DELIGHTFUL OPERA SINGERS

Greenwood music lovers were well rewarded for their attendance on Monday night at the Auditorium when the English Grand Opera singers delighted everyone present by their charming singing and acting. Every item on the program pleased, and the small but well balanced orchestra were excellent. Especially charming was the graceful playing of Miss Bessie Zeller, violiniste, her rendering of Dvorak's Humoreske, stirred the entire audience. With the very limited space of this week's paper it is impossible to give an account of the entire program, but it is a pity that when the management has taken so much trouble to secure really good entertainments for us this winter so few turn out to show their appreciation, and enjoy a really first-class program by first-class singers and players.

DENORO NEWS

Mrs. P. W. Lover is on a visit to her father at Seattle.

Mr. C. F. Stork, of Greenwood, was a visitor in camp on Tuesday.

Stanley Smalley and family left last week for Seattle, where Mr. Smalley is opening up a real estate business.

Messrs. McLean and Read, of the Phoenix Miners' union, were visitors in camp last Friday on official business connected with the union.

Walter Auger and family, with a carload of effects, arrived at Eholt last Monday from Saskatchewan. Mr. Auger has recently bought C. T. Scott's ranch, for mixed farming.

GREENWOOD BOARD OF TRADE

Ten years ago Greenwood was visited by two hundred prominent business men of the larger cities of British Columbia, as guests of the C. P. R., and the local Board of Trade did themselves proud. They entertained the visitors royally at mine and smelter, at banquet and club. The address of welcome alone was an advertisement of our resources. But today what are we doing to encourage people to come here; to stay, when they get here, or to invest in our mountain mines or valley farms if they cannot remain themselves in our midst? Now that winter is here, it is a good time to get ready to pull together for Greenwood and district, and when Spring comes be ready to welcome the new arrivals the winter's advertising and work has brought in.

BENGOUGH

The noted cartoonist and entertainer, J. W. Bengough, kept Wednesday night's audience at the Auditorium in continual laughter. His drawing was excellent, and his humorous yarns and poems delightful. Capital cartoons of R. Wilson, the well known customs broker, J. McCreath, the popular head of the Greenwood Liquor Co., and R. T. Lowery, the famous editor of the Ledge, caused considerable mirth and the cartoons were later bought in by admirers. As an evening entertainer Mr. Bengough pleases all, and his farewell visit to Greenwood was a distinct success.

A BITTER CAMPAIGN

The whole of Great Britain is rent with political strife. Two great camps are warring against each other, those who support the action of the House of Lords in refusing to pass the Budget, and those who are in favor of the Budget. While there are several other minor issues before the British public, such as tarriff reform versus free trade, these are being pushed into the background by the great issue, the Budget. The general elections will take place about the 10th of January, and the nation will either have to endorse the action of the Lords, which means a general curtailment of national defense expenditure, or part with the long-cherished hereditary right of the upper house, which means nothing more or less than a political revolution.

MOTHER LODE NEWS

Mrs Bromley, Sunset mine, has returned to Spokane for the winter.

What's on Dec 15? "As you like it" at the Greenwood Auditorium.

The enthusiastic skater, who fell through the ice at the dam and became a human icicle before he got home, says "The two step for mine."

Christmas will be celebrated this year by the usual tree for the children and a grand ball at the boarding house. Elaborate preparations are under way.

A new skating rink, 50 feet by 100 feet is being constructed on the flat opposite the mine office. There are many good skaters at the mine and a lively time is being looked forward to by all.

SHAKESPEARE'S GREATEST COMEDY

All lovers of the best in drama will be delighted to hear that F. W. McLaine, the popular manager of the Greenwood Auditorium, has secured an elaborate production of "As You Like It," the most delightful of all Shakespeare's comedies, for Wednesday next, December 15. The company presenting "As You Like It" is from the Walker theater, in Winnipeg, and is composed almost entirely of English players. Special scenery, special new and rich costumes add greatly to the beauty of the performance. Everyone should be there. It will do everyone good to see this comedy.

