Gibsons will hold water takeover election

The Village of Gibsons apparently will be required to hold a referendum on the question of the Regional District's takeover of the village water system.

According to an August 17 letter to the Regional District from the provincial Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing, the ministry is of the opinion that the Municipal Act requires the assent of the electors before any disposal of an entire utility system may be carried out.

Gibsons Mayor Larry Labonte, contacted by the Times on Sunday, said he was not aware of the letter from the ministry, but said, "I thought something like that might happen."

Labonte said it was his impression that numerous Gibsons residents had written the ministry protesting the transfer of the water system. He said he probably will call a special council meeting this week to discuss the matter. The next regularly scheduled village council meeting is September 6.

Labonte said that if a referendum is held, it would likely be placed on the ballot during the November municipal elections.

Gibsons Alderman Stu Metcafe, chairman of the village water committee and a frequent critic of the takeover plan, said Sunday, "I think a referendum is the only way for us to go."

He said the debate about the takeover has generated "too much emotionalism without the facts being laid on the table. A referendum would assure that the facts on both sides (of the question) would be presented.

"There has been a lot of scuttlebutt about us being short of water and so forth," Metcalfe said. "I don't think that has been proven. On the other hand, there is the matter of economics, and there are arguments in favour of the takeover on that side. I'm also in favour of a gravity feed system" as would be provided under regional control.

He said a referendum also would force more definite statements from the Regional District in certain areas.

"There has been nothing laid out yet — nothing more than verbal statements about rates, maintenance and employee utilization," Metcalfe said. "It has all been verbal."

He also expressed concern about the possibility that the village could lose some decision-making power in other areas as a result of the takeover. "For instance, if we came to the point that we wanted to open a subdivision in the village boundaries, the Regional District might just tell us, "Sorry, there's no water available," he said.

"I want to make it clear," Metcalfe said, "that I'm not necessarily for the Regional District takeover, nor necessarily adamantly opposed to it. All I want is for the facts to be laid on the table so the people can see for themselves."

Metcalfe said he thought the village recently undercut one of the arguments in favour of the takeover when it approved proceeding with plans for a new reservoir above the village. "As far as the fire system is concerned, we've already started action with this 250,000 gallon reservoir, whether we join the Regional District or not," he said.

Regional District Works Supt. Gordon Dixon said a November referendum on the takeover, if it were approved, would probably set back the transfer of control to Spring, 1978. The transfer has previously been tentatively set for January 1.

Dixon said the delay, however, wouldn't seriously affect waterworks plans. "The village is already starting some things that we would do," he said, "and we're doing some things on our side too." He mentioned the Regional District's request to Municipal Affairs for authorization to increase the district's borrowing power for water supply to $4.5 million.

If the referendum should fail, Dixon said, the district probably would halt construction of its new 14-inch water line at the airport. The line is now scheduled to be extended next year as far as Lockyer Road.

The August 17 letter from Muncipal Affairs also referred to an alternate possibility for transferring a portion of the Gibsons water system. If, for instance, the village chose to transfer only the distribution section of the system and to retain the supply portion, such an action could be carried out under the Municipal Act without the approval of the electors, according to the letter. Such a transfer would require only the passage of a by-law by council and approval of the minister of Municipal Affairs.

A partial transfer of this nature would require negotiation of a water-sharing agreement between the Regional District and the village. Dixon said he has previously expressed his opposition to a partial transfer. "It would be a real cause for quarrels," he said.

Seaside Village shocks official

Seaside Village, the Sechelt subdivision that has been the centre of a year-long lawsuit, was visited Wednesday by a provincial Inspector of Insurance, just days after the announcement that an out-of-court settlement had cleared the way for completion of the controversial development.

And on Friday, the village of Sechelt sent in bulldozers and work crews to clean huge stump piles left by contractors on the Hydro right-of-way that bisects the subdivision. Nearby residents complained at the August 17 council meeting that the debris harboured a large population of rats.

On the morning of August 24, a Times reporter and Rudy Lawrence, the Vancouver inspector who has investigated the development's financial affairs for nearly two years, were taken on an informal tour of Seaside Village by two members of the Property Owners Association.

Highlights of the drive included:

— unfinished houses, many with thousands of dollars of leins against them, but which are lived in anyway as the owners have nowhere else to go.

— eight to 10-foot-high piles of uprooted trees and stumps left scattered throughout the subdivision.

— a decaying plywood hut outside the picture window of an immaculately kept home.

— mounds of sand and gravel plus torn bags of insulation strewn around the empty lots.

— a concrete mix truck and batch plant abandoned near the power line.

— two halves of a battered modular home with gaping holes in both the floor and thin wooden walls.

Midway through viewing the development, Lawrence turned to Rod Moorcroft, president of the Property Owners Association and said, "I'm surprised you people haven't got a vigilante group together."

The inspector, who was last in Seaside Village a year ago, was obviously surprised at the number of half-built houses and indicated his department had earlier been informed by the developers that many of the homes had in fact, been finished.

Lawrence also praised the people who had gone ahead and completed homes on their own, adding colourful gardens and neat lawns.

"One of the great shames is here you have the potential for a beautiful subdivision," he said.

Lawrence was again surprised when driving past the Pebble Crescent home of Interfacial Design Group President Bud Gairns, he saw a sign advertising Seaside Village sales. Property selling in the development has been banned for nearly a year by the provincial Inspector of Insurance because of financial irregularity.

Interfacial Design was responsible for house construction in the subdivision and, according to the Companies Office in Victoria, the firm is about to be struck from the Companies Register for failure to submit annual reports since incorporation in the early 1970's.

Lawrence assured the representatives of the property owners that existing problems in the development would have to be cleared before land sales were again permitted. He later discussed his Seaside Village observations with the Superintendent of Insurance.

Details of the out-of-court settlement between the two major Seattle Village developer, Stan James of Union Steamships and Glen Crippen of Glenmont Holdings have yet to be officially made public. However, it is understood that Glenmont Holdings will take over complete responsibility for the subdivision and that James will no longer have a financial interest in the development.

However, Lawrence was unable to say what arrangements had been made regarding the future involvement of Gairns, a long-time employee of James'.

Before leaving Sechelt, Lawrence paid a visit to Gairns and on Friday, the builder was seen inspecting the stump piles as the village began to remove them from the right-of-way.

Aldermen had first investigated the possibility of burning the debris in June, but had hesitated until last week when rain dampened the fire hazard.

The work was carried out by Barry Pearson, a member of the Sunshine Coast Regional District and a two man crew. Tenders were not called for the job.

The village, however, is refusing to remove the modular home pieces, the truck and batch plant, because of the legal complications involved, as ownership of the equipment is in doubt.

Airplanes—too many too close?

By KERRA LOCKHART

In July this year 1,199 aircraft flew over the Selma Park area, according to a count kept by one irate resident fed-up with the sound of machines droning over his house.

Yet, during the last two weeks of July only 25 out-of-town aircraft were registered at the Sechelt-Gibsons airport — which means that hundreds of passing planes, on their way to somewhere else, flew over the peninsula instead of out to sea where the noise of their engines would not disturb thousands of land dwellers below them.

"Maybe it's more interesting to fly looking down in someone's back yard," theorizes Lorne Berman, a Sechelt dentist and spokesman for a recently-formed citizens group devoted to reducing the noise — and frequency — of overhead planes.

But any fight to reduce the sound pollution of single or twin engine aircraft immediately runs into three problems.

First, there is no federal legislation setting out noise standards for small planes. Second, the height at which an aircraft must fly while crossing the peninsula is disputed, even among different branches of the Ministry of Transport. (However, officials agree that low-flying and noisy aircraft are usually one and the same.) Third, unless you are fast enough to write down the registration number of a low-flying plane, protest is almost useless.

Enforcement of air regulations falls upon three agencies. The local RCMP and the MoT enforce air regulations and navigational orders. The Air Transport Committee of the Canadian Transportation Commission investigates complaints of unlicenses commercial activities.

Sechelt RCMP say they have had only two complaints of low-flying aircraft this year but in provincial court last month a youth was fined $500 for making, what witnesses called, tree-top passes over the Gibsons trailer court on Highway 101.

Air regulations lay down only sketchy height instructions for pilots flying in Canada. Over a built-up area, planes must be at least 1,000 feet off the ground.

Recycling action prompts regional board study

Peter Light's four-day recycling demonstration last week in Sechelt didn't stir quite the flurry of activity he had hoped for. The response, he told regional board directors Thursday, "has been lousy. People really aren't interested."

Light's initiative, however, did prompt the directors to approve formation of a committee to investigate possible recycling programs. Ironically, approval of the committee was made over Light's objection.

He told the board forming such a committee "runs counter to my proposal. I'm asking that recycling be considered on a neighbourhood basis, on a friendly, local basis. I can think of a dozen ways it could be done, but forming a committee is contrary to that approach."

The motion calling for the committee was made by Director Jim Metzler. The concept met some opposition from directors Bernie Mulligan and Barry Pearson, who indicated that they would prefer to wait for proposals from the public rather than have the district initiate a recycling program.

Director Peter Hoemberg supported a committee study of the issue, noting that "time has now passed and there is no longer any question of the operator of such a project." His remark was a reference to the former Peninsula Recycling operation, which closed in June after directors refused to approve funding for the project. Peninsula Recycling manager Tom Haigh was accused of inefficiency by some directors.

The only section of Light's written proposal requesting action by the Regional District was the suggestion that the district ask B.C. Ferries to give a free return pass to any person carrying a load of recyclable materials.

No director spoke in favour of this suggestion. Said Director Morgan Thompson, "I think trying to get Ferries to do anything free is like pulling teeth out of a chicken."

Light's attendance at the board meeting was a brief interruption to the vigil he maintained from Tuesday morning to Friday afternoon at Cenotaph park in Sechelt. He parked his truck and four recycling barrels at the curb on the east side of the park after stating his intention of attempting to arouse interest in neighbourhood recycling projects.

When he left the site Friday afternoon, heading for the recycling centre in West Vancouver, Light expressed some surprise that his action had elicited inquiries, and a relatively small quantity of recyclable materials, from only about 50 people.

Many persons who did visit Light seemed confused as to his purpose in being there, Light said. The most frequent question he received was how often he was going to return to collect recycleables. He responded to such questions that he didn't intend to return at all and suggested that individuals organize their own recycling projects.

Light had anticipated that his presence at the park might meet with some opposition. For the most part, however, he was ignored.

RCMP paid him a call Wednesday, after receiving a few complaints from legionnaires. When Constable Gordon McIntosh determined that Light was not engaged in any activity requiring a business licence, the matter was settled amicably with Light's agreement to move his truck to another side of the park to avoid obstructing traffic.

Sechelt Village Clerk Tom Wood also visited the site and left a note during Light's absence. The note indicated that Light should have requested permission from village council for his action. Wood also stated in the note that, in his opinion, council would not have granted the permission due to parking problems at this time of year.

Gibsons bank union wins approval of labour board

The Gibsons branch of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce has become one of the first federal banks in the country to win union certification.

