Celebration by the Bonner's Ferry Folk a Big Affair

As mentioned in last issue of the Review, the action of the Great Northern R. R. people in cutting Creston off without a special for the 4th, after they had been sent a certified cheque to pay for same, was a great disappointment and a hardship to the people of Creston.

The few who went down from Creston, Mr. and Mrs. R. Bevan, Miss Bradley and Floyd Rodgers are enthusiastic as regards the treatment they received, the B. F. people meeting them with open arms and even placing an auto at their disposal.

They carried out a fine program of sports: Horse races, Indian war dance with 50 Indians in costumes trimmed in ermine and studded with beads.

There was a motor cycle race in which occurred an accident but no one was hurt.

T. G. PROCTER KILLED BY AUTO AT VICTORIA

T. G. Procter, a pioneer of the Kootenays, well known in this district and at one time interested in mining claims at Nelson, was found dead at Victoria Wednesday morning.

At an early hour in the morning the police found on the car tracks near Oak Bay a body which on investigation seemed to indicate that the dead man was T. G. Procter. Papers in his pockets bore Mr. Procter's name and address. There is little doubt of his identity. It is learned he was run down by an auto and the police have arrested the man whose machine caused his death.

Thomas G. Procter came to Kootenay in 1891 from the middle western States, where he was engaged for some years in the cattle ranching business, and for the past score of years has been one of the most popular and widely known residents of this province.

He was the original owner of the Allen Mine on Goat Mountain.

Last year he was appointed general manager of the Lucky Jim Zinc mines.

He was in Nelson about six weeks ago on business connected with the mine.

LOCAL ORANGEMEN IN CHURCH PARADE

Sunday evening the officers and members of Creston Loyal Orange Lodge, No. 2095, marched to the Methodist Church in a body, preceded by their beautiful new standard in the hands of six standard bearers.

The march from the hall to the church was carried out in good order and as they approached the latter building the congregation were singing the soul inspiring and martial hymn, "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

Two by two they entered the church and occupied the seats reserved for their use and joined in the singing.

Then followed prayer by the pastor and the sermon in which the pastor, Rev. F. L. Carpenter appealed to the standard-bearers of Christianity to look well to their weapons, and above all to let the issues involved, which are important, eternal in fact, take hold not only of their minds, and their politics, but of their hearts.

The church was filled and additional seats had to be procured to accommodate the congregation.

FOR SALE—The beautiful home with its magnificent flowers, well appointed lawn and flowerin shrubbery, lately vacated by the Rev. P. Hayman, is for sale or will rent to a desirable tenant. For further particulars enquire from T. M. Edmondson, Creston B. C.

MIDNIGHT FIRE AT CANYON CITY

Early Thursday morning, while the members of the road construction crew who are working just outside of Canyon City, were sleeping the sleep of the just, a dog began to bark. On the stillness of the early morning the sound was like a thunder peal, so thought Jim Scott, and promptly woke to investigate. Judge of his surprise to see the barn of what is known as Rodger's old pole camp a mass of flames he woke the other occupants of the bunk house, which was only a few feet from the barn and then began a fight to save the horses but had to abandon several sets of harness.

Jim Scott received burns on the arm and had the hair singed on his head. The dog and the dog are the heroes of the occasion.

WEDDING BELLS AND CHARIVARI

On Tuesday evening, July 8th, in the quiet of the evening, "when all the air a solemn stillness holds," two of our young people, Alfred Coekreili and Susie Price, were quietly married at the home of the bride's parents, Mr and Mrs. Price, Rev. F. L. Carpenter, officiating. But hark, what a din! Breaking upon the quiet of the evening hour, it is the numerous friends and acquaintances of bride and groom, who have taken a hand in the proceedings and are bent on giving the now nappy couple a send-off that they will remember as long as they live.

The Review joins in best wishes to the happy couple.

Coming in the morning train Wednesday were two people who seemed quite nappy but awfully anxious to see Rev. F. L. Carpenter. They registered at the King George Hotel and then set out to find the minister.

In the early afternoon having found the minister, Mrs. Mildred Holden, of Kaslo, became Mrs Caspar Asprass, and on the afternoon train husband and wife left for their new home in Kaslo. Mr. Asprass has been living at Trail.