IKEDA MINE

The Consolidated Mining and Smelting Co., of Trail, have purchased the Ikeda mine, Queen Charlotte islands, for approximately $200,000.

TRAINS REACH PRINCETON

The V., V. & E. line from Hedley to Princeton has been turned over from the construction department to the operating department, since the government inspector of railways has accepted this portion of the line. Regular trains will now run to Princeton. Work on the line to the coast is under way. Chief Engineer J. H. Kennedy has transferred his headquarters to Abbotsford, and L. M. Hale will take charge of the new westward construction.

A SECOND FORTUNE

Ross Thompson, the father of Rossland, and at one time rated as a Canadian millionaire, has acquired some rich copper properties at Yerington, Nevada, and probably will retrieve his ill luck of later years in the near future,

A pessimist is a person who has lived with an optimist.

WINTER SPORTS

Greenwood grumblers, who find fault with anything and everything when the first cold snap freezes up the water pipes, breaks the milk bottles, and reddens the noses, big and little, at least have one or two things to be thankful for in the winter time. In the good old summer time there is little or nothing to do, outside of tennis, and afternoon out-of-door bridge. We are not blessed with a lake to boat on or swim in, and the modern aeroplane has not yet reached our summer valleys; but when the winter's frosty bite pierces our ears and playfully draws a lace-like veil over our parlor windows there is one solace—curling. The Greenwood rink resounds with laughter every winter's night and could many a tale unfold, while the semi-annual collection of dear dead soldiers testifies to the amount of spirit that is put into the game. Besides this roaring sport we have a skating rink, where every evening the youth and beauty of the burg parade in pairs, hand in hand, skating gracefully, mostly on their feet, a most inspiring sight and one to be recommended to those who cannot get a skate on at the curling rink. Then winter supplies us with much crystal snow, and the most glorious mode of locomotion—sleighing. Any moonlight or other night sleighing can be made superbly enjoyable if the right companion be chosen, and this is a sport especially adapted to the bachelor, who is too busy to curl, too ungraceful to skate, to show he can handle a pair of large greys and a pair of small hands at the same time. For others, or for a change, there is tobogganing down the many hills—the thrilling excitement of a moment followed by a laborious dragging of the bobsleigh back up the hill and one more sensational flight before it's time to go home. No! winter is not slow, and for those who do not appreciate the outdoor sports a warm corner near the fire, a pipe, a glass, a book and a "thou" can always be found by those who seek, by all but the bald, the grey or the old—and they ought to be out in the cold, and they are.

CHRISTMAS GIVING

Here's still another Christmas drawing near, and almost all of us are planning some small token to be given with our real regards to someone we really do like. But there our giving should end. When we hear people say: "I suppose I must send So and So something for Christmas this year, he or she will be sure to send me something," we hear what is the mean side of all this giving and taking. And it is a mean side. The only gifts that count at all are the ones that stand as symbolic, that are the outward and visible signs of the real Christmas feeling, the tokens of regard and brotherly love and honest friendship, that all-necessary spice of life that makes every hazard and worry well worth while.

Give and give freely to those you like, and not for duty sake, if you want to carry out the true Christmas spirit. Duty calls, duty dances, and duty gifts are all in the same class—unnecessary and most tiresome. Then, when you receive by mail on December 25, a small parcel of flowers, a book or some simple present, something made for you, something thought out for you, you will know it means good will for you and to you for this Christmas, the next and all the rest of them; and your gifts should carry the same message and be not a duty presentation, but a pledge that a bit of your heart accompanies each one.

VANCOUVER PROSPERITY

Magnificent Offices for Vancouver Corporation.

The Dominion Stock and Bond Corporation, of Vancouver, is now installed in the new Winch building.

Vancouver's commercial progress is aptly illustrated by the growth and prosperity of her financial institutions. Changes are being made on every hand, and office accommodation that was more than adequate a year ago, is now disgarded as being insufficient to handle the volume of business transacted. Among those recently installed in new quarters is the Dominion Stock and Bond Corporation, Vancouver, Ltd., whose premises rank with the finest in Western Canada.

