Lost Through Insufficient Subdivision

The loss of the 'Titanic' with 1 500 souls was due, as we showed at the time, to insufficient subdivision. The rupture of the outer skin permitted the water to fill the ship from side to side, in the compartments affected. An inner skin laid upon the frames, or in the form of the inner wall of coal bunkers built along the side of the ship, would have kept her afloat long enough for all the passengers to be saved by rescuing ships.

Since the disaster, the 'Olympic,' sister to the 'Titanic,' has been made a safe ship, by the construction of an inner water tight skin some three feet in from the outer shell of the ship.

The ill-fated 'Empress of Ireland,' which was sunk in the St. Lawrence, on the 29th of May, with the loss of nearly one thousand souls, as the result of being rammed by a collier, was built under the same faulty Board of Trade rules under which the 'Titanic' was built. She was provided with nine transverse bulkheads; but she possessed no side longitudinal bulkheads, nor had she any inner skin. When she was pierced by the bow of the collier, the water was free to fill the 65+ foot width of the compartments affected. The in-rush of water was so rapid that the ship began at once to list heavily, and in fourteen minutes this 20,000 ton ship had capized and gone to the bottom.

It so happens that we publish in this issue, the plans of a ship, the "Aquitania," which makes her maiden voyage to New York this week, whose construction, with side bunkers, is such that she could have sustained the blow of the collier "Storstad" without being sunk, and indeed without any serious risk of being sunk. The moment the stem of the collier touched the side of the "Empress of Ireland," it was twisted aside, and the bow was so greatly blunted that it would never (had the ship been the "Acquitania") have crashed through the eighteen feet of coal in the bunkers and reached the inner skin.

In the presence of this ghastly repetition of the "Titanic" disaster let us keep our eyes on the big facts. These hapless people [nigh a thousand of them] were drowned because the ship was not built unsinkable—and it is perfectly possible to build ships so well subdivided that they can not be sunk—certainly not in fourteen minutes—by collision. The "Empress of Ireland," like the "Titanic," was a safe ship, judged by the British Board of Trade requirements as to safety. But at the time of her construction the safety requirements of the British Board of Trade were ridiculously inadquate. They allowed a ship to fill two adjoining compartments and bring the top of her bulkheads to within a foot or two of the water, and pronounced her safe when in that condition. Whether the "Empress of Ireland" filled more than two compartments we do not know at the present writing; but we do know that it took just fourteen minutes to send her to the bottom.

It is a matter of deep regret that the great International Conference which sat for several months, last winter, in London, did not make the provision of an inner skin obligatory. They left it to the judgment of the individual companies and their naval architects.

The findings of this Conference await ratification by our Senate. We strongly urge that, in view of the recent disaster, our Government should incorporate a clause making some form of inner skin obligatory on all ships carrying more than a certain number of passengers.—Scientific American.

A GOOD MAN GONE WRONG

It makes you feel badly when you hear of an old-timer and one of the "privileged ones," going wrong. We were surprised and deeply grieved to hear that one of them has so far strayed from the path of rectitude, and has so far forgotten his early Sunday school training, as to try and Tango himself into a bank at a very early hour in the morning. The only excuse that can be made for this "old-timer," is, that the "Dalton Tango Cocktails," must have been too strong, or that the "booze" has him—he can't quit.

We refer this bad old man to the advertisement on the back page, with the index finger.

POLICE COURT.

Joseph Chesppe was arrested on warrant by city constable Ward at an early hour Monday morning, and charged with pointing a loaded revolver at one George Bailey, in a bedroom of the New England Hotel. Chesppe pleaded guilty and was sentenced by Magistrate Bickle to a fine of $50 and costs or thirty days imprisonment. The magistrate ordered that the revolver be confiscated.

Six of our public school teachers have resigned. We understand that after the present term, the city council will not pay in excess of the seven mills tax, for school purposes. This will be a move in the right direction, and will force the government to do considerable more than it is doing in financing our school, if it is to be kept up to the present standard. This city has worried and been in poverty long enough in trying to accomplish an impossible task. The harder we try to get out of this school mire, the deeper we get into it. Let the government have a try at the financing and worrying. Every year a deputation goes to Victoria to ask the government if it would please be so kind and condescending, as to give us money enough to keep our school going, and then come back, and try to pay school salaries with "hot air" and promises. It is time the ratepayers of this town cried quits.

The "Aquitania" carries 6,000 tons of coal in her bunkers, and has provisions and accomodations for 618 first-class, 614 second-class, 1,998 third-class passengers, and a crew of 972, making a total of 4,202 persons.

Had anyone troubled to follow him, they might have wondered why he took so circuitous a route unless it was that he was endeavoring to kill time. As a city church clock struck eleven, he found himself in the broad open space behind the Royal Exchange. A man who had been slowly walking up and down the pavement of Threadneedle street joined him halfway across the big pavement.

"Ah, Clark," said the man, "have you no letter?"

He spoke in French.

"No, Mr. Willetts," said the man. "Have you any work for me?"

His French was the French of the schoolroom, correct in construction but the pronounciation distinctly English.

The man he called Willetts shook his head.

"Tonight—no," he said.

"There have been people enquiring for you," said Clark, "and I have been questioned as to your whereabouts."

"Oh," said the other carelessly, "this may often happen. You will tell them that I am abroad. There is nothing more?"

"No, M'sieur."

"Then good-night."

With a curt inclinatoin of his head the man in the Inverness parted from his clerk, and went limping in the direction of Cheapside.

Two men followed him. They had no difficulty in keeping him in sight, for the streets were deserted and he walked very slowly.

He had not gone far along Cheapside before a taxicab overtook him, and he beckoned it.

One of the shadowers increased his pace and came up as he was giving directions.

He turned back and spoke quickly to his companion.

"He's going to the American Embassy," he said in a low tone.

Another taxi was hailed.

"Follow that car in front," said the stouter of the two; "don't let it out of your sight."

The taxi driver touched his cap and followed less than half-a-dozen yards behind the other.

The men in the second car noted that the first took a direction which would bring them in the direction of Park Lane. They were prepared for a change of plan on the part of the occupant, but he gave no sign.

Running along Piccadilly the man in the second car put out his head.

"Pull up fifty yards this side of the American Embassy," he said, "unless the car goes on."

When it came to the Embassy the first car turned and slowed down, as though it were going to stop.

It was a clever manouvre. The second car halted, obedient to instructions, and the men jumped out, only to see the tail lights of the cab they had been following disappearing at a rapidly increasing rate. In and out of bye streets it turned, traversing the narrow, aristocratic little thoroughfares which abound in that neighborhood, and it was as much as the pursuers could do to keep it in sight.

They finally lost it in a tangle of traffic in Oxford street, and the stout man in the second car cursed volubly.

He got out and dismissed the vehicle, and he and his companions, avoiding the well-lighted streets, retraced their steps.

"He fooled us all right," said the stout man.

The other grunted. He was a man of few words, this tall, mshaven man, who had a scar on his chin.

"You'd better be getting back," said the stout man vaguely, and put-ting his hand in his pocket, gave him some money. "I'm going to see the boss."

Cornelius Helder was strolling idly through Upper Brook street half-an-hour later, when the stout man fell in at his side.

"I lost him," he said.

"You're a fool," said the other savagely; "and I suppose you showed your ugly face to every policeman in the city."

"Quit that," said the other. "I have done enough for you lately—too much, I think. I have been scared to death this last week seeing my description in the papers."

"You need not worry," said Helder. "There was not one person who described you so that you could be recognized."

"I don't want to be recognized at all," said the other. "It just makes me shiver."

"You've got yourself to blame," said Helder. "All you had to do was to bargain with the old man and get him to sell the stuff at a price."

"I'm nervous," confessed the other. "Say!—he caught Helder by the arm—"you're the real thing, aren't you? Suppose they got us proper, could you pull us out of it?"

"I guess not," said Helder coolly.

"Then, by God, I'd pull you into it," said the other fiercely.

"I guess not," said Helder again; "I know nothing. You're mad to worry; you're madder still to threaten me. I've got you like this"—he snapped his fingers as he spoke. "There is not the slightest piece of evidence that would connect me with old man Maple's kidnapping. If you squeal, you squeal for trouble."

Under the light of a street lamp he saw the other man's face. It was bathed in perspiration, his mouth was working convulsively.

"I'm not in this," said the man sullenly. "Carl did it because you told him to. He did it for the same reason that I went for old man Gold. You were not in that, I guess—oh no!"

Fortunately they were passing down a very quiet street. The man's voice was rising in his anger.

"I'm tired of it," he said, "tired of the game. It's God's own country for mine, I'm going back."

"You're not," said Helder, quietly.

"I'm going back," said the man, doggedly; "I'm through with you."

Helder laughed; there was no need to change his tactics.

