NOTE AND COMMENT

That scourge to Canadian commerce and terror of the great lakes, the Yantic, is having the most remarkable experience that probably ever fell to the lot of a commerce destroyer on her way to the scene of action. She first of all got into trouble off the coast of Maine and had to put into the port of Halifax, where under the muzzles of the guns of the hated foe and amid a good deal of chaff from the Canadian press she was allowed to refit. Later on while waddling up the St. Lawrence, she ran into a Canadian vessel, sinking her, and going on her way without so much as stopping to help the crew. Now she is to be arrested on her arrival at the port of Montreal for damages. In the mean while the naval reserve of Detroit, where she is to be stationed are anxiously awaiting her arrival in order to give her a great reception. One would think the best thing they could do would be to snub the old hulk up to the wharf and say as little as possible about her.

The state legislature of Georgia has prohibited the playing of football within the limits of the state. They do not like the attention of their people to be distracted from the refined and humane national amusement of lynching niggers by any such foreign and barbarous foolishness as football.

An excellent idea has been mooted that the Board of Trade endeavor to acquire permanent quarters in the government building. There is plenty of vacant office room in the building and the government could not turn it to better advantage than by giving the board house room. A permanent habitation would add considerably to the usefulness of the board and would render possible the collection of a small library of reference bearing on the resources of North Kootenay, of some good maps and of a first class exhibit of specimens of minerals collected within the district, all of which would be of great use to have on hand in demonstrating the advantages of the country to visitors. The room would also afford a convenient place for interviewing people, before whom the board may wish to bring some special point. The HERALD hopes to see the idea carried out.

The question of the disposal of the refuse of the town until such time as we get a sewerage system, was taken up by the executive committee of the Board of Trade the other night and their suggestion on the subject seems to be a sensible one. The objections to the proposed nuisance ground on the Big Bend trail are considerable, the principal being that the prevailing wind in this locality comes from exactly that quarter. On the other hand the only objection to the disposal of garbage by dumping it in the river is the same, which will have to be met as soon as we begin to talk about a sewerage system, which would most certainly end by draining into the river, and it is that a provincial statute forbids it. We shall have to get the law altered, in our favor sooner or later and we may as well get the thing done at once. The river water is not used by anybody for drinking purposes or indeed any other purpose for that matter and the stream is quite capable of scouring everything away whether dumped or drained into it. The HERALD is glad to see that the Board has taken the matter up.

Guy Fawkes Commemorated.

"A well attended meeting of the L. O. L. No. 1658 was held in the Oddfellow's hall last evening, the occasion being in commemoration of the discovery of the Gunpowder Plot. After the usual routine of business a few interesting subjects were brought up and discussed. At 10:30 the members, in regalia, accompanied at this juncture by their wives or friends, adjourned to the residence of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Lee, where a sumptuous repast was served and thoroughly enjoyed. A few appropriate toasts were proposed by Worshipful Master Adair and fittingly replied to by the different members. In a few well chosen words Dr. T. W. Jeffs on behalf of the lodge moved a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Lee for their kindness, and the willing manner in which their house had been thrown open to make the evening a pleasant one. A few musical selections by Miss Savage and Mrs. Lee, and a comic song or two by Mr. Lee, after which all joined in the national anthem, brought a pleasant entertainment to a close.

OVERLAND TO YUKON

The Commercial Klondike Number.—The Edmonton Overland Routes.—Why Not a Revelstoke Overland Route?

The Klondike number of the Winnipeg Commercial is to hand. It contains a description of the land and water routes to the Yukon via Edmonton. The feasibility of these routes has long ago been demonstrated as both have been used by the Hudson Bay company and free traders and trappers for many years. Neither of them is to be followed without difficulties, perhaps even dangers, but it is absurd for tenderfeet to expect to be believed when they turn back half way and pronounce them impracticable. Edmonton has been the outfitting and receiving point for the immense fur trade of the Athabasca and Mackenzie rivers for the last century, and her traders come and go from and to the remotest points north every week at all seasons of the year. By the overland route as far as Peace river miners, traders and trappers travel from Edmonton every year. Beyond Peace river the trails are not so much travelled but are known to exist as far as the Nelson, which furnishes a means of transport by boat, and so up the Liard to the head waters of the Pelly. The route from Revelstoke would join the Edmonton route at the Peace river. Speaking of the possibilities before the prospector en route the Commercial says of the Peace river: "As long ago as 1862, Wm. Cust, a prospector still living and now a resident near Edmonton, made good strikes on the upper waters of the Peace river, his richest strike being on a bar of the Findlay river, three miles from its confluence with the Peace. All the results obtained on these waters by Cust and others were in short periods of work, supplies being scarce and no one having gone in outfitted for any thing more than prospecting. Where these men got their best results they had to leave owing to shortness of supplies, and never returned. On Cust's richest strike on the Findlay river, Peter Toye, another old timer, also made good washing some years after. 18 miles above Rocky Mountain portage rich diggings were struck. Mr. Cust remarks on all these diggings that no one had ever got to bed rock owing to the water, and the presumption is that the richest finds would be there."