Local shop steward Eileen Quigley learned August 20 that the tiny Service, Office and Retail Workers' Union of Canada has been certifified by the Canada Labour Relations Board to represent the Sunnycrest Mall Commerce branch.

SORWUC's bank local, the United Bank Workers, has scheduled a contract conference for September 10 and 11 in Vancouver to establish ground rules for formal collective bargaining with bank managements.

Quigly expects intial contract negotiations for the Gibsons branch to begin shortly after this conference.

The union has eight more applications pending before the CLRB, including one for the Royal Bank in Gibsons, but Quigley does not expect a decision to be made on this request for another few months.

Ultimately, the union hopes to establish a single bargaining unit for all banks on the Sunshine Coast.

SORWUC has been involved in a province-wide organizing campaign since June when the CLRB ruled that individual bank branches could be unionized. The banks had successfully argued for years that the majority of their employees across the country should first be organized before union certification was granted.

Woodworkers' contract settled

The threat of a strike among coastal woodworkers waned Friday as union and management negotiations agreed on a two-year contract covering 28,000 B.C. woodworkers and 120 coastal forest companies.

The proposed settlement provides an across-the-board wage increase of $1.15 an hour, a greatly-improved union pension plan and additional fringe benefits.

These terms, while they must now be ratified by members of the International Woodworkers of America, gained the unprecedented unanimous approval of the 17 person IWA bargaining committee.

The agreement is also expected to affect negotiations between the pulp and paper industry and the 13,000 B.C. pulp and paper workers whose contract sessions have been stalemated since the workers rejected what the employers said was their "final offer" of $1 an hour over two years.

Voting on the IWA agreement is expected to begin this week. Results of the balloting should be known by the middle of September.

The settlement came on what was considered the final day of bargaining before the IWA took strike action.

Under the terms of the industry offer, union members will receive an immediate wage increase of 60 cents an hour retroactive to June 15 this year, a further 50 cents on June 15, 1978, and an additional five cents an hour as of Jan. 1, 1979.

If ratified, the contract will boost the current base rate in the forest industry

Mulligan drops funding motion

Faced with an apparent defeat at the board table, Regional Director Bernie Mulligan last Thursday withdrew his request for Regional District funding of the Gibsons swimming pool before a vote could be taken.

Mulligan had moved in the July 14 board meeting that the pool be designated a special function to allow the district to contribute up to $15,000 a year to the pool's operating deficit. The matter was tabled at that time to give the village an opportunity to respond to directors' questions concerning Gibsons' refusal to participate in other regional special functions.

Regional District Secretary-Treasurer Anne Pressley said Thursday she still had not received a reply to the questions from the village. Director Jim Metzler, a Gibsons alderman, told the board that Gibsons was "oversubscribed" and that aldermen saw the special functions as being of dubious financial benefit to the village.

Directors Ed Johnson, Harry Almond, Peter Hoemberg, Morgan Thompson and Jack Paterson each expressed opposition, for one reason or another, to Mulligan's motion.

Almond then suggested that Mulligan withdraw his motion, "rather than have it put to a vote, be defeated and cause more ill feeling."

"I can see from the meeting right now that there's no point in pursuing this, and I withdraw it," Mulligan said. "But I want to point out that there is nothing for our area" in the Regional District recreation referendum.

Mulligan has argued that residents of the area from Langdale to Roberts Creek will be using the Gibsons pool and that in fairness they should help support it. Several directors had expressed concern that approving such funding might jeopardize chances at the polls for the November recreation referndum, owing to Gibsons' refusal to join the regional recreation function.

The rains return

All Forest Service imposed fire restrictions for the Sunshine Coast were cancelled last week as the rains returned.

The local Gower Point weather reporting station recorded 52.7 mm (2 inches) of rain between Sunday, August 21, and Friday, August 26.

Voters need the facts

The news from the Ministry of Municipal Affairs that Gibsons will be required to obtain voter approval for turning over its water system to the Regional District will hopefully move that debate to a higher level.

As previously noted by Regional Director Bernie Mulligan, the village aldermen thus far haven't done a very good job in explaining to residents why the council favours a Regional District takeover. In the absence of a clear explanation, many residents have viewed the action with suspicion, and the result has been a lot of name calling and a lot of uninformed opposition.

The Times had editorially supported the transfer of the Gibsons waterworks system to Regional District control, and we have attempted through our news and editorial columns to present the facts relating to the takeover. It is incumbent now on those village officials who have supported the transfer to organize a clear presentation of the facts available to them and to publicize that information.

By the same token, opponents of the takeover will have to articulate their arguments in a clearer fashion. It would be of great benefit to the voters if Alderman Stu Metcalfe, in particular, would clarify his stand. Metcalfe has made his skepticism about the plan apparent during numerous public meetings, but he refuses to call himself either an advocate or an opponent of the takeover. There may be some political advantage to such fence-sitting, but it is of no service to the community. Alderman Metcalfe should decide which side he's on and explain his reasons publicly.

Muddling through

The recent arrival of Peter Light back on the Sechelt scene was a meeting of two worlds. For those few people who witnessed one segment or another of the episode, it was on occasion confusing, funny and maybe a little sad.

Peter was an unshorn free spirit around Sechelt back a few years ago when the tolerance for such lifestyles was considerably less than it is today. He and his family later moved to the relative isolation of Storm Bay at the mouth of Salmon Inlet.

His return last week was a little like having an atrophied part of your conscience stirred back to life. The first reaction to Peter is to dismiss him as hopelessly naive, but then you're left with the niggling feeling that basically he's right.

Stop complaining about other people not doing things for you, like recycling, says Peter. Take responsibility for your life.

That sort of puts us on the line. We support recycling, but right now personally we're not doing a thing about it. We were relieved when the regional board decided to form a committee to look into the matter. And a little uncomfortable when Peter opposed the idea. "I've got too many other things to do to handle my own recycling," Regional Board Chairman Harry Almond told Peter. That's sort of the way we felt too, but lacked the courage to say so.

We were amused when Peter told the board that the public response to his proposal had been "lousy." Such brutal honesty about the success of one's own efforts is not all that common.

And then there was Peter wearing a red rubber clown nose while he presented his recycling proposal in Cenotaph park. Is he serious or is he joking? Both. And he doesn't see any contradiction.

You're too pure for us, Peter. No doubt, life's a lot simpler up at Storm Bay. Back here in the real world, things are much more complicated, and we make more than a few compromises in muddling through as best we can. But thanks for the reminder.

Between the lines

By Dennis Fitzgerald

This column is a week late, yellowing around the adjectives already. But we'll have to go through with it anyway. Or at least I will; you have the option of skipping back to the classifieds to see if there's any new property for sale this week that you should have bought five years ago when it was affordable.

Almost every other columnist between 30 and 45 on the continent has already told you exactly how he or she felt upon hearing the news of Elvis Presley's death. Why should I be exempt?

It's a great opportunity for aging rock 'n rollers to dredge up 1956 and to sentimentally recall how it was in the swivel-hipped innocence before they killed John Kennedy and suddenly we turned around to find the hot breath of a hundred unexpected crises in our face.

That's an American perspective because I was an American then. But neither Elvis nor rock and roll nor any of the cultural phenomena spawned in those years showed a decent respect for national boundaries. Like it or not, we're all on the same North American roller coaster, hurtling through similar ups and downs no matter what flag flutters above the post office.

I thought of my mother when I heard Elvis was dead. They're linked in my mind because he started something that she never really understood, as often as she tried, and because of what happened on my twelfth birthday.

I was an aspiring greaser in those days, too young and skinny to be taken seriously, but earnestly curling my lip beneath a duck-tailed DA held in place with a quarter-pound of Brylcreem. Unfortunately, I lacked an essential prop: a motorcycle jacket, one of those gleaming black leather jobs with dozens of useless zippered pockets. It was a symbol for something. I didn't know what. Everything seemed a lot more formless then — Daniel Bell was proclaiming the death of ideology — or maybe I was just too young. Mother didn't know what it was a symbol for either, but she rightfully sensed that our world was about to turn around just such undefined symbols. She didn't want me to have it, but couldn't explain why to the satisfaction of either of us.

A few days before my twelfth birthday in 1956 I found a motorcycle jacket secreted in the washing machine. When it came to me boxed and wrapped at the proper time there was a note with it: "You can't tell a book by its cover or a boy by his jacket. Happy Birthday."

Mother died of cancer in 1973. Her favourite melody was "Laura's Song" from Dr. Zhivago, and I think she was happiest when I was getting a "regular boy's haircut" twice a month for 75 cents.

Elvis and that motorcycle jacket and my mother are all scrambled together in some unsorted corner of my memory.

Ed Sullivan said it best, and intentionally, when he blacked out Elvis from the waist down on that famous television show. It didn't have to be done that way. They could have simply pulled the cameras in a little tighter and completely avoided the pelvic gyrations.

Instead, they chose to dramatize the sexual overtones of the performance. They made it clear to all America that "This is where we draw the line," and the kids — Elvis' fans — were cast into the darkness at the bottom of the tube.

Elvis himself wasn't really an assault on anything. The lyrics to his songs had nothing to do with any kind of youth rebellion; his overt sexuality may have been a little disturbing, but it wasn't a serious challenge to the mores of the day until the critics told us that; his values, his devotion to his mother, his penchant for Cadillacs raised no fundamental questions about the direction of American life.

But somehow rock and roll became subversive and stayed that way for 10 or 15 years. Elvis sold millions of records. He made 30 bad movies filled with fighting, dancing, driving, and bikini-clad cuties. He got married in 1967, had a daughter nine months later, and was divorced in 1973. He got fatter and his former bodyguards talked of drinking and pills.

It wasn't the end of an era when he died. That era ended a long time ago, metamorphosed into new forms.

Elvis' death was the mortal confirmation of a social fact: they closed the doors of Heartbreak Hotel when the boys from Liverpool arrived. It's been a tourist attraction since then, the former residence of a now middle-aged generation.

Both the Magic Mushroom Stereo Shop in Sechelt and TJ's Sound Ltd. in Sunnycrest Plaza sold all of Elvis' records they had in stock on the same day of his death. Gary Lawson at the Magic Mushroom said three customers scooped up the 15 or 20 Presley records he had. Jennifer Thompson of TJ's said she ordered and received 40 more of his records and that they were all gone within 24 hours.

That won't be the end of it, of course, The Elvis Presley phenomenon is ripe now for a brief resurgence of commercial exploitation — books, records, documentaries, a movie or two. There is yet money to be made.

One doesn't wish death on anyone, but sometimes there's a certain relief when it comes. Our recent history is suddenly a bit tidier. One particular thread has run out. Elvis is no longer around flaunting a flabby parody of our youth. He has been firmly consigned to the past, and the present comes more sharply into focus.

The young grow old, and the beat, while it may go on, grows faint. There's new music in the air. We'd best take it out of the washing machine and learn to dance to it.