"Get religion—you!" he said. "That's not the kind of talk I like to hear from a Chicago 'hold up' man, one of the 'strong arms.' You've nothing to fear, Billy"—he slapped the other on the back, "and you're in sight of glory. Why, in two years you'll be running the handsomest saloon on the east side, with an automobile that will take you out to Coney Island on Sunday afternoons."

But the man was not easily pacified. He was in a strange land, confronted with unfamiliar forces.

It was not until Helder had him snugly ensconced in the corner of a Soho bar that he recovered his equanimity. He even became genial and communicative.

CHAPTER XI.

An Extraordinary Marriage

There are days in the life of the average man and woman which are so much like other days, so indistinguishable from their fellows that it is impossible to recall them, or to single them out for any happening of moment. Similarly, there are days which tragedy or momentous episodes, which stand out, every hour and every moment, in vivid contrast to all others, days that represent a whole period of life. Such a day to all the actors in this story was the fourteenth of May, and it may be set forth chronologically.

At seven o'clock in the morning Cornelius walked out of his house in Curzon street.

It was a bright spring day without a cloud in the sky. He had the appearance of a man who has not slept well; his face had the curious pasty look which comes to a man who spends his nights in close, unventilated smoking rooms. Yet Helder was innocent of any such experience. He was shaven and carefully dressed.

He walked slowly towards the city. The street was given over at that hour to tradesmen, milkmen and scavengers. Very few shops, and these only the less important ones, had taken down their shutters. In Regent street he saw nothing but hurrying women, little shop girls with parcels under their arms, making their way to their establishments.

He wondered half bitterly what sort of a night Comstock Bell had had. And the girl—where would she be? She would travel up from her suburban home with a third class ticket, probably in a workman's train, to be married to one of the richest men in London.

Trivial little thoughts like these passed through his mind. He bought a morning paper, one that usually published quick news. He looked through its columns to see if it contained any news about the arrest of Willetts. There was no mention of the event.

So Comstock Bell was going to wait until he was married and out of the country before he put his treacherous plan into execution. What hold had the girl over him; what was the mystery of this sudden marriage? He had never met her before that day he saw her in his office, and Comstock Bell was not the class of man to lose his head over a pretty face.

There was some solid reason for the marriage. What was it? With an unconscious scowl on his face, he walked swiftly along the sunny side of Regent street.

Humanizing Convicts

Colorado is experimenting along new lines, and apparently with a considerable degree of success, in its treatment of men convicted of serious offences. The idea of the state authorities is that the convict system should be humanized. Acting on this view they some time ago appointed to the position of warden of the penitentiary a man who had had no experience whatever with prisons, but who had strong faith in the possibility of regenerating even the worst type of criminals. He began his reform by taking as many of the prisoners as were willing to give him their pledge, that they would not attempt to escape, out into the road camps. He has now 300 out of a total of 725 convicts engaged in building the state roads. They work under unarmed overseers and wear ordinary blue or khaki suits. There is every opportunity for escape but since the establishment of the road camps less than one-half of one per cent. of the men so trusted have escaped.

For every thirty days spent in a road camp a ten days' reduction is allowed in the convict's term. The men work eight hours a day and sleep six together in an open tent. It is said that under the system there have been marvellous transformations among the most degraded of the convicts. The healthy work benefits them physically and the confidence reposed in them, together with the humane treatment they receive seems to have a moral influence, which surprises those whose knowledge of convicts is confined to the driving methods practiced in the institutions of other states. In the winter time there is a night school for the men, an orchestra, a business school, manual training classes, and those who are addicted to the liquor or drug habits are given the best medical treatment. The warden says that 96 per cent. of the men were brought to the penitentiary through whiskey. Some of the features of the syster seem well worth the study of the Canadian authorities, especially in view of the fact that at the present time some of our penitentaries have not a very savory reputation.—The Vancouver Sun.

Rattled

It was Smith's first Sunday as usher in church, and he was a bit flustered. Turning to a lady who entered he said: "This way, madam, and I'll sew you into a sheet."

"I suppose," said the new saleswoman, "that you want a suit that will make you look attractive to your husband?"

"Attractive to my husband!" echoed the shopper. "I should say not. He wouldn't know if I wore a suit ten years old. What I want is something that will make my next door neighbor turn a pale pink green with envy."

UPWARD START
After Changing to Postum

Many a talented person is kept back because of the interference of tea or coffee with the nourishment of the body.

This is especially so with those whose nerves are very sensitive, as is often the case with talented persons. There is a simple, easy way to get rid of tea and coffee troubles and a lady's experience along these lines is worth considering. She says:

"Almost from the beginning of the use of coffee it hurt my stomach. By the time I was fifteen I was almost a nervous wreck, nerves all unstrung, no strength to endure the most trivial thing, either work or fun.

"There was scarcely anything I could eat that would agree with me. The little I did eat seemed to give me more trouble than it was worth. I was literally starving; was so weak I could not sit up long at a time.

"It was then a friend brought me a hot cup of Postum. I drank part of it and after an hour I felt as though I had had something to eat—felt strengthened. That was about five years ago, and after continuing Postum in place of coffee and gradually getting stronger, today I can eat and digest anything I want, walk as much as I want. My nerves are steady.

"I believe the first thing that did me any good and gave me an upward start, was Postum, and I use it altogether instead of coffee."

Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled, 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

Young Sportsmen

Many and many a time every one of us, when out shooting in the country, has found himself one of a chance, medley party of all sorts of persons, with all sorts of guns, who "ring in" on the shoot in a perfectly friendly but often perfectly horrible way. At the risk of being thought rude, select your own company—and only those whom you know to be careful and gentlemanly. Especially select this sort of company for your boy; and let him start right, with some careful older companions who will see that he has a chance.

The old-time prairie chicken used to be a splendid thing for the young marksman—the next thing after the cottontail rabbit. Our quail is a little more difficult, but is apt to be pretty much the only game the average boy is likely to see nowadays. Perhaps the first bird the boy kills on the wing may be a snipe, a plover, some shore bird, a prairie grouse, or even a quail. He is a made boy from that time on and the love of the art is thenceforward fixed for him; but teach him to temper his enthusiasm, and do not allow his excitement to render him careless with his gun.

When you come to the wagon see that he takes out his shells. If you shoot in the same duckblind teach him that he must never shoot over the head of a companion or close to the ear of a companion. Teach him, also, the courtesy of the field—to shoot the birds that come on his own side, and never to be eager to claim a bird on which perhaps two men have doubled. It is hard for a boy to give up a bird if he sees it fall ahead of his gun; but he has gone a step toward being a gentleman when he can toss the bird to the other fellow and say: "Your bird, sir." If it is your purpose to teach your son to be a gentleman and a sportsman you will teach him that shooting birds on the water or on the ground requires no skill and is not good form. Teach him to pick out his bird in a covey rise and not merely to shoot at the flock.

In all this you will be teaching him the great laws of conservation and of fair play. To that extent you are grounding him in good citizenship and starting him in as a man who is apt to be just, careful and fair in business and social relations. The world likes that sort of a man in business or society; and there are few places where a boy can learn better principles of life than in the field, with a companion who in himself represents good traditions in the matter of skill and etiquette afield. Time was when the terms gentleman and sportsman meant much the same. They have not yet wholly lost their flavor. The first use of a gun by a boy is a time justly held in some dread by the boy's parents. Careful tuition in this part of a boy's education, however, removes the danger and puts him in the way of a knowledge that may prove of very latsing value in character making. Self-reliance and dignity are only two of the new things you will find your boy taking on when he becomes a real sportsman.—Saturday Evening Post.

A Young People's Country

Canada is a young people's country. According to recent statistics issued there are 385 people between the ages of 20 and 44 in every 1,000 of Canada's population. This means an immense virility that is bound to tell in the development of the country, and which must be regarded as one of the greatest factors of promise in the future. Youth means strength, enterprise, enthusiasm, no less in the nation than in the individual.—Ottawa Citizen.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

World's Longest Tunnel

In its journey toward completion the Catskill aqueduct, through which New York City is to obtain its water supply, passed the final milestone when the last pair of tunnel headings were holed through. The meeting of the two bores opens the longest stretch of continuous tunnel in the world. The clear length from end to end of this portion of the great conduit is 18 miles, or six miles longer than the Simplon, the holder of the former record for tunnel length.

As a result of the last blast there is an unobstructed opening for the free flow of water from one end of the Catskill aqueduct to the other, a distance of 110 miles, and the danger of a water famine, such as threatened New York City a few years ago, is now definitely removed. In an emergency the Catskill water could be delivered to New York now at very short notice. Now that the waterway opening is cleared, the work remaining is the completion of the tunnel linings and the installation of the regulating works at the shafts. Thus the aqueduct has developed, in a few years, from an irregular black line on a sheet of tracing paper to a hundred mile tube of concrete and steel.—Engineering Record.