This number of the Commercial is accompanied by a map shewing very clearly the course of the proposed routes and is embellished with cuts of scenes in Edmonton and at the Athabasca Landing. The enterprise of the townspeople of Edmonton in causing it to be got out, shews that they are not going to sit down and wait till the Klondike trade falls into their lap, but are prepared to put forward every effort to secure it. Any town that aspires to get a share of it from them will have to do something more than talk about it, but must be prepared to lay out some money to advertise their own peculiar advantages. This place has a good deal to shew in favor of its position as a starting point. It has already direct communication with Spokane, and so with the whole of the western states; the greater part of the way from here to Peace river would be by water, a cheap and easy means of transport for a poor man; horses will be easy to get on the Peace river as soon as the the Edmonton route begins to be travelled, as they will be turned back at the Pelly, if not before; and last but not least the first three hundred miles lies through a country, whose mineral wealth alone would make the route a desirable one to follow, and to exploit. In the HERALD's opinion Revelstoke should lay herself out to bring these advantages before the notice of the outside public.

Rosebery

Mr. F. T. Brewster left for the Rosebery mine today. When he last left two men were working on the crosscut, having, as was calculated, about 6 feet to go to strike the vein. Mr. Brewster will remain at the mine till the vein is cut, after which operations will close down for the winter.

Incorporation Meeting.

As will be seen elsewhere in this issue, a public meeting has been called in Peterson's hall for Tuesday evening the 12th, at 7:30, to receive the report of the committee appointed to enquire into the question of incorporation and registration of titles. In the interests of Revelstoke the HERALD hopes that our citizens will now get down to real business.

The amount of duty collected at this sub-port was $2589.21 on goods valued at $7008.

A POINT FOR SILVER

Five Powers of the Latin Union Will Increase Its Use

PARIS, Nov. 3.—Five powers of the Latin union, on the initiative of Switzerland, have signed a convention to increase the number of small silver coins by a franc per head of their population, using the existing 5 franc pieces to supply the necessary silver.

The s.s. "Rossland" Launched.

On Thursday morning at 11 o'clock the long looked for event—the launching of the C. P. R.'s new fast passenger and express—took place at Nakusp. The Slocan passenger train loaded with her load of passengers was pulled near the scene, while the s.s. Nakusp was moored a short distance from the shore. Capt. Troupe was there and had planned all arrangements to make the affair a conspicuous one, and when the crowd had gathered around, the ropes were cut and the new "Rossland" slid off into the lake mid a screaming of whistles from locomotives, steamboats and saw mill. The Nakusp then took the boat in hand and towed her up to the company's docks. The Rossland will not be put into the passenger service for two or three months, or until the carpenter work is completed, but in the meantime will be put to pushing freight, while the Lytton will, it is said, be put on the Nakusp docks for repairs.

The Klondike Group.

Situated at the head of Humphries creek and just beneath the glacier, a distance of some three miles from Trout Lake City, is the Klondike group of four claims. This property is one of the new strikes this summer and has as rich a surface showing as any prospect in the district. From assays taken from the croppings returns of 718 and 354 ounces of silver were received, and from a mill test of ten pounds, 145 ounces silver, $6 gold, 3 per cent. copper and 2½ per cent. lead was returned. Quite a bit of work has been done on this property considering the lateness of the season, and consists of a shaft 20 feet in depth and a crosscut of ten feet. Where the vein was cut the paystreak showed a width of 6½ inches of clean ore and from this part of the property the ore sent to the mill was taken. It is the purpose of the owners to commence a system of thorough development as soon as spring opens up. They think that they can place the property on a shipping basis before fall and are going to back up their belief by proof. There is enough ore on the dump already to more than pay for the work done and had it not been for the lateness of the season and the impossibility of having comfortable quarters erected before winter set in, they would have continued their work all winter.—Trout Lake Topic.

McNeil, superintendent of the mine, was in Trout Lake City and said that 140 tons would be shipped this winter. As soon as the two Sunshine leads have been tapped on the Cup ground, a year's time will see 200 men employed on the group. Mr. McNeil will start on a holiday in Colorado shortly.

THEN THE BAND PLAYED

The Latest Chicago Improvement in Divine Worship.

CHICAGO, Nov. 1.—Amid the strains of martial music from a full-fledged brass band the congregation of the First Methodist church at Clark and Washington streets, assembled for service last night. Upon entering the church, instead of the customary choir and minister, the worshippers saw a glittering array of brass buttons, gilt braid and highly polished instruments. A military band occupied the rostrum behind the pulpit. The faces of small boys in the audience beamed with delight and airs floating out into the street made the passers-by gaze wonderingly at the windows in quest of something to inform them of what was in progress within.