Winning ways

By Tom Perry

Are you outraged by the thought of a well-appointed boat flushing its head in your harbour? I am. But isn't it equally barbaric to slush human wastes with five gallons of otherwise pure drinking water, then spread it out over the ground hoping that it will decompose before it does any damage downhill? Both practises are major hazards, one operating during the tourist season and the other during the rainy season. As a result, Pender Harbour and any other popular and well-populated harbour is continually polluted by sewage. As a further complication, it isn't merely a matter of inconsideration, important as that is, but also a lack of suitable options. Once sewage pollution becomes detectable, therefore, it is difficult to reverse.

TOURIST SEASON

Sailing goes well with warm weather, and every season brings more pleasure craft into our area. Ideally the larger boats are fitted out with holding tanks. Yet there isn't a single pump-out station for them on the entire peninsula. It would be an additional expense for marina operators, who are also astute enough to know that a pump-out facility must itself be pumped out regularly.

What to do with it is a problem. And it's also a problem for everyone who has a septic tank, because these too must be pumped out. (If this isn't done every few years, the tank fills with solids and the drainfield could be plugged.

There is only one company — and one truck — able to perform this service for peninsula residents. The owner must, in turn, dispose of his truck contents in ways consistent with health and environment protection regulations. This means either running it through a sewage treatment plant or spreading limited amounts in fields with a substance called micro-aid that hastens its decomposition.

Both procedures are problematic. We have only one sewage treatment plant, to begin with. Typical of others, it operates aerobically; air is bubbled through the mixture in the presence of oxygen-using (aerobic) decomposers that break it down into less harmful substances. Septic and holding tanks, however, are rich in anaerobic decomposers, which work in exactly the opposite way. Introducing these into an aerobic system sets up bacterial class warfare that impairs the sewage-processing ability of the plant for days afterwards. It is estimated that a sewage treatment plant twice the size of the one in Gibsons would be needed to handle our present pump-out volume. That represents a sizeable investment!

The alternative of spreading truck contents with micro-aid onto fields is tolerated by the Pollution Control Board only in amounts less than 500 gallons a day. (This isn't an accurate measure of septic tank volume because water must often be added in pumping out its contents.) The field method of disposal is a variation on lagooning and spray irrigation practised in dry climates. It works well enough during our warmer months when virtually any soil percolates, but threatens to contaminate the water table or areas downhill at other times during the year.

RAINY SEASON

Shortly after the tourists go home we resume our Raincoast identity. And as it rains our water table rises, making septic drainfields progressively less reliable.

Drainfields are designed to function as controlled ways of conveying waste water from the septic tank to aerobic soil bacteria. Drain tiles release this effluent slowly over a large area. It then percolates through the surrounding soil and gravel, where its contents, which may contain pathogens, are decomposed. If the water table is high, though, septic effluent may enter it with little change. Seepage can then extend well beyond the hundred feet required between drainfield and the nearest water supply. With continued rain, waste water from the septic tank joins the runoff virtually unchanged. No wonder coliform counts are higher during the winter!

The design of waterfront properties as a parallel array of sloping narrow rectangles that allow beach access is a guarantee that water pollution from septic seepage will happen on a large scale. Other areas may and do have improperly graded fields and depressions where seepage can collect. Under these conditions, the aerobic system swamps and reverts to the slower and highly odoriferous anaerobic decomposition.

PROSPECTS FOR CHANGE

Any serious attempt to reverse the water pollution we now have and prevent future contamination must consider alternate methods of sewage disposal. The need to do so becomes all the more important now that aquatic habitats will be protected by the Canada Fisheries Department, and absolutely imperative in planning residential developments anywhere near sources of drinking water.

SAILORS

For the tourist trade, and for our own occassional use, we need a floating pump-out station in the harbour. The first such facility in B.C. was opened last month on Shuswap Lake. Quoting from the Salmon Arm Observer, "It is designed for self service and contains a garbage disposal bin.

"The provincial government has enacted legislation prohibiting the discharge of wastes into our lakes. The legislation requires that marine heads must be permanently disconnected from any overboard discharge and there is a penalty for failure to comply."

Because Shuswap Lake is an essential part of a provincial marine park, the Parks Branch installed and services this pump-out facility. Pender Harbour isn't that fortunate, but it does have eleven marinas, each of which could contribute something toward installation costs. Armed with results of the ongoing Pollution Control Board survey, which is certain to show extensive contamination from boats, the servicing of such a facility, and perhaps part of the capital cost, might be arranged with the provincial government. It would be great for business to advertise a free pump-out service, and boat plumbing connected to "hold" rather than "discharge" could be made a condition of tying up.

Boat owners should already know of a device called Jerry John that can be installed between head and discharge port. It offers some pretreatment of sewage and sells below 100 dollars, which doesn't add appreciably to the cost of a boat that would need one. Perhaps we should ask for legislation that would, as part of a boat's licensing procedure, ensure an environmentally appropriate degree of pretreatment before any discharge is possible.

LANDLUBBERS

The standard sewage disposal alternative available to land dwellers who would keep their indoor convenience is batch treatment. This takes the form of a miniature sewage treatment plant, modified so that all solid wastes are eventually decomposed and dissolved. Vigorous aerobic treatment is well advanced in the aeration chamber, but the clarified effluent must complete its processing through a title drain field. Because it is comparatively complicated, batch treatment plants must be monitored and maintained. They are also nearly three times as expensive as a septic system for servicing a single residence. Larger units, however, are quite economical. Ray Moscrip of Aero Purification Services, who has several plants operating in the Pender area, estimates that a cluster of fifty dwellings could be served at an initial cost of 600 dollars each.

Non-scheduled methods of dealing with human wastes are largely at the discretion of local health authorities. Considerable latitude exists to serve the unique needs of people in various situations. The following possibilities range in price from 200 - 600 dollars. A point in favour is a reduction in the amount of water they use, which means a reduction in the volume of contaminated water that must be disposed of.

DESTROILET doesn't use water at all. It is an example of an incinerating toilet, which may operate on gas or electricity. Wastes are burned to a sterile ash, after which cooling time is needed before the next use.

VACUSAN provides a partial vacuum to assist flushing action, which reduces the amount of water needed. Toilets like this are often used on boats and are gaining in popularity for use in public parks.

MONOMATIC goes a step further. It is a chemical toilet of the kind used by airlines that destroys bacteria and masks odor, so waste water can be recovered and used many times. The chemicalized contents must eventually be discarded, and they are anathema to all sewage disposal units.

MAGIC FLUSH is even more to the point, but still in the experimental stage. In place of water it uses an immiscible liquid that isn't contaminated by waste materials. The liquid is accordingly recycled from the holding tank and used repeatedly.

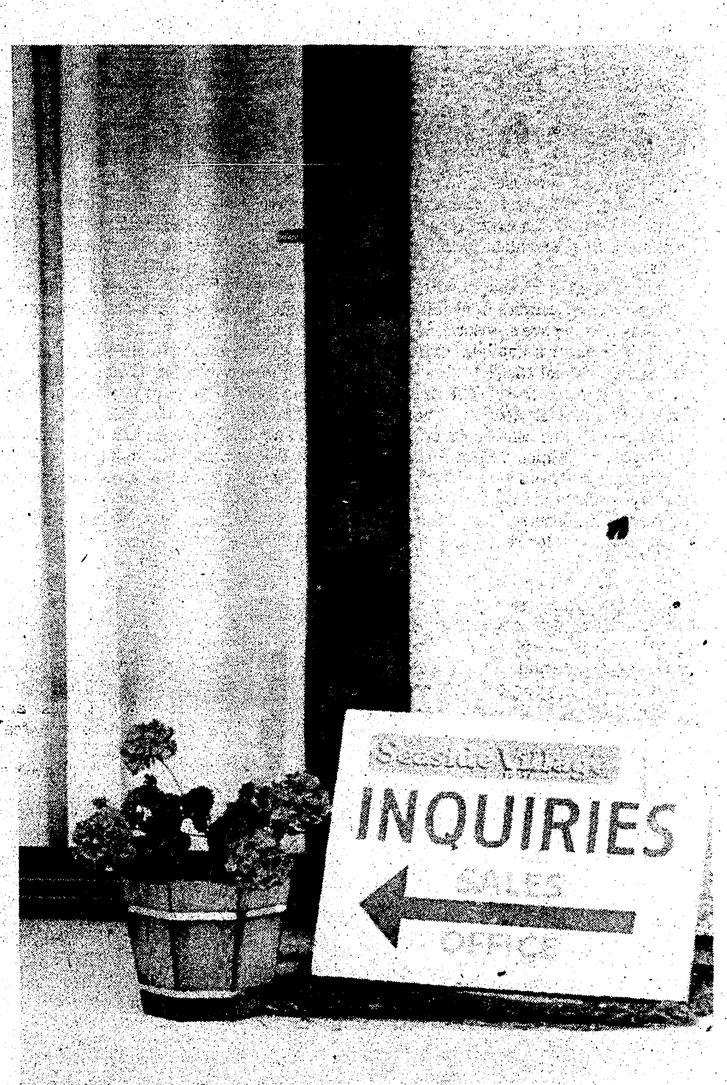
Of these possibilities only the first two offers complete processing. But it consumes power and must cool between uses. The other methods provide a convenience but leave the final disposal problem unsolved. The concluding article in this series will discuss two other methods. These offer greater long-term practicality and promise several ways of relating to our needs in recycling, recreation and conservation.

Christian Science

"Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ" (Eph 4:13). The New English Bible translates, "to mature manhood, measured by nothing less than the full stature of Christ."

How well this ties in with Gen. 1:27. "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him."

Should we think of man as anything less? Jesus did not.



A POT OF geraniums is about all that is for sale in Seaside Village, despite this sign outside the home of Interfacial Design Group President Bud Gairns. An order from the provincial Superintendent of Insurance has banned all property sales in the Sechelt subdivision for the past 18 months. Gairns company was responsible for house construction in the subdivision and many of the homes remain empty shells.

One man's opinion?

SAKINAW SUMMER

See Canada first, they tell us. So I did, and even spent part of my holiday locally on Sakinaw Lake.

You seldom take vacations in your own neighbourhood — which may explain why some locals seem a little unsure of where Sakinaw is (a bit north of Pender Harbour), since it's mostly a summer place. Unfortunately, it's few road accesses and the small number of full-time residents there seem to have caused it to be rather forgotten by those responsible for its care as well.

The natural beauty and protected waters haven't been overlooked by others, though. There are now about 150 summer homes on the shores, on both private land and crown leases. But it appears that in neither case was anyone very concerned about the effects of these buildings, or their locations.

The problem isn't that development has occurred, as the lake can certainly handle the amount now there, but rather that there has been almost no supervision of it. Even summer homes require certain facilities. The minimum list should include proper access, a potable water supply, sanitary waste disposal and safe construction. Sadly, experience has shown time and time again that without a watchful community authority, the average person tends to skimp dangerously on these necessities. At Sakinaw, the Lands Branch (crown leases) and the Regional District (building inspection) simply haven't carried out their supervisory roles property.