How Thoreau Would Have Represented on Canvas "The Short Days of Winter

If I were to paint the short days of winter I should paint two towering icebergs approaching each other like promontories, for morning and evening, with cavernous recesses, and a solitary traveler wrapping his cloak about him and bent forward against the driving storm, just entering the narrow pass. I would paint the light of a taper at midday, seen through a cottage window, half buried in snow and frost * * * In the foreground should appear the harvest and far in the background, through the pass, should be seen the sowers in the fields and other evidences of spring. On the right and left should be shaded off from the light of midday to midnight with its stars, the sun being low in the sky.—Henry David Thoreau.

Long Ones

"Have a stormy trip over?"

"Yep. Didn't eat a single breakfast. Nothing but coffee and rolls."

"Did the steward furnish the rolls?"

"No, the ship."

Art of Collection

Howard—Every book in my library has the author's autograph.

Coward—How do you manage it?

Howard—I never borrow any other kind.

Visitor (sampling Belfast stout with evident appreciation): "Really, this is splendid stuff. They say that it is both meat and drink."

Workman (interrupting): "Sure, an' it's roight ye are, sor; an' if yo take plenty ave it it'll foind ye lodgings, too."

Do Not Use the Knife

A Law Suit

"Isn't Deeds, the lawyer, a rather extravagant man?"

"By no means. I've known him to make one suit last for several years."

High Cost of Living

He used to be a spendthrift.
But that came to an end;
For now, being two years married,
He's nothing left to spend.

Knew It Was No Use

Mrs. Clubberly (icily)—I suppose, sir, you are going to say it was business that detained you till this hour.

Clubberly—Quite mishtaken m'dear I 'sure you. Not such a fool! (hic). Soon's I said "bizhnesh," you'd know it wasn't (hic) right off.

Wise mothers who know the virtues of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator always have it at hand, because it proves its value.

The bored youth turned to his dinner partner with a yawn.

"Who is that strange looking man over there who stares at me so much?" he drawled.

"Oh, that's Professor Jenkins," she replied, "the famous expert on insanity."

A good colored brother had been approached by a fellow townsman and asked the opinion of woman suffrage.

"Uncle Gabriel, are you in favor of votes for women?"

"Does you all mean, suh, dat me an' Liza hof vote?"

"Yes."

"Ah sunh does favah it, den. Dat would be $4."

One Hope

"William, are you going to get matters so arranged that we can afford to have an automobile?"

"I don't expect that we can ever afford one, but I hope to get matters so arranged within a few months that we can have one."—Chicago Record-Herald.

A woman came into the general store with a jar of butter. She desired to exchange it for another jar of butter. In churning, she explained, she had discovered a mouse in the churn.

"It didn't injure the butter," she said to the storekeeper, "and to any one who did not know the circumstances it would taste all right."

Taking the woman at her word, the merchant carried her jar into the back room, transferred her butter to another jar, and the gratified customer took back her mouse butter with a thousand thanks for the accommodation.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

No. 8 MINE SCHOOL.

SEALED TENDERS, superscribed "Tender for No. 8 Mine School," will be received by the Honourable the Minister of Public Works up to noon of Tuesday, the 19th day of May 1914 for the erection and completion of a two-room school-house at No. 8 Mine, Cumberland, in the Comox Electoral District.

Plans, specifications, contract and forms of tender may be seen on and after the 1st day of May, 1914, at the office of Mr. J. Baird, Government Agent, Cumberland, B. C.; Mr. A. J. Sutherland, Secretary of the School Board, Cumberland, B. C.; and the Department of Public Works, Victoria.

By application to the undersigned, contractors may obtain a copy of the plans and specifications for the sum of ten dollars ($10), which will be refunded on returning same in good order.

Each proposal must be accompanied by an accepted bank cheque or certificate of deposit on a chartered bank of Canada, made payable to the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, for a sum equal to 10 per cent of the tender, which shall be forfeited if the party tendering decline to enter into contract when called upon to do so, or if he fail to complete the work contracted for. The cheques or certificates of deposit of unsuccessful tenderers will be returned to them upon the execution of the contract.

Tenders will not be considered unless made out on the forms supplied, signed with the actual signature of the tenderer and enclosed in the envelopes furnished.

The lowest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

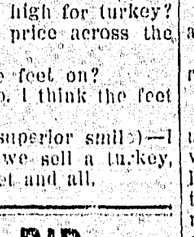
DOCTORS DID NOT HELP HER

But Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Mrs. Bradley's Health—Her Own Statement.

Winnipeg, Canada. — "Eleven years ago I went to the Victoria Hospital, Montreal, suffering with a growth. The doctors said it was a tumor and could not be removed as it would cause instant death. They found that my organs were affected, and said I could not live more than six months in the condition I was in.

"After I came home I saw your advertisement in the paper, and commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it constantly for two years, and still take it at times, and both my husband and myself claim that it was the means of saving my life. I highly recommend it to suffering women."—Mrs. ORVILLA BRADLEY, 284 Johnson Ave., Winnipeg, Manitoba, Can.

Why will women take chances or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?



For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has restored the health of thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, etc.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

Living on Borrowed Time

It is reported that forty Chicago septuagenarians have formed themselves into a "Club of Borrowed Time." With the object of outwitting Father Time, the following rules were drafted for the guidance of members by their president, Mr. A. T. Heningway, himself the Express correspondent, says, a man of seventy-five:

Remain a boy till the end of time.

Be married.

Be moderate and temperate in all things.

Read your Bible.

Smile when you retire, smile when you awake, smile when things go wrong, and keep on smiling.

No person under seventy is eligible for membership, and every new member must pledge himself "to keep young and to cultivate the glad eye" for the rest of the time that he remains on earth.

Not Satisfied

Despite the fact that the British navy estimates for the current year show a proposed expenditure of $257,500,000—an increase of nearly $10,000,000 over last year—the greater navy advocates are not satisfied. The London Daily Mail says: "The programme of new construction, consisting of only four battleships, four light cruisers and twelve destroyers, with an undisclosed number of submarines, is disappointingly meagre. Judged by the admiralty's own standards it is quite sufficient. No provision, other than a slight acceleration of the battleship programme, is made to fill the gap left by the delay in voting of the Canadian dreadnoughts. And yet, as Mr. Churchill said last year, these three ships are absolutely required from 1916 onwards for the whole world defence of the British empire."

"Why have you interested yourself in theosophy?"

"Well," replied young Mrs. Torkins, "my husband persists in talking about banking and currency. I thought I'd follow his example and try to get wise about something that neither of us understands."

A shy young man had been calling on the sweetest girl in the world for many moons, but, being bashful his suit progressed slowly. Finally she decided it was up to her to start something, so the next time he called she pointed to the rose in his buttonhole and said: "I'll give you a kiss for that rose."

A crimson flush overspread his countenance, but the exchange was made after some hesitation on his part. Then he grabbed his hat and started to leave the room.

"Why, where are you going?" she asked, in surprise.

"To the—er—florist for more roses," he called from the front door.

No Rest With Asthma. Asthma usually attacks at night, the one time when rest is needed most. Hence the loss of strength, the nervous debility, the loss of flesh and other evil; which must be expected unless relief is secured. Fortunately relief is possible. Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Asthma Remedy has proved its merits through years of service. A trial will surely convince you.

Scooped

"I don't youth modest, almost overmodest. I don't agree with the accepted idea of youth that is epitomized in the anecdote

"According to this anecdote, an old man said to a youth:

"'My boy, when I was your age I thought, like you, that I knew it all, but now have reached the conclusion that I know nothing.'

"The youth, lighting a cigarette, answered carefully:

"'Hm! I reached that conclusion about you years ago.'"—Chicago Record-Herald.

"Good," said the father. "That's more than you ever learned to say in English."

Same Old Weather

People everywhere who believe that the seasons were very different when they were boys and girls may be interested in the statement that, by examining fairly accurate records, experts in metheorology have been unable to discover any appreciable change in the climate of northern and northwestern Europe in 1800 years.

Patrick O'Rourke, an Irishman, had the misfortune one day of falling from the second storey of a house just being completed. Mike Flaherty, the foreman, saw him fall and immediately called an ambulance, which in due course of time arrived. The surgeon gave one glance toward the still form and said: "He's dead."

Pat, who was coming to, heard him, and, rising to a sitting posture, replied: "You're a liar! I ain't."

Mike was standing close by and took hold of Pat, gently saying: "Lay down, Pat, the doctor knows better."—National Food Magazine.

IMPURE BLOOD IN THE SPRING

The Passing of Winter Leaves People Weak and Depressed

As winter passes away it leaves many people feeling weak, depressed and easily tired. The body lacks that vital force and energy which pure blood alone can give.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are an all-year-round blood builder and nerve tonic, but they are especially useful in the spring. Every dose helps to make new, rich, red blood. Returning strength commences with their use and the vigor and cheerfulness of good health quickly follows.

There is just one cure for lack of blood and that is more blood. Food is the material from which blood is made, but Dr. Williams' Pink Pills double the value of the food we eat. They give strength, tone up the stomach and weak digestion, clear the complexion of pimples, eruptions and boils, and drive out rheumatic poisons.