This departure from the trodden path of religious service by the pastor, Rev. Dr. Brushingham was followed by another on the part of the congregation. When the band had finished playing a lively selection in waltz time, the audience applauded and cheered heartily. The demonstration by his flock was not frowned on by the pastor. On the contrary his eyes sparkled with good humor as he stepped up to the pulpit and said:

"I don't wonder you feel like cheering. This music is what the people all want and what we must have."

When about half way through his sermon, Dr. Brushingham turned toward the young men in the bright uniforms behind him and remarked "I must hasten toward the close of this sermon, for when I finish, these boys are going to give us some more music, and I am anxious to her them play again."

At a meeting of the members of the syndicate held at Halcyon Hot Springs Sanitarium on Thursday, the 4th of Nov., the following officers and directors were appointed: President and Medical Director, Dr. R. G. Brett; Vice President and Managing Director, D. H. Macpherson; Secretary-Treasurer, Thos. McNaught; Directors, Dr. W. White and Dr. I. E. Spankie.

SATURDAY. NOV. 6, 1897.

News of trouble in Africa is always serious. The European armaments are vast and menacing; they seem always to threaten war; but they cannot be moved until the word is given by statesmen, who, unless they are such brigands as the Bonapartes, will probably give diplomacy a chance before they declare war. But in Africa peace and war are very much at the mercy of irresponsible adventurers, who, by some act of filibustering rashness, may bring on a quarrel, out of which the statesmen in the present temper of nations may fail to find the way. Great Britain and France were once brought to the brink of war by the rash act of a hot-headed French officer in Tahiti. With all this powder lying about every spark is dangerous. In the rumours, circulated for the hundredth time, of Russian designs on India, there is probably as little truth as ever. But the war with the frontier tribes could not have occurred at a worse time. The British under secretary of war, who proclaims aloud the inefficiency of the British army, had better have held his tongue.—Goldwin Smith.

Political Points by Ontario Paragraphers.

A QUESTION OF WIND

We learn from several contemporaries that "victory is in the air." That's all right; but the question is whether Hardy or Whitney is the more powerful air pump.—Hamilton Herald.

A FLUSH

Editor Williams of the Sarnia Post has become the father of a second pair of twins. With two pair in hand, the Post man may hope for a "full house" soon if he stays in the game.—Hamilton Herald.

FRIENDS FALLEN OUT

The Liberals seem to get a good deal of satisfaction out of the six months' sentence imposed on their fellow Grit editor, Grenier, for libel.—Chatham Planet.

PAPER BULLETS

A leaded article in the Montreal Witness or Huntingdon Gleaner is much more dangerous to Sir Wilfrid Laurier than a leaded article in the hands of Lunatic Carriere.—Hamilton Spectator.

UNCLE SAM'S NAVY

The old Yantic started for the lakes but she did not go far when she proved herself the equal of the best ships in the American navy—she broke down and the commander was compelled to take her to Halifax for repairs. With some good Canadian work upon her she may be able to get through.—Hamilton Spectator.

The country editor is a veritable encyclopedia. A subscriber sent him this query recently: "What ails my hens? Every morning I find one or more of them keeled over to rise no more." The reply was: "The fowls are dead. It is an old complaint, and nothing can be done except to bury them."

The Golden, B.C., Co., Ltd., has been formed in London, England, with its head office in No. 6, Queen's street place, as a prospecting and development company. The capital is $30,000 divided into shares of $5 each. Its directors are: Lord Ribbesdale, A. C. Mitchell-Innes and John Taylor, M.I.C.E. The office for the company in British Columbia is in Golden, B.C. W. G. Mitchell-Innes, of Golden, has been appointed agent.

Yorkton Enterprise: Whatever species of settlers the young generation of Galicians may develop it will not be devoid of courage. Last week a boy of this nationality, employed herding the flocks of Carson Bros., observed a wolf stealthily crawling through the long grass, intently eyeing ihis prey; the young lad went on all fours and imitated the lupine actions of the wolf until he reached his rear quarters and seized the would-be depredator by the hind leg, and after a struggle for the mastery, triumphantly pushed the wolf into a bag and marched off home with his prize, where it was given to the dogs and devoured.

Hudson's Bay Factor McDonald in the City from Slave Lake

(From the Calgary Herald)

Ewen McDonald, Chief Factor of the Hudson's Bay Co., arrived from Lesser Slave lake post on Friday night by way of Athabasca Landing and Edmonton, having left the lake on the 14th.

Mr. McDonald while in Edmonton gave the Bulletin the following news about Yukon parties now en route:

A. J. Bell and party had arrived at the post about the 10th and had gone on to Peace river. He intended to go down the Peace to Vermillion and possibly to Chipewyan.

Pottinger and Robertson were met at the east end of Lesser Slave lake. They had been three weeks coming up from the Landing.