These new offices are exceptionally spacious, and impress the visitor at once with a sense of architectural substantibility and munificence; the high ceilings make for an abundance of light and air; the floors of polished hardwood; the counters and interior fittings of massive quartered oak, and the electric fixtures of polished brass richly designed and carefully executed. The location is most central, being in the recently completed Winch building, directly next door to Vancouver's new postoffice, on Hastings street.

The corporation carries on a large general real estate, financial and insurance business. They buy and sell realty of all kinds, purchase agreements of sale, make loans, collect rents, and engage in company promotion. They have extensive connections in the old country. The office staff is composed of capable and reliable men whose thorough knowledge of the intricate details of real estate, financial and insurance business qualifies them to serve clients advantageously and thoroughly.

It is the purpose of the Dominion Stock and Bond Corporation, of Vancouver, Ltd., to erect a modern ten-story brick and stone office building, in a central location, on Hastings street, and arrangements are being made to rush the work to completion. A number of representative business and financial men are interested in this enterprise, which will add another imposing structure to Vancover's rapidly growing list of sky scrapers.

The master of Elibank is a firm believer in the art of judiciously sprinkling his speeches with good stories. One such anecdote he tells concerns a Highland farmer who once handed a parcel in at a small Scottish railway office. "Do you think," he asked the man in charge, "that it's well enough tied to trust going in the van?" "Weel, I'll see," answered the porter, dropping it with a crash. "It'll get that here, an' it'll get that at the junction," giving it another bang, "an' it'll get that at Dundee," banging it so furiously that the contents scattered all over the floor. "If it be going further than Dundee," he remarked at last, "it'll nae do at all."

TORTURED BY PILES

Could not Rest! Could not Work! Could not Play!

How Zam Buk Brought Relief

Mr. Julius Glacier of Denbigh, Ont., says: I was so tortured by piles that I could not get ease whether lying down, sitting, or standing. The ailment robbed me of strength, of appetite, and of all desire to live! I had suffered so long and so acutely that I came to think there was no ease for me, but one day I found that I was wrong!

"I was told that Zam-Buk cured piles, and that this balm was altogether different to ordinary ointments, scores of which I have proved useless for so bad a case as mine was. I got a supply of Zam-Buk, and began to use it regularily,

"Without going into necessary details in a few weeks I found myself cured. I owe my cure to Zam Buk entirely, and I trust my experience will be the means of leading other sufferers to try this great herbal balm."

Nothing need be added to this plain powerful testimony save one question—if you suffer like Mr. Glacier did, why not get relief from the same source as he did?

Zam-Buk—as he truly says—is "something different', to the ordinary ointments and salves. It is a powerful combination of healing and soothing herbal essences. No mineral astringents or poisons; no impure animal fats.

It is a powerful cure for inflamed areas (as in piles) erysipelas, eczema, ulcers, sores, abscesses, cold cracks, chapped hands, burns, cuts scalp sores, and all skin injuries and diseases. It is the most suitable balm for children's rashes. All Druggists and Stores at 50c. box or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price.

Government reports show that Alaska was second as a gold producer in 1908, among the states and territories of the United States. It yielded yellow metal valued at $19,858,800, or two-and-a-half times as much as was paid for the district in the sixties. Colorado led Alaska only by two millions, and the indications are, that with the opening of the new camps just reported, in another year or two Alaska will be the first in the gold producing localities of the United States.

The peculiar properties of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, have been thoroughly tested during epidemics of influenza, and when it was taken in time we have not heard of a single case of pneumonia. Sold by Druggists and Dealers.

WELCOME WORDS TO WOMEN

Women who suffer with disorders peculiar to their sex should write to Dr. Pierce and receive free the advice of a physician of over 40 years' experience—a skilled and successful specialist in the diseases of women. Every letter of this sort has the most careful consideration and is regarded as sacredly confidential. Many sensitively modest women write fully to Dr. Pierce what they would shrink from telling to their local physician. The local physician is pretty sure to say that he cannot do anything without "an examination." Dr. Pierce holds that these distasteful examinations are generally needless, and that no woman, except in rare cases, should submit to them.