If you are pale and sallow, if you feel continually tired out, breathless after slight exertion, if you have headaches, or backaches, if your joints ache, if your appetite fails and food does not nourish nor sleep refresh you, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will make you well and strong. To build up the blood is the special purpose of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and that is why they are the best spring medicine. If you feel the need of a tonic at this season give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial and you will rejoice in new health, new strength and new energy. Do not let the trying weather of summer find you weak and ailing. Build yourself up now with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills—the pills that strengthen.

Ask for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and do not be persuaded to take something else. If your dealer does not keep these Pills they will be sent by mail, post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A Tired Vowel

The letter "a" complained of exhaustion.

"What's the trouble?" we inquired.

"Just observe how I am overworked in 'Panama Canal,'" it explained wearily.

Looking into the matter we saw that it indeed had ground for complaint.

An old woman went into the grocer's and ordered a pound of lamb for a stew, which came to 12 cents. After being served she said: "D'ye not throw something in wi' it?"

"Oh, yis," replied the grocer, "if ye wait a minute a'll throw a sack o' taties an' a barrel o' apples an' a bushel o' turnips an' a box o' oranges! An'" he shouted as the old woman flounced out of the store, "when 'am not busy a'll throw in the rose an' cart! If ye're not satisfied then, come back for the shop."—National Food Magazine.

When she returned from her summer vacation she received him with an icy demeanor.

"I'm going to give you back our engagement ring," she said, "I love another."

"Will you give me his name and address?" he inquired, as he took the ring.

"His address!" she exclaimed in surprise. "What are you going to do? Kill him?"

"No, indeed," was the reply. "I want to sell him this ring."

Now that doctors have the reputation of charging outrageously for advice the following story illustrates a point:

"Well, well," said Dr. Bighill, as he met a former patient on the street, "I'm glad to see you again, Mr. Brown. How are you this morning?"

"First, doctor," said Mr. Brown, cautiously, "does it cost anything to tell you?"

Lawyer—The cross-examination did not seem to worry you. Have you had any previous experience?

Client—Six children.

The man who once most wisely said, "Be sure you're right, then go ahead," might well have added this, to wit: "Be sure you're wrong before you quit." —Chicago Tribune.

"Willie," said the teacher to the small boy at the blackboard, "how do you write 'horn'?"

"I don't write a horn," replied Willie, "I blow it."

Some Forestry Facts

The forests of Argentina are said to contain enormous reserves of quebracho, a tree of large size producing a very hard wood containing from 16 to 26 per cent. of tannin. In 1911 Argentina exported 68,431 tons of tannin extract, besides 35,793 railway ties made from this wood and 438,216 tons of the timber.

At a cost of only $50 the Dominion Forestry Branch recently erected a lookout tower fifty feet high, overlooking two hundred square miles of woodland. Similar towers are being built on all the Dominion forest reserves in the west in order that fires may be seen and extinguished before they have time to spread beyond control.

Douglas firs was the only important timber tree in Canada whose production of lumber in 1912 did not show a decrease from 1911. This tree, which is the chief timber species in British Columbia, and is third in importance in Canada, derived its name from David Douglas, who discovered it in 1827 and introduced it into the gardens of Europe. Its adaptability and rapid rate of growth led to its being largely planted as a forest tree in Germany, France, Denmark and England, and the Indians in British Columbia sell immense quantities to European dealers every year. A Danish plantation at the age of 29 years produced 87 cords of wood, equal to an annual production of three cords per acre, which is about three times the growth-rate of white pine on average soil in Canada. The wood of Douglas fir is also considerably stronger than white pine, and is valued highly for construction purposes because of its size, strength and comparative lightness. The mechanical properties of this wood will be fully investigated at the Forest Products Laboratories recently established by the Dominion Forestry Branch at McGill University, Montreal.

A tree in its lifetime produces over a million seeds. If only one of these seeds grows up to take its place, that tree has fulfilled its function.

At present, in order to secure adequate forest fire-production it is necessary to instal lookout towers and telephone lines so that the fire-rangers may early locate forest fires and rapidly assemble a force to fight them. A professor of physics has recently stated that "there can be reasonable doubt as to the applicability of wireless telegraph to the forester's problem of communication." An electrical engineer in a recent book on "Telephonology" supplements this statement by predicting that "in the near future the wireless telephone will not only progress far ahead of the wireless telegraph, but take its place." When instruments are perfected suitable for forest use, existing systems of forest fire-protection will be, to a large extent, revolutionized.

A Vancouver lumberman has estimated that "one ton of refuse goes to the burners for every thousand feet of lumber cut." In his own saw mill he has eliminated this waste by breaking up the refuse into small pieces which are manufactured into fuel briquettes at a cost of only $3 a ton.

The word "lumber" is said to have had its origin in Boston because the merchants lumbered the wharfs with "wood goods." The term, it is claimed, is merely a modification of the word "Lombard" because the Lombards were the first pawnbrokers and because it originally carried with it the notion of rubbish.—Forestry Branch News Letter.

HOW DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS CURED MRS. LANCE

Pembroke Woman Suffered for Fifteen Years Before She Found Quick Relief and a Complete Cure.

Pembroke, Ont.—(Special)—Of peculiar interest to women is the story of the cure of Mrs. Morile Lance, well known and highly respected here. Let Mrs. Lance tell that story in her own words.

"For about fifteen years I was a very sick woman," she says, "My sleep was broken and unrefreshing and I had a bitter taste in my mouth in the morning. I was often dizzy and flashes of light floated before my eyes. My limbs were heavy and I had a dragging across the loins.

"At last Rheumatism was added to my troubles and I also suffered from lumbago, dropsy and gravel. I felt that my kidneys were the cause of all my troubles and decided to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. From almost the first they did me good, and after taking twelve boxes I am again a well woman."

Women who suffer should learn that the cause of their troubles is bad kidneys. Having learned that, the rest is easy. Thousands of Canadians will tell you out of their own experience that Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure bad kidneys.

ITCHY NOSE AND RUNNING EYES CURED IN FIVE MINUTES BY "CATARRHOZONE"

Bronchial Distress and Bad Throat Trouble Relieved at Once

Every day comes news of wonderful cures made by Catarrhozone. Cases are reported and personal testimony is given that proves beyond question the marvelous merit of Catarrhozone.

Bad colds and running eyes it stops in a few minutes.

Irritable throat and dry bronchial coughs are helped in a jiffy—always cured—if Catarrhozone is used as directed.

Chronic Catarrh in the nose and throat, the sort that keeps the breath rank and maintains a vile, sickening discharge—even that type of catarrh yields completely to the power of Catarrhozone.

Just think of it!

Not a drug to take, not an hour to wait for relief—you just simply inhale the pleasant, pine vapor of Catarrhozone and get well quickly.

"What Catarrhozone did for me in one week was simply a miracle," writes Malcolm R. McIntosh from Sydney. "I had a frightful attack of Catarrh. My ears buzzed and my head was full of noises. The end of my nose was red and itchy—on the inside it was sore and encrusted. I had vile dropping from my throat and was very sick. Relief came quick—so I kept up the treatment and was absolutely cured by Catarrhozone."

Nothing else will so effectively and quickly cure you as Catarrhozone. Get the $1.00 outfit. It always does the trick. Small size, 50c; sample trial size, 25c., at all dealers.

MUST MAN EAT WHEAT ONLY

Palpatable Variety of Grains and Seeds May Lessen Cost of Living

When the French queen was told that her starving subjects had no bread, she answered: "Why don't they eat cake?" Better advice than that is open to the world, apropos of Professor Dickson's alarming discovery that the earth's supply of wheat will soon be exhausted. If the world has no more wheat, it can eat Indian corn. That can be produced to infinity. Maize yields more units of energy to the acre, at less cost to cultivate, than wheat, and it does not exhaust the soil.

Fifty grains, at least, there are which are a more economical food for men than wheat. Some of them are very humble and unregarded grains indeed, but amazingly rich in energy. The sorghum plant produces a head of grain which abounds in protein, besides being very palatable. At the same time the stalk of the plant yields sugar, and the coarses parts of it can be converted into paper. The humble sunflower seed is produced, under skilful cultivation, in a vastly higher ratio to the acre than wheat, rye, oats or barley, and it is a fat food.

We are only at the beginning of the earth's food resources. Rood by rood, the land on the earth's surface can be made to feed ten humans, and more, where it now feeds one. Professor Dickson says we are outgrowing this earth. It will be too little for us by and by. If that is true, we have only to reorganize life and production on a new basis. Brains, science, co-operation, the will to live wisely, stimulated by the growing need, will magnify this earth into a planet as big as Jupiter, so far as production is concerned.—New York Mail.

A young man happened to be present at a party. One of the company offered him a glass of whiskey. He declined with thanks, saying that he was a teetotaller. Unfortunately for himself, he had a very red nose, not at all like that of one who abstained from intoxicating liquor.

