited, her fingers nervously plucked at the inside of the leather cover. The morocco flap fell and disclosed a slip of paper. It was a canceled bank draft. It bore Hugh's name, and across its face in David Stires' crabbed hand, written large, was the venomous word "Forgery."

The room swam before her eyes. Only by a fierce effort could she compel her pen to trace the dictated words. Hugh's misdeed, evil as it was, had been to her but an abstract crime. Now it suddenly lay bare before her, a concrete expression of coarse thievery, a living symbol of crafty simulation. Scarce knowing why she did it, she drew the draft covertly from its receptacle and slipped it into her bosom.

The evidence of Hugh's sin! That paper must remain, as the sin that made it remained, the sign manual of her dishonor and loss. The man whose hand had penned its lying signature was the man she had thought she loved. By that act he had thrust himself from her forever. Yet he lived. Somewhere in the world he walked in shame and degradation beyond the pale of honorable living, and she was his wife! She was his wife! Though she called herself Jessica Holme, yet in the law his name and fame were hers.

"Look at that steady hand now, an' her hair as red as glory!" said Mrs. Halloran, gazing admiringly from the doorstep where she had been chatting with Tom Felder. "Ye needn't stare yer gray eyes out, though, or she'll stop at the joolry shop to buy ye a ring—to shame ye fer jest hankerin' and sayin' nothin'!"

Felder laughed as he crossed the street, raising his felt hat gallantly to the approaching rider. Mrs. Halloran was a privileged character. It was not Michael Halloran who kept the Mountain Valley House popular! The old woman hurried to the curb and tied the horse as Jessica dismounted.

"How did ye guess I made some more this day?" she exclaimed. "Sure, if ye drink it yerself, my dearie, them cheeks is all th' trademark I need!" She led the way into the little carpeted side room, by courtesy denominated "the parlor." "I'll go an' put it up in two shakes," she said. "Bit ye down an' I'll not be ten minutes." So saying, she bustled away.

Left alone, Jessica gazed abstractedly about her. Her mind was still full of the painful reflections of her ride. A door opened from the room into the office. It was ajar. She stepped close and looked in.

A group of miners lounged in the space before the front windows—familiarly referred to by its habitues as "the amen corner"—chatting and watching the passersby.

Suddenly she clapped her hand to her mouth to stifle a cry. A name had been spoken—the name that was in her thought—the name of Hugh Stires. She leaned forward, listening breathlessly.

"I wonder where the young blackleg's been," said one, peering through the windows. "He'd better have stayed away for good, I'm thinking. What does he want to come back for, to a place where there aren't three men who will take a drink with him?"

Jessica looked about her an instant wildly, guiltily. She could not be mistaken in the name. Was Hugh here, whither by the veriest accident she had come—here in this very town that she had gazed down upon every day for weeks? Was he? No, no; it could not be! She had not heard aright. But she had an overwhelming desire to satisfy herself with her own eyes. From where she stood she could not see the street. She bethought herself of the upper balcony.

Swiftly she crossed to the hall door, threw it open and ran hastily up the stair.

MINES AND MINING

There is considerable mining activity on Summit Creek, in the Bayonne country.

Diamond drilling will be inaugurated on the Hattie Brown mine at Rossland.

The ninth level of the War Eagle mine at Rossland continues to improve with development.

Half a million dollars worth of Gold from Nome, arrived at Seattle last week on the steamer Victoria.

The Japanese mine at Ikeda Bay Queen Charlotte Islands, has been bought by a Scots syndicate for $200,000.

At Nome one man is dead and six others are seriously injured as the result of a succession of mining accidents with in the past few days.

The Lucky Jim mine near Kaslo is shipping to the Empire Zinc company of Denver, Col. The last 30 cars netted the own- $875 per car.

O. L. Knight and Co., have secured a contract to drill 18,000 feet in the Le Roi mine. They will operate 3 machines for the next six months.

E. M. Sandilands, formerly of Sandon, and latterly government agent at Jedway, is to be the new gold commissioner of the Queen Charlotte Islands.

The Contact group, now under bond to A. B. W. Hodges, and other officers of the Granby company, is one of the big things on on Moresby Island.

B. M. Synder, formerly of the B. C. Copper Co., is now smelter superintendent of the new plant of the Arizona United Mining company, at Johnson, Arizona.

The placer strikes on the Ididderat have caused a stampede amongst the miners at Nome. The point of the discovery is on a tributary of the lower Innoko.

A coal deal, involving 4,800 acres of coal lands in the Cedar District, Vancouver Island, is pending. Diamond drills and shafts have proved the existence of large measures of coal.

Thirty men, in a cage were dashed 1500 feet down the shaft of the La Paz mine at Maxahaula Mexico, last Friday, and rescue parties are making efforts to release them from the wreckage.

Tasso harbor camp on the west coast of Moresby Island is destined to become one of the biggest copper producers in B. C. The Warwick group of 17 claims has an enormous copper showing, fully 250 feet wide and opened up for 3000 feet.

Charles H. Rundberg, superintendent of the Dominion Copper mines at Phoenix for the past two years, has resigned. No successor has yet been appointed. Mr. Rundberg will leave shortly for Spokane, where he is considerably interested in real estate.