Dr. Pierce's treatment will cure you right in the privacy of your own home. His "Favorite Prescription" has cured hundreds of thousands, some of them the worst of cases.

It is the only medicine of its kind that is the product of a regularly graduated physician. The only one good enough that its makers dare to print its every ingredient on its outside wrapper. There's no secrecy. It will bear examination. No alcohol and no habit-forming drugs are found in it. Some unscrupulous medicine dealers may offer you a substitute. Don't take it. It may trifle with your health. Write to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, President, Buffalo, N. Y.,—take the advice received and be well.

searching and deep seated, that took his breath and left each time an increasing giddiness. Whatever inner hurt this might betoken, he must hide it the sooner to leave the hospital, where each hour brought nearer the inevitable disclosure.

He thanked fortune now for the chapel game. Few enough in Aniston would care to see the unfrocked, disgraced rector of St. James'. He did not know that the secret was Bishop Ludlow's own until the hour when he opened his eyes after a fitful sleep upon the latter's face.

The bishop was the first visitor, and it was his first visit, for he had been in a distant city at the time of the fire. Waiting the waking, he had been mystified at the change a few months had wrought in the countenance of the man whose disappearance had cost him so many sleepless hours. The months of indulgence and rich living—on the money he had won from Harry—had taken away Hugh's slightness, and his fuller cheeks were now of the contour of Harry's own. But the bishop distinguished new lines in the face on the pillow, an expression unfamiliar and puzzling. The firmness and strength were gone, and in their place was a haunting something that gave him a flitting suggestion of the discarded that he could not shake off.

Waking, the unexpected sight of the bishop startled Hugh. To the good man's pain he had turned his face away.

"My dear boy," the bishop had said, "they tell me you are stronger and better. I thank God for it!"

He spoke gently and with deep feeling. How could he tell to what extent he himself, in mistaken severity, had been responsible for that unaccustomed look? When Hugh did not answer the bishop misconstrued the silence. He leaned over the bed. The big cool hand touched the fevered one on the white coverlid, where the ruby ring glowed, a coal in snow.

"Harry," he said, "you have suffered—you are suffering now. But think of me only as your friend. I ask no questions. We are going to begin where we left off."

"I would like to do that," said Hugh, "to begin again. But the chapel is gone."

"Never mind that," said the bishop cheerfully. "You are only to get well. We are going to rebuild soon, and we want your judgment on the plans. Aniston is hanging on your condition, Harry," he went on. "There's a small cartload of visiting cards downstairs for you. But I imagine you haven't begun to receive yet, eh?"

"We are going to begin where we left off."

"I—I've seen nobody." Hugh spoke hurriedly and hoarsely. "Tell the doctor to let no one come—no one but you. I—I'm not up to it."

"Why, of course not," said the bishop quickly. "You need quiet, and the people can wait."

The bishop chatted awhile of the parish, Hugh replying only when he must, and went away heartened. Before he left Hugh saw his way to hasten his own going. On the next visit the seed was dropped in the bishop's mind so cleverly that he thought the idea his own. That day he said to the surgeon in charge:

"He is gaining so rapidly I have been wondering if he couldn't be taken away where the climate will benefit him. Will he be able to travel soon?"

"I think so," answered the surgeon. "We suspected internal injury at first, but I imagine the worst he has to fear is the disfigurement. Mountain or sea air would do him good," he added reflectively. "What he will need is tonic and building up."

The bishop had revolved this in his mind. He knew a place on the coast, tucked away in the cypresses, which would be admirable for convalescence. He could arrange a special car, and he himself could make the journey with him. He proposed this to the surgeon and with his approval put his plan in motion. In two days more Hugh found his going fully settled.

The idea admirably fitted his necessity. The spot the bishop had selected was quiet and retired and, more, was near the port at which he could most readily take ship for South America. Only one reflection made him shiver—the route lay through the town of Smoky Mountain. Yet who would dream of looking for a fugitive from the law in the secluded car that carried a sick man? The risk would be small enough, and it was the one way open.