Chalmers and party reached Slave lake post about the 8th, from Fort Assiniboine. They reported a practicable route by the old trail from Fort Assiniboine. They left about the 9th for the Athabasca at the mouth of the Macleod. They would have a trail about 50 miles to Snipe lake. The rest of the way there would be no trail. Total distance about 120 miles. Mr. Macdonald was surprised that Mr. Chalmers had not already arrived.

Insp. Moody and party were at Dunvegan on the 10th. R. Hardisty was sent back to Slave Lake for dog trains with which he continue the journey of the police party beyond St. John. He was ordered to get eight trains. Mr. Moody was going on to St. John and would probably reach there by the 22nd, going by the south trail. Mr. Hardisty would not be able to leave Slave lake until about the 20th so that there would be considerable delay at St. John.

W. S. Johnstone was at Spirit river, 15 miles south of Dunvegan, on the 7th, and has been at St. John for some time now. He was just 21 days from Lake St. Ann to Spirit river.

The Fresno party was strung along between Sturgeon lake and Smoky river, and many would no doubt winter on the Smoky.

Campbell and Brenton were at Dunvegan about September 24th. They had been disappointed in that the supplies which they had expected to get from Brick Bros. at St. John, had not yet left Slave lake. They were thinking then of turning back and were to start on the trail by Sturgeon lake on the 25th. They should therefore be here now, but may have returned back with the police party.

J. Graham, who left Slave lake in March with a band of horses, bound for the Liard, and possibly the Yukon, was last heard from through Indians, after having crossed the west branch of the Nelson about the point where Ogilvie left that stream during his survey of 1891.

As to the comparative time made over the pack trail and over the ordinary freight route by wagon and boat, Mr. Macdonald says that he received instructions to forward supplies on from Slave lake post to St. John, on Peace river, to meet the police there. The messengers took fifteen days from Edmonton to Slave lake. The supplies were then packed up and shipped by wagon to Peace river landing, 99 miles, and by boat up Peace river to St. John, 160 miles from the Landing. The goods had reached St. John and the men had returned to Slave lake before the police party were heard of at Sturgeon lake, still 175 miles from St. John.

Slave lake was frozen over in the vicinity of the Hudson's Bay fort when Mr. Macdonald left, and his boat was taken about eight miles down the lake. This ice would doubtless go away. A good deal of thin ice formed along the river banks on the way to the Landing.

A party were building a boat at the Landing in which to start down the Athabasca when Mr. Macdonald passed.

A NEW FIND

Picking Up Gold in Baskets—Great Excitement Prevails—Nuggets Galore

SEATTLE, October 28.—A Dawson city letter says: The spectacle of men picking up gold in baskets is strange, but no less true. Another strike has been made. The camp is on fire with excitement. In the last 24 hours nearly 400 bench claims have been staked out on a side hill in Skookeem gulch. In half a day, Friday, a foot below the surface, two men with a rocker picked out $585 in gold. Two nuggets valued at $17 and $25 respectively, were found, and hundreds of others, worth from three to $20 were taken out of the side hills. Thousands in the last year have walked over the ground and no one suspected its richness. Boulders were turned over and there lying exposed to the light of day were the nuggets scattered in the gravel. The moss is about 12 inches thick and beneath it two men picked up $800 in coarse gold.

The wheat king of the world resides in Argentine. He is an Italian emigrant named Guazone, and his broad acres are situated in the province of Buenos Ayres. His crop occupies an area of 66,270 acres. He numbers his workmen by the thousand, and each one receives a certain share of the profits. When his season's crop is harvested he fills over 3,000 railway trucks with the grain.

Mrs. Ernest St. Jean, of Fort Saskatchewan, has received word from her husband, who belonged to one of the first parties who went the Mackenzie route to the Yukon this summer, that his party had reached a point 40 miles up the Peel river from Fort MacPherson and had deposited their supplies there for the winter. They had gone west from this point prospecting and were at last accounts within ten or twelve days journey from the Clondike, but would not go to Dawson City on account of the famine there.—Alberta Plaindealer.

Rossland Miner: The shipment of ore from this camp for the first nine months of the year have passed the 60,000 ton mark, and the outlook is that before the year ends a total of 75,000 tons will be reached. As flattering as this showing is it is not to be compared with the tonnage that the rich mines of Rossland could put forth in their present state of development if local smelters of sufficient capacity and using lead as a base, were in operation. With such facilities for ore reduction the yield of the mines of this camp would be at least six times as much as at present.

WHITEWAY WAS DEFEATED IN NEWFOUNDLAND

ST. JOHNS, November 1.—As far as returns have been received the general elections throughout Newfoundland have resulted in the defeat of the Whiteway Government. The contest was an exceedingly bitter one, charges of boodling and corruption and attacks on private character being hurled back and forth.

ST. JOHNS, N'fl'd., November 2.—Sir William Whiteway's Government has been defeated, according to the latest election returns.