Immediately on his refusal of the drink, an old Scotsman, who was a bit of a wag, stood up, and said:

"Weel, man, ye micht tak' doon yor sign, and let folk ken that ye're teetotal."

A business man, with many relatives, some of whom were well to do, but grasping, recently sought the services of his lawyer to draw up his will. When, after much labor, the document was completed, the client asked:

"Have you fixed this thing as I wished it, tight and strong?"

"I have done my best," said the lawyer.

"Well," continued the client, "I want to ask you another thing—not professionally, however. As a friend, and man to man, who do you think stands the best chance of getting the property when I am gone?"—Harper's Magazine.

The number of bulbs which have been placed this season in the royal gardens at Hampton court palace exceed a million, the weight being between two and three tons. Minard's Liniment Relieves Neuralgia.

Among the guests at a reception was a distinguished man of letters. He was grave and somewhat taciturn. One of the women present suggested to the hostess that he seemed to be out of place at such a party.

So Did the Dog

The defendant, who was held on the charge of keeping a dog without a license, repeatedly tried to interrupt the evidence, but was hushed each time by the court. Finally the clerk turned to him:

"Do you wish the court to understand that you refuse to renew your dog license?"

"Yes, but—"

"We want no 'buts.' You must renew your license or be fined. You know it expired on January 1."

"Yes, and so did the dog."

Sciatica Vanishes Instantly If Nerviline Is Used

CAN YOU BEAT THIS CASE?

No ordinary liniment will even relieve Sciatica. Nothing but the most powerful kind of a remedy can penetrate through the tissues and finally reach the Sciatic Nerve. You can always depend on the old-time "Nerviline." Nothing made today is as good for Sciatica as Nerviline was when first produced, about forty years ago. All this time the same old "Nerviline" has been curing Sciatica, Lumbago, Rheumatism, and is considered to be without an equal in relieving pain or soreness anywhere. "Nerviline" couldn't be made stronger or better," writes James E. Edwards. "The way it cures Sciatica is to me simply a miracle. For years I suffered frightfully. I ruined my stomach with internal dosing. I rubbed in gallons of oils and liniments—none were strong enough. One good rubbing with Nerviline relieved. I kept on rubbing and shortly was cured. My father cured rheumatism in his right arm and shoulder with Nerviline and my mother cured herself of chronic lumbago with Nerviline. Our family simply swears by Nerviline and we are never without a 50c family size bottle in our home. We find that for external pain, for coughs, colds, earache, such minor ills it is a veritable family physician."

The Cure of the Soil

From time immemorial men have known the virtues of the soil in healing those whose mind or body has suffered from ills which are inevitable in crowded cities. In mythology the idea was firmly crystallized in the old legend of him who was rendered all but invulnerable by the reviving power of mother earth. Thrown to the ground in any contest, he arose each time stronger than before. Which means that a return, if only temporary, to the natural life from which civilization tends to wean man is like a return to the well with an empty pitcher. That this is realized now as rarely before is amply proved by the present anxiety on every hand to get the most possible of country life. Who does not know people who openly boast that they have thrown physic to the dogs since they began to work in some fashion on a little plot of ground, however small, somewhere in the country?

And if the recrudescence of this old idea which prompted Horace to flee the populous Rome to the simplicity of his Sabine farm seems especially strong today, when numbers are being used up physically and mentally by the stress of city life, there is noticeably, too, a more modern idea. Prevention, which has become the watchward in medicine and social welfare work, is also in the minds of many who, to keep themselves fit, have turned to country life pursuits. And as preventive treatment, what is here meant are the humbler forms of country like activities, available particularly to those of modern means who will entrust to no gardener or horticulturist or landscape artist the tasks which they themselves can do, with the assurance of gaining thereby health and peace of mind.

The preventive idea is the modern helpful view. Let the city dweller or worker bear that in mind, and go to the soil before he has to. Even a temporary return to nature gives comfort and relief to a broken man.—New York Post.

It is well known that in the bed of the St. Lawrence river, the outlet of the great lakes, there are in many places masses of rocks that make its navigation dangerous, except to reliable men whose knowledge of the safe channels is unquestioned. A passenger on one of its steamers was plying the captain with questions as to the safety of the journey, and at length asked:

"Captain do you know where all the rocks are in this river?"

In his patient, deliberate manner, he replied: "No, ma'am, I don't know where all the rocks are, but I know where the channel is."—Christian Herald.

A Scottish farmer of a miserly disposition bought a horse at a fair. On the way home he thought a drink of water would refresh it, so he got a pail of water; but the animal would not take it. When he got home, he offered it a feed of corn; but to his surprise it would not touch that, either.

"Weel," he muttered to himself, "if only I was sure ye were a guid worker, ye're the verra horse for me."

Acceptance of Life

Nothing short of the life of the mind will lift a man out of the chain of destructive circumstances. Reconciliation is what all philosophy, all religion, all ethics aim at. They aim to reconcile man to what is, his spirit to the nature of things, his pride to the falls that visit it, his work to the tentative and little results of the work. Not as a broken-spirited dog cowers at the master's feet do they accept as a lover gives the wish acceptance as a lover gives the wish of his mistress.—Harper's Weekly.

OSTRICHS AS BIRD SAVERS

Women May Have Feathers and Still No Slaughter Be Caused

The ostrich industry is good and it is worthy of encouragement. No woman need fear that she is aiding in any way the destruction of birds by wearing ostrich plumes. There are many more of the birds in the world today than there were when their domestication first began, and probably no wild African or Asiatic ostriches are now shot or trapped for their plumes. The product seen in our stores all comes from strong, happy birds hatched and reared in captivity. Use of their feathers does not entail the sacrifice of life, nor does it cause the slightest suffering to the ostrich; taking plumes from an ostrich is no more painful to the bird than shearing is to a sheep, and does not cause it half the alarm a sheep often exhibits at shearing time.

The call for feather finery rings so loudly that women will probably never cease to hear it, and it is the ostrich—the big, ungainly, yet graceful ostrich,—which is to supply the demand for high grade feathers of the future. Surely it is not too much to ask women to turn to this source of supply, which furnishes the most desirable plumes in the world, and thus to spare from heedless torture and death the winged tenants of field and forest.—The Craftsman.

The Foe of Indigestion.—Indigestion is a common ailment and few are free from it. It is a most distressing complaint and often the suffering attending it is most severe. The very best remedy is Parmelee's Vegetable Pills taken according to directions. They rectify the irregular action of the stomach and restore healthy action. For many years they have been a standard remedy for dyspepsia and indigestion and are highly esteemed for their qualities.

A worker in one of the mission settlements was speaking to some waterfront boys with reference to Roman history. He touched upon the doings of Nero, giving a vivid picture of the cruelty of the emperor. It seemed to the speaker that he had fixed the idea of injustice and wickedness in the minds of his hearers. Then he began to ask a few questions.

"Boys, what do you think of Nero?"

Silence, broken only by an uneasy shifting of the lads in their seats.

"Well, Clancy," said the lecturer, making an individual appeal, "what do you think of Nero? Would you say he was a good man? Would you like to know him?"

Clancy hesitated. Finally, after again being urged to reply, he did so in these words:

U.S. Navy to Abolish Wine

Secretary of the Navy Daniels has issued an order abolishing the wine lists on board all ships of the navy. It does not become effective until July 1st next. The action came as a surprise to naval officers and officials of the administration. It was said at the White House that Mr. Daniels acted without consulting the president. It followed the receipt of a report from Surgeon General Braisted of the navy, in which the latter condemned the wine mess aboard warships and recommended that an order be issued abolishing it.

Put Forth the Best

My experience in the varying judgments given about poetry has all converged upon one solitary principle and the experience of the artist in all ages is reported by history to be of precisely the same direction. That principle is, that the artist shall put forth humbly and lovingly, and without bitterness against opposition, the very best and highest that is within him, utterly regardless of contemporary criticism.—Sidney Lanier.

Feared Paralysis

Mr. F. A. Krutz, Schwartz, Que., writes—"For about one year before using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was a complete nervous wreck. Could not rest or sleep, was irritable and easily excited and had indigestion and dreadful headaches. My nerves were continually on edge, and I feared prostration or paralysis.

After the first three boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I felt greatly improved and six boxes made me entirely well and strong. There is no treatment equal to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food as a means of building up the nervous system."

Nerves so Exhausted could not Sleep

Mr. Dennis Mackin, Maxton, Sask., writes—"I have just finished using the sixth box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and I must say that when I commenced using it my nerves were so bad that I could scarcely get any sleep. I would lie in bed nearly all night without sleep, and one who has this trouble knows the misery of sleepless nights. The Nerve Food helped me from the start, and has built up my nervous system wonderfully. I now enjoy good, sound sleep, and instead of feeling tired in the mornings I am strong and healthy and well fitted for my daily work."