The first problem the visitor notices is access. It is possible to get to the lake via Irvine's Landing or Mixal Lake, but most people arrive by (what else?) Sakinaw Lake Road, west off the highway near Harbour Concrete. The trouble is that when you get to the end of the road, all you find is — the end of the road, with a launching ramp. It's a good thing that ramp is there too, as most houses can be reached only by water.

Water access isn't all bad by any means, but it does need careful attention. The first thing to watch for is that there's parking for those taking to the water. Ah — parking. In granting crown leases willy-nilly, and not noting new building, the government didn't realize that the pressure on the parking space was building up. And because most users of the lake are part-time, they've been reluctant to get together and spend their own money to fix the problem. Apart from the road allowance itself, with its obvious problems, almost the only cleared space available all belongs to one man, Mr. Hugh Carter. Mr. Carter has made parking available for many years, but recently, as part of his political pressure to force a rezoning (see below), he cut it off for a while. He's allowing it again now, but such a monopoly is rather disquieting.

Then, of course, water access discourages visits by health and building inspectors, unless they're eager. So hardly any of the Sakinaw houses have building permits. I know some readers will cheer at this frustration of the dreaded bureaucracy, but it's really nothing to cheer about. The result has been few proper sewage disposal systems, and the combination of unskilled home design and wood-burning stoves has proved to be just the fire hazard you'd expect.

The sewage disposal problem is a particular concern because government allowed the creation of many of the small lots without requiring adequate soil for a drain field of any source of water other than the lake. The more aware lake people are now boiling all their water, but that's hardly a solution. The situation is a time bomb.

The layout of the lots and houses is a bit sad, too. When you go to a country lake for a holiday, surely a little privacy is worthwhile. But many houses are as close together as in a suburb. It's good to cluster the development together to leave the rest of the lake untouched, but not like this! And it's a pity how few people have been sensitive enough to set their houses back a little from the waterfront, to reduce the jarring visual impact of angular plywood by means of a few trees.

The people there just grin and bear it, I suppose, as I suspect things have happened gradually. But I found their tolerance for noise amazing. I had naively expected to be able to sit on the porch and enjoy the quiet lakeside evening. But I'd overlooked the generator whine and the barking of the large dog population, carrying clearly over the water. And, more important, I'd forgotten that the after-supper stillness makes the lake beautifully smooth for the water-skiers. Some of these had kindly set up their slalom course in a deserted bay, but most roared back and forth right in front of the greatest concentration of houses. They also seemed oblivious to the danger of damage to moored boats, or even occupied small boats, from their wakes. Many didn't even carry a spotter in the boat to watch the skier.

Well, enough carping. Despite all of this, it's still a great place. I just hope that the problems now apparent will be dealt with before they really do spoil the lake for everyone. The actual future of the lake isn't clear, though.

The only change immediately pending is Mr. Carter's rezoning application. This asks for commercial status for his property, to recognize the existing use of the site. But this use has in the main been limited to renting parking, while he seems to have in mind wharf facilities and maybe a store and trailer sites. His stated plans are rather vague, but could have quite an impact, not only at his site but also as a precedent for other commercial enterprises.

A bit further off, the province has considered plans for a provincial campsite at the north end of the lake, coincidentally also on land currently owned by Mr. Carter. This could increase lake usage very substantially and needs careful consideration.

Since so many Sakinaw Lake users are absentees, it really is up to the government to take special care. Maybe they intend to, but they're a little late starting.

College-level courses start here next month

College level courses in English and Psychology will start next month in Sechelt as part of an experiment to bring post-secondary education to the Sunshine Coast.

The classes, along with three correspondence courses in chemistry and political science, are sponsored jointly by North Vancouver's Capilano College and the Sechelt School District.

Carrying three units of degree credit each, all five of the programs are recognized by the University of British Columbia and Simon Fraser University.

Hoemberg says if residents show enough interest, she hopes eventually to offer additional courses here which would allow students to reach second year university level.

Beginning September 27, the Psychology 100 course is designed as an introduction to the science, and will explore such problem-oriented areas as growing up, mental health, sexuality, liberation and oppression. The instructor is local resident and Capilano professor Michael McNeil.

English 100, a composition course, will start September 28. No instructor has been announced but Hoemberg says the curriculum centers on "the fundamentals of good writing."

The emphasis, she adds, will be on the essay form, with attention given to effective organization and development of ideas.

Both classes will be taught once a week at Chatelech Junior Secondary from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m., with some seminars Saturday mornings.

A 60 hour course of instruction costs a tax-deductible $70. This fee does not include books and materials, and students will be expected to make some library research trips to Capilano.

Each course needs a minimum enrollment of 15 people, says Hoemberg. Otherwise, they will have to be cancelled. The co-ordinator hopes to be able to admit senior citizens and persons on a low income at a nominal fee, once the minimum enrollment is reached.

Prospective students must be at least 18 years old and a Canadian citizen or landed immigrant. Younger people are eligible for admission if they are high school graduates or recommended by either their school principal or a Capilano counsellor.

Three other post-secondary courses will be available through correspondence this Fall. Studying at home, with occasional trips to Capilano, students can take one of two chemistry classes and an introduction to political science. Termed a "self-paced learning system" the program uses a variety of teaching methods including cassettes, manuals, slides and film. Each course has a limited enrollment and costs $21.

The Continuing Education Centre is also offering an innovative "office career" certificate program. Including study of bookkeeping, clerical skills and typing, the program, which can also be taken for general interest, will be repeated over two years to allow part time students to complete the certificate requirements.

In conjunction with Canada Manpower, the Continuing Education Centre is also providing a full-time course for people who want to upgrade an incomplete high-school education.

Lasting five months, the program, designed by Capilano, is intended to increase a student's employment opportunities and qualify him or her for vocational training.

Beginning in November, Manpower clients will be granted a weekly living allowance and five other spaces are available for a $25 monthly tuition fee. Candidates must be at least 17 years old and have been out of school for at least a year.

Hoemberg is also planning a variety of non-credit evening and day classes for residents as part of her regular continuing education program. Proposing to offer up to 90 courses in areas such as celestial navigation, natural dyeing, yoga, french conversation and house construction, she is also looking for people to teach classes in bartending and advanced auto-mechanics. A pamphlet outlining the program to be offered, will be mailed to Sunshine Coast residents within the next few weeks. Most courses last until Christmas. The average cost is $20.

For enrollment and further information on both credit and non-credit courses, call the Continuing Education Centre at 885-3512. Hoemberg warns there is limited enrollment in some of the more popular courses.

Redrooffs fishing has an illustrious history

By MARY TINKLEY

As three o'clock approached on the afternoon of August 20, boats came speeding across the Bay from Merry Island, Pirate Rock and Welcome Pass, hurrying to the Ross McAllister home where Mel and Donna Roels had set up a weigh-in station for the Redrooffs Beach and Country Club's annual Derby.

A number of members had gathered to watch the fish being brought in and some of the families represented there had been associated with Redrooffs for more than 50 years. The undoubted patriarch of the club is Chris Dalton, who has been a regular visitor to Redrooffs since 1913 when, at the age of three, he was accompanied by his parents, F.W. and Helen Dalton. It was he who distributed the prizes, one of which went to his grandson, John Dalton for the largest live bullhead.

This year the Stoker cup was awarded for a 7 pound 7 ounce salmon caught by Lynne Bogardus, whose parents, the Tom Campbells, have had a summer home at Redrooffs since 1946. Appropriately, the cup was presented to her by Dorrie Taylor, a daughter of the late Howard B. Stoker who donated the cup in 1935. Two other members of the Campbell family to win prizes were David and Heather Campbell for the largest fish in the boys' and girls' classes. Stuart Roels won a prize for the ugliest fish and his guest, Steve Carter, was awarded a prize for the largest fish caught by a man.

For the largest fish caught by a lady, Pat Russell received a handsome landing net, equipped with a weight indicator which was donated by Dorrie Taylor and her business partner, Sandy Martin, on behalf of Capilano Travel of North Vancouver.

Another of the pioneering families represented at the fishing derby was that of the late Herbert E. Hunt who first came to Redrooffs in 1921. His son Dennis Hunt and wife Laurie were runners-up in the men's and ladies' classes.

We are indebted to another of Herb Hunt's children, Phyllis Winton, for the loan of a book recording fish caught by guests at the Redrooffs Resort from 1922 to 1941. A most interesting document, it contains over the years, the names of the pioneering families — Daltons, Hunts, Stokers, Campbells whose descendents are still with us as well as many who are now forgotten. The book certainly indicates that fish were much more plentiful in those days than they are today. There were no limits and it was not unusual for boats to come in with as many as 25 salmon. In 1924, there is a record of 22 salmon caught in three hours by W.E. Milne and two guests and the Dalton boat brought in 18 salmon. In 1925, Mr. Milne must have impressed his guest from Toronto with his catch of 19 salmon and 13 grilse in five hours' fishing. June and July 1938 was apparently a particularly good period for springs, with big ones recorded for T.W. Heselton, Robert Page, John Winton nd Ben H. Harrison. In August 1930, the Hunt family alone accounted for 48 salmon.

From 1926 to 1934, one of the most famous fishing teams at the Redrooffs Resort was a trio consisting of Captain Arthur Barclay, his brother from Victoria and George Nairn. They spent all their time fishing in Captain Barclay's tub-like boat "I.C.U." and they never seemed to tire of it. Among the visitors at the restort, they were known as "Three men in a tub," but they chalked up some interesting records. They accounted for 22 salmon in half a day's fishing in July 1926 and in 1927 they recorded 106 salmon caught between August 8 and 21.

For many years, the Stoker family spent August fishing from their boat, M.S. Jocko, crewed by the whole Stoker family. Their best year was 1930 when the records show catches of 105 salmon and 13 trout. This was despite a lull from August 5 - 8 when they were skunked. The comment in the fishing log is that the fish had obviously got the message that the Jocko offensive had started and had ducked for cover.

Well may some of the old timers be saying, "Those were the days, my friend, we thought they'd never end."

Great birdwatching on Grognet farm

John Grognet, who has been spending a few days on the Gibsons farm of his son, John Jr., has found it a most interesting spot for bird watching. He reports he saw a big skein of about 300 geese flying south on August 24, which may indicate the freezing up of the northern feeding grounds and an early winter ahead.

John says that the swallows which have been around the farm all summer have already left and that he saw a flight of between 40 and 50 virios which he thought were also migrating.

The farm with its wet clay soil offers an ideal feeding ground for ducks and he was not unduly surprised when 41 pintail ducks landed and made themselves at home for a few days. They seemed to have no fear of the cows or humans. Two of them remained behind with the domestic ducks of the farm when the rest departed. — M.T.

PNE pioneers

Bert James of Cedar Springs was accompanied by his brother, Walter James of West Sechelt when he rode in the PNE parade this year. They were two of the pioneers who had attended the first PNE held in 1910. — M.T.