On the last afternoon before the departure Hugh asked for the clothes he had worn when he was brought to the hospital, found the gold pieces he had snatched in the burning chapel and tied them in a handkerchief about his neck. They would suffice to buy his sea passage. The one red counter he had kept—it was from henceforth to be a reminder of the good resolutions he had made so long ago—he slipped into a pocket of the clothes he was to wear away, a suit of loose, comfortable tweed.

Waiting restlessly for the hour of his going, Hugh asked for the newspapers. Since the first he had had them read to him each day, listening fearfully for the hue and cry. But today the surgeon put his request aside.

"After you are there," he said, "if Bishop Ludlow will let you. Not now. You are almost out of my clutches, and I must tyrannize while I can."

A quick look passed from him to his assistant as he spoke, for the newspapers that afternoon had worn startling headlines. The sordid affairs of a mining town across the ranges had little interest for Aniston, but the names of Stires and Moreau on the clicking wire had waked it thus late to the sensation. The professional caution of the tinker of human bodies wished, however, that no excitement should be added to the unavoidable fatigue of his patient's departure.

This fatigue was near to spelling defeat, after all, for the exertion brought again the dreadful stabbing pain, and this time it carried Hugh into a region where feeling ceased, consciousness passed and from which he struggled back finally to find the surgeon bending anxiously over him.

"I don't like that sinking spell," the latter confided to his assistant an hour later as they stood looking through the window after the receding carriage. "It was too pronounced. Yet he has complained of no pain. He will be in good hands at any rate." He tapped the glass musingly with his forefinger. "It's curious," he said after a pause. "I always liked Sanderson in the pulpit. Somehow he doesn't appeal to me at close range."

The special car which the bishop had ready had been made a pleasant interior. Fern boxes were in the corners, a caged canary swung from a bracket, and a softly cushioned couch had been prepared for the sick man. A moment before the start, as it was being coupled to the rear of the resting train, while the bishop chatted with the conductor, a flustered messenger boy handed him a telegram. It read:

I arrive Anniston tomorrow 5. Confidential. Must see you. Urgent.

JESSICA.

The bishop read it in some perplexity. It was the first word he had received from her since her marriage; but, aware of Hugh's forgery and disgrace, he had not wondered at this. The newspapers today pictured a still worse shame for her in the position of the man who in the name still was her husband, who had trod so swiftly the downward path from thievery to the worst of crimes. Could Jessica's coming have to do with that? He must see her, yet his departure could not now be delayed. He consulted with the conductor, and the latter pored over his tablets.

As a result his answering message flashed along the wires to Jessica's faraway train:

Sanderson injured. Taking him to coast train 48 due Twin Peaks 2 tomorrow afternoon.

And thus the fateful moment approached when the great appeal should be made.

* * * * * * *

The evidence of the first day's trial of the case of the people against Hugh Stires was the all engrossing topic that night in Smoky Mountain. Barney McGinn perhaps aptly expressed the consensus of opinion when he said, "I allow we all know he's guilty, but nobody believes it."

Late as Smoky Mountain sat up that night, however, it was on hand next morning, rank and file, when the court convened.

All the previous evening, save for a short visit to the cell of his client, Felder had remained shut in his office, thinking of the morrow. In his talk with Harry he had not concealed his deep anxiety, but to his questions there was no new answer, and he had returned from the interview more nonplused than ever. He had wondered that Jessica on this last night did not come to his office, but had been rather relieved than otherwise that she did not. He had gone to bed heavy with discouragement and had waked in the morning with foreboding.

As he turned from greeting his client in the packed courtroom Felder noted with surprise that Jessica was not in her place; not that he needed her further testimony, for he had drawn from her the day before all he intended to utilize, but her absence disturbed him, and instinctively he turned and looked across the sea of faces toward the door.

Harry's glance followed his, and a deeper pain beleaguered it as his eyes returned to the empty chair. He saw Mrs. Halloran whisper eagerly with the lawyer, who turned away, with a puzzled look. In his bitterness the thought came to him that the testimony had sapped her conviction of his innocence; that his refusal to answer her entreaties had been the last straw to the load under which it had gone down; that she believed him indeed the murderer of Moreau. To seem the cringing criminal, the pitiful liar and actor in her eyes! The thought stung him. Her faith had meant so much.