Saturday afternoon little Marlon Ash, daughter of Fred Ash, of the Creston Mercantile Co., while playing near the C. P. R. depot, climbing the fence, fell backwards to the ground, several feet below and sustained a compound fracture of the arm just above the elbow.

Nerves on Edge Every Sound Annoys

Weak, worn-out nerves keep one in a constant state of irritability and excitement. The eyes are sensitive to light, and every noise jars on the overworked nerves. If children are about they are a constant source of annoyance and irritation. Every day seems to slum, and a little extra excitement or exertion leads to wakeful nights, nervous headache or indigestion. In this condition women are likely to be hysterical, and suffer greatly at regular periods. The nerves must be nourished back to vigor by such treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. The Creston Review

The Review is the acknowledged advertising medium of the Creston valley, circulating in nearly one thousand homes throughout the Creston district and reaching out in a broad manner into other communities. Our advertising rates are based on the scale of the Kootenay and Boundary Printers' Board of Trade. Land purchase and land lease notices, $7 for statutory time. Display advertisements, $1 per inch per month; other advertising 10 cents per line first issue and 5 cents per line in succeeding weeks. Subscription rates $2.00 a year in advance. Our columns are open to contributions dealing in matters of local interest and the welfare of the community. Contributions must be brief and signed.

A. B. S. Stanley Editor and Manager

Railway and express companies are making determined effort this season to provide the needed service for Kootenay fruit growers, especially with a view to handling the berry crop and other small fruit shipments. Important testimony as to marketing conditions has been brought out in last few days before the provincial labor commission, indicating in a forcible manner the good results possible to growers using reasonable intelligence and system in their business. It was stated by William Anderson, for instance, that given a good market, a rancher could make a living on five acres of small fruit and vegetables. The witness stated that he had about 2,000 trees from which he sold apples that netted him $1 per box at the siding. Strawberries, he said brought $2 per box and were shipped as far east as Winnipeg.

Lawrence Fortescue, comptroller of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, is now on his way to England in order to gather in recruits for that service. It has been found impossible to obtain a sufficient number of recruits among Canadians, hence the Comptroller's trip to the Old Land. It may also be remarked incidentally that three-quarters of the force are old countrymen. And still we go on prating about how we can man navies and things in time of peace. As a matter of cold fact, we can do nothing of the sort. Canadians do not take naturally to military life not to the restraint imposed by service in a navy. And then again the population of Canada is largely made up of those who came from European countries to Canada with a full knowledge of the disagreeable features of military service in their native land. If further proof be needed as to the fallacy of any such scheme as a Canadian manned navy in times of peace, the experience of the Northwest Mounted Police, where the service is many times more attractive to the average Canadian than if life on the high seas, has supplied it—Saturday Night.

TOO MUCH MIDDLEMAN

By S. J. FEE, Calgary

[This article was handed to us for publication and as it deals with a subject of vital importance to every consumer and also suggests a possible remedy, we print the whole article. It is clipped from the July issue of Fruit and Farm.—Ed.]

This seems to be the chief reason for high prices to the consumer and for low returns to the producer. Every great business has been built from small beginnings, with a constant struggle for better methods. A business that stands still is in reality going backwards. The present time is a time of progress—rapid progress. It is not enough to keep abreast of the present. We must plan for the future. "Keep your light shining a little ahead of the rest."

One not in touch with the prairie markets would hardly understand their wonderful development in the past ten years. Small towns grow to cities these cities greatly spread out, making great differences in the conditions. Still the marketing of the fruit is done practically the same way. The expense is considerable, but the waste is the main loss, and it is far heavier than is generally understood—if understood at all.

Calgary now claims a population of nearly 80,000. The dealer still waits for the different wholesalers' salesmen to call, give him prices and sell to him. The dealer must really come in contact with all these salesmen before being sure of "buying right." This makes the cost of selling high and wastes a lot of the retailer time that should be devoted to taking care of his trade. So we must add to the salaries of these city salesmen the valuable time which they waste for the retailer.

What is the solution? A wholesale market where all cars and express goods could be consigned. Here the retailer could come early in the morning and secure the best of his trade in the way of fruits and small vegetables, have them in his store by opening time and be free to devote his time to selling.