The Biblical story of the Fall has often been quoted to the discredit of Eve's sex. But there is a great deal in the art of putting things. The Rev. Mark Guy Pearse (who is well known in England) has just been expounding the incident in a fashion which shows that he possesses a remarkable talent for ingenious compliment. The devil, he says, did not give the apple to the man, but to the woman, because he knew that the man would have eaten it all himself, but that the woman would go halves.

BETWEEN TWO SINS

BY BERTHA M. CLAY.

January, with its ice and snow, came to an end; February, with its faint gleams of sunshine, passed; March came in like a lion. It was well for me that the beauties of nature had power to soothe and charm. I watched eagerly for the spring, thinking that the glory and the tenderness of it must surely in some measure chase away the horrible gloom. But there came an evening in March the very recollection of which chills my heart. There was no storm, no tempest of rain, but the wind was blowing as I had never heard it. I love the wind, I love it, be it the softest breath that stirs the roses and lifts the sprays of jasmine, or the mighty blast that rends the giant branches and bends the sturdy oak.

That evening it came in great gusts from the hills, like the roar of artillery, afterward seeming to die away on the lake. Then it rose again, and came wailing with a long-drawn, sobbing sound round the house. I was not afraid. This was what I liked; and when I went to my room, instead of going to sleep like a sensible girl, I opened my window the better to hear it, for my heart and soul rejoiced in it.

Suddenly I heard the sound of footsteps in the corridor. Some one tried the handle of my door gently and cautiously. I did not know fear, but I must confess that at the sound of the handle turning my heart beast fast. I went to the door and opened it. To my surprise there stood Lady Culmore, wrapped in a long blue dressing-gown, her hair hanging over her shoulders, her face white as death, her eyes full of fear. Even at that moment I could not help noticing the whiteness of the hands that held the taper.

"I am disturbing you, Miss Forster," she said; "but I am afraid—oh, so sorely afraid! Will you come with me?"

"Yes, Lady Culmore. But what frightens you?" I asked.

"The wind, the wind!" she replied. "I am sure that every lost soul is abroad to-night and wailing in it. Will you come with me?"

She was trembling from head to foot; great drops of agony stood on her forehead; the hand that held the wax taper trembled. What was it that made the beautiful face so terrible to see?

I WENT TO THE DOOR AND OPENED IT.

"You need not be frightened, Lady Culmore," I said. "The wind is always rough in March. You are afraid of it. I think it beautiful."

"It is not the wind that I hear in my room," she whispered. "Oh, come!"

Without another word I took the taper from her hand and went with her. When we reached the room where Lady Culmore slept, I found that all the lamps were burning. She laid her hand upon my arm.

"I want you to listen," she said, in a low, hoarse whisper. "Listen!"

As she stood before me, with a strained, despairing expression on her face, wild terror in her eyes and her hand uplifted, I might have been forgiven some little emotion of fear. The scene was weird enough.

"Listen!" she repeated. And then I heard the soft, sad sob of the wind at the window dying away into the faintest possible moan.

"What is that?" she asked me, while a strong shudder shook her frame. "Listen again, and tell me, for Heaven's sake, what is that?"

The dying wail of the wind was followed by a soft tap against the window-glass, so soft, so indistinct, that I could hardly hear it. The sound came again and again, until at last the terrified woman flung herself upon her knees with a cry of anguish that I shall never forget—a perfect scream of terror. It rings in my ears even now as I write.

"I know what it is!" she cried. "You must not let it in! Keep the window closed! Send it away! Oh, Heaven, send it away!" And she fell senseless, with her white, miserable face upon the ground.

I raised her, laid her upon the couch, and went to the window. The moon shone on the budding trees and on the mere. I saw in a moment that the sound was caused by the tapping of a small spray of ivy against the window-glass. Having found this out, I went back to rouse and reassure her. She lay just where I had placed her, her blue eyes open and full of inexplicable terror.

"Have you sent it away?" she asked, in a horarse whisper.

"There is nothing to send away, Lady Culmore," I replied.

"Nothing!" she cried. "Are you quite sure? Nothing at all?"

"No. What could there be outside your window?"

I began to wonder if her brain was affected. If was the only possible explanation of her conduct.

The wind had been silent for some few minutes. Then it rose again—the same faint sobbing round the window, a sound as natural as any could be, but evidently full of spernatural dread to her. She sprang to her feet and held up her hand again.

"Listen!" she cried.

"It is nothing, Lady Culmore," I said, speaking firmly, for I thought that perhaps this was but a severe hysterical attack. "It is nothing, Lady Culmore," I repeated. "Do you understand? It is only the wailing of the wind."

"Ah, no!" she said. "That is what it sounds like to you. Do you know what it is in reality? It is the crying of a little child, quite a little child, standing there. Hark! Do you not hear it now?"

There was certainly some faint resemblance to the cry of a child, the wail of an infant in great pain. I should never have thought of it but for her.