The ominous feeling weighed heavily on Felder when he rose to continue the testimony for the prisoner, so rudely disturbed the evening before. In such a community pettifogging was of no avail. Throwing expert dust in jurors' eyes would be worse than useless. In his opening words he made no attempt to conceal the weakness of the defense, evidentially considered. Stripped of all husk, his was to be an appeal to Caesar.

Through a cloud of witnesses concisely, consistently, yet with a winning tactfulness that disarmed the objections of the prosecution, he began to lead them through the series of events that had followed the arrival of the self forgotten man. Out of the mouths of their own neighbors—Devlin, Barney McGinn, Mrs. Halloran, who came down weeping—they were made to see as in a cyclorama the struggle for rehabilitation against hatred and suspicion, the courage that had dared for a child's life, the honesty of purpose that showed in self surrender. The prisoner, he said, had recovered his memory before the accusation and asserted his absolute innocence. Those who believed him guilty of the murder of Dr. Moreau must believe him also a vulgar liar and poseur. He left the inference clear: If the prisoner had fired that cowardly shot he knew it now; if he lied now he had lied all along, and the later life he had lived at Smoky Mountain, eloquent of fair dealing, straightforwardness of purpose, kindliness and courage, had been but hypocrisy, the bootless artifice of a shallow buffoon.

The session was prolonged past the noon hour, and when Felder rested his case it seemed that all that was possible had been said. He had done his utmost. He had drawn from the people of Smoky Mountain a dramatic story and had filled in its outlines with color, force and feeling. And yet as he closed the lawyer felt a sick sense of failure.

Court adjourned for an hour, and in the interim Felder remained in a little room in the building, whither Dr. Brent was to send him sandwiches and coffee from the hotel.

"You made a fine effort, Tom," the latter said as they stood for a moment in the emptying courtroom. "You're doing wonders with no case, and the town ought to send you to congress on the strength of it! I declare, some of your evidence made me feel as mean as a dog about the rascal, though I knew all the time he was as guilty as the devil."

The lawyer shook his head. "I don't blame you, Brent," he said, "for you don't know him as I do. I have seen much of him lately, been often with him, watched him under stress, for he doesn't deceive himself; he has no thought of acquittal! We none of us knew Hugh Stires. We put him down for a shallow, vulgar blackleg, without redeeming qualities. But the man we are trying is a gentleman, a refined and cultivated man of taste and feeling. I have learned his true character during these days."

"Well," said the other, "if you believe in him, so much the better. You'll make the better speech for it. Tell me one thing. Where was Miss Holme?"

"I don't know."

Chapter 30

TO stand face to face with Harry Sanderson—that had been Jessica's sole thought. The news that the bishop, with the man she suspected, was speeding toward her—to pass the very town wherein Hugh stood for his life—seemed a prearrangement of eternal justice. When the telegram reached her he had already gone by Twin Peaks. To proceed would be to pass the coming train. At a farther station, however, she was able to take a night train back, arriving again at Twin Peaks in the gray dawn of the next morning.

When the train for which she waited came in, the curtained car at its end, she did not wait for the bishop to find her on the platform, but stepped aboard and made her way slowly back. It started again as she threaded the last Pullman, to find the bishop on its rear platform peering out anxiously at the receding station.

He took both her hands and drew her into the empty drawing room. He was startled at her pallor. "I know," he said pityingly. "I have heard."

She winced. "Does Aniston know?"

"Yes," he answered. "Yesterday's newspapers told it."

She put her hand on his arm. "Can you guess why I was coming home?" she asked. "It was to tell Harry Sanderson! I know of the fire," she went on quickly, "and of his injury. I can guess you want to spare him strain or excitement, but I must tell him!"