This wholesale market would bring producer and retailer together with only one middleman in place of many as now. The fruit would be immediate contact with the trade, not a case, as often is, of the oldest being sold and the freshest being held back. The elimination of all unnecessary middlemen would mean lower prices to the consumer, and so greatly increase consumption. The return to the producer

In an editorial on the Duke of Connaught's decision to return to Canada, the Times of London England says that the democracy of Canada, like the democracy at home have shown themselves shrewd judges of the character of exalted personages. By M. QUAD.
[Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.]

I AM making 50 per cent profit on my various remedies for the cure of what ails mankind, but there are times when I grow weary.

I can draw a man back from the yawning grave, but when my remedies won't grow a new leg to replace the wooden one I am called a fraud.

I can save the child dying of fever, but because I can't substitute something for his red hair mothers drive me from the door as a faker.

I take a tintype of man or woman at half price and in nine cases out of ten am blamed that it looks homely and natural. I save man or woman from a suicide's grave when laboring under despondency, and hope returns to them only to blame me for butting in.

I smile as I count my profits, but I weep tears when I think of the injustice of this world.

Besides lifting up the lowly, encouraging the sorrowing, selling my remedies, taking tintypes and showing my maclegé some one threw a turnip and hit me on the jaw. From thence on I exhibited only pictures showing that the wages of sin are from four to ten dollars a day, with board and washing and theater tickets thrown in, and the audience went wild with enthusiasm. I could not close my eyes to the fact that the drift of the times was toward wickedness and that the traveling agents of family Bibles must be living on onions and sleeping in fence corners.

Next day, while I was driving over the highway from Jump Off to Stop Here, I met a cavalcade. My innocent face, venerable whiskers and bearing insure me respect. In most cases the cavalcade removes its hats and bows low before me. In this case as a sign of the degeneracy of the times the cavalcade halted, and the leader asked me what I would take for my whiskers. I had not yet recovered from my astonishment when another man dismounted and climbed up on the wheel of my wagon and actually gave a tug at my whiskers to see if they were false. Then they called me old man and old boy and old hoss, and one of them tried to spit tobacco juice in my fighting dog's eyes. As I drove on it just did seem to me that the end of the world was at hand. In imagination I could see the destruction of Sodom and hear the yells of its perishing inhabitants.

A Spirit of Levity.
Hearing reached the town itself, I observed that a spirit of levity and gaiety pervaded the place; but, though it might be owing to the fact that there was a man in town from Denver trying to sell folding bathtubs and hair-brushes, I opened my show by introducing Pilgrim Joe's Alternative, which is a well known remedy for drawing folks back from the grave. I had scarcely announced that the price still remained 25 cents, notwithstanding the panic, when a crowd began to hoot. In selling this alternative I usually tell a little story. It is about a fond mother whose sunny haired little boy gets in the way of a brick house and is crushed to a pulp. The mother sits grieving over the remains and waiting out that there is no more happiness for her on this earth when an angel comes flying down with a bottle of my justly celebrated remedy in her hand. She pats the grieving mother on her head and then sprinkles some of the alternative over the remains of the child. In five minutes he is chasing grasshoppers and the mother is laughing in glee and wondering when the next circus will come along.

TINTYPES AT HALF PRICE

moving pictures as I travel about the country, I also collect statistics for the agricultural bureau at Washington and keep tab on human nature as I find it in various localities.

It grieves me to say that in carrying out this latter duty I have been forced to the conclusion that human nature is gradually but surely losing its reverence for sacred things. Not a week goes past but what I find a dozen instances of it, and it hurts me more than I can tell.

The Town of Jump Off.
Two years ago I exhibited my moving pictures at the town of Jump Off, which was founded as a future rival of Chicago and had seven murders and nine elopements the first year. When I showed the picture of General Washington at Valley Forge—emaciated, starved, discouraged and almost ready to trade American independence for a pumpkin pie—there was a breathless silence in the audience for a minute, and then sobs and tears broke forth from every point of the hall. Men who had not shed a tear when their mothers-in-law died now broke down and had to be led from the hall and in some cases, as I afterward learned, did not take a hand at poker for the next two weeks. I was told of women that went home and wept for three days and could not be comforted and of little children that wanted to send their food to the starving patriots.