After using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food for a few days you will find yourself less irritable and excitable, sleep will return to restore your nervous system as nothing else can, and you will be started on the way to complete recovery.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, the greatest of restoratives, 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Ltd., Toronto

His Race For Life

A Story of the Sahara Desert

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Paul Dunlap halted his racing camel and turned around to glimpse his pursuers.

Far behind, there among the sand dunes of the Algerian desert, were little black dots winding in and out among the dunes, now rising to view and again melting from sight behind some protecting hillock of sand.

Paul spoke sharply to his beast, and the camel shook his homely head, gay with trappings of red leather and silver, and without apparent exertion rocked forward at a most amazing rate of speed.

Mile after mile vanished under those broad hoofs, and each time that Paul turned around his pursuers still held the same distance. Although some of them were mounted on fleet Arabian horses, not one had apparently gained an inch of the race.

It was late afternoon when Paul sighted the blue blur that marked the Oasis el Dur. At first he thought it was a mirage, but at last he was convinced that indeed he was approaching cool shade, food and water. He was weary with twenty hours of hard riding, he had not eaten since early morning, and only occasionally had he swallowed water from his flask.

Water was very precious, and he must make it last.

Now with the oasis in sight he could drain the flask and satisfy his thirst to a degree.

A last glance over his shoulder showed him that his enemies had given up the pursuit for the moment. Evidently they were making camp so that they might rest and eat and thus be ready to continue the chase after the full moon had risen to flood the desert with light.

The oasis was a small one, but it possessed a good well of water, a group of date palms and a little grass that the camel promptly nipped away.

"NOT ON YOUR LIFE, YOUNG MAN!"

Paul watered the camel, satisfied his own thirst and plucked some dates and filled his saddlebags with more of the desert fruit. He filled his flask with the cold water and also filled a goatskin water bag that dangled limply from the saddle.

He looked to his weapons to see that they were in readiness; then, sitting down with his back against a tree, he turned his face toward the west, where he might watch for the coming of his enemies.

Occasionally he closed his aching eyes, but he did not dare to hold them thus for very long. He caught himself nodding now and then.

It had been a long day and a wearing one.

Paul Dunlap had left the city on the rim of the desert with a faithful guide who was to lend him across the Algerian desert to Murzuk. All Mora had been highly recommended by the hotel where the American was stopping, and Paul had been attracted by the alert, bright eyed young man.

On the third day out, when the desert city was far behind, All Mora had suddenly sickened. Whether it was some organic trouble or whether it was a malady induced by a trial of some of Paul's tinned provisions the American could not find out. All he knew was that All Mora had developed a high fever and suffered much pain.

Paul had searched his "first aid" case for remedies and had applied such as he deemed would help the stricken man. But all to no purpose.

Just at sunset the night before All Mora had turned his face toward Mecca and died, and at that very moment a large band of Bedouin Arabs came flashing up on their unshod horses.

Their leader, a fierce eyed sheik of commanding presence, demanded the reason of the guide's death, and when Paul had endeavored to explain in halting Arabic they had cut him short and pronounced death against him.

So he sat down and leaned against the recumbent form of his camel while the Bedouins made preparations to take him to their encampment.

All Mora's death had got him into trouble. This roving band of Arabs had seized the opportunity to rob him, and if he escaped with his life he would be lucky.

Well, he had managed to escape from them as they journeyed toward their encampment. Just as the black shadows of their tents came into view Paul had maneuvered his camel around a sand hillock and was a mile away before his flight was discovered.

If he could circle around to the north and then return to his starting place, the city of Ghourd-Aghrad, he was positive that with another guide, perhaps a little body guard, he could successfully accomplish his projected trip across the desert.

In fact, he must accomplish it. He had made an arrangement to sell the photographs, together with an account of his journey across the desert, to a prominent American magazine, and he could not afford to lose the money. He had promised to deliver the first batch of photographs on the 1st of March, and now it was the 1st of January, and all his labor had been for naught.

When the moon was high Paul mounted his camel and rode toward the north. He had no doubt that he would run across his enemies sooner or later; indeed, if they had not believed him to be worn out by the day's race they would undoubtedly be sneaking around the oasis now, but they were sure of him. Foreigners had not the endurance of the desert people. So the Bedouins believed.

Paul had a good start while the moon was high; the racing camel was true to his name, and his long strides eliminated distances in an incredible manner.

Mile after mile the sand flew from under the hoofs of the strangely swaying beast, and at sunrise, just at the very moment when Paul was congratulating himself that he had outdistanced and outmaneuvered his enemies, he saw a black figure silhouetted against the pale desert.

It was a motionless horseman guarding a little group of white tents pitched in a hollow among the sand hillocks.

The horseman turned and shrilled a challenge at Paul, and by the time the young American had halted his camel he was almost upon the white tents.

The sentry was an Arabian, intelligent looking and with a smattering of the English language.

Paul explained his dilemma, and ere he had completed his explanation the Arab shouted wildly and pointed off to the southwest.

Plainly visible in the early sunlight was a scattering company of horsemen.

"Yours is a peaceful camp," said Paul hastily. "I will ride away and they will not disturb you; I"—

He stopped short, for the white tents had given up their occupants—a dozen men dressed in hastily donned khaki and all carrying weapons, modern repeating rifles that made the ancient flintlocks of the attacking Arabs look like foolish toys.

"What's the matter?" demanded a grizzled haired veteran, addressing the Arab sentinel.

Paul Dunlap broke in and explained and expressed his intention of riding on and thus luring the approaching bandits away from the peaceful encampment in the hollow.

"Not on your life, young man!" cried the grizzled man. "You'll stay and fight, and we'll see you through to a finish!"

"Thank you," said Paul quickly. "Now, sir, I think we must be fighting. They are almost upon us."

In a few moments ammunition was passed around and the men were all flat on the sand, each behind a hillock. The rifles cracked menacingly as the Bedouins came flying up, screeching a savage warcry. With each rifle crack an Arab tumbled from his saddle until at last the scattering remnants of the band dissolved in the shimmering heat of the day.

The unharmed Americans looked at each other and grinned congratulations over the success of their defense.

"And now, sir," asked Paul of the elderly man who appeared in charge of the party, "will you please tell me to whom I am indebted for this rescue?"

"My name is Chester," explained the veteran—"Wayland Chester, at your service. I am manager of a moving picture company, and you, sir, have just afforded us an opportunity for getting as fine a reel of film as I can desire. Why, man, that attack was immense, and I don't know how to thank you."

The amazed traveler looked closely and saw that two camera men were fussing over moving picture machines near by. From different points of vantage they had taken both sides of the little skirmish.

The white tents gave up further occupants, many pretty actresses, who had witnessed the battle from safe quarters, and one and all of them gave a warm welcome to the young adventurer.

That moment was the turning point in Paul Dunlap's career. He joined the moving picture company in its journey across the desert, and his special magazine article was expanded into several that had to do with the fascinating art of motion picture making.

Some day when you are watching the motion picture screen you may come across the scene of that early morning skirmish in the Algerian desert or you may see a handsome youth riding a fleet camel across the sands to rescue a lovely damsel in distress, and the handsome hero will be none other than Paul Dunlap, and the girl is his wife, for he married the prettiest actress of them all.

CRISIS IN INDIA.

Grave State of Affairs Exists In The Oriental Empire.

A crisis, monetary, industrial and political, now prevails in India. As a result the people of Hindustan are reverting to their former Asiatic method of burying their gold and silver, thus withdrawing them from circulation.

The failure of the Bank of Egypt, less than two years ago, has been followed during the last two or three months by the collapse of a whole string of native-owned, native managed banks in India; carrying with them in their downfall all sorts of native industries, such as cotton mills, etc., which they were financing.

The consequence of all this has been to cause a run of considerable proportions on all those other institutions and undertakings in which native capital has been invested in recent years, crippling their resources and in many instances compelling them to go out of business.

Even so loyal a champion of British rule as Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, fifth baronet of his line and acknowledged leader of the important and wealthy community of Parsees, in Hindustan, has telegraphed from Bombay to the Viceroy at Calcutta and to the Secretary of State for India in London declaring that the recent events "tolerated in South Africa by the Imperial Government imperil the faith of the people of India in the good will toward them on the part of the crown."

They cannot be brought to understand how it is that Great Britain, having granted self government to her great colonies, such as South Africa, Canada, Australia and New Zealand, should be powerless to prevent these autonomous dependencies from enacting laws and devising measures aimed against the people of India, either excluding them altogether from the country or else subjecting them to ignominious treatment.

That the Hindu population is filled with more or less latent sedition is a generally acknowledged fact and has found expression in the numerous attempts in recent years upon the lives of high English officials, culminating in the bomb outrage which so severely wounded the Viceroy, Lord Hardinge, on the occasion of his state entry into Delhi a year ago. The revolutionary utterance of the native press leave no doubt about the matter.