Roar of thanks for Sechelt Lions

By ROBERT FOXALL

Vancouver Lions are often in trouble, but it must be said again the Sechelt Lions Club are always winners when it comes to the picnics they stage for the Senior Citizens Association. Such was the case Saturday when over 80 of our group were hosted under the trees at the home of Olaf Wallander on East Porpoise Bay.

I won't list the menu, but I must report that many of the ladies were asking for the chef's name so that they could try to cajole his recipe for the baron of beef from him. Succulent 'm'm'm. And where do the Lions get their pull with the weatherman? We had heavy rain on Friday. Saturday dawned dull and cloudy, but by the time we sat around the tables the sun was shining brightly and a gentle breeze was blowing through the trees.

Throughout the luncheon George Paige kept our spirits up with many songs, old and new, most excellently sung. President Bill Wilson thanked the Lions for the excellence of the event and I know that all the members pesent would want to give an extra roar of thanks to the Sechelt Lions Club.

Next weekend being a holiday weekend, I probably will have no report to make, so am asked to remind you now of several coming events.

The executive are reminded that there will be an executive meeting at 10 a.m. Tuesday, September 6. The membership should note that the first general meeting of the new season will be held at 1:30 p.m. September 15.

Dave Hayward has a Reno trip lined up for October 2. Phone Dave for your reservation. He also reminds you to have your pictures ready for the photo contest.

Chlorinator fixed for Redrooffs Rd.

Good news for users of water on the Redrooffs Waterworks system — the chlorinator, which has been out of order for some time, has now been repaired and is in good working order again. — M.T.

We still have a good stock of paper Doilies in all sizes for you. Order one, or order one hundred, or as many as you need. — Miss Bee's Shop, Sechelt.

Sechelt tot lot begins October 1

The Sechelt Tot Lot is comprised of a group of mothers banded together to provide pre-school activities for their youngsters.

They meet Tuesdays and Thursdays, and newborns up to three years old play together at St. Hilda's Church Hall for two hours.

The three and four year olds have their group session at the Sechelt Elementary school where they take part in crafts etc. geared for their age group.

October 1 is the starting date. President is Trudy Warhurst at 885-3607, secretary Linda Paulhus at 885-3685. A call to either will answer your questions. — P.C.

Grandmother tries a fishing holiday

Mrs. C. I. Taylor, who usually spends her summers at her home at Damp Bay, Redrooffs, took an entirely different kind of holiday this year. She flew to Bella Bella where she joined her son Kit on his gillnetter, "Sunset" for 17 days.

They fished in the Milbanke Sound area and she found it an exhilerating experience. She was impressed with the fine camaraderie among the fishermen and their willingness to give a helping hand.

As there was an official close-down between each two days of fishing, there was ample opportunity for visiting and socializing. She returned from Namu, with a flight which took her over the Coast Mountains which she reports were a most majestic sight.— M.T.

Benders move to Fernie

Cosntable Jerome and Eileen Bender have changed their residence from Cranbrook to Fernie. Jerome is with the RCMP. The Nestman family was hoping their son-in-law would be moving closer to Sechelt, not farther away. — P.C.

R.C. Auxiliary holds party at St. Mary's

Wednesday, August 17, was probably the hottest days of the year on the Peninsula, but the ladies, members of the Roberts Creek Hospital Auxiliary, were pleased to find it cool and airy in the day room of the Extended Care Unit at St. Mary's Hospital, when they hosted a double birthday party. Mrs. Della Chilton was celebrating her 99th birthday, and Mrs. Grace Swanson also had her birthday on that date.

As a change from the conventional birthday cake, the auxiliary gave the patients a strawberry tea, and the strawberry shortcake disappeared fast. Afterwards members and patients played bingo and during the festivities Mrs. Bunny Shupe provided incidental light music.

Members are reminded that the first meeting of the Fall season will be at St. Aidan's Church Hall on Monday, September 12, at 7:30 p.m. — Madeline Grose.

Sechelt auxiliary bridge tournament

The social season is fast approaching for those interested in getting out and meeting people, and if you have a love of bridge playing, here is your solution.

The Sechelt Auxiliary to St. Mary's Hospital sponsor a bridge tournament known as Merry-go-round bridge. This is open to the public; membership in the Auxiliary is not necessary. It is a fun money raising event for the Sechelt Auxiliary.

The season opens with a get together party held at St. Hilda's Church Hall, Friday, September 30, at 7:30 p.m. All persons interested in playing bridge are welcome at this party where one can look the group over and decide whether to join in.

Further information may be obtained from Mrs. Margaret Humm, your congenial host and chairman at 885-2840. — P.C.

Moving—but not very far

Mrs. Bea McCaul has sold the Welcome Beach home where she has lived for more than 30 years, but is not moving far away. Her friends will still be able to find her in a house on Mintie Road, close to the Halfmoon Bay store and her telephone number is unchanged. Her sister, Crystal Hare of Union Lake, Michigan, flew to B.C. to help her organize the move. New owners of the Welcome Beach property are Norman Whittle and Mike West. —M.T.

● Woodworkers' contract settled

from $7.01 an hour to $8.16 by the time it expires on June 14, 1979.

The tradesmen's rate would go up from $9.41½ to $10.56½.

The settlement also includes an additional statutory holiday, an increase in health and welfare indemnities from $175 to $190 during the length of the contract, better vacation provisions, increased employer contributions to the dental plan and the pension plan agreement, which union negotiators have hailed as a major victory for the IWA.

As part of a new, unified pension scheme to cover all IWA certifications in Western Canada, employers belonging to the Forest Industrial Relations group will provide full, past-service benefits to IWA members for years worked in the forestry industry prior to 1973 (when the first industry pension plan was introduced) and increased by 50 per cent the monthly pensions now received by woodworkers who have retired since 1973.

In return for the pension scheme, the IWA negotiators agreed to give up a cost of living adjustment clause in the new contract.

The settlement is considered by both sides to be within the Anti-Inflation Board guidelines, although the percentage cost of the package has not been disclosed.

The FIR-IWA agreement is expected to form the basis of a settlement for 5,000 northern and 6,000 southern Interior woodworkers.

Garden Corner

— by Guy Symonds

This time last year we were moaning about the weather — summer was well advanced and we had seen very little warmth or sunshine. Those, unexpectedly enough, were to come in the late fall. This year gardeners have been worrying about the exact opposite. Until recently we had seen no rain since July 23. Besides we have seen temperatures approaching, and in some cases, passing previous record highs.

The kind of soil and subsoil with which most of us have to deal on this peninsula quickly shows the effect of this comparatively mild dry spell, and except where the garden is well established by years of care, the plants that depend on water for their life find the going increasingly tough.

A great deal will depend on what went into the ground before the planting and seeding. Compost or humus of any kind is the biggest help, and after that comes the handling of the problem on a day to day basis.

It will help if we remind ourselves of what is going on in the plant. First it can only get its food if it is in solution — in liquid form. It canot chew.

So all the millions of little root hairs must find food available in the condition in which it can be absorbed. The amount they can get is greatly affected by two things — transpiration and evaporation. It doesn't take a scientist to understand that the hotter and dry the weather, the faster these two operations are speeded up. So whenever water is needed it must be supplied in enough quantity that it will get right down to the root system, carrying with it the food the roots must have in the form in which they can use it. So sprinkling till the surface is darker and smells nice is not enough.

If we have water restrictions, as indeed we already have, the smart thing to do is divide the garden into sections and really soak each section in turn. Those parts of the garden that are drying should have the benefit of continuous shallow hoeing. This will remove the weeks which are of course competing for their share of the moisture and will keep a fine insulating dust mulch on top to discourage evaporation of moisture brought to the surface by capillary action.

Hedges, particularly cedar, should get their share of attention. They look such a husky and permanent growth that it is easy to forget that actually they are quite vulnerable and can sustain lasting and fatal damage from dehydration.

The garden books will remind you that it is impossible to have lettuce and spinach in the fall. They don't, naturally enough, point out that it is useless to sow seed in dust. So the ground moisture must be watched if there is to be satisfactory germination. This of course means the damping down of the soil before sowing. Incidentally, it seemed that it was impossible to get New Zealand spinach seed in the west. This gardener got some from Montreal and sowed it about the third week in June. It has had no irrigation but is thriving tremendously. Previous experience with this valuable source of leafy greens demonstrated its ability to flourish under the toughest of conditions.

Generally, however, it will be necessary to keep seedlings supplied with the life-giving water by some artificial means. Sprinkling is not a good idea. For a start it can wash the little plants out of the ground, and also it can be very wasteful of water. The best way is to run a shallow furror down the row a few inches away from the plants and trickle the water down it. If you garden in a very big way it might pay you to investigate the modern trickle method that supplies each individual root system with exactly the amount of water it needs until the surrounding storehouse of food is satisfied. Then it shuts itself off.

This is a year to challenge the gardener. If he is smart he will learn a great deal from it.

Dogcatcher expands to Sechelt Village

Village of Gibsons dogcatcher Doug Elson, who recently began dog control operations in Sechelt, said last week that his first apprehension on the new beat is a black and white female English Setter.

The dog was picked up in Sechelt August 26 and may be claimed by contacting the Gibsons Municipal office, Elson said he would post a weekly notice describing the dogs he picks up on the laundromat bulletin board in Sechelt and in Trail Bay Mall.

He said it but he didn't mean it

Gibsons Mayor Larry Labonte said Sunday that the village will enforce its pending minimum standards by-law, but that there may be changes in the ordinance before it receives final council approval.

The by-law is designed "to establish and enforce minimum standards relating to the state of repairs and maintenance of the existing residential and non-residential property in the municipality."

Labonte told the Times on August 20, "I don't think you can force anyone (to meet the required standards), and I don't think you can fine them either." The law provides for fines ranging from $50 to $500 for failure to meet the standards.

Labonte acknowledged Sunday that he had made the August 20 statement but said that what he said wasn't what he meant. "We can't pass a by-law and not observe it," he said Sunday.

He said the ordinance, which had been given first reading by council, may be subject to deletions or amendments before final approval. He said he didn't know exactly what changes, if any, might be necessary in the law, which runs to 14 typed legal size pages. "I've only spent about 10 minutes looking it over," he said.

Labonte said he didn't want the controversial ordinance to "wind up like our clean yards law. We took a guy to court on that and he finally got a $10 fine, but it cost the village $250. Afterwards, the judge chewed us out for not passing a law with teeth. The same thing could apply on this law."

The minimum standards by-law is a prerequisite for village participation in the federal Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. The program will allow Gibsons residents to receive low-interest home improvement loans up to $10,000.

Book Look

— by Murrie Redman

SAILING CRAFT IN CANADA: A Guide for Buyers and Owners, Cliff Newman, McGraw-Hill Ryerson c1977, 192 pages, papercover, $5.95.
BASIC WINDCRAFT: Using The Wind For Sailing, Alan Watts, Douglas David and Charles c1976, 96 pages.

