GRONIN QUILTS MANAGEMENT

Thirteen years with the St. Eugene.

STILL RETAINS STOCK

Will Take a Rest and May Visit Through the Old Country.

Thirteen years ago last month James Cronin, in company with Father Coccolo and an Indian named Peter, staked the St. Eugene property. Then the work of converting the prospect into a mine was begun. There was no railroad, no Moyie and no Cranbrook then, and every pound of grub and supplies had to be packed from Port Steele, 30 miles away. Cronin and Pete Olson comprised the first working force. They each took turns at holding and hammering the drill, as well as doing the cooking, sharpening the steel, etc. Then payday would come, and Cronin would pull a roll of bills from his pocket and pay Olson for his month's work. There were no labor troubles or grub strikes at the St. Eugene in those days. Then the force was increased, and Peter Lynch, W. P. White, Wm and James Mills, the Hamilton boys and John Bakke were hired. White is now superintendent and Bakke is a foreman.

Now after thirteen years of continuous management Mr. Cronin has tendered his resignation, which the company has reluctantly accepted. Mr. Cronin took the St. Eugene when there was nothing but the cropping of a ledge. He leaves it the second largest silver-lead mine on the American continent, and he has made for himself a reputation as a mining man that anyone might envy. Not only that, but he has accumulated a comfortable fortune.

Thursday he was arranging his fishing outfit, and had two of his dogs tied and was ready to go on a trip with J. C. Drewry to the Old Man river in Alberta when a representative of this paper called on him. "Yes, it is true I have resigned. I did so some time ago, but it is only now that I am able to get away. I was never better pleased with the St. Eugene, and I am holding all of my stock in it. Being still a director I shall come to Moyie quite often, probably once a month, and look over the property. The mine is in good hands and will run very nicely without me. R. H. Stewart, consulting engineer for the company, will have charge of the affairs here, but of course Mr. Alldridge is general manager." Mr. Cronin's family is living in Spokane, and Mr. Cronin will spend most of his time there. It is said that he and his family intend taking a trip to Ireland this summer.

Kay, who worked for over a year in the Kootenay Hotel dining room is now employed at the Cranbrook hotel in Cranbrook. Last week we overlooked mentioning that J. F. M. Pinkham of the Imperial Bank of Canada gave $10 to be added to the purses for the drilling contest here on Dominion Day. Mrs. Foote was in Cranbrook this week to see her husband, C. A. Low prices increase sales and that's how we even up. Just take a look at our men's furnishings. You'll be bound to admit they're "swell" and extremely reasonable.

MacEachern & Macdonald.

Fathers of Confederation.

The relentless march of time has left surviving only two of the original thirty-three Fathers of Confederation. They are Sir Charles Tupper and Senator A. A. Macdonald of B. C. The magazine section of the Toronto Globe of July 4th has the photos of the two men on the front page as also a group picture of the Fathers of Confederation taken in 1861. Much have the two survivors witnessed in the evolution of the new commonwealth since his first Dominion Day, and much, indeed, have these aged statesmen witnessed of Canada's growth as measured by the milestone dates of each succeeding First of July. Senator Macdonald is father of A. P. Macdonald, merchant of Moyie.