It is a sedition to which there have been many contributory causes, chief among them the indiscriminate spread of education unsuited to native conditions, and the refusal of the crown to satisfy their demands for self government, to which they were encouraged to aspire by irresponsible politicians.

Another disquieting feature of the present situation in India is the discontent of the 80,000,000 Moslems with the policy of Great Britain toward Turkey ever since, after the memorable interview between the Czar and Edward VII. at Reval, Great Britain became united by the bonds of a de facto alliance with Russia—that is to say, with the hereditary foe of the only Mohammedan power in Europe.

Until a few years ago the Moslems of India were regarded both there and in Europe as constituting the principal bulwark of British rule in the Deccan. To-day they are a source of dangery

An Aggravating Boy.

Lord Curzon exhibited brilliant qualities both at Eton and Oxford, but was by no means a quiet, studious boy. One of his mathematical masters told how Curzon gave him more trouble than any boy he ever taught. "He was incessantly playing the fool and 'ragging' and apparently paid no attention to what I was teaching. But what made him more especially aggravating was that, whenever I came down on him suddenly and asked him to go through some difficult problem that I had been explaining, he never failed to give me a perfectly lucid and satisfactory proof. And very often he was the only boy in the class who could."

Deck Boy to Commander.

Captain W. T. Turner, R.N.R., commander of the Mauretania, who has been appointed commander of Britain's greatest liner, the Aquitania, has risen from deck boy to a leading place in his profession by sheer merit and industry. Captain Turner, a native of Liverpool, was born in 1856. Among his adventures was a very narrow escape from death in the early days of his seamanship. Washed overboard from a sailing ship in the Indian Ocean, he battled for an hour and twenty minutes before he was rescued.

As She Is Wrote In England.

A correspondent sends to the British Weekly a rare bit of English. It was written by a woman in excusing her tardiness in answering an inquiry that had been addressed to her: "I would have written before, but I have been sick with a dog bite on the arm. The man that owns the sawmills' dog bit me on the road." The excuse was accepted as sufficient.

Crime and Sin.

"Crime" is a word that is misused as a synonym for "sin." A sin is the violation of a religious law. A crime is merely a violation of the law of one particular country or state. What is a crime in one country (polygamy, for instance) may not be a crime in another. Yet a sin is a sin to all who profess the religion that forbids it.

A Gallant Clergyman.

It is said that the Rev. Sydney Smith could be gallant as well as witty on occasion.

"Oh, Mr. Smith, I cannot bring this flower to perfection," said a young lady to him once as she showed him about her conservatory.

Whereupon he took her by the hand and said, "Then let me bring perfection to the flower."

A CONSTANT MENACE.

The Game of Chance Played by the Ocean Liners.

The presence of ice is a constant menace to the navigator. Its movements, often fairly rapid when propelled by wind and current, make its position always uncertain. One ship may see immense fields of ice which another, passing over the same route a few days later, may never encounter. Only those who have stood on the bridge of an Atlantic liner with her officers on a dark night when in the region where ice may appear can appreciate the anxiety of those tireless men, who know that collision with even a small floating ice mass means damage to the ship. The small masses called "growlers" often mean great danger. They float low in the water, leaving little above to be seen by the lookout.

Arctic ice is of great solidity and very irregular in shape. Frequently it presents sharp edges which can cut the plates of a ship, shear off rivets or drive a hole through the bottom as readily as a steel knife. The game of chance is therefore played by every ship that speeds through the ice area at night or in a fog.

To those skippers who have had many years of experience in navigating its presence is made known by a number of effects. Before ice can be actually seen there is a peculiar whiteness observed around the berg on a dark night, except in the case of dark bergs. Mariners call this the ice "blink." It is caused by the reflection of the scattered rays of light from the sky by the white surface of the berg. Thus it is a contrast between the black surface of the water, which reflects none of the light, and the ice, which scatters nearly all of it. A dark berg is one casting a shadow toward the ship. When the light comes more strongly from any particular part of the sky the iceberg often cannot be seen in certain directions, while clearly visible by the ice blink in others. This is said to be the reason why the officers of the ill-fated Titanic did not see the berg soon enough to stop.

As ice is approached, too, the temperature of the air usually falls and the marines describe a peculiar damp cold, as distinguished by the cold caused by a change of wind. Icebergs are sometimes detected, also, by the echo from the steam whistles or fog horn. Then they are frequently heard for many miles by the noise they make in breaking up or falling to pieces. The cracking of the ice or the falling of huge chunks into the sea cause a noise like distant thunder.

Yet despite all these ways of discovery, the presence of ice during certain seasons is a constant menace to those who cross the sea, as the wreck of many a good ship goes to prove.

Broke It Gently.

A miner got killed and a tactful associate was delegated to break the news to the widow. So the tactful fellow called at her house and said: "With your golden hair, blue eyes and pink and white complexion, ma'am, you'd break every heart in town if you wore widow's weeds."

The young woman laughed and blushed for pleasure.

"Oh, go on," she said.

"And you are a widow, too," said the tactful miner quickly, seizing his chance. "Bill's head and legs and arms was just blown off in an explosion. But you're goin' to look good in black, though!"

Ancient Posters.

It is probably the general impression that posters and handbills are modern inventions, but it has been discovered that the ancient Romans practiced this method of advertising. In digging at Herculaneum there was brought to light a pillar covered with bills, one on top of another. The paste used to stick them was made of gum arabic. The bills, when separated and examined, were found to be programs and announcements of public meetings and even election proclamations.

The Gift of the Sex.

Jones was telling what an excellent cook his wife was. Smith boasted that his wife was a splendid dressmaker, and Robinson proudly stated that his wife was an unusually clever artist.

Brown was not to be outdone, so he remarked:

"My wife is a great linguist."

No one seemed impressed. There was a moment's silence; then Robinson spoke up.

"Humph!" he exclaimed. "They all are!"

Useless Noise.

Hargis was lying on the couch very ill. The servant in the next room knocked down some dishes with a tremendous clatter. Hargis' nerves were quite unstrung, and he called out in a rage:

"I suppose you have broken all the plates?"

"No," replied the servant meekly, "there isn't one broken."

"Well, then," growled the enraged invalid, "why did you make all that noise for nothing?"

Progress.

"My wife knew nothing of housekeeping to begin with, but she's learning fast."

"That's encouraging."

"Oh, she's a bright little woman, I'll do say it. It has taken only two cooks to teach her to keep away from the kitchen, and I suppose that's at least half the battle."

Which Is Some Distance.

"You are a relation to the Richleighs, aren't you?"

"Yes, a distant relation."

"How distant?"

"Well, as distant as they can keep me."

A Social Necessity.

"Why is your daughter taking lessons on the violin? Has she shown a special aptitude for the violin?"

"No, but every girl has to take lessons on something, doesn't she?"

"BRAINS SUPPLIED HERE."

"Organotherapy" Is an Old Medical System Which Has Been Revived.

Is it possible to provide the feeble-minded with more brain until they are normal? Wild though the possibility may seem to the lay mind, it has, nevertheless, been seriously discussed at the Congress of Medicine in Paris. Furthermore, experiments in the science which is known as "organotherapy" have already been attempted.

This science really consists of treating diseased organs with medicines made from similar organs. It is pointed out by medical experts that the building up or doctoring of one organ with extracts from a similar one was practiced 2,000 years ago, although, of course, in a very crude fashion. It is on record that patients suffering from an affection of any particular part of their system were given the same part of an animal to eat, with the idea of repairing the local waste and damage. Thus consumptives were ordered to eat sheep lungs, while for dyspeptics was prescribed a diet in which the stomach of calves ranked as the chief item.

In an address on the subject delivered by a widely-known Roumanian doctor, Dr. Iscovesco, he remarked that special importance is attached to the treatment of anaemia by this method. "The old treatment with iron," he declares, "was never absolutely satisfactory, while if a lipoid extract of blood corpuscles is administered to patients the corpuscles rapidly multiply and the anaemia disappears."

Probably the most startling suggestion made by the doctor was that of curing the feeble-minded by this method. This physician held that so long as organotherapy worked so well along other lines, it stood within reason that it would work well with the feeble-minded. By giving them a lipoid extract of grey matter, an extract of the brain, it ought to increase their mental faculties and in time give to them normal brain.

Of course, if this is possible, it will be one of the greatest wonders and most valuable things in modern or ancient medicine.

Origin of Stammering.

A new theory as to the origin of stammering is set forth by C. S. Bluemel in a book on that subject. It is usually said that stammering is due to spasm or to incoordination of muscles, but this is no explanation, as it does not tell what causes the spasm or the incoordination. According to Mr. Bluemel, stammering is the result of transient auditory amnesia—forgetfulness of the sound of words—which produces the secondary conditions of mental confusion and fear, these being intensified in some cases by autosuggestion. The initial cause may be slight and limited to early life. It may even lessen and disappear, while the secondary effects remain as acquired habits.

America.