"Lady Culmore," I said, "you must listen to reason, you must be calm. This is foolish, hysterical, nervous nonsense! Come with me to the window. Look and listen for yourself."

She wrung her hands.

"I dare not!" she cried.

"You must," I said. "It is the only way in which you can be convinced. Come."

I took the white hands in mine and compelled her to cross the room. I drew aside the blinds and hangings, opened the window, and made her look out.

"You see there is nothing," I said. "Look at the moon, the water and the trees."

She turned away with a deathly shudder.

"I must have dreamt it then," she said.

"What did you dream?" I asked.

"I dreamed that I heard some one tapping at the window, and I awoke in a great fright. Then I heard the wailing of a child, a pitiful tiny voice sobbing with the faintest breath, and the sound came from the window. I went there, and rew aside the curtains as you have done now, and I saw—oh, that Heaven would darken my eyes for evermore!—I saw a tiny child standing there, dressed in a little white shroud, and he was rapping with a feeble little hand on the window-pane. For one moment the baby eyes flashed into mine, and I knew that if he came in I should fall down dead."

"It was a dream," I said, with a sigh of unutterable relief—"only a dream."

But she broke from me with a terrible cry. She flung herself upon her knees, she tore her fair hair, she beat her hands together wildly, and I spent the remainder of the night in trying to soothe her. Verily I had cause to remember the bitter winds of March!

CHAPTER V.

April, with its soft showers, its odor of sweet violets and growing buds, its sweet daffodils and pale primroses, was passing quickly, but still there was no change at Ullamere. It was nearly four months since I came, and there was the same gloom, the same constraint, the same wretchedness in Sir Rudolph's home! but by this time I had lost all desire to leave the place. All my affection and interest, all my thoughts, were centered in the baronet and his wife.

There was nothing very mysterious about Sir Rudolph, except the way in which he lived. The whole mystery seemed to cling to Lady Culmore. After that night when the winds of March blew so terribly, I had a lingering suspicion that her mind was unhinged—had lost its balance. And yet, even if it were so, that was no solution to the mystery of Sir Rudolph's conduct. A man who loved his wife would but study her the more for any misfortune of that kind.

I remember another incident. This happened in the calm, early, gray morning light. Again I heard footsteps in the corridor, and again the handle of my door was turned. I knew this time that it was Lady Culmore. She was standing outside, with the same terrible fear on her face.

"I want you, Miss Forster," she said. "Come with me;" and, as a matter of course, I went.

She carefully closed the door of her room, placed the wax taper on the table, and turned to me. The distress in her white face was terrible to see.

"Now," she cried—"now tell me what you hear!" She seemed to breathe with difficulty; great gasps came from her lips. "Quickly," she said—"tell me quickly! what do you hear?"

"Nothing," I replied. "There is not a sound; even the wind is still."

She struck her hands together with a passionate cry.

"You must hear it! You say 'No' to calm me. I shall not be frightened if you hear it; but if it comes only to me, oh heaven! what shall I do?"

She hid her face in her hands, and trembled so violently that I became alarmed.

"Tell me what you hear, Lady Culmore," I requested.

"The cry of a child. Can you not hear it? It has been wailing round my pillow all night long, until it has driven me mad," she said. "I am mad! Oh, Miss Forster, look for it! I am sure it is here! Some of those wicked servants have hidden it here on purpose that it should cry and frighten me. We must find it! I can bear it no longer!" And the most painful spectacle I ever saw in my life was the spectacle of this beautiful, desperate woman searching everywhere for that which did not exist. Suddenly she looked at the door.

"Ah," she cried, "it is outside, now! It is dying away at the end of the corridor. It is gone! Thank heaven, it is gone!"

She shrank, shuddering, from the door, and sank down upon a chair. She was exhausted, white, trembling. I went to her, and took her hands. They were cold as death itself.

"You have been dreaming again, Lady Culmore," I said. "You must remember that you had the same dream before, and how it terrified you. Try to be cheerful. You must be ill or nervous; such fancies and dreams as these do not trouble strong or healthy people. You should go away from here. I shall certainly speak to Sir Rudolph about it; he does not know how ill you are."

She clung to me with passionate cries and tears.

"You must not do that. I can not go away. Promise me that you will not say one word to him. I will kill myself if you do!"

Her vehemence startled me.

"Certainly, I will not, unless you wish it," I said. "You are really ill, though Lady Culmore, and you should have medical advice. These terrible fancies of yours are only the result of illness."

She flung her arms around me, and laid her fair head on my shoulder.

"Do you think so?" she whispered. "Oh, comfort me, comfort me, for my heart is torn and desolate!"

How was I to comfort her when I did not even know her trouble? I could feel how her heart was beating, how she trembled, while great bitter sobs rose to her lips, and I wondered more than ever what had gone wrong in the life of this beautiful, sorrowful woman.

I smoothed the fair, shining hair, and the touch of my hand calmed her.