There is something irresistible about the sight of a sailboat in full sail that makes the average motorboater secretly wish he could give up his motorized comfort to scud along in one of those beautiful vessels with the wind in his hair and all that. And a salcraft with a gorgeous spinnaker bellied out colourfully, can turn even a dirt farmer to seagoing dreams.

Cliff Newman's book, which came out in April this year, gives the newcomer some good advice about buying a sailboat as well as providing him with a directory showing all the new boats on the market. There are boats right down to the two and one-half metre size. Prices, plans and specs are shown, often with a photograph of the boat in action.

Local sailing enthusiast Ron Breadner says about the book: "Good book - introduction gives some accurate worthwhile information about sailing - a good buyer's or seller's guide." He feels, however, that many of the craft are Eastern types and he would like to see more models that are suitable for these waters.

The second book, BASIC WINDCRAFT, has a companion volume entitled STARTING SAILING that initiates to the sport might like to have. BASIC WINDCRAFT has on every page diagrams that attempt to reveal the secrets of that "invisible man," the wind. The book explains currents from land and how they behave so that sailors can take advantage of them. It helps one to forecast weather and give lots of instruction data on use of sail to catch and control that elusive fellow, Mr. Wind.

I was very happy to find out that sailing a boat on its ear is not really the best way to make forward progress. (Seeing a boat with its rails dipping almost in the water is one of the things that prevents me from actually becoming a sailor!) Author Watts, a Britisher, says that trimming the sails to remain upright gives one the most practical use of the force of the wind. I think it likely saves wear and tear on the crew, also, and certainly, the onlookers.

Unfortunately, many of the maps refer to British and French coastlines and are not very helpful to us. Only a small part of this book is foreign, however, and the material in it could be of interest to all nature lovers who want to increase their knowledge about the environment.

WITH LESS THAN four months to go until Christmas, children attending the Wilson Creek summer recreation program make sure the holiday decorations are ready. Then again, perhaps they are just exploring the latest in life-size Halloween costumes.

WHILE PROVINCIAL Minister of Education Bill Vander Zalm is proposing his new idea for fighting vandalism, a Gibsons service station has another idea for fighting juvenile delinquency — conveniently located just across the street from Elphinstone Secondary. —Timesphoto

Fisher skeptical of minister's vandalism plan

Operation Vandal-Stop, the latest scheme by Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm to put welfare recipients to work — this time as school watchmen — was not greeted with much enthusiasm by the local school board chairman.

"It doesn't go down too well with me," says Chairman Celia Fisher who worries the plan could damage relations between the board and the local Canadian Union of Public Employees.

Announced August 24, the proposal would place people on social assistance, primarily older men, inside schools at night, weekends and on holidays to prevent vandalism. They would report hourly by phone to the local police who would respond at once in the case of attempted property destruction.

The Social Credit minister has already incurred the wrath of Human Rights Branch boss Kathleen Ruff for his suggestion that only men might be hired for the jobs, a remark she claims controvenes the law.

Employees of the Ministry of Human Resources says Operation Vandal-Stop could provide 5,000 jobs in B.C., even though the province has only 1,500 school buildings.

Participation in the program will be up to individual school districts and union approval would have to be obtained for the additional workers.

According to Fisher, local school trustees have been investigating ways of fighting the growing vandalism problem on the peninsula, but hiring welfare workers was not one of the proposed solutions.

The school district had considered asking the Ministry of Education for funds to hire three night watchmen to guard the area's wood-frame buildings until adequate sprinkler systems could be installed, but so far no formal action has been taken.

Commenting on the Vander Zalm plan, Fisher said "At first blush it sounds like a good idea, but the salary scales of these type of things are usually pretty low. People are supposed to be earning their living."

She added, "It doesn't go down too well with me, I don't see how it could practically work."

Fisher was also concerned that CUPE, which represents most school district caretakers could regard the welfare workers as scab labour.

In Vancouver the provincial president of CUPE has come out against the scheme, saying the minister is trying to break collective bargaining agreements between the union and local school districts.

Vander Zalm, responding to the attacks, replied "I don't think the unions have given enough time to study the program, and given more time, they will not only support it but they will get behind it. It will make every B.C. community stronger and give local people a sense of pride."

Premier Bill Bennett has given tentative support to the proposal.

Welfare watchmen would be paid about $650 a month. No one, says Vander Zalm, would be forced to take the job, but welfare benefits can be cut off for people who refuse suitable work offers.

MORE ABOUT . . .

• Airplanes—too many to close?

In rural regions 500 feet is the minimum. Exceptions are made for aircraft taking off and landing from airports or a landing area, such as a harbour or lake. Theoretically, if a pilot is flying over an uninhabited area he can bring his plane down as low as he likes, skimming the tundra or the wheatfields, as long as he doesn't endanger lives.

However, in a crucial omission, federal statutes do not provide a definition of a built-up area. According to Bryan Thompson, Inspector of Air Regulations for B.C., the decision on whether an area is "built-up" or "rural" for the purposes of flying, must be set by a local judge in a test court case.

The problem is compounded, Thompson continues, by the number of new aircraft registered each month. He estimates that in Vancouver alone, 150 new planes were licensed in July. "The more aircraft, the more noise — and the ratio of irresponsibility is going to go up," says the inspector.

Pilots, adds Thompson, are supposed to learn the rules of flying during their ground school instruction. "After licensing, we don't go chasing after them to see they've kept up with the rules," he says.

If his department receives a complaint of reckless flying, the pilot will either receive a letter of warning, or, after an investigation of the incident, have his licence suspended or charges laid against him.

The MOT prefers that the matter go before a judge as the infraction can be more impartially handled than through personal contact by an inspector.

"Generally, we don't suspend on top of a court case," says Thompson. "It's either one or the other." One continual problem, he adds, is getting the complainant to take the case to court. "Usually people think we can handle the whole thing by ourselves."

Thompson classifies the Sechelt Peninsula as a built-up area, and agrees that pilots have no business flying at 300 or 400 feet or lower over area homes.

"Noise is an unavoidable side effect of small aircraft," claims Don Mills, the Regional Superintendent of Airways, who says the problem comes primarily from float planes.

On the Peninsula, he says, 75 per cent of this noise originates with commercial aircraft — the Tyee flights, chartered planes and planes belonging to local logging and booming companies.

While Mills, unlike Thompson, would classify the Sunshine Coast as a rural area requiring the 500 foot minimum ceiling, he adds that planes should stay over the water until it's necessary to cross land. "I see no reason to go over your dwellings," he says. "One of the things we have to teach pilots," he elaborates, "is to consider the people under them."

Mills' department regularly holds meetings with fliers in the Vancouver area, which includes the peninsula, to keep them informed of new flight regulations.

But in small commercial companies, Mills explains, as soon as you train one pilot to be aware of the problem of engine noise "he quits and you have to start all over again. It's an education thing."

Complaints increase from the Sunshine Coast during the summer as, with the incrased ferry fares, more people, according to Mills are chartering planes to bring them to the peninsula especially to the Pender Harbour area.

Tyee becomes a problem when the planes take off over Sechelt but during some weather, says the superintendent, this is an unavoidable situation. However, he says his department has warned Tyee about noisy take offs from the Gibsons harbour.

While his department will investigate complaints of loud planes, not much can be done without the registration number. "If someone says a blue and white plane flew 10 feet over their house, well, there's probably 300 blue and white planes in the Lower Mainland."

He adds, "There's no way you can legislate against an idiot."

But he agrees, unless pilots are landing in this area they should be a mile off shore. "If they are not they are wrong and I won't defend them, I can't."

Also says Mills, if you can read a plane's registration number "then he's too damn low."

Lorne Berman and his group claim much of the problem is caused by Vancouver flying students who use the local airport to practice take-offs and landings as they don't have to pay a fee for the use of the runway. But Vera McAllister, who teaches the only local flying school, says her students lose up to 25 per cent of their in-flight training time as she makes sure they circle wide over the area at a minimum height of 1300 feet. Also she says, some of the worst offenders are local pilots giving as an example an auxiliary RCMP constable "who should know better."

Berman believes the basic problem "is the number of flights overhead on a day to day regular basis." Whether they emanate from Porpoise Bay or the Sechelt airport, the fact is there is just too many planes," he says.

While others may be concerned with how the resulting noise affects their property values, Berman says he is more concerned with what the planes are doing "to the quality of life on the peninsula."

The dentist claims "there are only a very small group of fliers who are continually pestering people. With 25 miles of water between Nanaimo and us why do they have to fly directly overhead?"

One answer, says Berman, is that "fliers, as a group, really like their freedom. They don't like restrictions placed on them. Maybe that's why they are up there, to be like a bird."

Berman and his group want to curtail the "frivolous" flights over the area and recently went to the Regional District seeking their intercession with the Ministry of Transport, but the directors declined to take action, other than forwarding a brief prepared by the group to the MOT. The directors also declined to investigate the lease about to be signed between the two villages and the local aero club which Berman and his followers claim does nothing to help the noise situation.

One member of the delegation flatly told the regional representatives that unless something was done to limit the number of planes flying over the peninsula on visual flight rules, a mid-air collision was inevitable.

OVER THE WEEKEND Sechelt council moved to remove the debris scattered along the hydro right-of-way in Seaside Village after months of petitioning by nearby homeowners who claimed the stump piles were home to a large number of rats. The aldermen decided to burn the heaps after last week's rain lessened the fire hazard. The fate of construction equipment and a modular home scattered among the development is still to be decided.

SCRD won't conduct Granthams water vote

Regional board directors last Thursday turned down a request from The Granthams Landing Improvement District that the Regional District conduct a referendum on the question of regional takeover of the Granthams water system.

Directors indicated that if Granthams wants to hold a referendum on the matter, the residents would have to organize the election themselves.

The motion that the Regional District not participate in the referendum, now set for September 10, was made by Area F Director Bernie Mulligan.

"The problem lies within that water district to settle the dispute that has arisen over their elected representatives and it is not our responsibility," Mulligan said.

Supporting Mulligan's motion, Director Peter Hoemberg said, "We've already been accused of meddling in their affairs and to run a referndum for them — well, forget it."

The authority for approving dissolution of a water district and transfer of the district's assets rests with the executive of the water district, subject to the concurrence of the provincial Water Rights Board. The Granthams referendum, therefore, will not be legally binding. The district's executive, however, is expected to reverse its previous approval of the takeover should balloting run heavily against the transfer.

Sakinaw Lake launch closing, Carter says

The Sakinaw Lake boat launch will be "closed permanently after Labour Day because of difficulties with the Regional District over zoning," owner Hugh Carter said last week. Carter declined to specify the nature of his difficulties. "It's a bunch of —," he said.

Carter previously had applied to the Regional District for a rezoning to commercial for more than 30 acres he owns at the foot of Sakinaw Lake Road. He said he intended to build a small resort with cabins, a small boat launch and a beach area.

According to Regional District Planner Robyn Addison, the planning staff had determined that the requested rezoning was a far larger area than Carter required for his development. She said she discussed the matter with Carter, who agreed to accept a rezoning for only 8.8 acres, "and he seemed quite happy with that."