Work has commenced on the Midway coal property opposite the mouth of Myers creek this week. This coal measure is owned by a Greenwood syndicate consisting of Messrs Noyes, Bunting, Wickwire, East and McDonald. They own a 500 acre plot which has one seam 9 feet wide.

G. C. Taylor, of Phoenix, returned last week from the Big Bend country. He reports considerable hydraulic mining in that section. Mr. Taylor is operating the Montgomery group on Downie Creek and the McGregor group on Leforma Creek. The former is a copper property situated 45 miles north of Revelstoke, while the later is only 20 miles distant. The ore of the McGregor group is silver lead.

MIXED MUSTARD PICKLE

(A Lady's recipe.)

One quart of small onions.
One quart of small cucumbers.
One quart of sliced cucumbers.
One quart of green tomatoes.
One quart of cauliflower.
Six green peppers.

Soak in weak brine 24 hours, scald in same brine and strain.

Six tablespoonfuls of mustard.
One tablespoonful of turmeric
One small cup of flour.
One cup of brown sugar.
One quart of vinegar.

Heat the sugar and vinegar. When boiling pour in mustard, turmeric and flour, and cook altogether for about five minutes.

It is fifty years since the vast territory first known as the Moreton Bay district of New South Wales was constituted a separate colony under the name of Queensland. The colony was formally proclaimed the new colony on December 10, 1858.

E. W. Ruff, agent Sullivan machinery Co., of Rossland, was in town this week, accompanied by F. E. Armstrong. They visited the Mother Lode.

A large party of Greenwoodites drove to Midway on Wednesday evening to attend the presentation to Thomas Hardy. The smoker of the evening before prevented the number being larger.

Harry A. Hook, who was formerly a resident of Greenwood, and has been for the past two years in Cobalt and other mining centers, returned Wednesday to occupy a position with the B. C. Copper Co., assay staff.

J. Lewishon, a director of both the B. C. Copper Co. and the New Dominion Co., and J. Parke Channing, consulting engineer for the latter company, are registered at the Imperial hotel. They are inspecting the mines of the New Dominion.

Walter Forster, who died in Spokane Hospital on Aug. 23, was one of the oldest miners in the Province, having taken a miner's licence for about 50 years. For the greater part of the last 11 years he resided at Anaconda, and was respected by all his acquaintances for his honesty and integrity.

The Conservative Association meeting on Friday last was largely attended, some 50 being present. It was called to fill vacancies in the executive. Jas. McCreath was elected 1st vice-president, F. W. McLaine secretary in the place of J. W. Grier, resigned. J. P. McLeod was elected to the executive committee, as was W. W. Craig for Boundary Falls.

Eugene Field's Toast to the Ladies

THE WIMMIN!

So let us all; yes, by that love which all our lives rejoices,
By those dear eyes that speak to us with loves seraphic voices.
By those dear arms that will enfold us
when we sleep forever,
By those dear lips that kiss the lips that may give answer never,
By mem'ries lurking in our hearts an'
all our eyes bedimmin',
We'll drink a health to those we love an' who loves us—the wimmin!

TONIGHT

The Kettle River Fish and Game Protective association will meet at the city hall Friday evening at 8 o'clock. Come, and come on time.

CARD OF THANKS

I wish to take this opportunity of thanking my friends and the citizens of Greenwood generally, for the many kindnesses and expressions of sympathy tendered to me, during the sad days of last week. CHARLES KINNEY,

Since June, it is estimated that fire has destroyed timber to the amount of $5,000,000 in the State of Washington. Other parts of the Northwest have suffered in equal degree and the Forest Fire Association is making another appeal for great caution in the wooded districts.

AFTER THE GAME

When I cash in, and this poor race is run,
My chores performed, and all my errands done,
I know that folks, who mock my efforts here,
Will, weeping, bend above my lowly bier,
And bring large garlands, worth three bucks a throw,
And paw the ground in ecstasy of woe,
And friends will wear crepe bow-knots on their tiles,
While I look down (or up) a million miles,
And wonder why those people never knew,
How smooth I was until my spirit flew,
When I cash in I will not care a yen
For all the praise that's heaped upon me then;
Serene and silent, in my handsome box.
I shall not heed the laudatory talks,
And all the pomp and all the vain display
Will just be pomp and feathers thrown away,
So tell me now, while I am on the earth,
Your estimate of my surprising worth,
O tell me what a loo-loo-bird I am,
And fill me full of taffy and of jam.
WALT MASON.

OLYMPIC GAMES FOR EXPOSITION

It is proposed to hold a session of Olympic games at the 1912 exposition. There is no place in the world where there is a heartier general interest shown in sports than Western Canada, and there is no doubt the Olympic games in Winnipeg in 1912 would draw thousands of visitors to see the games, as well as numerous entries from all over the world. The successful Dominion meet held this summer in connection with the Winnipeg exhibition demonstrated ability to handle a big athletic meet in fairly good style, and the imperfections of that meet pointed the way to a correction of its faults. Of the many suggestions for making the 1912 exposition an attractive and successful event, none has been more pertinent than that which proposed the holding of an Olympic games meet.