Last week I got around to show my pictures in the same town again. There was a still larger audience, and I thought I observed an increased look of reverence on their faces. After collecting my statistics as to the number of cucumbers per acre raised in that part of Kansas this year I mounted the platform and started the show with the same old pictures. It was Washington sitting in his log house at Valley Forge. He was the most sorrowful looking skeleton ever exhibited to the public outside of an anatomical museum. I expected great results, and I got 'em. Instead of tears and sobs, the picture no sooner appeared on the canvas than irreverent voices called out:

"Fat him up!"
"Feed him pudding and milk!"
"Give him chop suey!"
"Hey, George, old boy, where's your fried oysters?"

My grief and astonishment can hardly be imagined. As I looked at the audience in a reproachful way the audience continued to hoot and guff, and I had to take the picture off. The audience even booed me. I then exhibited a picture of Satan walking arm in arm with a Boston Alderman that had sold his vote for $2,000, and there was applause lasting seven minutes.

I Had Great Hopes.
The next picture was Faith clinging to the cross. I had great hopes that this would bring the audience back into the straight and narrow path, but was doomed to disappointment. She was advised to go home and go to darnin' stockings, and when I would have expressed my surprise at such

Preserving Fence Posts From Decay

Wood-rot, in all its forms, is due to the action of fungi working under suitable air and moisture conditions. In fence posts these conditions are most favorable at or near the surface of the ground and hence it is there that decay first starts.

Creosote, a dead oil of coal tar, is perhaps the best preservative for this purpose, as it does not dissolve out of the treated wood, when in contact with moist earth.

There are two methods of applying the creosote but before either method can be applied it is necessary to have the posts well seasoned if the best results are desired.

The Brush Method consists in applying the creosote like a coat of paint to the lower portion of the post, up to a point six inches above the ground line, the creosote being first heated to one hundred and eighty degrees Fahrenheit.

What is known as the Open Tank Method, while more expensive, assures deeper penetration and gives better results especially when the posts are split or checked.

The barrel is then filled with enough creosote to cover both upper and lower pipe holes and a fire is kindled under the lower horizontal pipe which heats the creosote in the pipes and creates a circulation which continues until all the creosote with the barrel is at boiling-point.

In this process the preliminary heating drives some of the contained air out of each wood-pore, and when the posts are allowed to cool in the creosote, a partial vacuum is then created in each pore which draws the creosote into every fibre.

But do you think your daughter would succeed on the stage? Has she enough of the artistic temperament?

Fifty-five whales, yielding $630,000 were killed in the North Pacific. But it is represented that if whales are decimated the millions of herrings that now stay close to the shores to escape the predatory big fish will venture into deep water, the salmon which live on them will follow, and the salmon industry will be ruined.

Six-year-old Dick was preparing, much against his own sweet will, to go calling with his mother.

Jumping Fish

Jumping as a means of locomotion is shared by a variety of animals of widely different classes. Kangaroos and jerboas among the mammals, thrushes and robins among the birds, as well as such familiar forms as frogs, cockles, crickets and fleas—all illustrate this proneness to leap, mostly as a means of getting quickly over the ground, and even lions and tigers, which never spring in ordinary circumstances, readily adopt this method of attacking their victims.

A considerable number of fishes are remarkable for their leaping powers, and several of these performers are on that account specially favored by anglers, since by jumping clear of the water, in some cases many times in succession, they tax the fisherman's skill more severely than fishes less active, and thereby give added zest to their capture.

Members of the salmon family are universally famous for their high jumps. The sea trout, which gladden Devon waters under the seasonable name of 'harvest peal,' are untiring acrobats, and a fish of a pound weight will more than jump several times its own length out of the water when hooked before coming to the net.

The grandest of all these leapers is the tarpon, otherwise 'silver king,' or 'grand ecalite,' a monster herring which may measure six or seven feet and weigh 200 pounds.

Concrete is the best building material

A BROAD statement—Yet literally true. The aim of man from the beginning has been to make his building materials as nearly like natural stone as possible. The great labor required to quarry stone led him to seek various manufactured substitutes. The only reason he ever used wood was that it was easiest to get and most convenient to use.