Planners also concluded later than a Commercial 2 zone was too broad for such a recreational area, allowing vehicle service stations, for instance.

Planners then gained regional board approval to design a new Commercial 5 zone, which Addison said would be "tailor-made to Mr. Carter's proposal."

Carter, a Vancouver resident, had placed the Sakinaw Lake property up for sale prior to his announcement of closing last week.

3 car wrecks Friday night

Sechelt RCMP busied themselves attending to three motor vehicle accidents last Friday night, none of which produced serious injuries.

At 6:30 p.m. a car driven by Neil McKinnon, 84, of Vancouver collided with a pickup truck driven by Leonard Reagh, 23, of Garden Bay south of Northwest Bay Road on HIghway 101.

A woman passenger in Reagh's truck was taken to hospital and realeased. Damage to the two vehicles was estimated at $6,000. Cause of the accident is under investigation.

Also at about 6:30 p.m. a motorcycle driven by Robert Bredfeld, 22, of Sechelt collided with a station wagon, driven by Kathleen Henry, 57, also of Sechelt. The accident occurred just north of the Wakefield Inn on Highway 101.

No charges were laid in the incident which produced an estimated $600 damage.

A one-car accident at 11:05 p.m. just north of the Wilson Creek bridge on Highway 101 occurred when the automobile driven by a Vancouver juvenile attempted the corner at high speed and rolled over.

Neither the driver nor his passenger, also a Vancouver juvenile, was injured. Police charged the driver with excessive speed.

Sechelt RCMP have been recovering some odd possessions lately. A Madeira Park man turned in to police a pair of hiking boots left in his car by a hitchhiker. At 5:45 a.m. on August 27, police received a report of a camper top sitting in the middle of East Porpoise Bay Road near Sandy Hook. Arriving at the scene, police found a white metal camper which apeared to have been placed at the site rather than to have fallen from the back of a truck.

Sechelt RCMP also filed a report on a found Sportyak 2 boat, which washed up on the beach at Mission Point. A ladies Timex watch also has been turned into police.

Police are investigating a series of minor thefts last week on Cowrie Street. Thieves broke windows and snatched various items from the Shell Service Station, Whitaker House, Books and Stationery and the Madrigal Shop.

Personal

"There is nothing that cannot be made cheaper, and sold for less; and the man who considers price alone is this manufacturer's victim."

The above was written years ago, but it still applies today. Particularly to a person buying radial tires.

Our company has been selling and servicing tires on the Sunshine Coast since 1964. We began selling radial tires to our customers in this area, eight years ago. We have learned something very interesting about radial tires. Here is the lesson we have learned... "No American-designed radial tire will deliver the mileage in the Sunshine Coast area that the European-designed and manufactured radial tire will."

The above statement is borne out by actual fact. Tire after worn-out radial tire has been removed from vehicles in this area after rolling only 12 to 20 thousand miles! Tires that were sold to the customer on the basis that they would deliver 40,000 miles. Tire after radial tire has been taken off vehicles in this area by our two stores because the car has been shimmying and vibrating. No amount of balancing would help, because these tires had 'misaligned belts'. Often, these tires were on brand new vehicles!

All of these tires were American-designed radials!

In case after case where our stores switched the customer to a European-designed radial, he got 45 to 50 thousand miles, and his shake, rattle and roll disapeared.

These are not American case histories, or even Canadian case histories; they are Sunshine Coast case histories that your local OK Tire Stores in Sechelt and Powell River have personally dealt with.

By all means, buy radial tires for your vehicle, but please consider the above when you are shopping. Get the facts from your dealer as to how an American radial tire is made... how a European radial tire is made, and exactly why the latter is so much better. If your dealer can't or won't tell you, perhaps you are dealing at the wrong place. Don't let a $10.00 price difference blind you to a quality difference that will give you up to double the mileage.

Cereals half sugar?

National Health and Welfare Minister Marc Lalonde and Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Tony Abbott recently made public a proposal that the labels on breakfast cereals declare the total amount of sugar and other sweeteners, as a percentage of the total weight of each cereal. The proposal is contained in a letter sent to all manufacturers of breakfast cereals by the Health Protection Branch (HPB), Department of National Health and Welfare. The letter also includes proposals for mandatory minimum content of vitamins and minerals that would be required in cereal products.

A survey of the sugar content of Canadian breakfast cereals was recently completed by HPB. Seventy-four cereals were analyzed and the results indicated that sugar represented up to approximately 56 per cent of the weight of some cereals. Certain foods which are mostly sugar, such as candies and soft drinks, are easily recognized, says the branch, "but Canadians may not be aware of the large amount of sugar in some manufactured foods, such as certain breakfast cereals."

Mr. Lalonde noted that unwise use of sugar is linked to dental caries, a widespread health problem in Canada.

Socreds nomination Oct. 2

Premier Bill Bennett may attend Mackenzie riding nomination meeting for candidates seeking to represent Social Credit in the next provincial election. The nominating meeting will be held on Oct. 2 at the Beach Gardens Resort in PR.

Socred Mackenzie constituency association president Gerry Gray said last week the Sunday gathering would probably be an all-day meeting. It's unconfirmed as yet that Premier Bennett will be on hand, but Mr. Gray said he is expected to be present.

Mackenzie Socreds have decided to choose a candidate two years before the next provincial election is anticipated, "to give the candidate time to know the riding in the two years — or whatever time he's got. Who knows when they'll call an election?" said Mr. Gray.

"This is intended to stop the sort of situation where an election is called and a candidate is parachuted into the riding without a chance to know anything about it."

HOME ON SUPER BEACH #3862
3 bedroom home, only steps from pebble beach, just enough elevation to be safe from storms. Looks up Davis Bay shoreline, and west to Trail Islands, south exposure for full sun. 1090 sq ft home is well remodelled, brick fireplace in large airy living room, automatic oil furnace in full unfinished basement. FP $62,500. PETER SMITH, 885-9463 eves.

AN ALL ROUND BARGAIN #3699
Whether you're looking for a spot to build your retirement home or that weekend retreat, this well situated lot on Skookumchuck Road could be the answer. With a marvellous view of Sechelt Inlet. All local services available and Tillicum Bay Marina just minutes away to moor your boat, this lot at the reduced price of $6,900 has got to be a bargain. BERT WALKER, 885-3746 eves.

GREAT VIEW WITHOUT A HILL #3851
Just $12,800 for full serviced 50x170' lot in Lower Gibsons. Convenient walking distance to all conveniences. JACK WARN, 886-2681 eves.

LEVEL VILLAGE LOT #3592
Half cash, full price is $10,500 and balance at 6% interest. This lot is level and cleared. Walking distance to shops on blacktopped road. Size 80x120', full services. PETER SMITH, 885-9463 eves.

CONVENIENT, SECLUDED, READY TO BUILD #3824
Pretty well describes this nearly level lot off Cheryl-Ann Park Road. Close to shopping, near to the ocean with just enough seclusion assured by the nice stand of trees. Very little clearing is required to enable you to build on this one. Compare and you'll agree, the price of $13,000 is right on. BERT WALKER, 885-3746 eves.

YOUNG FAMILY WANTED #3771
For this snug and comfy home. Two blocks from Tillicum Bay Marina for lots of summer fun. Winter time, curl up before the cozy fireplace or tinker in the workshop. Good landscaping. Full value at $34,900 and price is right on. Try your down payment and you may be the proud owners of a home to call your own. DON HADDEN, 885-9504 eves.

A LOT TO BUILD ON — PLUS #3847
You say that the average lot is just not quite big enough for what you have in mind: a garden, or perhaps to build a boat on. This good-sized (83x240') lot assures you of ample space, on paved Cooper Road. Local services at the road and to top it off, is nearly level. You'll have to agree the asking price of $11,500 is reasonable. Make an offer to BERT WALKER, 885-3746 eves.

PLEASANT WOODS #3832
5.1 acres stretching 600' from highway at Roberts Creek, with rented cottage. NOT IN FREEZE. On regional water. FP $35,000. JACK WARN, 886-2681 eves.

SECHELT LOT #3856
Level lot. Nice inlet view, near marina and ice arena. All local services, all new homes in the area. Lot size 70x125', FP $12,000. DON HADDEN, 885-9504 eves.

VALUE PLUS #3853
From the beautifully landscaped grounds to the spacious, well-maintained interior of this 3 bedroom home, the knowledgeable home buyer will appreciate the gracious living style it affords to complement the value. The excellent ground floor self-contained suite is a model of efficient use of space, and provides a welcome source of revenue to offset the effects of inflation. Curl up beside either of the 2 fireplaces this next winter and, while enjoying your favorite drink, congratulate yourself for having a smart buy at $64,000 from BERT WALKER, 885-3746 eves.

FULLY SERVICED COUNTRY LOT #3842
Just $11,500 This large lot on a quiet cul de sac offers peace & trees. Also only minutes drive to picnic site at beach. See our sign on Richards Rd. PETER SMITH, 885-9463 eves.

MADEIRA PARK #3859

GALES TRYOUTS

Local tryouts for the new Gales hockey club will be September 26 to October 1 at the Sechelt Arena. Prospective players must be at least 16. The club is open to players from all areas of the Sunshine Coast.

For further information, contact manager Randy Rayment, 885-3751, or coach Bill Rayment, 885-3465.

Final team selection will be made during a training camp held from October 1 to October 21. The first home games are scheduled for October 29 and 30. All home games will be played at the Arena.

Season tickets for 40 home games cost $30 and are available at the following locations: all branches of the Bank of Montreal, Sechelt Credit Union, Port Mellon Credit Union in Gibsons, J's Unisex Hair in Sunnycrest Mall and Morgan's Men's Wear in Sechelt.

One player to watch as the Gales action gets under way is Rob Orpen of Kitimat. Rob is currently with the New Westminster Bruins.

TROPHY HORSE SHOW

There will be a trophy horse show beginning at 9 a.m. October 2 at Trish and Bruce Cramer's Brushwood Farm on Pratt Road.

This year-end contest, sponsored by the B.C. Paint Horse Association, promises to be an exciting one with entries from Chilliwack, Langley and North Vancouver.

Events include English pleasure, Western pleasure, Hunter and Hack and Halter riding. For further information, contact the Cramers at 886-2160.

Incidentally, Brushwood Farms currently lodges the champion pinto stallion for British Columbia.

GOLFING EVENTS

The following events are scheduled next month for the Sunshine Coast Golf and Country Club:

September 11 — Directors tournament, an 18 hole medal play competition, full handicap. Open to present and former club directors.

September 13 — Back-to-school ladies tournament tentatively scheduled for this week.

September 18 — Inter-club match with Powell River at Powell River.

September 27 — Ladies' Day and a wind-up luncheon with prizes for the best performances for the year.

For more information on the September 11 and 18 events, contact the Pro Shop at 885-9212. For information on the ladies' event, call Doreen Gregory at 886-9514 or Eileen Evans at 885-3565.