"It is a strange thing," I said to her, "that you should always have the same dream, that you should be haunted, as it were, by the cries of a little child."

Her face could grow no paler, but her head fell more heavily upon my shoulder.

"So strange!" she murmured, "Ah, so strange!"

"You never had a little child, Lady Culmore, had you?"

"Never," she answered.

"Have you little brothers or sisters?" I asked.

"None," she replied.

"It is an extraordinary thing, never having had anything to do with a little child, that you should be haunted by the cries of one!"

She was looking at me with wild, distended eyes.

"Miss Forster, you will not tell this fancy of mine to anyone?" she said, slowly. "I am so afraid that people should think me mad."

Then she promised to try to be calm, to lie down and sleep if I would remain with her. I did so, and sat down by her side, holding her hand, until at last she dropped into a fevered, restless sleep.

Ah, me, how restless! The beautiful head and troubled face turned incessantly from side to side; the lips were never still; and the burden of her cry was, "I did it all for you, love—all for you!" Then came prayers, entreaties, sighs, and tears; but above all rang that one pitiful cry, "All for you, love—all for you!"

In the full morning light I left her fast asleep.

Could it be that the gloom of the house was extending to me? All that day I was miserable. I felt sure that Lady Culmore was very ill, threatened with a severe illness or with insanity. I was sorely perplexed, feeling that it was my duty to get help for her from somewhere, yet not knowing in the least to whom I should apply. I would not betray her. I would keep the secret of her strange fancies and her terrible nights; but I must have the advice of some one as to how she be best dealt with. The only person I could think of was Mrs. Harper, the housekeeper; and I went one afternoon in search of her. I asked her to come out with me into the grounds, where I could talk to her at my ease. I told her that I thought Lady Culmore was very ill, and that she required more attention than I could give her. The housekeeper looked sorry and puzzled.

"I am just as much bewildered as yourself, miss," she said. "This is not like any other household. What lies between those two—husband and wife—I cannot tell, but I fear it is something terrible. They seem to me more like jailor and prisoner than anything else."

"Which is the jailer?" I asked.

"Sir Rudolph," she answered. "I would not stay but that, after all, I like both my master and my lady so well. They seem to me perfection apart, but together they would puzzle the saints."

"Has it always been this way, Mrs. Harper?"

"Yes. The servants in the house are strangers, except the butler and myself. We lived with Sir Rudolph at Brooke Hall. We were with him at his marriage."

"I AM JUST AS MUCH BEWILDERED AS YOURSELF, MISS."

"Was there anything curious connected with it?" I asked.

"Nothing. Everyone noticed the intense love of the bridegroom for the bride. I never saw any one so devoted in my life. It was marvellous to see them together. Sir Rudolph brought his bride home to Brooke Hall, and I lived there one year with them. Then, quite suddenly, they came here, and they have lived in this strange fashion ever since."

"And you know nothing of what brought them here—nothing of the cause of their being on such terms with each other?"

"Nothing. Everything was bright and happy at Brooke Hall. The house was filled with guests. I remember even that arrangements had been made for a dance, when Sir Rudolph sent for me suddenly. 'We are going to Ullamere, Mrs. Harper,' he said, 'Will you come with us? We shall not return to Brooke Hall.' It is very sudden, Sir Rudolph,' I said; and then I noticed how white his face was. I have never seen him like himself since that—never; and that was Christmas Eve. We stopped at Brooke Hall until the day after Christmas Day. We have been her just one year.'

"But there must have been a reason," I said. "A husband and wife, both young, passionately attached to each other, could not have fallen into this state without some reason."

"I know of none. I have thought it over a hundred times."

"Did nothing happen at Brooke Hall? Did Lady Culmore make her husband jealous?"

"There was little fear," she replied. "If ever any woman worshipped a man, my lady worshipped her husband. She seemed as though she could not live out of his presence. It was the wonder of every one. I do not think, when she talked and laughed with other men, that she really heeded them. Her eyes followed him always, and her whole heart was in them."

"But was there no warning of what was about to happen?"

"None," was the reply. "The only incident which occurred at Brooke was the death of the nurse, Margaret Jennings. She died on the morning of Christmas Eve; but that had nothing to do with my master and mistress leaving home so suddenly. I think, Miss Forster, it will be better for you to speak to Sir Rudolph about my lady. He loved her so dearly once, he must feel anxious if he thinks there is anything the matter with her."

I took Mrs. Harper's advice, and went at once to Sir Rudolph. I found him in the gun-room.

"I want to speak to you for a few minutes, Sir Rudolph," I said.

He bowed with the frank courtesy that was his great charm.

"Will you not come in, Miss Forster?" he asked.

"I am too great a coward, Sir Rudolph. I am afraid of the guns."

"I must come to you, then," he said, laughingly; and he joined me where I was standing on the lawn, adding, "I am at your service, Miss Forster."