He reflected a moment. He thought he guessed what was in her mind. If there was any one who had ever had an influence over Hugh for good it was Harry Sanderson. He himself, he thought, had none. Perhaps, remembering their old comradeship, she was longing now to have this influence exerted to bring Hugh to a better mind, thinking of his eternal welfare, of his making his peace with his Maker.

"Very well," he said. "Come," and led the way into the car.

Jessica followed, her hands clinched tightly. She saw the couch, the profile on its cushions turned toward the window where forest and stream slipped past—a face curiously like Hugh's! Yet it was different, lacking the other's strength, even its refinement. And this man had molded Hugh! These vague thoughts lost themselves instantly in the momentous surmise that filled her imagination. The bishop put out his hand and touched the relaxed arm.

The trepidation that darted into the bandaged face as it turned upon the girlish figure, the frosty fear that blanched the haggard countenance, spoke Hugh's surprise and dread. It was she, and she knew the real Harry Sanderson was in Smoky Mountain. Had she heard of the chapel fire, guessed the imposture and come to denounce him, the guilty husband she had such reason to hate? The twitching limbs stiffened. "Jessica!" he said in a hoarse whisper.

"Harry," said the bishop, "Jessica is in great trouble. She has come with sad

MINES AND MINING

An important strike has been made in the Tip Top mine shaft, 60 feet deep, of ore measuring 10 feet across, with values of $15 per ton in copper, gold and silver.

A special general meeting of the Stockholders of the Crescent Mines Limited, Non-personal Liability, will be held on Tuesday, December 14, at 11 a. m. at 1375 Old Colony Bldg. Chicago, to ratify the action of the Board of Directors in the sale of the property and equipment to the Greenwood-Phoenix Tramway & Development company, for two hundred thousand shares of their capital stock.

Do you know that work has been resumed at the Greenwood-Phoenix tunnel; that work is being carried on continuously at the Argo tunnel; that the smelter and Mother Lode mine are working at their full capacity; that the No. 7 mine will erect a big concentrator; that a general wave of mining re-activity exists in the Boundary, and that this coming Christmas will be a merry one, and the New Year one of real prosperity.

A convention of mine owners and others interested in the producting and marketing of Zinc ores is called by the Nelson Board of Trade to take place December 15th at 10 a. m. at the Board of Trade rooms. The matters under discussion are: The establishment of a zinc smelter in this country; the establishment of home manufactories of zinc products; the asking for government aid for assistance in experiments; the asking for a bounty on zinc similar to that at present in force for lead; The asking for the increase of duty on zinc ore products, such as spelter, oxides, etc., which now come into this country, principally from the United States, either free of duty or at a low tariff.

There are many Cough mixtures, but only one Allen's Lung Balsam; try it.

"Willie," said the boss to the junior office boy, "my aunt died last night and as I shall be absent the rest of the day, I'll leave you to look after things." "All right, sir," rejoined the youthful student of human nature. "And I hope you will see a good game."

"The D. & L." Emulsion is taken with the greatest benefit by those suffering with Lung troubles with tendency to hemorrhages. A few bottles taken regularly make a wonderful improvement.

Last Saturday Jeff Wilcox, of Anaconda, was sentenced to eight months in the Nelson gaol by Judge Brown for his attempt to commit suicide.

FIFTY THOUSAND SHARES

To provide funds for the development of its coal properties near Midway.

The company owns the coal rights of 2,458 acres of land and has options on three square miles additional. Work has been done in development continuously since September 2, and a tunnel is now being driven to cross-cut three seams which show on the surface. Coal can be delivered from the mouth of this tunnel to the C. P. R. tracks below by gravity.

Development work done thus far is as follows:

One prospecting tunnel on the surface of the seam, 50 feet in length.

One shaft and drifts, about 45 feet, all in the coal seam.

One shaft and incline, following the proven seam to the depth of 80 feet.

An analysis of the surface coal returns 66 per cent carbon and only 3 per cent ash.

The Company owns other properties, including fruit lands, mineral claims, options on mineral claims, mines and timber limits. Its coal holdings alone are considered worth more than its issued capital stock. An investment in this stock at the present price should be immensely productive.

This is an opportunity of which you should take advantage without delay.