ELPHINSTONE VOLLEYBALL

The Elphinstone Girls' Volleyball Team will play its first tournament this school year September 23 in Vancouver. Last year this team won 30 of its 40 games, and coach Brian Butcher is already eyeing this year's provincial finals November 22.

Tryouts for the senior team start this first week of school, September 6-9.

The girls ought to be stiff competition this year, as five of them — Ingrid Peterson, Laura Campbell, Maureen Forsyth, Lorna Boyde and Diana Paul — have just returend from training at the B.C. Volleyball Association's rigorous summer camp at Williams Lake.

The Leisure Outlook This Week

Back-to-school special puts education in focus

In time for the beginning of the school year, Concern, Sunday, 9:05 p.m. repeats a program about education first broadcast last fall. All the debates and arguments over education finally come down to what goes on in the classroom between teacher and students. This is a report from the people who live with education day after day, teachers discuss their concerns, problems and ideals more frankly than they usually can to parents.

Also on Sunday, Special Occasion, 5:05 p.m. presents a two hour documentary on Gordon Lightfoot, the person, his career, his music and his business pursuits. The documentary which of course includes much music was compiled frrm 10 hours of conversation taped by Jim Bauer. Lightfoot talks about his youth, his divorce, his children, how his songs came to be written and how his fans have responded, and assumes a new dimension as his private image emerges.

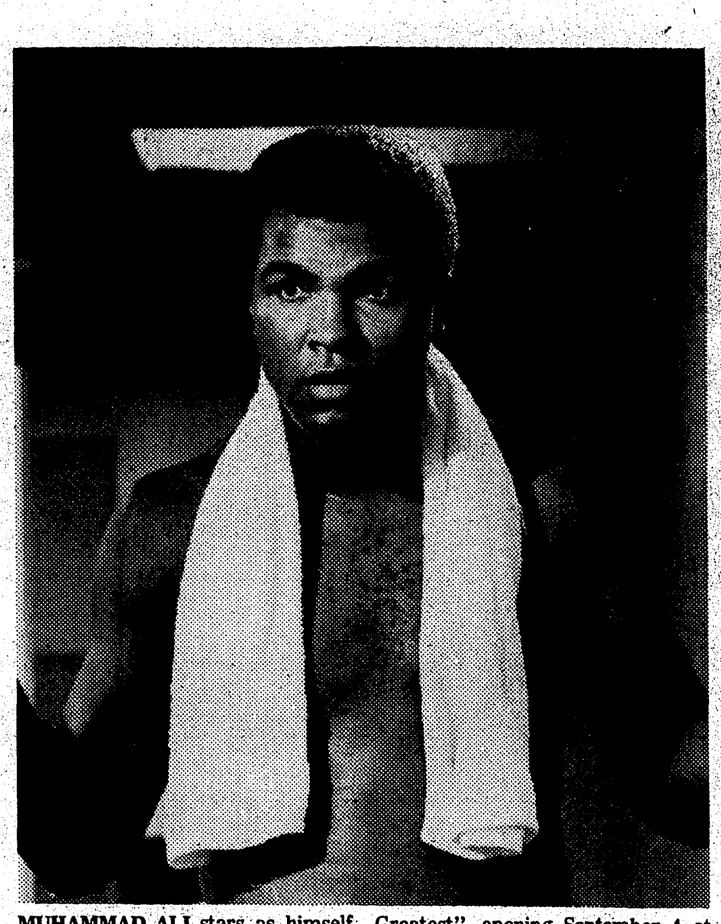
Restrictions recommended

Health and Welfare Canada recently announced that it has received recommendations from an expert committee regarding the use of the artificial sweetener saccharin in drugs and cosmetics.

Members of the expert commitee were chosen on the basis of consultation with professional associations of medicine and dentistry. The committee recently made the following major recommendations:

— 1. Saccharin has been shown to be carcinogenic in animals and must therefore be presume to be a potential carcinogen in man. The degree of risk cannot be determined precisely but is considered to be of such a level that where use of saccharin is unavoidable in drugs used to treat serious diseases, its continued use should be allowed.

— 2. Saccharin should be permitted for use as a sweetening agent when used in minimal quantities in 'Prescription only' drugs of significant therapeutic importance. This exemption will only apply where no acceptable alternative formulation exists, and where reformulation has failed to produce the compliance of patients in following the necessary dosage regimen. The only types of drug formulation likely to meet these requirements are those taken in liquid form or as chewable tablets. These are essentially formulations intended for young children who are unable to swallow tablets or capsules. Individual evaluation of each product would be made by the Health Protection Branch.



MUHAMMAD ALI stars as himself and Ernest Borgnine is his trainer and friend Angelo Dundee in "The Greatest", opening September 4 at The Twilight.

Muhammad Ali portrays himself in 'The Greatest'

"I am the greatest!" Muhammad Ali told onlookers before his March 8, 1971, fight with Joe Frazier in New York's Madison Square Garden. More than any other phrase ever uttered by the voluble heavyweight champion, that claim symbolizes Ali's remarkable career.

And now it has provided the title for a movie, "The Greatest," starring Ali himself. The film opens Sunday, September 4, at the Twilight Theatre.

"The Greatest" traces Ali's career from the days of his youth through his championship victory over Sonny Liston in 1964 and the tumult of events since. Ali was stripped of his title in 1967 by the World Boxing Associaiion for his refusal to accept military service. He regained the title in a 1974 bout in Zaire against George Foreman.

The span of Ali's championship is longer than that of any other heavyweight titleholder, although Joe Louis held the title for more consecutive years, 1937-1949.

Also starring with Ali in the film are Ernest Borgnine as his friend and trainer, Angelo Dundee, and Ranger Mosley as Sonny Liston.

"The Greatest" runs through Wednesday, September 7, and is rated for general admission.

There will be a special late night horror double bill at the Twilight Sunday, September 4. "The Velvet Vampire" and "Psychic Killer" begin at 11 p.m. Both are rated for mature audiences.

Preceding "The Greatest" at the Twilight is "The Cassandra Crossing" which plays Wednesday, August 31, through Saturday, September 3.

"The Cassandra Crossing" is the story of the Geneva-to-Stockholm Express, hurtling across Europe with 1,000 people aboard, and of their fate after a dying terrorist, fleeing from police, infects the passengers with a virulent bacillus.

The entire train is sealed off from the outside world to prevent a spreading contamination and consigned to an isolation camp in Poland.

The cast is headed by Sophia Loren, Richard Harris, Ava Gardner, Burt Lancaster, Martin Sheen, Ingrid Thulin, Lee Strasberg, O.J. Simpson, Lionel Stander and Ann Turkel.

"The Cassandra Crossing" is rated for mature audiences and carries the warning "some frightening scenes."

A kindly word for the dogfish

By MARYANNE WEST

Another and another and another, the tally of the unwanted grew.

Having mentioned on several occasions my belief that all those who express opinions on public airwaves, as well as those who write, have a responsibility to avoid re-inforcing stereotypes or repeating age-old prejudices, I'll practise what I've been preaching and devote this week's column to that most unpopular creature, the dogfish.

No, this isn't going to be an anti-fishing, nor even an anti-derby pitch. I'm just concerned to offer a different perspective.

The dogfish has been described by everyone in derogatory terms — a "pest," "pesky," and "irritant" — he's obviously everyone's bad guy. There's no denying the dogfish, a strong and voracious member of the shark family, damages nets and causes considerable havoc, discombobulating those who would catch more "desirable" species. If the dogfish only dined on shiners and bullheads he might not have incurred the wrath of man, but unfortunately he competes with salmon for herring and other small fish and thus is easily caught on the same lures or herring strip, and becomes a baddie.

But nature doesn't have baddies and goodies, just an abhorrance of waste. A study of ecology quickly demonstrates how interdependent are all plants, animals and micro-organisms in any given environment. The dominance of plant species has an ascending and declining rhythm which determines the numbers and variety of herbivorous animals the land can support. This in turn relates to the number and kinds of carnivores. It is a continuing cycle of regeneration, the recycling of the basic elements of life, with every plant and creature, however miscroscopic, performing its role in the over-all pattern. No goodies, no baddies; the massive Douglas Fir and the fragile fungus which breaks down the elements locked into dead wood making them reuseable are of equal importance.

Although it is difficult to study the ecology of the seas and there is much we still do not understand, we do know the same laws apply. Nature doesn't play favourites. Anything which cannot adapt to a changing environment disappears, its place taken by some other form of life. In a world which can document many evolutionary failures, the shark has an impressive longevity record, considerably longer than that of homo sapiens, who may yet prove to have been a very expensive evolutionary mistake.

For millions of years, dogfish and many other sharks have inhabited the seas, living in some sort of harmony or balance with other fish. If dogfish have become a nuisance in any given area, the culprit is most probably man, who makes unnatural value judgements about "good" fish, the ones he likes, and "bad" fish, the ones he has quite irrational feelings about. The dogfish is perfectly edible, has firm white flesh and no bones. Didn't you ever wonder why British fish and chips are the best?! Only in an affluent society like ours can people afford to be choosy about protein, eating just a few types of fish and throwing away others of comparable nutritional value. Dogfish compares very favourably to salmon, containing per 100 grams 17.6 grams protein and 9.0 grams fat for a total of 156 calories to the salmon's 19.1 grams protein, 15.6 grams fat and 226 calories.

Next time you visit the Vancouver aquarium stop beside the large tank containing dogfish, a couple of other members of the shark family and some Fraser River sturgeon. The dogfish is a superb swimmer, poetry in motion. Lithe and sinuous with a flexible cartilaginous skeleton, it moves effortlessly with all the grace of a swallow. Watch it for a while and enjoy the sight of perfection, a creature in perfect harmony with the element in which it lives. Different from the attractively coloured angel fish in a nearby tank, but not better or worse.

In trying to find out more about the role of the dogfish in the sea community I came across this delightful comment in an encyclopedia: "Sharks have the reputation of being the most feared and savage predators in the seas, excepting only the very sharklike killer whale, a mammal that exceeds most sharks in size and all of them in ferocity."

It wasn't so long ago that killer whales were baddies too, but how things changed once we got to know some of them. Who knows, we might find sharks are intelligent creatures too one day and that they also respond to kindness.

In the meantime, we've been told by many scientists that if we do not want to destroy the life support systems of Spaceship Earth we must understand that we too, with all our arrogance, are subject to the same natural laws as the dogfish, the dandelion or the spruce budworm. Laws which do not recognise our parochial values of goodies and baddies. We are also frequently reminded by sociologists, philosophers and even politicians that we must learn to accept differences in race and culture and variations in ability, both physical and mental, without an added burden of spurious value judgments, if we are not to destroy our civilisation with needless strife and violence. Might we not be taking one small step in the right direction if we could learn to recognise the lowly dogfish for what he is, another fish, neither better nor worse than salmon, halibut or shiners, just different?

One thing can be said for the dogfish. The fish he catches he eats to support life. Unlike man, he doesn't catch more than he needs and throw the rest away.