Amerigo Vespucci's letters about the new world were made the basis of a book (about 1507) called "Cosmography," by a certain Waldseemuller, who suggested that, as Amerigo was the discoverer of this "fourth part of the world," it should be called after him. The name took and, first applied to South America, was given later to the entire western continent. James Bryce remarks: "The series of incidents by which the name of a Florentine adventurer was given, first to a continent he probably did not discover and then to another which he never saw, is as curious as anything in geographical history."

Why Firemen Hurry.

Little Ross, aged seven, had been around the corner inspecting the fire station. He came home to tell his mother of what he had seen there. He said:

"And, mamma, even if they are just in the middle of sweeping the floor, they drop the broom and rush off to the fire, and even in the night time when they are in bed if the bell rings they jump up and dress and go to the fire, 'cause if they didn't do that when they got there the fire would be all out."

The Oldest Encyclopedia.

The most ancient encyclopedia extant is Pliny's "Natural History," in thirty-seven books and 2,493 chapters, treating of cosmography, astronomy, meteorology, geography, geology, botany, medicine, the arts and pretty nearly every other department of human thought known at the time. Pliny, who died 79 A.D., collected his work in his leisure intervals while he was engaged in public affairs. The work was a very high authority in the middle ages.

Herd at Wainwright.

The Dominion Buffalo Park at Wainwright, Alta., now contains 1,447 buffalo, 45 elk, 60 mule deer and 4 antelopes. There were 243 buffalo calves born in the park during 1913. There are 31 buffalo and 23 moose in the Rocky Mountain Park. In the Elk Island Park there are 81 buffalo and other native animals. The parks branch report that the buffalo are thriving admirably.

Troilite.

Troilite, which is a very common constituent of meteorites, is generally considered to be the simple sulphide of iron, though the exact chemical composition is in doubt. This is usually in the form of nodules, plates or rods, and, decomposing readily during flight, leaves the remaining mass with unique markings.

His Growl.

"A man ought to know when to say no."

"You know when to say no, all right."

"Thank you; I think I do."

"Yes, you said no when you felt sure I would ask you again, and you said yes when you saw me beginning to weaken."

DISHES OF THE PAST

ANCIENT COOKS MAKE OUR CHEFS LOOK SMALL.

The Wonderful Feast of Lucullus at Which Six Maidens, Dressed as Nymphs, Floated In Boats on a Lake of Wine Is Still Unparalleled In Our Age of Vaunted Magnificence.

In this era of the high cost of living it is interesting to turn backward the pages of history and see what some of the world-peoples of the past placed on their tables.

We know that bread was the earliest cooked food. Sometimes it was made of flour produced by crushing acorns, but more often it was merely the crude mixture of Egypt called "kuscoussoo," and consisted of flour and water cooked together in a basket over boiling water.

The fact that though the children of Israel had been mere slaves in Pharaoh's land they were always pining for the fleshpots of Egypt speaks pretty well for the Egyptian food. The cabbage was one of the favorite foods and was so highly esteemed that it became an object of worship.

The cookery of ancient Greece was very simple, although at one time the Athenians knew 72 ways of making bread. The Athenians were criticised by their Roman neighbors for their frugal fare, and to "live like an Athenian" was a term of reproach, a contemptuous way of telling a person he was stingy. In Sparta abstemiousness was carried still further, and a traveler who had tasted the "black broth of Sparta" said he could understand why the Spartans were so fearless of death, since any one in his senses would rather die than continue to live on such execrable food.

The Greeks, nevertheless, raised cooking to a fine art. In a fragment of an old Greek comedy a cook is introduced who boasts of cooking a fish so deliciously that it returned admiring glances from the frying pan. At any rate, at the time that Greece was conquered by Rome the Grecian cooks were considered among the most valuable plunder carried back to the Eternal City.

Though the Romans captured the Grecian cooks the simple cookery of that country was poorly suited to the taste of the conquerors. The time when "a consul could dine on a roasted turnip" soon passed, and the extravagance and gluttony of ancient Rome have never been equaled in the world's history. Some of the Romans were as cruel as they were gluttonous. To give fowls a more excellent flavor Pollio had them fattened on the flesh of his slaves.

Lucullus once gave a dinner under a wonderful circular tent constructed for the occasion. A lake of wine occupied the centre and six maidens, dressed as nymphs, floated on the lake in gilded boats, serving the wine from golden ladles. Eighteen hundred kinds of meat, fish, and vegetables were served at this banquet, which lasted 40 hours. A small dinner which this famous epicure served for Caesar, Pompey, and himself cost $5,000; but even this extravagance was surpassed by Vitellius, whose daily marketing averaged $15,000. At one of his banquets 2,000 of the rarest fish and 7,000 of the most curious birds were placed before his guests. In four months he spent over $20,000,000 for his table.

The more costly the dish the more did it appeal to the high liver of ancient Rome. Tongues of nightingales, brains of peacock, roe of the rarest fish, and brains of humming birds were used at their feasts. Dormice, cuttlefish, and hedgehogs were considered delicacies, especially when seasoned with a sauce made from honey, rue, pepper, assafoetida, and an oil made of decomposed fish.

A mixture of courtly ceremony and barbaric manners marked the table customs of the middle ages. Forks were not used till the 17th century. They were brought to England from Italy and were not popular for some time. Englishmen spurned the use of the fork as being unmanly, and spoons and knives were considered equally unnecessary, for soup could be swallowed from the bowl, and the thumb was a perfectly good tool to use in buttering one's bread.

The common people ate their food from wooden trenches or boards, but the baron and his guests used trenchers made of pewter or precious metal. Earthenware plates were not in common use till the 17th century. After the feast an alms dish was brought and the chaplain received the broken bits of bread and meat for the poor under the direction of the almoner.

There was great extravagance. At a feast given by Edward IV. in 1476, 62 cooks were employed, and among the things which went to make this "royal feed" were beeves cooked whole, mutton, antelope, venison and 24 kinds of birds, including both tame and wild ones. Among the birds mentioned were larks, pigeons, pheasants, and peacocks.

In Chaucer's time there was especial extravagance at court. Richard, who was called "the best and royalest viander of all Christian Kings," occupied the throne, and as 10,000 persons were daily fed from his kitchen it required the killing of 500 sheep, 28 oxen, and fish, game and poultry in prodigious numbers for each meal.

When Puritanism came in the swans, boars' heads and peacocks vanished, as did the rich pastries.

In the feudal times nine-tenths of the meat was chopped and pounded with a pestle and mortar before serving, and in this way it could be eaten with very little need of knife or fork. A dish used during the reign of Richard II. was called "Cokagrys." The recipe for preparing it was elaborate. A rooster was stuffed with pig's liver minced and seasoned with pepper, cloves and cinnamon. Then a pig was [illegible] and stuffed in the same manner. The two were then fastened together, parboiled and then roasted, being basted meantime with egg seasoned with saffron.

MEETING OF COUNCIL

The City Council met in regular session on Monday evening, there being present Aldermen Banks, Miller, Mitchell, Parnham, Maxwell, MacDonald and the Mayor.

Communication was received from Telephone Company re the placing of telephone poles for its new exchange on Second street.

Communication was received from F. Dallos objecting to the sewer rental tax, as he was already paying a sewer tax in connection with a septic tank. This matter will be investigated.

Constable Ward's report:

Scavenger	$92 00
Dog Tax	8.00
Road Tax	82.00
Hall Rent	40.00
Police Court Fines	50.00
Buckets	2.40
Accounts:
H. Ward	$1.00
Nanaimo Jail	15 00

It was decided to charge the sewer rental tax against the property.

The mayor, as one of a committee appointed to interview Geo. W. Clinton in the matter of electric light, stated that Mr. Clinton guaranteed that the new system of city lighting would not exceed $50 a month, and that the lamps required on Dunsmuir avenue at installation would be free of cost. Ald. Maxwell said that the city had not the money to pay the cost of changing the system. Ald. Parnham moved, seconded by Ald. Maxwell, that the lamps for city lighting be changed from thirty-twos to forties—carried.

Cement Sidewalk By-Law was reconsidered, adopted and finally passed.

Ald Parnham stated that if the government could not be induced to give greater financial assistance to our schools, the city should only pay as far as the revenue derived from the school tax will go. Ald. Maxwell was of the opinion that school matters should be brought to a climax.

Ald. Parnham moved, seconded by Ald. MacDonald, that the government be notified, that, if $2,500 back salary due teachers is not forthcoming immediately, and permanent financial aid not granted, the schools will have to be closed, or only the number of teachers engaged that the school tax will pay—carried.

Ald. MacDonald moved, seconded by Ald. Parnham, that a committee be appointed to interview the Colliery Company to discuss the possibility of having that part of the townsite from Fifth to Eighth streets taken into the city limits—carried.

Council adjourned.

The "Grand Duke" man was in town this week.

'Sir' Charles Charlton is visiting for a few days in town, as guest of his old-time friend, Mr. Richard Dowdall.