But all his geniality died away when I told him that I wished to speak to him about Lady Culmore. I said that she was very ill, and that I was uneasy about her. He was a changed man at once—cold, hard, unyielding. He listened to all I said, and made no answer, except that, if I thought Lady Culmore ill, I could send for a doctor—any doctor I liked. Then his interest ceased.

"MAD! I WISH TO HEAVEN SHE WAS!"

"Sir Rudolph," I said, "have you—has any one who knows her—any suspicion that Lady Culmore is mad?"

"Mad," he repeated, with infinite scorn—"mad! I wish to heaven she was!"

And I was left to find out what those words meant.

CHAPTER VI.

The end of the month of May was near, and during all this time I had not seen one visitor at the hall. Just as we were when the Christmas snow fell, so were we now that the roses and lillies were beginning to bloom, save that the outer world was like a paradise. The lake-country is, to my thinking, thae fairest part of England, with its tors and fells, its mountains and vales.

I shall never forget the sunlight on the hills, the blue deep waters, the winding streams, the laughing green valleys.

I had longed for years to see an English May, and now my desire was gratified. I had never dreamed of anything one-half so fair. And this May was the true month of the poets, sweet and smiling. Pink and white hawthorn grew in the hedges; the lilacs and laburnums were all in flower; the fields were so bright with daisies and buttercups that they appeared carpeted with silver and gold, and the handsome spikets of the chestnuts were out in profusion.

Lady Culmore had steadfastly refused to see a doctor.

"Why shoud I try to preserve my life?" she said, when I spoke of one. "I had one great hope, but it is dying slowly and surely. When it is quite dead, I shall die too. What is there in my life to make me desire it?" she cried passionately. "Christmas snow, March winds, summer flowers, would come and go; I should be eating my heart away."

"But, Lady Culmore," I said, "why should you feel and think in this way? Why should not life be bright to you as it is to others? You are so unhappy that I dare to talk to you as I would not to anyone else. Why need you despair? You are young and beautiful and wealthy; you have a husband who might——Well, perhaps I had better not speak of that."

"You do not understand," she said. "I made a terrible mistake once in my life—a most terrible mistake. I see it now. He will never forgive nor forget it."

MURDER IN TORONTO

TWO TAILORS GET INTO A QUARREL

And the Father Stabs His Son to the Heart With a Pair of Shears—Both Had Been Drinking.

TORONTO, November 1.—A terrible murder occurred here on Saturday at 5.30 p.m. Two tailors, James Hutton, aged 60, and John, aged 30, his son, with John's wife, were working in a room at the corner of Victoria and Richmond streets. They had been drinking and a friend named James Black, who was with them, had gone out for some beer. A quarrel arose and the father stabbed his son with the shears. There were three wounds, one in the left shoulder, a contusion over the right eye, and a terrible stab entering over the right nipple and going obliquely to the left, through both lungs and into the heart.

DISASTROUS EXPLOSION

Thirteen Men Killed by An Explosion of Giant Powder.

PORES, Mexico, November 1.—A disastrous explosion occurred yesterday at the Amarillas shaft of the Grand Central mine. Thirteen men were killed outright and three sustained probably fatal injuries. In some undermined corner a large quantity of giant powder blew up in the fourth level of the shaft. So great was the force of the explosion that out of four men who were stationed fully 200 feet distant from the centre, three were killed instantly. Six of the recovered bodies are unrecognizable. The Grand Central mine was recently purchased for one million dollars by an English syndicate.

Mr. T. Kilpatrick met with a painful accident on Wednesday last. He was superintending the operations at the 13th crossing, where the new iron bridge is rapidly approaching completion, and was watching the derrick letting a casting weighing half a ton into its place. His hand was resting on the stone work, as he thought out of danger, but as he was busy giving orders the piece dropped into place, crushing three fingers of the left hand. He signalled to the men to raise the mass of iron, when another piece fell and caught his foot. Dr. McLean was summoned to the spot, and Mr. Kilpatrick was brought down and put in the Hotel Revelstoke on Thursday. Yesterday he was sufficiently recovered to come downstairs on crutches. He will not lose either his fingers or toe.

The occurrence of gold unaccompanied by any signs of pyrites, or sulphides is explained by assuming the presence of a small quantity of easily soluble ferrous sulphate as the precipitating agent. But in most cases, if carefully studied, it is often possible to distinguish a system of reticulated veins of a different [illegible] corresponding doubtless to a [illegible] of the gelatinous silica and the concentration of the gold with some traces of sulphides of iron, very frequently these colored streaks are nearly parallel with the apparent lines of deposition of the quartz. While, therefore, auriferous quartz is, as a rule, spotty, stained, [illegible] and of a hyaline character, at [illegible] colored in the upper parts and blue in the deep portions of the veins, [illegible] milky or chalcedonic quartz is nearly always sterile. It is said, however, that gold has been found in a flaky white rock in Australia.—Western Mining World.
